

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3940.
NEW SERIES, No. 1043.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 1	FIELD AMBULANCE NOTES 4	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
THE NEW YEAR SERVICES 2	THREE CENTURIES OF TREATIES OF PEACE 4	Belgian Hospital Fund 5
LINES SUGGESTED BY A VISIT TO HOUND TOR, DARTMOOR 3	MEMORIAL NOTICES:—	A Famous Internationalist 5
THE CHILDREN OF ENGLAND 3	Mr. A. M. Simpson, Adelaide. 4	British and Foreign Unitarian Association . 6
	Mr. H. W. Edgar Noel 4	The Day of National Prayer 6
		NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 7

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THERE is some embarrassment in the fulness of the New Year's Honours lists, and we may be pardoned if we overlook any names in them of special interest to our community. We note two announcements, however, which will give wide-spread pleasure. Mr. T. R. Marsden, of Oldham, manager of Messrs. Platt's works, is made a knight, and as a captain of industry fully merits his distinction. And Lieut.-Col. John Ward, M.P., of Wandsworth, who has raised several labour battalions of the Middlesex Regiment, and is now on duty in the Far East, has become a Companion of the "brilliant and exclusive Order"—as the London correspondent of The Manchester Guardian calls it—of St. Michael and St. George. His gallant conduct when the transport ship Tyn-dareus struck a mine off the Cape early last year will be freshly remembered, and a host of friends will join in congratulations to the new C.M.G.

* * *

AMONG the subjects now uppermost in all our minds is the matter of the peace negotiations between Russia and the Central Powers. Much has been written about them, more has been discussed in private; and the most deeply interesting, and perhaps the most critically important element in the published news, second only to the fluctuations of demand and assent reported from the scene of negotiation, is the statement that our Government is taking serious steps to secure from the Allies a presentation of their views in the altered situation produced by the "offer" of Germany and Austria. Undoubtedly, there is much suspicion, as there may well be, of the bona fides of a diplomacy which has been shown up in the course of the war, to go no farther back, as capable of the meanest duplicity. We may be sure that in the direction of too eagerly accepting the professions now tendered, not only to Russia, but through Russia to the Western Allies, the latter will not err egregiously. At the same time it has been widely recognised by men of gravity on both sides of politics, that the occasion is one for combining prudence and resolution with practical dexterity. Security and peace is the one greatest gain we desire; if the singular amateur methods of the revolutionists should after all open the way for experts to pursue to all mankind's profit—well, the world's democracies, at least, will not regret the irregularity of Russia's new style. It is for the experts to justify their title at such an emergency; the fate of millions lies in their hands.

* * *

THE elaborated manifesto on war aims and connected questions prepared for consideration at the National Conference of Labour representatives held in London, December 28, and adopted by that Conference by an overwhelming majority, marks a distinct step in the progress of opinion in this country. As summarised by Mr. Henderson, who moved the adoption of the manifesto, the peace policy of British Labour stands thus:—

(1) The essential importance of securing a settlement as speedily as possible founded on the principles of democracy and security.

(2) That territorial adjustments must not be dictated by annexionist or imperialist designs or for reasons of military strategy, but in the interests of progressive civilisation and world peace.

(3) That trade policy after the war must not be founded on the economic oppression or the commercial isolation of the German people.

OF course, there must always be a certain degree of doubt as to the intelligent and whole-hearted endorsement of the conclusions of their leaders on the part of the rank and file of the workers; even during the years of war we have seen leaders who were by no means followed. But when all proper abatement is made, there remains good reason to believe that a large majority of workmen in the great trade unions are in practical accord with the opinions here advanced. It was doubtless in acceptance of this fact that the Prime Minister, on Monday last, gave an interview to a large deputation representing the Parliamentary Committee of the Trades Union Congress and the Executive Committee of the Labour Party, and after "a long and perfectly amicable talk" these representatives retired with a feeling that his mind and theirs were substantially in accord on the main points.

* * *

To make assurance the greater, Mr. Lloyd George subsequently sent a message to the Conference in which he regretted that the absence of Russian delegates in November last at the Paris Conference prevented a contemplated consultation on 'War Aims,' and, after recalling the terms of his speech at Glasgow in June, proceeded:—

To my mind the ideals for which we are fighting to-day are precisely the same as those for which the British Empire entered the war. We accepted the challenge thrown down by Prussia in order to save the world once and for all from the horrible menace of militaristic civilisation and make possible a lasting peace by restoring the liberty and principles of nationality by preserving respect for those laws and treaties which are the protection of nations whether great or small.

I entirely agree with your views that the unity and determination of our people will be maintained only if every worker and every fighter in this great struggle is convinced that by the sacrifice that he has been asked to make he is really helping to free the world from the false ideas of autocracy, and lay firm and square the foundation upon which an orderly society of free nations can be established. I was never more convinced than to-day, not only that the purposes for which the Allies are continuing the war are not militaristic or vindictive, but that their achievement is essential to the future freedom and peace of mankind.

* * *

WHILE such ideas are being diffused the fighting goes on, and we must suppose will go on without further abatement than winter's truce imposes in the West. In the United States, preparation for fighting proceeds, we are assured, with an earnest zeal almost universal; and, as President Wilson and his Government are said to be resolved not to enter into terms with the Kaiser and his set of militarists, we must prepare ourselves, as best we may, for a long and strenuous conflict still. General Allenby's army is making advance over the hill-tops famous in holy writ, and the war on the sea, beneath the sea, and in the air, continues its daily toll of victims, combatant and non-combatant alike. Russia's "peace" is a confusion of civil strife, and apparently her pacifists, despite their dreams, are able to give more trouble to Germany than she expected. There is an old saying that it is futile to attempt to argue with the master of legions, and from the military point of view the Germans have the Russian negotiators at a very great disadvantage. But these same Russians, many of them, braved the Czar in former days, and do not seem disposed to yield passively to the Kaiser; and if he is to act as the master of legions, as we know he likes best to do, he cannot have his Eastern front left quite so bare as he would doubtless have ordered were things otherwise. We are told, indeed, by some experienced observers, that Russia's part, even in the field, is not ended yet; but these are matters which the bulk of us cannot profitably discuss. The most that we can do is still to discharge our respective duties thoroughly, to economise wisely, to hearten one another, and believe in the ultimate victory of our cause.

* * *

As an indication of the whole-hearted zeal of our Unitarian brethren in the States in regard to the war we are glad to hear that three ministers—the Revs. T. D. Bacon, of Salem, E. H. Cotton, of Danvers, and O. B. Hawes, of Newton—have accepted commissions in the overseas service of the Y.M.C.A., and sailed for Europe. Seventeen others are now volunteer chaplains at home camps for the Army, eleven (including Dr. Crothers) for other branches of the service, and twelve are travelling chaplains.

* * *

THE Vatican, that "impartially" let the Belgian and French cathedrals sink into ruin under the bombardment of the enemy, and made no protest against Germany's air-raids on peaceful towns elsewhere, has at last raised its voice against the attempted destruction of churches and houses in Padua, Treviso, and similar cities in North Italy. Rather late in the day, the expostulation must count for what it is worth with Roman Catholic Germany and Austria; we fear it will not be much good. But how clearly the incident shows that the Pope is by no means the protector of all Christendom that he sets forth to be, but just one more Italian, with peculiar political interests to maintain.

* * *

SIR ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE must beware of making himself ridiculous. That he should have chosen the Christmas season for proposing a British hate-raising campaign was, to say the least, an artistic mistake; and when we recall the grim laughter with which we all heard of Germany's zeal in stirring up her people to wrath, and promulgating her 'Hymn of Hate,' we may well doubt if any season would seem suitable for our following so comically ugly an example. Let it be unhesitatingly granted that we must not allow mere short memories to blot out the shameful record against our chief enemy—the savage and vile treatment of Belgians, of British prisoners, of French peasants, of peaceful sea-travellers of nations at war or not at war, and the rest of the black list; let it be understood at home and abroad that condonation of these things can never be secured from us or any right-minded people. But to lash ourselves to a fury by the picture or recital of such crimes is the poorest and least helpful way, we must maintain, of acquiring and maintaining our will to conquer in this war. Sir Arthur, it has been recognised, means well; but in suggesting such a method he sets foot on a slippery plane which leads the minds of men into the abyss of darkest, most dangerous, and, it must be added, most futile passion. A clearer mood befits the valiant minister of international justice.

* * *

NATURALLY, the high sacerdotal party on the one hand, and the Scripture literalists on the other, have raised a vigorous protest against the elevation of the Dean of Durham, Dr. Hensley Henson, to the Bishopric of Hereford, vacated by the retirement of that admired Liberal veteran, Dr. Percival. The readiness shown by him to fraternise with Nonconformists makes him an object of scorn to the proud claimants of apostolical succession; his breadth of opinion on certain parts of the Creed render him anathema to the zealously "orthodox." All the storm, however, will evidently result in little else than the exposure of the weakness of the storming parties; the appointment will go forward duly, and one more hopefully large-minded addition will be made to a bench that can well bear it.

THE NEW YEAR SERVICES.

—•••—

THE Services of Intercession and Thanksgiving appointed for the first Sunday in the year will surely do something more than rally the forces of the religious-minded people of the nation; though, if it did that alone, the day would be a good one for us all. Difficult as the task is, we must try with all our might to recover the high tone and purpose that united our people at the beginning of the war, heard then in many a noble utterance, attested in many a noble act of self-denying devotion. Doubtless it was inevitable that in the course of a strain so long continued, and marked by so much loss and disappointment, some waning of public spirit would occur. A large number of people, we fear, have but little resource in themselves against the effects, repeated almost from day to day, of happenings grievous, worrying, and sometimes half-maddening, which are reported as fact or put forth as rumour. The whole atmosphere, so to speak, has become vitiated. A new flood of mental ozone is needed. Let the churches name it as they will, let them seek it as they think best; but if they really supply the stimulus that is needed, no wise man will too narrowly criticise their terms or their methods.

In this matter we all know that much depends on the preachers—though not all. They have great opportunities, and great responsibilities. As one listens sometimes to the man in the pulpit there comes an impression that all this is part of a routine, and little else. Routine and order there must be; and no man is an inspired orator every time he opens his mouth. But when a hearer wonders what it all has to do with his actual troubles, temptations, perplexities, and sorrows, when he goes away rather duller than before, with no freshening of feeling and strengthening of will to wage his own personal battle like a man, there is evidently a failure of the Church in his case, at any rate. May we mention a coincidence—it may be nothing more. A minister, not without successful record in the past, told us the other day that he could not find further interest in theology in these times. An experienced man of business, immersed in the toils and cares of mercantile life as now carried on, told us within the next hour that theology was the thing that really interested him most. But, then, the theology he meant was no mere academic study; it was a serious wrestling with life's problems, the earnest endeavour to get light upon them, and the story of the wars and victories of the human soul. We commend this matter to the very careful attention of our ministerial brethren; it may be the case that in trying to be "topical" they have too much neglected the permanent needs of their hearers. However that be, the New Year means a new opportunity for all religious people. Some, we are sure, will make the most of it.

LINES SUGGESTED BY A VISIT TO HOUND TOR, DARTMOOR.

Up to enormous rocks I slowly climb,
And stand 'mid remnants of a ruined world,
Surviving fragments of primeval time,
Around me in a wild confusion hurled.

In the dark past a tow'ring mountain rose,
And secret fires upraised the molten rock.
Forging a massy pile with giant blows,
Making earth tremble with volcanic shock.

Then, through vast ages, wind and rain and frost
Wore down from year to year that summit's pride,
And o'er the fields its powdered ruins tossed,
And rent with furrows deep its crumbling side.

At last, to science, with its searching eye,
These speechless rocks reveal their story strange,
And tell how earthly splendours fade
and die,
And all things yield to never ceasing change.

And now, within this dim arcade of years,
How puny seems man's longest, proudest life,
Short stormy moments, full of hopes and fears,
And then a sleep, unbroke by earthly strife.

Some savage chieftain, glorying in his might,
May here have ruled of slaves a crouching horde,
And boasted that his force determined
right,
And selfish power alone should be adored.

Amid the silence of old time he sleeps,
These barren rocks disclose not e'en his name.
O'er perished generations nature weeps,
And these lone piles man's vanity proclaim.

So shall it be with him whose haughty eye
Now makes men tremble; and the moth and rust
Shall eat away his fame, and he shall lie
A little mound of long forgotten dust.

ANON.

THE CHILDREN OF ENGLAND.

"ON the seashore of endless worlds children meet," says the Eastern poet, and in all the happy tumult of young lives, when love and beauty surround them, we catch some echoes of that music of the spheres to which they would seem to be so singularly attuned. They come to us, trailing clouds of glory, like visitants out of Fairyland, doomed to spend a certain time with mortals in order that they may realise more fully what a privilege it is to be natives of a happier clime; and sometimes we are startled by the intentness of their gaze or the quaint wisdom of their fancies into believing that celestial presences are, indeed, ever about them, whispering words in their ear which older people cannot understand because they have been shut out so long from the sources of their spiritual life. The truth is that children are nearer to heaven than we are, or rather, that it enfolds them as they move amongst us so joyously, their eyes bright with the glory of a world which, we must think, angels inhabit. If we would let them, they would recreate the universe for us; if we would emulate their trustful spirit, our manifold cares would cease and, indeed, it is only when we become like them that we can escape from those vain speculations which leave the heart numb with an icy terror, and find our way into the kingdom of God.

Many of us realise all this in a dim sort of way, and not a few earnest pioneers of education are seeking to give fuller expression to the conception of childhood which recognises how much we have to learn from it, and how little we need do for the growing personality beyond giving it opportunity for healthy development, and leaving all the avenues open by which love, and truth, and beauty may reach the soul. But how many of us are really troubled by the thought that millions of boys and girls in this land of ours are physically incapable of benefiting by the education which the State provides, as we put it—to say nothing of evolving the higher emotional and imaginative faculties! It is not necessary to go into the statistics: any one can look them up who cares to do so. But it is undeniable that we are allowing vast numbers of the young population to be robbed of the grace and vitality and power of expression which depend so largely upon physical well-being, and should be the child's natural heritage. Not only have these little ones scarcely any capacity for extracting real joy from such pleasures as they have in their sordid and circumscribed lives, and no strength to combat the myriad diseases which lie in wait for ill-nurtured, enfeebled bodies, but the gateways of the senses even are choked up, so that they can scarcely distinguish the scent of one flower from another, or appreciate the degrees of heat and cold, or give free play to the childish love of fun. Insensibility is their prevailing characteristic, and the very muscles of the face are often so stiffened through bad habits of breathing that certain movements of the lips are impossible, and defective speech is the result. Doctors and nurses attending the school clinics know something of what this means, and nothing is more pathetic in the record of human perseverance and effort than the stories they tell us of time literally wasted in trying to patch up the evils caused by the neglect of child-life—a sin of which all European nations, and even the countries of the New World, have been guilty. Only too often the patient work of months is undone time after time because the root causes are still untouched.

This is the problem which has occupied the mind of Margaret McMillan, and the sister whose death has recently robbed her of a devoted helper and comrade, for the past twenty-five years, first in Bradford and then in London, and the way in which she has attempted a partial solution of it—for no complete solution is possible at the present stage of social evolution—is set forth for all to read in her book, 'The Camp School.*' The story narrated there in a vivid, discursive fashion that is as unlike anything ever read in a Blue Book as the fairy-tales of Hans Andersen, will be fairly familiar to most of our readers; but nobody who has not read it in the writer's own words or heard it from her own lips can have any idea of the wealth of idealism, imaginative sympathy, and, we may add, practical Christianity which she has brought to the accomplishment of her work. She is a trained psychologist, and that fact would secure a hearing for her on this vital subject of rearing a healthy race apart from anything else; but, more than that, she is a passionate lover of young life, and, fortunately, it has never been possible for her to witness without anguish the shades of the prison house closing about the growing child, who too soon forgets the heaven that lay about its infancy in the slums of our overcrowded cities.

A loveable and humorous spirit is hers, and very amusing is the account she gives of the way her efforts were hindered at the outset, and for a long time afterwards, by the criticism and disapproval which her "wild" schemes called forth. From the authorities, who shook their heads "in pity and in shame" when she took to herding boys in an old churchyard, to the plumber, who thought her demented and frankly said that the whole thing was "rediklous," almost everybody discouraged her—the exceptions, of course, were the people with vision who helped to make her dreams come true. But she persevered, until she had three camps running at Deptford (including one for babies), in addition to the now famous Remedial Clinic. The children thrived under her ceaseless care, the little minds unfolded as their skilful teachers worked upon them with infinite patience and sympathy, and at last even the "powers that be" saw that Miss McMillan was doing a fine work for her country which no one else had had the wit to think out, and began to give her financial aid. Now the principle she has worked for so long is established in the English educational system, and slowly, very slowly, we are learning, confronted with statistics of disease and mental deficiency which hurt us to the soul as we study them, that human beings can only be what God intended them to be, capable of giving expression to the spiritual qualities with which they are endowed, if the same method is adopted in their nurture and education as the gardener follows in growing sweet-peas and roses. To turn an ailing, dirty, dull-eyed little bundle of nerves into a rosy, laughing child, so that its mother hardly knows it; to make the pale young girls of the slums grow up tall and lithe "like lilies"; to rescue an apathetic lad from the stupor of ignorance and irresolution, and brace him up until he develops firmness of will and individuality,—that is the supreme aim in life for the writer of this absorbing book, and those of us who are talking about reconstruction might well turn our eyes in the direction she indicates. The facts, as Miss McMillan says, are so very simple that he who runs may read them, and we can all do a little thinking, at least, about England's nursery population of 1,000,000, who need an army of not less than 30,000 trained nurses to give them the adequate care and nurture in their earliest years which cannot be obtained, at present, in the conditions to which they were born.

* 'The Camp School.' By Margaret McMillan, C.B.E. London: Allen & Unwin, Ltd. 3s. 6d. net.

FIELD AMBULANCE NOTES.

BY THE REV. MORTIMER ROWE, R.A.M.C.

X.—CAMP FATIGUES.

It fell to my lot the other day, when back at head-quarters between spells of duty up the line, to tidy up the exterior of a row of dug-outs; which means, of course, collecting all such little unconsidered trifles as match-stalks, cigarette ends, and morsels of bacon-rind. We hold ourselves fortunate if that short duty sets us free to read or write letters for the remainder of the morning. But my thoughts went back to the days of training in an English camp, where "Fatigues" were of so much more imposing a character, and had to be undertaken by each whole unit in turn for the day.

I well remember returning to camp at the end of a glorious six-days' leave, after travelling two-thirds of the length of England; creeping quietly to bed in the dark hut at nearly midnight, and being wakened by the bugle's imperious call at 5.30 A.M. to find that it was our day for "Camp Fatigues"; "and," they informed me cheerfully, "you're on Officers' Mess." Needless to say, those comfortable and spacious premises offered a variety of tasks, and a substantial squad of a score or so reported there after breakfast. Luck was against me that day, I think, to compensate for over much pleasure in a long leave at home; for in the casual division of labour I found myself detailed with two others for the Mess kitchen, and spent the first day of my return to military life—but no, I will draw a veil over the scene, leaving the details to the imagination. Doubtless it is good for the immortal soul, and teaches valuable lessons of humility and of contentment with the most modest functions in a nation organised for victory in a just and righteous cause; but the cure we found for our repugnance to the various ills we had suffered was not so much in meditating on the ethical value of obedience and discipline, but rather in comparing notes in the hut at the end of the day and making endless fun of the tasks that had fallen to our lot. There were the Incinerators, for example, accounted desirable because soon finished with; involving the filling of a ponderous cart with the tin cans and ashes from those instruments for the combustion of rubbish, and then the performance of the horse's functions in removing it to an appropriate place beyond the camp—and it was a weighty task for the man who took his turn between the shafts while others pulled and pushed! My lasting regret is that we have no photographic records of ourselves on these expeditions. Then there was the Canteen, where one washed a hundred glasses and cleansed a hundred stains of liquid refreshment from forms and tables, and tidied up generally at the hours of 9 and 2; or a large house where some of the officers had quarters, and where three of us performed the duties of complete and perfect housemaids for the day. Yes, it was a great joke, but we are glad there is so little of it out here. I used to wonder whether I should ever again choose a certain hymn containing the lines:—

Let the lowliest task be mine,
Joyful, so the work be Thine.

I haven't yet made up my mind whether I shall. The stumbling-block lies in that word "joyful." I freely confess I never quite succeeded in rising to that height!

THREE CENTURIES OF TREATIES OF PEACE.
By Sir Walter Phillimore, late Lord Justice of Appeal. London: John Murray. 7s. 6d. net.

THIS book reviews all the main treaties from the close of the Thirty Years War to the present day, and points out wherein they failed to secure permanent peace. Their defects were due to (1) dynastic considerations; (2) compensation to successful nations; (3) the inclusion under one rule of peoples differing in language, religion, and sentiments; (4) the severance of peoples alike in such matters; (5) the use of vague expressions; (6) the delimitation of boundaries in unknown lands and the neglect of natural boundaries; (7) the imposition of conditions relating to the internal affairs of countries; (8) the neglect to provide for the revision of treaties as circumstances alter. The writer proceeds to point out the matters which should be arranged at the end of the present war so that peace may be permanent. The book also deals with the usages of war by land and sea, following very much the lines of the work by the author's father. The subjects discussed are full of difficulties; but it would be hard to find any one better qualified to deal with them than the author; and his views on every subject are stated with clearness, and supported by the grounds on which they are based.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

MR. A. M. SIMPSON, ADELAIDE.

INFORMATION has just come to hand of the death at the end of September of Mr. A. M. Simpson, a prominent member of the Unitarian Church, Adelaide, who was born in London in 1843, but had lived during the greater part of his long and useful life in Adelaide. A well-known manufacturer and an enterprising man of business, Mr. Simpson did much to further the interests of South Australia, and was for six years a member of Parliament. He held many appointments in connection with public bodies, was an honoured Freemason, President of the Royal Agricultural and Horticultural Society of South Australia, a trustee of the State Bank of South Australia, and a member of the State Board of Conciliation. He was also one of the promoters of the tramway system, and a member of the first committee of the Australian National Union, the forerunner of the Australian Natives' Association. Mr. Simpson was very generous in the matter of public gifts, and his kindness of heart and unostentatious liberality added to the general esteem in which he was held. Institutions for consumptives, the blind, the deaf and the dumb all enlisted his active sympathy. A year ago he contributed between £2,000 and £3,000 to the Defence Department for the purchase of Australia's first battle-plane, which is at present in use at the Point Cook Aviation School. He also gave the stained glass King Edward VII. windows in the Adelaide City Council Chambers.

Mr. Simpson was twice married, his second wife being the daughter of Dr. John Sheridan, of Edinburgh. His eldest son is an ex-Mayor of Adelaide. Public expression has been given to the feelings of regret with which the news of Mr. Simpson's death was received, and all bear testimony to the services which he had rendered to the community. He was a splendid type of citizen, and did much to leave the world better than he found it.

MR. H. W. EDGAR NOEL.

NEWS has been received with great regret of the death on the field of battle in France, on October 30, 1917, of Henry William Edgar Noel, the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Noel of Woodford. He was born in South Hampstead on August 10, 1881, and in 1882 his parents removed to Woodford, where they have resided ever since. He was educated with his two brothers at Bancroft's School, Woodford Green, and after two years' experience in a City office, joined the staff of Messrs. Glyn Mills, Currie & Co., bankers, of which he was still a member at the time of his death. Mr. Noel's whole career was marked by steady perseverance and conscientious work. He passed the examinations of the Bankers' Institute and was elected a member. He also attended the Gilbert Lectures, and satisfactorily passed the examinations in connection therewith. He was for many years a member of the congregation and of the Church Committee at West Ham Lane, Stratford, a Trustee of the church, a teacher, and subsequently Superintendent, of the Sunday school. In the latter capacity his services were greatly appreciated. He was also very active in temperance work, and as a member of the Young People's Guild, and founded and conducted for some time the Chums Club, consisting of youths of the church. Mr. Noel was also an acceptable occasional lay preacher, and acted as auditor in connection with institutional accounts, including those of the Sunday School.

Association. Short verses written by him have been sung both in France and in England. On November 6, 1909, he was married by the Rev. A. N. Blatchford at Lewin's Mead Meeting House, Bristol, to Miss Lilian Kate Underhill, daughter of Mr. J. T. Underhill, who had been Treasurer of the Church at Stratford and subsequently also Treasurer of the Lewin's Mead Meeting House. On their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Noel removed to Wanstead. One daughter, Marjorie, was born to them. With his two brothers Mr. Noel voluntarily attested in December, 1915, and he was called to the colours on January 13, 1917. He joined the 1/28 London Regiment (Artists Rifles), was sent to France for training, and never returned. In the army he was regarded as a handy man, a quality he acquired largely as a result of training in the woodwork section of Bancroft's School. He had a strong belief in the justice of our cause, and the spirit in which he did his duty is shown in a paragraph in a letter written home, before he went into the trenches. After speaking of his love for wife and child, and home, and parents, he says, "but this is a bigger thing than home ties." His youngest brother, Edmund Douglas Noel, was wounded in the foot on the Somme in July, 1916, and after some months in hospital is now engaged on home service.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium. (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais. (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

154TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	19,604	8	9
Miss Colten and the Misses Gillespie (30th) ..	0	7	6
Mr. Ronald P. Jones (10th) ..	10	0	0
Mrs. Cogan Conway (4th) ..	1	1	0
Miss Baker, Ilminster ..	1	1	0
Master Henry Thew (7th) ..	0	1	6
Miss J. Buckley, Boston (4th) ..	0	15	0
"In Memory of Capt. A. G. Rollason" (6th) ..	5	0	0
Mr. E. G. Rymer (2nd) ..	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry (13th) ..	2	0	0
Mr. F. Nevill ..	1	1	0
A Friend at Paignton (5th) ..	0	5	0
	£19,628	0	9

Parcels have been received from: Rosslyn Hill Working Party (per Mrs. Thomas Cobb); C. H. R.; Miss Hervey; Mrs. Hanna; Mrs. Bredall; Miss E. D. Higginson; Miss Boys; Ullet Road Church Sewing Circle (per Mrs. Odgers); Ilminster Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Holmshaw).

WEEKLY NOTES.

At the close of three years' work I want once more to thank our subscribers from the bottom of my heart for all their help and sympathy with this Fund. When we began, we had no idea how the work would grow and expand, nor had we any idea what generous support would be forthcoming. Nearly £20,000 has been subscribed in money, and the gifts in kind—ranging from motor-cars to disused tennis balls—must be worth almost as much again. During this three years our work has become more and more recognised and valued, and it is often remarked to me with gratitude that, while other societies have become exhausted and have dropped out, we have continued until now. We fully intend to continue until Belgium is restored to its King and people. Three years and a half of exile is a terrible thing, and many are looking forward to their return with apprehension, fearing what they may find. They have, indeed, reason for trepidation, and we want them to feel that we English do not lightly forget our obligations and our friendships.

The following account from Miss Holmes of Christmas Day at the Hut will be of interest to many: "Christmas Day was fine. Madame was already busy with the tree when I arrived in good time. It was only hung with lanterns and glittering things, and was lighted by electricity, and we had a bank of holly right across the stage. Every man on entering had a number for a present, and they had roast beef and apples for dinner. The fête began at 3. The General was anxious to miss nothing and asked that music might be played until he arrived. He was extremely nice with every one, thanking and complimenting, and so on. The children (of the refugee school) played a little piece remarkably well, with great spirit and abandon, especially one boy, who on everyday occasions looks most ordinary; and they only had four rehearsals. It was soldiers in the trenches, round a stove, one pathetic, others jolly; then dreams and visions of wife and children—that was very well done. Finally, a vision of the Virgin, Joseph, and the Babe. The distribution of presents began at 4.30. A charming little girl, the Virgin Mary, drew the numbers of the tickets. Over a thousand numbers had been given out and it was impossible to give all the presents that day, so some had to wait till next day."

ROSE ALLEN

SPECIAL WANTS.

Bedsocks, (urgent).
Pyjamas, shirts, socks, and all sorts of men's underclothing.
Mufflers, cardigans, slippers.
Clothing for women and children.
Games, jig-saw puzzles.
White shawls for babies.
Calico bags, 2 ft. by 3 ft.
Treasure bags.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

A FAMOUS INTERNATIONALIST.

THE death of Felix Moscheles removes one of the most interesting and vivid personalities of the Peace Movement of which so many hopes were born in the years before the war. The son of a pianist and composer of European distinction, and of a writer whose beautiful face her son lived to paint, he had no less a person than Mendelssohn, his father's intimate friend, for his godfather, and throughout his life he mixed with celebrities from all lands, with many of whom he was on terms of the most delightful intimacy. Of happy friendships, indeed, his life was full, and the gospel of internationalism of which he became so able an exponent was learnt in his school-days in Germany, as an art student in Paris and Antwerp, and in his own home in Chelsea, which was the meeting ground of so many people of world-wide fame. His connection with the Peace Movement dates from the time when, visiting Paris after the Commune, before the departure of the German troops, the horror of warfare was bitten deeply into his sensitive and generous soul, and from that time onward Moscheles was one of the foremost workers in the cause of internationalism. "Hodgson Pratt first definitely enlisted him in this crusade," says The Manchester Guardian, in an article from which we may be permitted to quote some passages relating to his special life-work:—

"On Pratt's death he succeeded him as chairman and, later, president of the International Arbitration and Peace Association. Both to the domestic and the international work of the movement he brought a something new that was his own. Henry Richard, Hodgson Pratt, Spence Watson were, like Cobden and Bright before them, pure Englishmen, strong with the strength of personal integrity and ardour, but easily distinguishable from the Continental apostles of the peace idea by their colouring of political, economic, and religious Liberalism. Moscheles was, above all, an artist and a Bohemian; he was drawn more to political refugees, Labour men, and Socialists than to any of the regular party combatants of the time. The division of the Peace Movement, especially in this country, into a number of small sectional societies, some emphasising the political and juridical, some the religious, and some the industrial aspects of the question, was a thing he never could understand, and he was for ever preaching the advantages of a more catholic and practical spirit. He invented the international 'Peace Day' celebration and drafted annually the resolution that was to be put simultaneously in many lands. For years his large studio in Chelsea, littered with his own and his wife's canvases, family treasures, and the jetsam of travel, was the scene of gatherings of this kind. Here foreign statesmen, flying across the world, missionaries of inconceivable creeds, beetle-browed revolutionaries, great singers and pianists, poets, inventors of new languages, all sorts of forceful men and beautiful women, were to be met. 'Cosmopolis, Chelsea,' it should have been called; actually, it will be remembered as 'the Grelax,' a jocular combination of his wife's and his own name.

"In 1883 he crossed the Atlantic with Irving and Ellen Terry, and in course of some months' stay in the States we see him painting the portrait of Grover Cleveland, preaching arbitration the while to the future President. In 1884 Robert Browning, already a close friend, sat to Moscheles, and wrote a verse inscription for one of his largest pictures, 'The Isle's Enchantress.' The portrait of Sergius Stepniak and a series of topical canvases—one of them satirising the sweater, another representing the agony of Armenia—indicated subjects nearer to his heart than those he showed from time to time at the Academy and the Grosvenor and New Galleries. He became a friend and active disciple of Dr. Zamenhof, the inventor of Esperanto, and was for some years president of the London Esperanto Club. With the Baroness von Suttner and several others, who have since been endowed with the Nobel Prize, he attended both the first and second Peace Conferences at the Hague. At the annual International Peace Conferences, and in the more frequent deliberations of the Standing Committee of the Peace Movement in Berne, he was valued even more for his indomitable gaiety and illimitable sympathies than for his shrewdness in counsel. Between his sixtieth and seventieth years he began writing regularly for Concord, the organ of the International Arbitration Association."

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

A FEW notes taken from the Minutes of the Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association for November and December will be of interest to our readers. An ordinary monthly agenda paper usually contains from sixty to one hundred items of business—not reckoning scores of letters which have simply the heading 'Correspondence'—so that only a brief summary is possible.

Upwards of 6,000 copies of the Lawrence House Bulletin were posted before Christmas to sailors and soldiers on active service, and letters of warm appreciation have been received. A considerable number of new names and addresses reached Essex Hall too late for Christmas and the New Year, but communications will go to them later. A message of sympathy, signed by Dr. Carpenter and Mrs. Sydney Martineau, along with a copy of the booklet 'To those who Mourn,' will be forwarded in the course of a few days to the nearest relatives of men connected with our churches and schools who have fallen in the fight for freedom and right.

Unitarianism in Scotland suffered a severe loss in the death of the Rev. Lucking Tavenner at Aberdeen. The enterprise and zeal of the Rev. L. Jenkins Jones of Glasgow, the Secretary of the Scottish Unitarian Association, are devoted to strengthening and extending missionary work in Scotland. The Rev. E. T. Russell continues, without weariness or rest, to lecture and hold services in various towns within an easy radius of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Perth.

Unavoidable difficulties have delayed the publication of the two volumes of 'The Way of Life,' by Dr. James Drummond, the first dealing with the Parables of Jesus, and the second with the Lord's Prayer and the Teachings of Christ. The first volume is at the binders' and will be issued shortly; the second is in type. 'Out of the Heart of the Storm,' a volume of sermons by the Rev. Henry Gow, has been read with deep interest, and 'The Soul of the Nation,' a series of essays by the Rev. W. H. Drummond, has proved a stimulating book. The Year Book for 1918 was completed by the Editor several weeks ago, but the printers, owing to shortage of labour, have been unable to get it out with their customary speed and punctuality. The cost of producing the Pocket Almanac, we may mention, is double what it was in pre-war days.

The Rev. T. P. Spedding, in addition to his Home Camp visitation work, has spent two months at Moss Side, Manchester. He was successful in infusing new life into the congregation, who have recently appointed the Rev. H. C. Horsley as minister. The Rev. Thomas Anderson has resigned his position of District Minister to the Sheffield District Association, and will from January devote himself to Mexborough alone. The special services, conferences, and meetings organised by a joint committee representing the Manchester District Association, the East Cheshire Union, and the North and East Lancashire Mission, and financed by the Association, have been held, and others are to follow later. Grants have also been made for similar work in the area covered by the Southern Unitarian Association.

Dr. Carpenter's services in different parts of the country have been greatly appreciated. He has preached and lectured recently at Wakefield, Nottingham, Lincoln, Norwich and Northampton. His future engagements include visits to Southport, Manchester, Huddersfield, Cambridge, South Wales, and Scotland.

Early in November applications for a War Bonus were received by Dr. Carpenter and Mr. Street from 115 ministers (excluding a few who were considered ineligible). Of these 61 were beneficiaries of the Sustentation Fund, each of whom received £10; there were also 21 additional ministers who received £5. The British and Foreign Unitarian Association and the Sustentation Fund became jointly responsible for making a grant of £10 each to 55 other ministers. The total amount expended was £1,265. The Committee of the Association were grateful for the opportunity of co-operating in this benevolent work with the managers of the Sustentation Fund.

During the month of December the expenditure exceeded £2,000, and included £536 for Home Mission Work, £508 for Publications, £194 for Colonial and Foreign work, £39 for Home Camps, Grants of Books and Tracts, £83, and £290 War Bonus Grants. A legacy received from the Executor of the late Mrs. Greaves was invested.

The effort made by Mr. E. Ethelred Brown to establish a Unitarian congregation at Kingston, Jamaica, has been generously supported by the American Unitarian Association, but the directors came to the conclusion that the results did not justify further expenditure, and the grant would cease at the end of the current year. The British and Foreign Unitarian Association also assisted the movement for a time. It is wise and good to make experiments in missionary work, but if the experiment fails it is only common prudence to give it up.

At the December meeting of the Committee a grant of £10 was made to the Rev. Paul Teissonnière, formerly minister of the Free Christian Church at Brussels, and now holding an appointment under the French Government at Calais, to assist him in printing and circulating liberal religious literature among Belgian soldiers who stood aloof from Roman Catholicism and ordinary Protestant orthodoxy.

The death of Mr. Charles Hawksley has removed from the Committee a charming personality and a most generous supporter. The Rev. J. H. Weatherall has recently been co-opted a member of the Committee. Miss E. N. Gardner, who for the past seven years has been clerical assistant to the Secretary, has resigned owing to ill-health, and Miss Dorothy Fry has been appointed in her place. The Secretary's 'Letters Received Book' for the year ending December 31, 1917, contains 5,398 entries.

THE DAY OF NATIONAL PRAYER.

IN the course of a letter received from the National War Aims Committee calling attention to the day of national prayer, it is suggested that this affords an unusual opportunity for the Churches to demonstrate that, despite their unhappy divisions, a real unity exists, though how that unity can best be shown is a question which must be left to each minister of the Gospel to decide for himself. It is urged, however, that no removable obstacle should be allowed to stand in the way.

It is further suggested that a strong appeal should be made to those who are not regular attendants at a place of worship, as well as to those who are, to make a point of being present at the popular service appointed for the day. Prayer is purpose, and the main object of the day is that the nation may re-consecrate itself to the sacred purpose to which it has set its hand. The hymns selected should be of a heartening character, breathing unswerving faith in the divine blessing on our cause. Such hymns as 'Rejoice, the Lord is King,' 'Lead us, Heavenly Father, lead us,' 'O God our Help in Ages past,' the 'Old Hundredth,' 'Soldiers of Christ, arise!' 'O Worship the King all glorious above,' &c., would seem specially appropriate.

Preachers should emphasise the fact that our purpose in the war is not the destruction of the German State, nor aggrandisement either for ourselves or our Allies, but permanent peace and security for all peoples of the world; that while the moral and spiritual shortcomings of the nation have undoubtedly delayed our success in the struggle, yet, because the cause in which we are fighting is the cause of right, we may fearlessly ask God to pardon our faults and to bless our efforts; that we owe it to those who have given their lives in the holy cause to endure to the end and to abstain from grumbling, pessimism, and carping criticism, taking as our watchword "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right"; that it is the duty of the public to turn its mind to thanksgiving for the success already granted to our arms in the control of the seas, the stemming of the tide of invasion in Northern France, and the redemption of Jerusalem from the Turks; also to render thanks that the United States, the great offshoot of Britain overseas, has listened to the call of right and duty, and now stands by our side, with all the blessings which such a union promises for the future of the world.

Mrs. W. H. Drummond writes from 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3: "Further gifts of toys have been received from the Unitarian School, Bedford, and the Children's Guild, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead. Four more cases of toys have been dispatched to the 'Colonies Scolaires' in France."

THE Rev. Mortimer Rowe, R.A.M.C., whose "Field Ambulance Notes" are appearing in our columns, has been awarded the Military Medal. Mr. Rowe was recently invalided home from France suffering from gas poisoning.

The Liberal Christian for January contains an account of the annual business meeting of the Liberal Christian League, which took place in November, Mr. Kinsman presiding, when reference was made with very great regret to a letter of resignation received from Miss Alleyne, who had acted as hon. secretary for six years. Miss Alleyne has been unable to render much assistance for the past six months, having been ordered a complete rest, and as she is warned that she must not undertake any work or responsibility for an indefinite period, she has had no alternative but to resign her trust. Her untiring and disinterested work for the League is well known, and it is hoped that some way may be found of keeping her office open, at any rate for the next year, in the hope that she may be able to return to it, even under modified conditions.

To all his former readers, young and old, who have sent him such kindly messages on the cessation of Young Days, the Editor, the Rev. J. J. Wright, desires to express his heart-felt thanks, with every good wish for a brighter New Year, and the fond hope that—the war over—Young Days, in some shape, may come out again.

MR. J. EDWARD HARLOW writes from 90 Cheriton Road, Folkestone, as follows: "The Churches of all denominations in England are well together in view of the special day of prayer and thanksgiving appointed by the King. A new unity of spirit, awakened by the war, moves among them. Next Sunday will witness an unprecedented circumstance. Certain common prayers, mutually agreed upon, will be used alike in the Church of England and the Nonconformist Churches. Only one anxiety remains. Will the people crowd the Churches that they may hear the King's Proclamation and participate in its observance? In this matter the religious leaders are active. For example, the President of the Wesleyan Methodist Church is this week issuing a second appeal to his constituency especially in the villages. Pursuing a request with which I have been honoured, may I ask that, at least by the publication of this letter, you will assist in carrying the loyal efforts of the Churches to a triumphant consummation?"

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Bury.—In the course of a letter to the members of the Bank Street Chapel in the January Calendar, the minister, the Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans, refers to the sacrifices which have been made in the present war and the objects for which the men are fighting. "And we," he adds, "who are not called into the struggle in the way that our beloved ones are,—can we not come together and seek the healing touch of the Spirit of God as it radiates through human sympathy and from heart to heart? Can we not find some comfort and strength through communion with that Spirit and with each other? Our weekly gatherings may at times be poignant; but is it right to flee from the painful, and seek only the pleasant and pleasurable, when sorrow is so widespread? When the spirit of fellowship would dictate our sharing in it, rather doing all in our power to avoid it? We should feel some virtue in a vicarious suffering, and, indeed, be glad that we are called upon to suffer some little with or for others."

London: Essex Church.—A report has lately been issued which shows that the collections in churches and chapels on Hospital Sunday last June amounted to £37,338. Essex Church contributed £256 4s. 3d., an increase of £10 on the previous year, and the collection was the ninth largest from any of the congregations of London.

Northampton.—On Sunday, December 30, the services at the Kettering Road Church were conducted by Dr. Carpenter, President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. His visit and sermons, which were greatly appreciated, brought to a close a year during which exceptionally strenuous work has been done in the happiest spirit of religious fellowship.

Notlage.—The Christmas night dramatic performance by the members of the Unitarian Sunday school grows more popular year by year, and this Christmas, when two children's plays were given, the room was crowded, and a number of people had to be refused admission. The children had been trained by Mrs. Phillips, and two of the younger teachers, Miss M. Phillips and Miss C. Phillips, acted as accompanists. Prizes for regular attendance at the school were awarded at the close of the performance.

Ringwood.—A combined Sunday school and congregational tea was held in the schoolroom on Boxing Day, which was attended by over a hundred adults and children. After tea a Service of Song was rendered by the scholars, trained by Mrs. Matthews, who presided at the organ. A short address was given on the work of the Sunday school by the Rev. W. B. Matthews, and the prizes awarded for attendance and conduct during the year were presented by Mrs. Conway. With the assistance of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association certain much needed improvements in the sanitary conditions, and for the purpose of making available a vestry or class room have been effected. This room was used for the first time last Sunday afternoon by a newly formed Bible Class for girls conducted by Mrs. Matthews.

Wareham.—The funeral took place at Wareham on Saturday of Mr. Sydney Cleal, who met his death at the Poole Gas Works under painfully sad circumstances the previous Tuesday. The funeral service was held in the Unitarian Church at 3 o'clock, and was conducted by the Rev. G. B. Stallworthy (Poole), and Mr. W. E. Stephens (also of Poole). Hymns chosen by request were sung by the choir. The service at the graveside was conducted by the Rev. G. B. Stallworthy and Mr. Stephens.

THE 'Life and Letters of Robert Collyer,' in two volumes, by the Rev. John Haynes Holmes, has just been published in America by Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. The book tells the story of a pioneer in religious thought whose name is greatly beloved on both sides of the Atlantic, and it will be sure to find a ready sale among Unitarians in this country when it becomes possible to obtain copies at Essex Hall.

MARRIAGES.

MOTTRAM—ALLAN.—On New Year's Day, 1918, at the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, by the Rev. Lawrence Redfern, M.A., B.D., Lieut. Ralph Hale Mottram, eldest son of the late Mr. James Mottram and Mrs. Mottram, of The Birches, Bracondale, Norwich, to Margaret, fourth daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Allan, Longniddry, Scotland.

THORPE—SOUNDY.—On December 22, at Manchester College Chapel, Oxford, by the Rev. Dr. L. P. Jacks, Principal of the College, Lieut. Charles Thorpe, of the King's Own Royal Lancaster Regiment, and youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Thorpe, Thornicroft, Pendleton, Manchester, to Millicent Annie, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Soundy, Manchester College, Oxford.

DEATHS.

BULL.—On December 27, at 6 Bradford Road, Seven Kings, Ilford, in her seventy-seventh year, Mrs. Mary Jane Bull, widow of the late Edward John Bull, formerly of Stratford and Forest Gate.

LEECH.—On November 24, 1917, at Victoria, British Columbia, Emma, the wife of Alfred Leech, and second daughter of the late Mrs. Mary Scholes, Hilton Street, Manchester.

NOEL.—Killed in action, or died of wounds, in France, on October 30, 1917, Henry William Edgar (Artists' Rifles), eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Noel, of Woodford, aged 36.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, January 6.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.
 Brompton, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 5.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11 and 5.30.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
 South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Soul's, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. FRED HALL.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
 BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.
 OLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 DEAN ROW, 10.45, Mr. E. A. SMITH, B.Sc.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.15, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.
 HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut.-Col. C. S. BULLOCK.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. R. F. LISTER; 6.30, Mr. W. NEWELL.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOHN MCDOWELL.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.
 NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. LEE.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.
 WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

January

6. Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
13. Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.
20. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES.
11.15 A.M., Devotional Service only, without Sermon, after which an important Meeting of the Congregation will be held.
3.0 P.M., Children's Service.
27. Rev. VALENTINE D. DAVIS, of Bournemouth.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL ON MODERN LINES
WITH PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

The aim of the Religious Teaching is to instil a simple Christian Faith and personal religion. There is full Morning Service in the School on Sunday. In the evening boys may, if their parents desire it, attend a place of worship in Nantwich.

Full Prospectus, apply to the Head Master :
H. LANG JONES, M.A. (Oxon.).

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND NATIONAL DUTY,By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,
Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

2s. 6d. net (postage 4d. extra).

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS—JANUARY.

THE REIGN OF NONSENSE IN THE WORLD, IN THE STATE, AND IN
HUMAN LIFEBy Prince Eugene Troubetzkoy
THE SOUL AS IT IS, AND HOW TO DEAL WITH ITBy Prof. Gilbert Murray
THE STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE AND
MUTUAL AIDBy Prof. J. Macleod
THE RESTORATION OF PALESTINEBy M. J. Landa
THE OLD TESTAMENT AND ITS
ETHICAL TEACHINGBy C. G. Montefiore
MORALITY AND CONVENTIONBy Prof. H. L. Stewart
PAUL AND PLATOBy Prof. E. L. Price
CHRISTIAN PRINCIPLES AND THE WAR SETTLEMENTBy Noel Buxton, M.P.
A PLEA FOR ARCHÆOLOGY AMONG
THE CLERGYBy the Rev. H. J. Dukinfield Astley,
M.A., Litt.D.

PREACHING AFTER THE WAR

By the Rev. Joseph Wood
1517—1917: A RETROSPECT AND AN
ANTICIPATIONBy the Rev. Richard Roberts, M.A.
DISCUSSIONS, SURVEY, and SIGNED
REVIEWS

SUBSCRIPTION:

10s. per Annum, post free.

London: WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.2.

NOW READY.

UNITARIAN POCKET BOOK, 1918.

With List of Ministers and Congregations.
Roan, gilt edges, 2s. net; by post, 2s. 1d.

READY SHORTLY.

ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK, 1918.

Price 1s. 6d. net.; by post 1s. 8d.

Book Room, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. 3s. 3d. net post free.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL
MANCHESTER.

Contains 23 Illustrations of this historic Nonconformist building, and those associated with it, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes, and an Introduction by the late Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Chapel. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, | L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I. | H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss C. GRADWELL. | H. J. VEZEY.

S. WHITE, LL.D.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD,"
WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding
Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E.
KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

Miscellaneous.

WHITE ART LINEN for drawn-thread
Traycloths, Afternoon Teacloths, and Sideboard Covers. Pieces measure ¾ yard to 1½ yards, 6s. 6d. bundle. Postage 5d. Bargain List, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

OLD FALSE TEETH wanted for their precious metals; now worth up to £12 per set;
any condition; surplus jewellery; broken jewellery from £2 to £5 per ounce given. We give the highest possible value; before remitting we make offers by return. If not accepted goods returned post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105
Market Street, Manchester.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT, any condition, 6d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2s. on silver, 3s. on gold, 9s. on platinum.
Cash by return or offer. SATISFACTION
GUARANTEED by the reliable firm.—S. CANN
& CO., 69A Market Street, Manchester.

ARTICLES OF JEWELLERY any description (broken or otherwise) BOUGHT.
Cash by return or offer made on EXAMINATION, as it is impossible to estimate value without.
HIGHEST MARKET VALUE GUARANTEED
If offer not accepted goods returned post free.
Strictly genuine.—S. CANN & CO., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Estd. 1850.

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS
TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.
Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines;
extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word.
Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s.
Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d.
Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Press
11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and
Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company,
Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4.
Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—
Saturday, January 5 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3941.
NEW SERIES, No. 1044.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 12, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 9	The late Capt. Edward Stanley Russell, M.C. 12	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
FREEDOM OF THE SEAS 10	BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—	Belgian Hospital Fund 13
FIELD AMBULANCE NOTES 11	Towards Social Reconstruction 12	Victims of War 13
CORRESPONDENCE:—	The Comedy of Marionettes 12	The late Rev. F. A. Hinckley 14
'A Priest of the Ideal' 11	PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED 13	An Italian Church in Boston 14
Prohibition during the War 11		NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 14

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

OUR aged and venerated friend and religious ally, Prof. Bonet-Maury of Paris, sends his greetings to Essex Hall at the opening of a New Year. God grant, says he, that this fourth year of war may veritably be a "year of Grace." May justice and goodwill at length prevail. Let "God and our Right" be the motto of all, interpreted as in the address of our Prime Minister last week, for which our confrère expresses heartiest admiration. All who have had the privilege of meeting the learned Professor will cordially welcome his message; we trust that the day is not distant when the friends of religious life and liberty, in the fullest sense, will be able to rejoice and sympathise together in happy conference as of old.

Two momentous utterances, by our Prime Minister and President Wilson respectively, have marked the week, and might well be expected to lead toward an international settlement if the way, for the present, were not barred by the ambitions of the militarists of Germany. These are supported, apparently, by the feelings of a very large section of the German people, who have been kept designedly in the dark as to the real military position, on the one hand, and the real aims of the Allies on the other. It cannot now be said, whether by critics abroad or at home, that these aims are hidden and malevolent. Mr. Lloyd George, who has reaped for his statement of policy last Saturday the reward of widespread approval in return for taking into consultation the leaders of all the great political parties, and for his evident care and moderation in choosing fit expression for the ideas advanced, may be said to have done more than define the British, or indeed the Allied, policy. He has substantially united the nation once more after a period of ominous drifting apart. We have militarists and hotheads here, undoubtedly, as well as Germany has; but any dissatisfaction with the Premier's tone, as being "too pacific," has been expressed privately for the most part.

OF the President's address to Congress on Tuesday we can only say it accords quite sufficiently with that of the Premier to have practically the same purport; indeed, Mr. Wilson expressly commended the spirit and terms of Mr. Lloyd George's statement, and where his own varied from it was chiefly and naturally in regard to points of special interest to the transatlantic peoples. In one direction he spoke words of weight which may be profitably considered by those of us who can hardly avoid regarding the Russians with something approaching to ill-feeling, the result of a bitter disappointment. Mr. Wilson made a special reference to that great people, sympathising with them in their present difficulties, which are enormous and too little discerned by people in this country, and looking forward with encouraging hopes to Russia's emergence from these troubles into a condition happier for herself and beneficial for the world. The main lines of both addresses may be conveniently focussed thus: (1) The inviolable sanctity of international agreements must be re-established and maintained; (2) territorial questions must be settled, not by the strong arm of interested races and nations, but by the right of self-determination or the consent of the governed; (3) an international organisation must be set up to limit armaments and diminish the probabilities of war.

THAT the terms advanced in these two addresses should be rejected in Germany was, perhaps, only to be expected. Their hotheads are not yet cooled enough to see that the chances are greatly against their getting any better terms, and that the Allies, experienced by these years of war, know what they are about. But a very illuminating note reaches us from Rome. A Vatican organ, the Osservatore Romano, referring to Mr. Lloyd George's speech, said:—

Henceforth one knows officially and seriously what England and the Entente desire before they sign peace. England has abandoned much, and has done well to do so; she has reduced the war aims of the Entente to a few points which can be discussed by the enemy. Moreover, the war programme of the British Premier so nearly approaches the proposals of Count Czernin that it really seems that the moment is arriving for discussion with a view to defining and completing the points of which there are divergences of view. It is now the turn of Germany and Austria to speak and to give their views on these points. It is to be hoped that they will do so, either in a public speech, or still better in secret conversations with representatives of the Entente. If in these conversations a conciliatory spirit prevails on both sides the ray of light which has come from London and from Brest-Litovsk might be the dawn of peace.

If this represents, as it apparently does, the feeling in Papal circles, the Austrians evidently have special reasons for pulling hard, as they are said to do, against the German domination of war policy. At any rate, the note indicates a possibility, if no more, of highly interesting and welcome developments.

JUDGING by the liberal subscriptions to the War Bonds secured by the Tank Campaign there is a vast increase in the pocket-money of many people, especially in the Midlands and the North. We imagine that various treasurers, faced just now with the problem of keeping up their lists, would very gratefully tap the newly created financial resources thus revealed. Cannot some of the amazingly thriving munition workers and employers be persuaded that in regard to long established charities, mission work, churches, and schools, for example, there is not only a pressing need but also a high duty to discharge? Apparently, the last thing that occurs to some people, otherwise quite of a generous disposition, is to become a subscriber to one of our societies. Charitable and congregational funds hitherto have been largely provided by people with very moderate fixed incomes, and these are just the people who find, and will find, we fear, a severe pinch in these times. Those who have become richer since the war began should really come to the rescue.

* * *

The Essex Hall Year Book for 1918 contains the names of 356 ministers and 9 lay-workers in the United Kingdom, and 13 in Dominions oversea. Fifteen names, owing to death and other causes, have disappeared from the list. The following appear for the first time: the Revs. J. P. Chalk (M.C.O., 1915-17), F. Cottier (H.M.C., 1914-17), Margaret B. Crook (M.C.O., 1914-17), B. Davies (Carm.C., 1912-15), V. A. Demant (M.C.O., 1914-17), G. Randall Jones (H.M.C., 1914-17), J. W. Maw (H.M.C., 1912-17), S. Mossop (H.M.C., 1914-17), S. T. Page-Smith (M.C.O., 1913-16), C. A. Piper (H.M.C., 1914-17), J. Pipkin (H.M.C., 1915-17). Four names of lay-workers who have completed probationary service are transferred to the ministerial list, and three new lay-workers are enrolled, including Miss E. Rosalind Lee. These recruits to the ministry enter at a most critical time for religion and the world; may they serve valiantly, wisely, and effectively.

* * *

WE are glad to see that there is considerable activity going on in connection with social service among our congregations and friends. The Social Service Quarterly, just issued, reports the formation of local Interdenominational Unions at Evesham, Oxford, and Newark, and a Social Reform Society at Plymouth; and the Liverpool Social Problem Society has done really excellent work. The course on 'Social Questions,' issued last year and noticed in these columns, has been brought into prominence at some churches and District Associations, and many addresses on various points in the course have been given in different parts of the country. The Executive, which meets this month, is carefully considering a pamphlet on the 'Sex Question,' which it is hoped will be issued before long. We strongly commend these efforts to ministers and others who may not yet have shared them. The Rev. H. H. Johnson of Evesham, Secretary of the Union, will gladly furnish information.

* * *

WE regret to learn that Lieut.-Col. Bullock, who was to have been at Mill Hill, Leeds, on Sunday, was obliged through ill-health to cancel the engagement. He trusts soon to be convalescent, but secretaries and others who have so eagerly sought his services in recent months must moderate their urgency somewhat. He is a strong man and a vigorous speaker—just the kind of visitor that congregations welcome in these times above all; but even the strongest has limits of strength, and it has to be remembered that our willing friend has exacting duties to perform in his military capacity.

THE FREEDOM OF THE SEAS.

PRESIDENT WILSON in his last great speech, with that decision and clear-sightedness which we are accustomed to find in him, lays down in his programme for international peace, among other things, the following condition: "Absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas outside territorial waters alike in peace and in war, except as the seas may be closed in whole or in part by international action for the enforcement of international covenants." As Lord Lansdowne said in his recent famous letter, the "freedom of the seas" is a phrase used in various senses; we do not always understand what is meant by it when the Germans speak of it.

We do not write with any special knowledge of international law, but from the point of view of common sense and the man in the street.

So far as times of peace are concerned it is absurd to suggest, as the Germans sometimes seem to do, that the British Navy interferes with the freedom of the seas. But when we are at war we undoubtedly do interfere with the freedom of the seas. We not only capture the merchant ships of the enemy—as we have a clear right to do—but we interfere with all neutral shipping. We claim the right to stop and search all neutral ships for "contraband" and if found to confiscate it. "Contraband" includes at the present time not only munitions of war, but foodstuffs and, indeed, almost everything which is of service to the enemy in carrying on the war. The Germans have replied to this interference of ours by sinking at sight, not only our merchant ships, but those of neutrals when there is the slightest suspicion that they are bringing material to the Allies. That is, of course, a new and terrible extension of the principle of interfering with the freedom of the seas. Not having a fleet strong enough to search and capture neutral ships with contraband, they sink them and their crews without mercy. It is the only way in which under the circumstances they can stop our supplies, and it is a frightful way, but there is an underlying principle which is common to us and them. It is the principle that when nations are at war the seas are not free for neutral shipping. Belligerents have a right to stop them anywhere on the ocean and to prevent them carrying munitions or foodstuffs to the enemy even via neutral ports. It has been a long-cherished part of our naval policy to cling to this right.

We have always resisted any attempt of Hague conventions to alter this "policy." It is probably true that one motive of Germany in building a fleet against us was due to our firm adherence to this policy.

President Wilson's demand for the freedom of the seas in war as well as peace appears to mean the abrogation of this right of interfering with neutral ships whatever they may carry and wherever they are going. The only exception he recognises is that he would permit the League of Nations for which he hopes to close the seas by agreement against any recalcitrant member which sought to destroy its unity.

Giving up this supposed privilege would be in direct opposition to prejudice deeply rooted in our naval policy, but there is probably no claim which has made and still makes so strongly for international suspicion and ill-will towards us.

To accept the President's principle would involve, we may suppose, that if we were at war with any other nation all ships flying a neutral flag would carry anything they chose to our enemy. We should have no right of search and, of course, no right of detention, except in the case of ships flying the enemy flag. Many navy men would say that the adoption of such a principle would destroy one of the chief advantages of our naval predominance. On the other hand, it must be remembered that if that principle were adopted and adhered to there could be no more "U"-boat outrages. Munitions and food would pass freely to us from neutrals as well as to our enemy. The fact might prolong the war, but it would confine the war more than it is now confined to the actual combatants, and it would save suffering to women and children.

It is quite arguable that even from the point of our own self-interest, in view of the enormous development of submarine warfare, the freedom of the seas for neutrals in time of war would be as much to our advantage as to that of our enemy. But those of us who, with President Wilson, believe in a League of Nations as the great hope of the future, have to think internationally and not merely as Englishmen. From that point of view there can be no question that a clear, honest statement from Great Britain that she is willing to give up once and for all, in common with other nations, the right she has claimed to interfere with neutral shipping in time of war, would be of enormous significance and value. Few things would make so clear our sincere desire to form one of a comity of nations. Few things would do so much to lessen the suspicion and irritation felt towards our naval power.

Few things would do so much to make for a reduction of naval preparation. We should need a navy to protect our coasts, but we should no longer need to police the ocean in time of war.

It would show the bona fides of this nation in standing for a League of Nations, which is the great hope of the future, and in whose hands would lie the ultimate issues of peace and war. If it is a sacrifice, it is a sacrifice which for the sake of international peace and goodwill we ought to make. Mere talk about freedom and justice and peace is of little value by itself. We should strike a great blow for justice and peace if we proclaimed at this time that we were prepared to unite with all other nations in recognising the freedom of the seas in time of war in the sense which is involved in the principle laid down by President Wilson.

H. G.

FIELD AMBULANCE NOTES.

BY THE REV. MORTIMER ROWE, R.A.M.C.

XI.—A DAY EXCURSION FROM THE FRONT.

ARE we surprised at the length of the war? The pious folk of Albert told us long ago that when the hanging statue of the Virgin should fall to the street from her place on the summit of their ruined cathedral tower, the war would end. But the military authorities, obsessed no doubt by their own aims and motives, fixed her securely to prevent her from falling. We saw her this morning from the window of a railway carriage, on our way to Amiens. For this is our day off. You, gentle reader, have quite possibly broken a journey at Amiens for the day, but forgive me if I say that what your eyes beheld there is not to be compared with what we saw with our vision. Only yesterday or the day before we were stretcher-bearers in the trenches; to-morrow will probably see us wending our way thither again; but to-day, after many weeks during which we have seen no human being except in khaki, we wander through streets full of real live people in ordinary attire, men, women, and best of all, children; we examine shop-windows and enter the shops, we visit restaurants and eat good meals, set before us on plates while we sit upon chairs at a table! Nothing of this was marvellous to you when you visited Amiens. So think how much more wonderful to us were the objects for whose sake you broke your journey to Paris. We saw the Cathedral: the matchless woodwork of the choir-stalls, it is true, was hidden from us by a huge protecting barricade of sand-bags, and the majesty of the western front was impaired by a similar erection as high as the apex of the porches; but far more than sufficient remained to fill our minds with the grandeur of this house of God. So we studied the pictures of the hidden wood-carving, and claimed a certain kinship with those workers of long ago who toiled for a few pence a day, and those two Franciscans of Abbeville who received ninepence each and their travelling expenses for helping with advice.

Then a gracious official at the Town Hall gave us an order permitting eight British soldiers to visit the Musée, and an aged janitor hustled rather than conducted us through it. But in the room devoted to statuary we rebelled against the pace he set, so much were we rivetted by the beauty of some examples of modern French work. If any of us had never paused to admire such things before, we were now caught by the vivid realism of several life-like masterpieces. We had come from the wilderness for a day!

But best of all was an hour of holy rest which I spent in the evening quiet of the cathedral again, forgetting for a while the turmoil of war, and musing on those noble words of Ruskin in 'The Bible of Amiens':—

"If, striving with your might to mend what is evil, you would fain look for a day when some Judge of all the earth shall wholly do right; if, parting with the companions that have given you all the best joy you had on Earth, you desire ever to meet their eyes again and clasp their hands;—if, preparing yourselves to lie down beneath the grass in silence, you would care for the promise of a time when you should see God's light again, and walk in the peace of everlasting Love—then, the hope of these things to you is Religion, the Substance of them in your life is Faith. And in the power of them the kingdoms of this world shall yet become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ."

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and the address of the senders.

'A PRIEST OF THE IDEAL.'

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—In your recent review of 'A Priest of the Ideal' it is written that I have branded my hero with indelible shame by making him enter the army without protest though through his religious passion he felt he could not and would not kill. I submit that if Hampden in the light of his spiritual experience chose not to protest but took humbly the common lot of suffering which has fallen to the youth of my generation, he cannot be condemned. "Conscientious objection" is a true and obvious Christian affirmation and the egos who make it are right. But there is something larger.

I think the Hampden I figured is a true man. But I must say that since entering the army myself I feel that death is not so important, my death, our death, the enemy's death. It is important, alas! to those whom we love, they love, to those who are left behind.—Yours, &c.,

STEPHEN GRAHAM.

E. 6, Wellington Barracks, S.W.

PROHIBITION DURING THE WAR.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I feel much interested in your issue of December 29, and your reference to the drink traffic in England, and the way in which the traffic here is viewed in America. I agree with you it does divide us, and it may cause feelings of suspicion, where there should be trust and fellowship to the fullest extent. You refer to Sir Arthur Yapp and his fear of how our working men might regard further restrictions on the traffic. But are his fears and yours well grounded, supposing that the whole question were dealt with fully, and in a thoroughly statesmanlike manner? At present the working man is irritated because he and his family have to undergo what seem to him hardships which his employers and the wealthy classes do not. He is constantly seeing and hearing instructions to eat less bread, and wonders whether the Government want him and his children to go hungry. He is told there are other things he can eat instead. Yes, but they cost more money, and everything now costs more money. He is irritated because his wife has great difficulty in getting her tea, sugar, butter, or its substitutes, and even milk. Then when it comes to drink, the well-to-do are not restricted. They can have their wines and their spirits, as much as they like, but he can never be sure whether he can get even a glass of beer. The card "No Beer" frequently meets his eye. It vexes him, because he knows that those who are well-to-do can live, and mostly do live, in luxury still, though we have been more than three years at war, and though economy, the necessity of economy in all things, is constantly dinned into his ears.

Then what can be done? This—what we ought to have done long ago. Stop the manufacture, sale, import or export of drink entirely, from now till the war is finished, and demobilisation has taken place. It is a big thing to do. It is asking millions of our people to make what to many of them will seem a big sacrifice; but if we are to carry this war to a successful conclusion, and if we are to avoid positive and severe hardship and suffering from insufficiency of food, to ourselves or our Allies, it is necessary. We are short of tonnage. We shall be shorter as the year goes on. We must find ships to bring the men, and their equipment also, from America, and if we do not find it quickly enough the war will be prolonged as a consequence. Where is this extra tonnage to come from? By releasing the ships, the vast number of vessels that are bringing the barley, the maize, the sugar, the molasses, and other materials for our brewers and distillers, and the wine that still flows freely among the wealthy. If we stop the traffic in drink, we shall release a vast amount of railway plant for use in other directions, we shall remove one of the big demands on our coal supply, and, most important, we shall liberate for national service a very large number of men, and women too, and this at a time when we are told that men must be found for active service even if it be at the cost of munitions. Let the Prime Minister and the other members of the Government bring these facts to the notice of the people, the working men of England. Let them know that the sacrifice they are calling upon them to make is a sacrifice that applies not to them alone, but to the wealthiest in the land, to rich and poor alike. Show them that this is the most direct, the simplest way of trying to prevent their own children, or the children of the Allies, from going short of food, and they will be ready to make the sacrifice asked of them, and do it cheerfully.

What of the results? What of its effect upon America? It will show her we are deadly in earnest. It will show her that the sacrifices she is making, the restrictions she is imposing on herself, are appreciated by us, are stimulating us to use (with her) every possible effort to obtain a quick and decisive victory; and to Canada it will be an evidence that, even if in the past we have not been sufficiently careful in guarding her sons from temptation, we will in the future make the British army and our own country as safe as we can for the well-being of her brave sons. Need I say more? We all know what a relief even the temporary suspension of the drink traffic would be to all teachers, clerical or lay, to doctors, nurses, health workers, to all who are trying to combat disease, ignorance, and vice, and to promote the real happiness and the uplifting of our people. Let Lloyd George and the Government take their courage in both hands, and the thing can be done. A very important step will then have been taken to safeguard the interests of all the Allies, and to bring the war to a speedy and successful completion.—Yours, &c.,

EDWARD CHITTY.

Sonnenberg, Dover.

January 7, 1918.

THE LATE CAPT. EDWARD STANLEY RUSSELL, M.C.

(The Rev. E. S. Russell, B.A.)

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I have been asked to undertake the preparation of a Memoir of the late Capt. Russell, and shall be grateful for any assistance that it is in your readers' power to give. Personal reminiscences or letters will be particularly valuable. I shall take every care to ensure the safe custody and early return of any papers that may be lent for my use.—Yours, &c.,

ARNOLD H. LEWIS.

32 Malmesbury Road, Small Heath, Birmingham.

January, 1918.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

TOWARDS

SOCIAL RECONSTRUCTION.

OF making many books on the war there is no end and much study of them is often a weariness to the flesh. Reconstruction is nowadays almost as blessed a word as Mesopotamia: Turks and obstructionists are given notice to quit. But we have a shrewd suspicion that the hurricane will obliterate much that is written upon the sands at this hour. Many social writers appear to be as unrepentant as ever and to imagine that the remedies which have failed us in the past may yet meet our need in the future. Most of these books leave us with a shuddering sense that religion and Christianity are not worth the most cursory or casual reference. They still build without foundations.

Mr. J. A. Hobson's 'Democracy after the War' is hardly, perhaps, of this order. It is learned, shrewd, searching, and can expose deficiencies in a cold clear light if it cannot warm us with living rays. At least it would remove all that is shoddy: its watchword is thorough. There is no blinking of the failures of democracy in the past, no illusion as to its possible failures in the future unless it be soundly based. Indeed democracy, in the sense in which this writer understands it, has never yet been tried: he summons us to the trial.

The first part—why is the destructive part of a book usually twice as long as the constructive part, and ten times as interesting and arresting?—arraigns the enemies of democracy one by one—militarism, capitalism, protectionism, imperialism, and a whole army of political, intellectual, spiritual and social reactionists. The second part marshals the forces of defence. Mr. Hobson apprehends that there are powerful forces in the country which will not be content with militarism for the duration of the war, but will strive also to maintain it in time of peace: for them the primary need of militarism "begins at home." The last enemy to be destroyed is democracy! To our own circle of readers the chapter on 'Spiritual and Social Reactionists' will probably prove of greatest interest. There are here some subtle characterisations, and certain spiritual pastors and masters are mirrored in their true form and feature. The cloud of casuistry is dissolved and the naked reactionist shines forth.

One of the most valuable contributions of the book is its indictment of sectional thinking and of over-specialisation in various branches of social reform. A situation is here revealed not unlike that with which denominationalism presents us in the field of religion. Each specialist has his own particular nostrum and cure-all, but fails to make it effective because the disease is so widespread and various: he scotches it in one place only to see it break forth equally virulent in another. He needs the co-operation of all other specialists so that, together, they may assail the whole body politic. A more comprehensive outlook is demanded, more sympathy with and understanding of forms of experience other than our own, and more resolute grappling with problems as a whole. Only one united army can slay this dragon.

'Towards Industrial Freedom,' by the author of 'Civilisation: its Cause and Cure,' suggests and urges that our modern so-called civilisation is a disease, that this disease is the root-cause of the world-war, and that this disease can only be cured by a new spirit in our industrial and social life. It reveals in glaring fashion the falsity of many of our modern conditions. It startles us by the ease with which it jostles us out of our accustomed ruts, and by some of its innocent and childlike inquiries, as to whether, for example, industry can only be carried on when it pays a big man to make a great profit out of it? The author establishes as the end of all industrial relations and organisation public welfare, and not private gain. He pleads for co-operation instead of inter-cine competition. He longs for the dissolution of the Shop-keeping Age of the past 150 years, and for the re-introduction of beauty into our daily life, and for the realisation of industry as an art. He is in favour of a larger and larger public administration of industries, but warns us against the grave and fateful danger of the growth in connection with this of officialism and bureaucracy which would prove no less stifling in regard to the real life of a nation. There is an excellent chapter on 'Small Holdings,' which he thinks ought to be one of the first things to be considered in the re-organisation of our industrial system. And Lords have short shrift! The concluding chapter on 'Social and Political Life in China' seems to have been added as an after-thought, and is really in the nature of a subtle satire throughout of our Western civilisation (?)

with more than a suggestion that in many ways for 4,000 years the Chinese have been wiser than we.

The first three 'Social Reconstruction Pamphlets,' published by The Athenæum Literature Department, promise well for the whole series which can be relied on to be, as these are, documented on almost every page, bristling with cited authorities, thorough and comprehensive. The first on 'The Rural Problem' by its very title lifts the question above the merely agricultural one, so that we are not surprised to find sections dealing with 'The Rural School' and 'The Rural Church.' All the factors in rural life are more or less taken into account. 'Taxation and Social Reconstruction' and 'Women in Industry' are no less thorough and comprehensive. As short introductions to the study of these questions we know of nothing better. Each pamphlet is of 30 to 40 pages, and with a crowded page. When the series is completed the ordinary social worker will have a library in brief compass of the greatest utility.

THE COMEDY OF MARIONETTES. By Francis Blake. Chorley: Universal Publishing Co. 3s.6d. net.

THIS book appeals specially to readers of THE INQUIRER because it is issued under the name of the minister of the Oakfield Road Church, Clifton—Dr. G. F. Beckh—who signs the preface as editor. He says: "The constant vision of the anguish and suffering of this present time would have driven me to the verge of despair and insanity, had it not been for the good-natured and ironical prattle of this quaint old man, which has entertained and amused me even when I could not agree with his sly thrusts at human weakness and folly. May he cheer you during the dreary months of waiting and sorrow yet before us." The author has gone back to the literary models of an earlier day. The book reminds us of 'Wilhelm Meister' in more ways than one. It tells autobiographically the story of the puppet-player—his childhood, youth, manhood—his spiritual history, his love. Verisimilitude is left behind ere the threshold is crossed, but ever and anon re-appears. The book gets better as it goes on. It has produced on us the impression of a literary wood in which we have elfish gleams of the real thing. The author, as Dr. Beckh himself says, "has closely acquainted himself with some of the most sublime and fanciful thoughts of ancient authors and has imbued his character with a portion of their splendour." Moreover, he has now and then smuggled in a little mental dynamite under the amiable appearance of naïveté.

We submit that it would be better if, in this sort of book, verisimilitude were not departed from. In the pages before us the dialogue "talks book," and there are other departures that could hardly be defended. This is a pity, because there are real vistas of high achievement. We should sincerely like to see another book on these reformed lines, if Francis Blake ever more fully developed the implications of his doctrine of sincerity. A passage or two may convey something of what we have called the vistas of high achievement in the book: "...the greatest tragedy of all, a life lived in remorseless self-contempt" (p. 67). "The ages have been waiting to see an audience deserving the name: hearers, that is, who will do some of the thinking and feeling for themselves instead of expecting hired wage-slaves to do it for their jaded senses: listeners and worshippers of the beautiful and sublime, who will give as much as they receive in the temple consecrated to the immemorial words and songs of masters." The chapter, 'Democracy after the War.' By J. A. Hobson. George Allen & Unwin. 4s. 6d. net.

'Towards Industrial Freedom.' By Edward Carpenter. George Allen & Unwin. Paper, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 3s. 6d.

'Social Reconstruction Pamphlets': (1) 'The Rural Problem,' by Arthur W. Ashby; (2) 'Taxation and Social Reconstruction,' by Arnold N. Shimmin; (3) 'Women in Industry after the War,' by B. L. Hutchins. Price 6d. each. London: published by The Athenæum Literature Department.

'The Unknown Power,' is a remarkable confession of the religion of Nature of Dionysos.

The author raises the question of the marionette theatre as a serious form of art. Those who are interested in this may be glad to be referred to 'Castellinaria,' by Mr. Festing Jones, published by Messrs. Fiffeld in 1911. We have noticed misprints on pp. 103 and 116, and a slight verbal mistake on p. 123.

We have received 'A Child's Belief in God,' by the Rev. J. Collins Odgers (London Sunday School Association, 3d.). It is in the form of 'A Child's Belief about God as taught by Jesus,' followed by explanatory comments. It is suggested that the 'Belief' may be learned by heart, but it strikes us as singularly incomplete for that purpose and lacking in the qualities which are likely to appeal to the imagination of a child. For instance, it does not contain any reference to historical religion, to Christian discipleship or to the existence of evil and God's judgment upon it. The comments are evidently intended for the teacher, as much of the language is too difficult for children. They provide material for a series of lessons on Theism, but we suggest that they want a good deal of enrichment if they are to have effective emotional power in worship and conduct, especially on the side of positive Christian loyalties.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN, LTD.—Mountain Meditations: L. Lind - af - Hageby. 4s. 6d. net.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.—Unitarian Pocket Book and Diary for 1918. 2s. net.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.—Cambridge Essays on Education: Edited by A. C. Benson. 7s. 6d. net. Selections from Wordsworth. 2s. 6d. net. Rabelais in his Writings: W. F. Smith. 6s. net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Quest, Hibbert Journal, Cornhill Magazine.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium. (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais. (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

155TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	19,628	0	9
Leytonstone Free Church, per Mr. J. W. Peterken (5th)	0	12	0
Mr. Thos. Ballantyne (10th)	1	1	0
Miss Mary Fretwell (13th)	1	0	0
Mrs. Julian Winsor (36th)	1	0	0
Miss S. S. Dowson (12th)	5	0	0
The Rev. and Mrs. T. Bowen Evans (26th)	1	0	0
Miss Short (20th)	5	0	0
"In Memory of Arthur"	5	0	0
"Olwen" (by sale of waste paper), (2nd)	0	10	6
Miss Blake (20th)	2	0	0
L. O. M. (22nd)	2	0	0
The Misses E. and G. Coe (17th)	2	0	0
X. (36th)	1	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Mr. and Miss Hirst (25th)	2	2	0
Miss Dorothy Moggridge (6th)	1	0	0
K. L. (11th)	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Edward Chitty (7th)	10	10	0
	£19,673	16	3

Parcels have been received from:—Mrs. Sydney Martineau; Clapham Ladies' War Relief Committee; the Misses S. S. and A. T. Partridge; Mrs. B. Dowson; Mrs. and Miss Carter; Mrs. Louise Brunner; Miss Blake; Bournemouth Unitarian Church Working Party, per Mrs. V. D. Davis; Mrs. Kingston.

WEEKLY NOTES.

I HAVE had an urgent appeal this week from the hospital for the tuberculous Belgian soldiers. It is in the mountains of Savoie, and just now the cold is intense. The snow is deep on the ground and it is freezing hard, and yet, of course, with such patients, the windows must be kept open. At night the men cannot sleep for cold, and there were very few hot water bottles for them. The appeal was for bedsocks, for hot water bottles, and for mittens and mufflers for those who are up in the daytime. I have already sent a number of hot water bottles (8 by 10 in.), but I should be glad of covers for them. I have sent all my stock of bedsocks, mufflers and mittens also, and have not a single one left, but I need at least 50 more to send one for each man—and other hospitals are also begging for them. I know wool is very expensive, so that it is much more difficult to obtain these articles now, but the need for them is very great. I hope to have some more wool soon to sell at a reasonable price, but I will announce it when I receive it. The head of one of the Colonies Scolaires writes begging for pieces of cloth for patching the boys' clothes. She says that she does not mind the children being very shabby, but she does not like them to be in rags, and she has not a bit of cloth to repair them. Will friends remember that I am always glad of any odd bits of cloth or dress material for this purpose?

ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Bedsocks, mufflers, mittens (urgent). Pyjamas, shirts, socks, and all sorts of men's underclothing. Slippers, cardigans. Clothing for women and children, especially stockings. Games, jig-saw puzzles. Calico bags, 2 ft. by 3 ft., and any smaller size.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

VICTIMS OF WAR.

THE RELIEF WORK OF THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

THE sufferings of the innocent civilians in France, Belgium, and Russia, whose homes have been destroyed by the tide of invasion, have been one of the saddest features of the war. Among the efforts to lessen those sufferings the work of the Society of Friends, through its War Victims' Relief Committee, must take a foremost place. The special interest and value of that work lies in its essentially reconstructive, and not merely palliative, character: its aim is not simply to relieve immediate distress, necessary though such relief may be, but to provide for the fugitives occupations and interests which may prevent moral degeneration, and to put into their hands, as far as possible, the means of supporting themselves. For more than three years now the Committee has been at work organising expeditions to France, Holland (for the Belgian camps there), and Russia, and its labours have been constantly increasing as new needs and problems have presented themselves.

When the tide of invasion drove over a million French peasants from their homes in August, 1914, they fled hurriedly, taking very little with them, and leaving perforce their dearest possessions—the home and the little plot of land. They are crowded into towns and villages not meant to hold them, keeping as near to their own battered homes as housing room and military regulations will permit. As the tide rolls slowly backwards they are eager to return to their homes and to begin once more the culture of their fields. For homes they find nothing but crumbling piles of bricks, and for farm implements twisted iron.

In France the Expedition has four main lines of activity: (1) Medical relief by doctors and nurses, and provision of hospitals and of sanatoria where the fugitives can regain their health after the shocks of the danger zone and the privations of their homeless life; (2) the distribution of furniture, bedding, clothes, and other immediate necessities to the unhappy victims of the war; (3) the construction and erection of huts for those whose homes have been destroyed; and (4) agricultural reconstruction in the devastated regions. The work of the Expedition's doctors and nurses has been greatly valued in a district deprived of its regular doctors by the war's demands, and there are now five hospitals and sanatoria in various parts of France. In over three hundred villages the problems of cold, hunger, and disease have been wrestled with. About two thousand people have been housed in the huts built by the Expedition, the material being supplied by the French authorities, while gifts in kind, of furniture, bedding, and clothes, have helped to lighten the load for 15,000 families. In agriculture the efforts of the Expedition have been directed to helping those hardest hit. It has provided and maintained in running order over a hundred hay and harvest machines, and repaired many that were damaged by battle. Thousands of packages of seeds and hundreds of rabbits and chickens have been distributed, and have helped to renew the sources of food in a denuded countryside, while an interesting development in one region has been the promotion of co-operation among the peasants, who have hitherto been handicapped by the intense and excessive individualism which is too often a feature of countrylife in France. With the liberation of hundreds of villages, new needs have arisen, and these the Expedition is helping to meet, both by building houses and by agricultural aid.

In Holland important work has been done in organising the building of houses by the Belgians who have fled across the frontier, and the Expedition is still carrying on industries among the refugees herded into the concentration camps. By their presence and encouragement, and by providing interests and occupation for the fugitives, the Expedition's workers have helped considerably to check the demoralisation which has proved the greatest danger of this enforced exile.

In Russia, in the far eastern province of Samara, medical and relief contingents sent out by the Society have been at work for fifteen months among many thousands of refugees from the Polish and Galician fronts—people who have come some 1,400 miles from their homes and their land, and whose need baffles description. Although the scene of the work is so far removed from the centre of unrest that only an echo of the Revolution, as it were, reached the headquarters at Buzuluk, yet it has, of course, very materially altered the outlook and plans. Reconstructive work in the West, which it is felt will be the natural outcome of the present work, is still only in the future, and in the present uncertain state of affairs no sure plans for it can be made. Large funds will be needed for such a development, and possibly a large increase of personnel.

Meanwhile the work in the Samara district seems more urgent than ever. Serious food shortage is threatened, the Government allocation to the refugees is very uncertain, and other medical help is almost nil. The work has been carried on under great difficulties, in particular owing to lack of communication and transport and shortage of workers. The journey from England has been well-nigh impossible, and the relief workers from America, to whose reinforcements all were eagerly looking forward, found difficulties almost as great in the journey via Siberia, which occupied nearly two months. They arrived, however, when they were most urgently wanted, and proved extremely helpful. Medical work is being actively carried on at five centres, and almost unceasingly the Expedition's doctors have worked for the relief of refugees and peasants, alike through the bitter cold of winter and the cruel heat of summer. Crowds of out-patients attend daily at the dispensaries, and an average of about 8,000 per month are seen by the doctors.

The form of relief most welcomed by the refugees in Russia is found, as in France and Holland, to be the provision of employment for wages, which not only provides them with occupation and interest but enables them to obtain more food. Looms have been made, and the people are able to continue their pre-war industries of spinning and weaving. A strong material, woven from a mixture of hemp and wool, is made up into clothing, and a good store has accumulated ready for distribution when it is needed. Wool is also dealt with from its raw state to its final forms of usefulness as stockings and gloves. In the spring all the refugees who were strong enough to help with agriculture were urged to do so, but although many left to look for work the majority of them returned, being unable to get employment. Classes for boys in Russian reading and writing, English, elementary arithmetic and geography are held, and the children have made very decided progress. The Expedition's hostel at Mogutovo is now a hive of industry directed to the satisfaction of the urgent needs of its inhabitants. It usually shelters about seventy people, mostly children, and nearly all motherless.

Many other developments of relief are in contemplation, and financial help is greatly needed by the Committee, who have only a month's reserve in hand. Contributions may be sent to the Hon. Secretary, Miss A. Ruth Fry, Ethelburga House, 91 Bishopsgate, London, E.C.2, who will be very glad to supply further information to any who are interested in the work.

THE LATE

REV. F. A. HINCKLEY (U.S.A.).

AN APPRECIATION.

In the passing of Frederic Allen Hinckley (says a writer in The Christian Register) our fellowship loses the earthly presence of one of its worthiest members. To many of our younger ministers he has been scarcely more than a name, nor was he widely known among Unitarians in general; yet those privileged to share his acquaintance recognised in him a man of unique power and charm. He was a man, every inch of him! His were distinguishing qualities of no mean order. Few among our clergy deserved so genuinely the name of prophet and man of God. Simplicity, honesty, gentleness, courage, friendliness, spiritual-mindedness—such were his characteristic traits. A man of keen intellectual appetites and broad culture, he saw life with the eyes of a true poet. Vision with him was a paramount influence. Like Channing, "always young for liberty," he was one of the last of that group of radicals who have done so much toward leavening our denominational loaf in the interests of independent thought and steadfast moral courage. Even with the gathering years, no reform failed of his support. Although born among the green hills of Vermont, he was ever a true son of Cape Cod. The son of a minister, and a direct descendant of the last governor of Plymouth Colony, he loved Barnstable, where much of his youth and many of his summers were passed. Upon its streets he was a loved and welcome figure, while in the village church his sermons were looked forward to with eager interest. So, altogether fitting was it that, when age grew on apace and the time came for him to go, his closing eyes should have looked out upon the familiar panorama of field and shore, and that he should find burial in a churchyard upon a hilltop commanding a wide stretch of wind-swept waves:—

'Tis little; but it looks in truth
As if the quiet bones were blest
Among familiar names to rest,
And in the places of his youth.

During a ministry covering almost forty years, Mr. Hinckley served four Unitarian churches. To their congregations, as to a host of friends, he will long be remembered as a genuine minister, a true friend, a faithful servant of the living God. Of all the words which might be used in the attempt to sum up the man he was, the best seems to be the good, old-fashioned term "loving-kindness." To share his friendship was a rare privilege. What he himself once wrote of Charles G. Ames applies with equal truthfulness to himself: "He was not modelled after stated rules. He had his own ways and his own forms of expression.... He was a bearer of good cheer always. It was not given to him to utter doleful notes. He marched under the cloud as in the sunshine, with a beautiful affirmative faith. He was a human catholic. The sweep of his feelings took in all humanity of whatever sect or colour or race. He unconsciously made you aware of this when you came near him. To him brotherhood meant sisterhood, it meant humanhood."

AN ITALIAN CHURCH IN BOSTON.

THE First Italian Unitarian Church (Prima Chiesa Unitaria Italiana), has been started as the result of evening services conducted by the Rev. Filoteo A. Tagliatela for several months in King's Chapel, Boston, Mass. The congregation, which is largely composed of men, cherishes the memory of "the liberals from Socinus to Mazzini" whose influence has had a great deal to do with the impulses which brought them to America as to a land of promise. The first Italian Women's Alliance came into existence earlier in November, and has twenty-six members, all Italian. A Young People's Religious Union was organised last season.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Bolton.—Notwithstanding the absence of so many young men connected with Unity Church the Christmas season has been a very successful one. The activities began with the dispatch of a parcel of comforts to all the scholars and members who have joined the forces. These parcels were of the value of £50. On Saturday, December 22, the Christmas Party was held, when the schoolroom was crowded by an enthusiastic audience. Forty-six prizes were distributed for regular attendance during the year, and songs, recitations, and a cantata by the scholars followed. On Christmas Sunday there was a large congregation in the evening, when the choir rendered selections from "The Messiah." The collection was on behalf of the Bolton Infirmary. On the following Sunday the minister, the Rev. Edward Morgan, at the cordial invitation of the Committee of the principal Primitive Methodist Chapel in the town—Higher Bridge Street—preached in that church, its minister, the Rev. R. M. Rutter, preaching in Unity Church to an appreciative congregation. On January 1 and 2 the Annual Christmas Fair was held, opened on the first day by Alderman D. Healey of Heywood, and on the second day by Mr. William Eaves, one of the workers connected with the church. The result was more successful than for many years in the past, over £275 being raised.

Bootle.—The following letter has been sent to the Bootle Free Church Congregation by Capt. W. Short, the minister: "Perhaps a letter will come more appropriately from me than a picture, in view of the season. Months have shaded off into years, and we are still at war. It was on November 30, two years ago, that I took the oath of attestation, and during the intervening time, you have carried on splendidly. In this war of endurance, I am proud to think that my congregation has been loyal to the Commonwealth, and true to our best traditions. 'Blessed is he that endureth to the end!' In many ways I have been very fortunate. Although I joined a fighting battalion that has seen much hard service, I am still 'going strong'—due to the fact that I have spent more time behind the line than in it. On January 17 last, I came out with four other officers, all of whom are now in England. As I was with them when they became casualties (sick or wounded) I can felicitate myself. But who is the happy one in this long-drawn-out struggle? I have seen men experience hairbreadth escapes, only to go down later. Who can read the book of Fate? All one can do is 'carry on' with an endurance worthy of the cause of England. When I came out to the war, I had hopes of meeting 'Our Boys,' but to my great regret, only two have come my way. Harold Abrahams received a visit from me not long ago, and the following day Edwin Allen came to see me. Both looked very well. In the autumn I visited Lieut. H. D. Roberts at this railway station, and only to-day I have taken tea with the Revs. John Ellis and Dr. Thackray, who are Y.M.C.A. workers. You can imagine how three Unitarian parsons disguised in khaki enjoyed such an encounter. Christmas away from home at any time is disagreeable. In imagination I will think I am with you, sharing common joys and anxieties. May Christmas bring happiness to us all, and may the New Year be crowned with the gift of peace."

Colne.—On Sunday, December 23, special Christmas services were conducted at the Unitarian Church by the minister, the Rev. J. Pipkin. The soloist was Cadet Rufus Irving, who was home on leave. At the evening service selections from the 'Messiah' were rendered by an augmented choir. On Christmas Eve a successful and well attended social was held in the schoolroom in aid of the Church Funds, and on Saturday, December 29, the scholars' annual Christmas Party took place. Tea was served to a good company, and was followed by an interesting entertainment, provided by the scholars of the Sunday school.

Evesham.—As a result of the work of the Evesham Interdenominational Social Service Union, and the understanding and sympathy this has brought about among ministers and members of the various churches in the town, there was held on Sunday last, the National Day of Prayer, a United Service in the Public Hall, attended by the Mayor and Corporation, in which the Vicar of Evesham, the Wesleyan and Baptist ministers, and the minister of Oat Street Chapel, the Rev. H. H. Johnson, took part. The hall was crowded, and many had to be turned away. The service has made a profound impression on the townsfolk, and is not likely to be the last, though it is the first, of its kind.

Leicester.—On Sunday, December 30, the Rev. S. Spencer concluded his ministry at the Free Christian Church. On the following Tuesday a Farewell Social was held, at which a presentation of a wallet containing ten guineas was made to Mr. and Mrs. Spencer by the Secretary on behalf of those present, as a token of warm appreciation of their services. The various speakers expressed deep regret at their departure and the earnest hope of success and happiness in their future work at Rotherham.

Leytonstone.—A New Year's Party was given by the Sunday school scholars of the Leytonstone Free Church to a number of destitute children from the Hoxton Market Mission on January 3. The Rev. J. A. Pearson presided, and Mr. Lewis Burt acted as master of the ceremonies. The Mission Hall was gaily decorated with flags and evergreens, and after tea songs and dances were rendered, and toys distributed, to the great delight of the children. The programme had been arranged under the direction of Mrs. Bonner and Miss Dorice Peterken, and the Secretary wishes to thank very cordially these and other friends who helped to make the entertainment a success, and contributed gifts of toys and money.

Mottram.—After a very successful Christmas Entertainment consisting of vocal and instrumental music and a children's operetta, it was requested that the children's performance be repeated. This was done on New Year's Eve before an audience of about 250 people, and the proceeds, £5 14s., were given to the local Red Cross Hospital.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Captain C. N. Levin (Light Trench Mortar Battery), the son of Mr. Otto Levin, J.P., Westover, Gosforth, has been awarded the Military Cross. This is the third Military Cross to be gained by the men of the Church of the Divine Unity, the others being won by Lieutenants Wm. Moss and B. Nicholson.

Poole.—A Christmas and New Year's Tea was given in connection with the Unitarian Sunday School on Wednesday evening, January 2, about 110 scholars, teachers, and friends being present. Games were played afterwards, and at 8 o'clock the prizes were distributed by Mr. W. H. Higgins, President of the Church Committee. Mr. W. E. Stephens read a cheering and cordial letter from Private W. E. Wilkins, who formerly acted as pianist, teacher, and Assistant Church Secretary, and is now in France. Mr. Higgins's practical sympathy in the work of the school and the help which had been given by Mrs. Bayley and Mrs. Belben were referred to appreciatively, and also the great interest in the young people shown by the Rev. G. B. Stallworthy. Lieut. H. D. Harrison of Walsall (stationed at Wareham) received a hearty welcome, and it was proposed that a letter should be sent to Private Wilkins reciprocating his good wishes.

Wareham.—The attendance at the Unitarian Church has averaged between 85 and 90 during the last three weeks. The service on December 23 was in memory of the late Mr. Sydney Cleal, whose death was referred to in this column last week. The services are conducted by Mr. W. E. Stephens of Poole, and on December 30 special music was rendered, the lessons being read by Lieut. H. D. Harrison. The collection was in aid of the Piano Fund, further contributions to which will be gladly acknowledged by Mr. W. E. Stephens, St. Ladoca, Wimborne Road, Poole.

Wolverhampton.—On Sunday last excellent congregations attended the three services in connection with the "Intercession Day," at All Souls' Church. The minister, the Rev. J. A. Shaw, was the preacher. In the afternoon the Annual Prize Distribution took place and a most favourable report was given of the work of the Sunday school, both as regards numbers and efficiency. Two beautifully illustrated volumes, suitably inscribed, were presented to Mr. W. E. Harris on the completion of ten years' faithful service as Superintendent, during which time the school has grown from small beginnings to its present flourishing condition. A fine copy of Homer's 'Odyssey,' with inscription, was also presented to Mr. A. J. Smith as a mark of appreciation for his efficient services as teacher of the first class boys.

Woolwich.—The first services of the Free Christian Church, which is a union of the Unitarian Church and the New Congregational Church, were held on Sunday last. The attendances, morning and evening, were good. The preacher was Mr. J. Harry Smith, the Pioneer Preacher, formerly in charge of the New Congregational Church which left the Congregational Union and joined the London District Unitarian Society some months ago. After the evening service a Church Meeting was held, at which a letter was read from the Rev. A. A. Charlesworth (Chairman of the London District Unitarian Society) expressing the goodwill of the Society and its congratulations upon the successful amalgamation of the two congregations. The Revs. J. Arthur Pearson and T. P. Spedding and the Pioneer Preachers also sent greetings. The meeting elected a new Church Council, of which the Chairman is Mr. J. T. Handcock; the Treasurer, Mr. W. H. Smith; and the Secretary, Mr. M. A. Stapley. The services during the next few months are to be conducted by Mr. J. Harry Smith, who is at present in charge of the congregation, and by the Revs. A. A. Charlesworth, T. P. Spedding, J. Vint Laughland, J. A. Pearson, Dr. Mellone, Dr. Lionel Tayler, W. Copeland Bowie, and A. H. Biggs.

MARRIAGE.

PRICE—ROSE.—On the 9th inst., at the Church of St. Bartholomew, Kirby Muxloe, near Leicester, by the Rev. H. S. Biggs, B.A., assisted by the Rev. H. C. Gannell, M.A., Edgar Frank, Capt. 4th Battn. Leicestershire Regiment, only son of W. F. Price, Esq., and Mrs. Price, "Walton Lodge," Kirby Muxloe, to Dorothy Dalrymple, eldest daughter of E. P. Rose, Esq., L.D.S., and Mrs. Rose, "The Spinneys," Kirby Muxloe.

DEATHS.

PHARAOH.—Killed in action, October 30, Herbert Roland Pharaoh, 49th Batt. C.E.F., only son of Sergeant-Major Alfred Pharaoh, Lecturer C.A.M.C., aged 21.

SQUIRE.—On January 9, at Upper Terrace, Hampstead Heath, Edmund Burnard Squire, aged 85. Cremation at Golders Green, on Saturday, the 12th inst., at 3.15 P.M.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, January 13.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. C. HARGROVE.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 5.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11 and 5.30.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11, Rev. F. HANKINSON; 6.30, Mr. H. G. CHANCELLOR, M.P.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
 South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. JOHN BEGG; 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. FRED HALL.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
 BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. W. T. LUCAN-DAVIES.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.15, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.
 HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. G. EVANS.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Capt. W. SHORT, K.O.Y.L.I.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11, Rev. IRVINE LISTER; 6.30, Dr. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45, Rev. C. TRAVERS; 6.30, Rev. J. SHAW BROWN.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.
 NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLEY.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.
 WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

Notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week should be sent to The Publisher, 13 BREAM'S BUILDINGS, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

The name of the Minister of the Church is inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

January

13. Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

20. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES.

11.15 A.M., Devotional Service only without Sermon, after which an important Meeting of the Congregation will be held.

3.0 P.M., Children's Service.

27. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON, of Kentish Town.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY,

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,

Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

2s. 6d. net (postage 4d. extra).

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS—JANUARY.

THE REIGN OF NONSENSE IN THE
WORLD, IN THE STATE, AND IN
HUMAN LIFEBy Prince Eugene Troubetzkoy
THE SOUL AS IT IS, AND HOW TO DEAL WITH ITBy Prof. Gilbert Murray
THE STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE AND
MUTUAL AIDBy Prof. J. Macleod
THE RESTORATION OF PALESTINE
By M. J. Landa
THE OLD TESTAMENT AND ITS
ETHICAL TEACHINGBy C. G. Montefiore
MORALITY AND CONVENTION
By Prof. H. L. Stewart
PAUL AND PLATOBy Prof. E. L. Price
CHRISTIAN PRINCIPLES AND THE WAR SETTLEMENTBy Noel Burton, M.P.
A PLEA FOR ARCHAEOLOGY AMONG
THE CLERGYBy the Rev. H. J. Dukinfield Astley,
M.A., Litt.D.
PREACHING AFTER THE WARBy the Rev. Joseph Wood
1517—1917: A RETROSPECT AND AN
ANTICIPATIONBy the Rev. Richard Roberts, M.A.
DISCUSSIONS, SURVEY, and SIGNED
REVIEWS

SUBSCRIPTION:

10s. per Annum, post free.

London: WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.2.

NOW READY.

UNITAPIAN POCKET BOOK, 1918.

With List of Ministers and Congregations.
Roan, gilt edges, 2s. net; by post, 2s. 1d.

READY SHORTLY.

ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK, 1918.

Price 1s. 6d. net.; by post 1s. 8d.

Book Room, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. 3s. 3d. net post free.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL
MANCHESTER.

Contains 23 Illustrations of this historic Nonconformist building, and those associated with it, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes, and an Introduction by the late Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Chapel. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, | L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I. | H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss C. GRADWELL. | H. J. VEZEY.

S. WHITE, LL.D.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

Miscellaneous.

ULSTER SUITINGS. Irish Tweed, Pure Wool, soft and warm for Ladies and Gentlemen's Winter Coats. 56 inches wide, 10s. 6d. yard. Suit length 36s. 6d. Bargain List, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

OLD FALSE TEETH wanted for their precious metals; now worth up to £12 per set; any condition; surplus jewellery; broken jewellery from £2 to £5 per ounce given. We give the highest possible value; before remitting we make offers by return. If not accepted goods returned post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT, any condition, 6d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2s. on silver, 3s. on gold, 9s. on platinum. Cash by return or offer. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED by the reliable firm.—S. CANN & CO., 69A Market Street, Manchester.

ARTICLES OF JEWELLERY any description (broken or otherwise) BOUGHT. Cash by return or offer made on EXAMINATION, as it is impossible to estimate value without. HIGHEST MARKET VALUE GUARANTEED. If offer not accepted goods returned post free. Strictly genuine.—S. CANN & CO., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Estd. 1850.

* * * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS
TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.;
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.
Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2;
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines; extra lines 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenaeum Press 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate, Saturday, January 12, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3942.
NEW SERIES, No. 1045.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	17	CORRESPONDENCE:—		Mr. E. B. Squire	21
WITH THE Y.M.C.A. IN FRANCE	18	The Freedom of the Seas in War Time	20	Mr. Thomas F. Bagley	21
AIR-WAR BY NIGHT	19	Prohibition During the War	20	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
MODESTY	19	BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—		Belgian Hospital Fund	22
FIELD AMBULANCE NOTES	19	The Track of the Storm	20	A Message from Egypt for the New Year	22
		MEMORIAL NOTICES:—		NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	22
		Rev. William Wooding	21

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

THE Editor, who has been away in France for the past four weeks, has been invited to undertake important work in connection with the Y.M.C.A. The need of help in the camps at the present moment is so urgent, and the situation is so full of fine opportunities of spiritual influence, that he has decided to apply for six months leave of absence in order to throw himself entirely into this work. His wish has been met with cordial approval, and arrangements have been made to place THE INQUIRER in the hands of an acting-editor during his absence. The Editor hopes to be able to send home occasional articles dealing with the work in which he is engaged and in this way to keep in touch with his friends at home. Meanwhile special attention is called to the following "Change of Address." All communications for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4., and not to Hampstead, until further notice.

* * *

WE join very cordially in the congratulations given to those public-spirited and indefatigable women who during many, many years have kept steadily on toward the goal of political enfranchisement for their sex. The fact that so hardwon and brilliant a victory can be gained at last with such general consent must be an encouragement to all workers for great ideals. If all the events of domestic politics were not dwarfed to-day by international problems surely there would be an outburst of quite justifiable exultation around us; and those of us who have in any degree assisted in the long campaign may be excused if we figuratively put out our flags. As we noted a short time ago, some of those who have opposed this momentous reform up to the last are men of experience and repute; and every thoughtful person must admit that the risks attending it are serious enough. But the nation that should take no risks would certainly make no progress at all, and we confidently look for progress in many ways in the near future as a result of votes for women. If men as well as women can be got to realise their full responsibility, if they can be really imbued with civic and patriotic zeal, and acquire an adequate degree of knowledge, historical, economical, and political, the nation will assuredly become a healthier body corporate, now that its so long paralysed side has been raised into potential vitality.

* * *

WHEN Lord Kitchener three years and a half ago, asked for a new army of three hundred thousand men, people dimly began to realise that the war was going to be a somewhat serious thing for the nation. This week Sir Auckland Geddes asks for half as many again, incidentally mentioning that some four and a half millions of English combatants have thus far been enrolled. So serious a thing is war. The general acquiescence in regard to his proposals may imply on the part of some a feeling of sheer inability to maintain any other attitude, in the present conditions of government of this country. We hope, however, there is something more than that, and if there were not, our chief enemies are certainly doing their best to create it. Whatever faint hopes existed that a moderate temper would now at last show itself in German policy have been swept away by the developments of the negotiations with the Bolsheviks; and the flagrant outrage of torpedoing the hospital ship Rewa simply reaffirms the cynical brutality and treachery which has so often and so foully disgraced the German name and utterly destroyed trust in the German word, however solemnly given. In these circumstances, our people, we believe, are prepared to endure much more than they now do, great as their troubles and hardships have already become, if only by enduring to the end they may see this vilest foe of humanity and civilisation deprived of its power to do further harm to the nations around it.

* * *

THE Bishop of London, we hear, will not give the sanction of his approval by attending the consecration of Dr. Hensley Henson as Bishop of Hereford. That is, of course, a matter of conscientious objection upon which few or none of us would wish to comment, except so far as to observe that it is a singular way of manifesting that zeal for authority in the Church which is supposed to distinguish High Churchmen. The new Bishop, for his part, appears in no way deterred from his policy of cultivating friendly relationship with non-Churchmen; and, surely, he is right. His acceptance of an invitation to take a share with Dr. Clifford and other Non-conformists in the public recognition given to Dr. Fort Newton at the City Temple shows that he, at all events, recognises that if ever there was need for a coalition policy in the Churches it is now. The worst way to convince a sceptical world that Christianity means to be a conquering army in redeeming the nations and all mankind from the present intolerable evils is still to divide their forces and keep up the crying scandal of sectarianism. There will be more hope for that most solemn of all campaigns when, instead of leaving such fraternising acts to an isolated Bishop or other dignitary, the bulk of the clergy and their episcopal leaders boldly tear up their prejudices and pride, and actively engage in battle with the enemy by the side of all who would serve the common Master.

* * *

MR. FISHER on Monday night introduced an amended Education Bill, the modifications of his former Bill being in accordance with suggestions made chiefly by the Local Authorities, and relating to the machinery of administration rather than to educational principles. We notice, however, that words have been introduced with the intention of allaying the apprehensions of those who are specially interested in maintaining their own form of religious instruction in the so-called "voluntary" schools. How small the justification is for this description is very well known. But all who are really in earnest about such national advance as can only be attained through the wise culture of the nation's young life will not suffer Mr. Fisher's second attempt to fail, if they can help it, owing to difficulties on subordinate points. So cordial a welcome was given to the spirit and main scope of his proposals, happily preserved in the new Bill, that we have good hopes of his succeeding this time in carrying a measure immensely potent to raise the life and activity of our schools and colleges, and thus of the whole population. No longer should it be possible to say of England that its educational status is the worst among all European nations west of Russia.

* * *

MEANWHILE, it is with deep anxiety that those who observe present happenings regard the consequences that must inevitably follow them. These are acknowledged to be times of unprecedented stress, and some deterioration of staffing has been unavoidable, as well as extensive "starving" in regard to school equipment. But the scholars might at least have been so well looked after that they should all be in attendance to receive the full benefit of the schooling now possible to provide. But the fact is that, owing for the most part to regrettable, and in our view most reprehensible, laxity on the part of the Authorities, the average attendance has dropped seriously in the years of war, in some cases as much as 20 per cent. That is to say, as many as a fifth of the children are in these cases absent daily, and the results to their education and discipline must be deplorable.

* * *

THE Rev. J. M. Connell of Lewes has written the following pertinent letter to The Westminster Gazette :—

Sir, —In your 'Preachers for Tomorrow' column on Saturday last I noticed that the Rev. Dinsdale T. Young was announced to speak in the Wesleyan Central Hall, Westminster, on 'Current Religious Evils : (5) Unitarianism.' A word of protest may be allowed against describing in this manner the form of Christian doctrine taught by such men as Channing and Martineau. No doubt the hymn 'Nearer, my God, to Thee,' is sometimes sung at the Wesleyan Central Hall. The next time Mr. Young gives it out there he will perhaps realise the absurdity (to say the least of it) of regarding as an evil the faith of which such a hymn is the fruit. In these tragic times preachers ought, surely, to find something better to do than denounce the religion of their neighbours.

We can but suppose that discourses of the kind are largely based on what Dr. Johnson called "pure ignorance."

WITH THE Y.M.C.A. IN FRANCE. SOME CHRISTMAS MEMORIES.

How hearts at home would glow with pleasure and pride if they could know all that has been done in the Huts of the Y.M.C.A. to give the boys a happy Christmas, rich in noble memories and true friendship. In the area controlled from this important base town there are from twenty to thirty huts, every one of them admirably staffed by men and women, who are finding in this particular field of service one of the finest opportunities of their lives. The work goes on day by day in a spirit of stimulating comradeship, which the casual visitor is ashamed to praise. No one who has had opportunities of close observation in various centres in France can doubt for a moment that the workers of the Y.M.C.A. belong to the fighting forces of the country. Without a thought of themselves they live day by day in the lives of the men. They help to keep them brave and true hearted. They appeal to the noblest motives in human nature. They satisfy the craving for home, so far as it is possible to do so in a strange land, and give endless opportunities for the frank interchange of thought and experience. The Y.M.C.A. has claimed for this service men of very varied gifts, actors, poets, teachers, ministers of religion, professors of theology. But all of them would agree in giving the place of chief importance to the women whose presence in the huts imparts to everything an air of brightness and human grace. They take the place of mothers and sisters and comrades to this crowd of boys, divorced from all the feminine influences of home and often craving for nothing so much as the music of a woman's voice. And they have their reward in the frank look of pleasure in a man's eyes, or in the letters which they receive from up the line. It would go ill with any man who was caught in any act of rudeness to one of them. "It is worth fighting for a country that has such women as these," is the sentiment felt by all and sometimes expressed by men who know how to find words for the deep conviction of their hearts.

Certainly Christmas was the women's festival. How they have planned and contrived. With what energy they have worked. And the result has been something so superlatively good, that it will be a glorious memory for all who took part in it. Every hut has had its own festival in a setting of gay decorations and good cheer. Here there has been a pantomime ; here a bright little comedy ; elsewhere a concert with Christmas carols and thundering choruses. One of Miss Lena Ashwell's Concert Parties has come on the scene just at the right moment. A well known poet has given readings. A distinguished Scotch professor vied with a popular Australian padre as a purveyor of mirth. There have been real Christmas trees, and soft colour, and glowing light. Many of the workers said in the mood of happy tiredness at the end of the day, "We have had the time of our lives." Gaiety and unselfish service have walked hand in hand, and as the inspiration of it all there has been the passionate love of home and a high hearted devotion to our cause, and the religious memories of the day binding men and women together in the bonds of mutual service and faith in the triumph of good.

No account of the celebrations of the day would be complete without some reference to the success which has marked the latest enterprise of the Y.M.C.A. in this place. A large place of entertainment known as the Crystal Palace has been taken over and opened as a Soldiers' Club in the centre of the town. Till recently it was a place of very unsavoury reputation and had been placed "out of bounds" for our troops. Now it has been completely transformed, and one of the strongholds of evil has been changed into a temple of light. Of course it required courage and vision, but fortunately these are not lacking in the noble hearted man who guides the work of the Y.M.C.A. in this place. The spacious building with its double galleries provides all the accommodation that is needed for a well equipped restaurant, a spacious lounge, billiards and other games. Great popular services are held there on Sunday evening. On the other days of the week there are concerts, military bands and other forms of entertainment. In a base town with its large number of men engaged in the engineering shops, at the post office or at the docks, a place of this kind will be an inestimable boon for their leisure hours. Yesterday it was crowded with happy faces, among whom it was pleasant to see many girls belonging to the W.A.A.C.S. The good humour and the gaiety of heart were infectious, and of "dumps so dull and heavy" there was not a trace in spite of many tender and longing thoughts of home. The whole day was a festival of dedication for a place which is destined to play a great part in the lives of our men, and none were so happy as those who have given thought and affection and unceasing labour in order to prepare it for their use.

The Christmas visitor who has been spirited about from one happy centre of army life to another, and seen in rapid succession scenes of joyous human fellowship which he will never forget, cannot omit a cordial word of gratitude to the helpers who above all others have made such a wonderful experience possible. The lady chauffeurs of the Y.M.C.A. control the vast network of its communications. By day and night, in roughest weather and bitter cold they drive, and drive and drive. The gay scenes and the warm interiors are for others, but not for them. Among all the splendid things which the needs of the war have called forth, it would be hard to name anything more excellent than their courage and resource and their cheerful performance of dull and arduous tasks. It is one of the surprises of goodness of which life out here is crammed full to the brim.

W. H. D.

At a Base Town in France.

December 26, 1917.

[This article has been delayed in transmission.]

AIR-WAR BY NIGHT.

LONDON 1917-18.

"Other beestes loken downward to the erthe,...but God gaaf to men vysages areryd toward the sterres."— Bartholomaeus Anglicus.

DREAD neither Death nor hazard that Life brings,
For when of old the astral spheres revolved
In motion musical, and seraph wings
Were heard in strife with fiends for souls absolved
From bondage of the body, God's own breath

Bore men to Life through Death.

Shall we look downward knowing earth a speck
Amid the myriad suns that blaze and die?

Find we in heaven merely stars that deck
The visible blue vaulting of the sky?
Nay! boundless Space,—the very mind of God,

And endless Time,—His nod!

Fear, then, no peril for thyself but shame

That spares the body. There is regnant
Right

Beyond the earth-bound thunderbolt and flame

Of bestial fury; past the starlit night
The soul may seek unutterable things

And God will give it wings.

ANON.

MODESTY.

OF all the virtues in man or woman there is none more fragrant than modesty. Indeed, it is not so much a separate virtue as the bloom and fragrance of them all. What the flush is to the rose, what the aroma is to the mellowed fruit, so is modesty in man. It is the sensitive touchstone of character, the delicate scale in which man at his purest can be weighed. Woman gets nearer to this quality than man, and when she has it she is at her finest flower.

The deepest love is that of Cordelia, which cannot be told. The sweetest song is that which is never sung. To try to tell some secrets would be to mar the soul. There is a Holy of Holies within each one of us which not even the High Priest once a year may enter, a chalice of which none may sip reserved for the lips of God.

It is remarkable with what stout armour we guard our tenderest qualities against the harsh onslaughts of the world, like the sweetest kernel protected by the hardest shell. How often a rough exterior proves the protecting genius of something exquisite within! At the heart of many a dogma is a pearl of faith.

The wondrous colours of the pearl are found tight enclosed in a shell at the bottom of deep seas. Only comparatively few shells reveal their inner wonder to human eyes. There are beauties man has never seen in dark unfathomed caves, gems sparkling deep beneath the crust of the earth, or rather awaiting only the light of the sun, and the purging away of the dross that swathes them, to shine forth in radiance. Why so much dross to gird and hide so entrancing a loveliness? Why does the edelweiss bloom amid the untrodden snows? The poet calls this "waste," but is it? Is there not a Sight and a Vision which can penetrate where our sight and vision may not? The loveliest things have a veil over them and no vandal can withdraw the veil.

Have you not at times been struck, in passing through some glorious cathedral, by some hidden unexpected beauty? The artist might so easily have scamped his work, and yet he has lavished on it a quite peculiar care. He has worked for the greater glory of God and not for the glory of men. All the greatest art has been wrought in that spirit. Where there was the least self there was the greatest art. Where there is a great display of self there is no art. The artist has to lose his life to find it.

Patience is at the heart of modesty. It can wait if need be for centuries. It has a spirit indifferent to time. It is ultimately sure of the issue and leaves it in the hands of God.

The attitude of most modern men, especially of social reformers, is the very reverse of this. We must strive and strive and strive so that during our brief lives every particle of influence in us may tell. This amuses Emerson. "So hot, little man!" Surely the universe could wait! Quiet, unostentatious, gracious lives are more beneficent than noisy, obvious, blatant ones. The more obvious a man's virtues are, the less virtuous he is. All men can't see greatness, and what all men see is small.

If modesty is a virtue in individuals, it is equally a virtue in nations. So hot, little nation! A great nation is not hectic, a great nation is calm, foresees its destinies and can wait centuries, knows that the supreme influences which issue from it are not hectoring and dominating but persuasive and winning.

The vulgar demand is for spoil. Greatness spurns it. The vulgar demand is for show. The great prize reality. Only the truly great are modest and see not why they should be praised. The main corrective of the evil forces of to-day will be modesty, not so much the passion of doing as the primal realisation of being. We do too much and we are too little, and "to be is as great as to perceive or tell." Love vaunteth not itself and doth not behave itself unseemly. To bloom, seen or unseen, is enough. Motherhood is the lowliest of all occupations, but it is the highest of the arts.

Men enter the atmosphere of modesty as pilgrims enter a shrine. No grace softens and subdues like this one. It is the halo round the head of womanhood. It is "the eternal womanly." It is like the fragrance of sweet-breathed meadows. It is the noblest retainer in the Court of Love. Gentle words are spoken in its presence and pure is the radiance of smiles. It is the grace in which humanity is perfected. It is the spirit in which alone we can behold the face of God and live.

H. H. JOHNSON.

FIELD AMBULANCE NOTES.

BY THE REV. MORTIMER ROWE, R.A.M.C.

XII.—ON GETTING THE WIND UP.

EVERYONE has heard and read of the deep and well-constructed German dug-outs, with their long flights of stairs, two or three in number, and their sleeping quarters down below. Sometimes it is our fortune to be quartered in them while on duty in the line that was not always ours, and thus to have at least a quiet place for sleep, and a safe refuge in time of storm. Here one may listen to the thuds and crashes overhead when the enemy devotes a little violent attention to the neighbourhood, with an exalted form of the same pleasure with which one hears the pelting rain while secure in an arm-chair by the hearth-side at home; and presently, "when the indignation is overpast," one may ascend to the fresh air and the sunshine and enjoy peace, perhaps for many hours.

Such a post was ours for a week not long ago; and since there was room for more than our two squads of stretcher bearers, nine all told, the M.O. took to sending us "lodgers"—a sprinkling of cases of indisposition, meriting a day's release from duty in the forward lines. The approach was not altogether a healthy one in daylight—a bit of a trench so very narrow and shallow that no gentleman would condescend to use it; so the "zip" of a sniper's bullet, harmless because too distant, or the more menacing descent of a whizz-bang, often served to hurry the traveller's footsteps.

Brown was one of our guests, with a troublesome ankle-joint; thirty-eight, enlisted only when his group was called up, and not altogether sorry to be well away for awhile from the "fish-tails" and "potato-mashers" and similar terrors known only to the front lines. He was reclining in the sun and amusing us with his humorous and sardonic reflections upon warfare in general, when Smith, just half his age, who had nevertheless been out for two years, arrived rather breathlessly round the corner. "What's the matter now, Smith?" he asked; "got the wind up?" (This military phrase for nervous apprehension is known to everyone now, I suppose.) Poor little Smith began to grow angry, the more perhaps because his nerves, it is true, were a bit run down; but Brown soothed him at once by turning the laugh against himself—"Oh, I'm as 'windy' as any one," he confessed; "I felt all the symptoms of shell-shock the first time I clapped eyes on a communication trench, and I've had it badly ever since." "Yes, but look at me," pursued Smith, still somewhat on his defence, "I ought to be just coming out here, but I've been out two years now; I'm only nineteen to-morrow." "Listen to him, now!" retorted Brown, "showing me up because I'm thirty-eight, making out I ought to have been here in the trenches these last nineteen years!" Even Smith joined in the laugh and recovered his spirits with the gift of a cigarette. "No," continued he of the weak ankle, realising that more humour was expected of him, "you take my advice—never volunteer for anything, unless it's to stay behind; and never get in the way of the fellow who wants to get in front of you." And so he rambled on between the puffs of his pipe, the type of a considerable class of our Tommies who, though always "grousing," always wondering when we're going to settle terms of peace, are always ready for their share of the job when called upon; although they often delight in hiding their real pluck and endurance, and sing with great vigour the doggerel chorus:—

I — want to go home,
I — want to go home,
Oh, my! I don't want to die,
I — want to go home!

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE FREEDOM OF THE SEAS IN WAR-TIME.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Has not the writer of the article 'The Freedom of the Seas' overlooked the point that if, and when, an effective League of Nations is established, either there will be no more wars, or else in future wars there will be no neutrals? Every State which is a member of the League will be pledged to take an active part against those who in the judgment of the League are the aggressors. "Freedom of the seas in war-time" will then be a dead question. On the other hand, should it unfortunately turn out that the spirit of international brotherhood is not yet strong enough for the vision of President Wilson and others to materialise, it will result from the same cause that in the future, as in the present, the freedom of the seas, like the freedom of neutral territory, will be respected just to the extent that the hostility of the neutral powers is to be dreaded, and no further, any rules agreed to in peace notwithstanding. The more scrupulously the better-disposed belligerent observes them, the more will the other stand to gain by breaking them. But why should we, if our ultimate goal is a League of Nations, enter into any agreements calculated to favour neutrality? Will it not be better to announce that, whatever other Powers may do, we for our part do not intend, if we can help it, to remain neutral in any future quarrel, but to take sides against the Power which seems to us most in the wrong, which will generally be the one that has refused arbitration? This would not be inconsistent with our also taking the lead in a gradual reduction of armaments, because we should only promise such aid as we might be able to afford, and should rely for success more on obtaining allies by unselfish and straightforward diplomacy than on our own isolated might. Our single intervention would be conditional on the task being within the means at our disposal. But all the more shall we keep ourselves free to make the most of whatever naval power we retain; and, just in proportion as we believe in the solidarity of nations, shall we desire to make the future position of neutrals as uncomfortable as it will then be ignoble and unsocial.

ROLAND K. WILSON.

Richmond, January 13, 1918.

PROHIBITION DURING THE WAR.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I was very pleased to see Mr. Chitty's letter in THE INQUIRER last week. He states the case so well that but little, if anything, need be added, but with your permission I should like to stress one or two points.

As regards America, The Daily News to-day states that: "America is arranging to ship ninety million bushels of wheat for the Allies, and the people of the United States are being asked to make sacrifices accordingly." The italics are mine. Writing to The Daily Chronicle of December 12, the Rev. L. Winther Caws said: "When conversing lately with an American officer who holds an important position in the Army I was startled to find that there is a very pronounced and growing feeling of hot indignation in America at the 'criminal attitude' of the British Government and people towards the drink question." Further, Dr. Fort Newton, the well-known American minister, preaching at the City Temple on January 6, said "When I see American boys staggering in the streets drunk I hate London. Here every opportunity is offered, every trap set to debauch our boys on their way to and from the Front. How long will America send food-stuffs to England to have it used to make liquor to ruin her boys? Are we to understand that England thinks more of her breweries than she does of her allies?"

As regards the allegation that the British working man would "down" tools if prohibition were introduced, Mr. James Simpson, a well-known labour leader in Canada who has been in this country for some weeks past said: "I regard it as a serious insult to the working men of Great Britain to be made responsible for the failure of the Government to fulfil an obviously important obligation. I am quite convinced that labour is being made the scapegoat to protect the invested interests of the unpatriotic brewers and distillers of the United Kingdom."

These facts speak for themselves and the sooner they are fully realised the better it will be for this country.—Yours, &c.

E. F. COWLIN.

19 Northwood Road, Forest Hill, S.E.23.
January 14, 1918.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

THE TRACK OF THE STORM. By Margaret Brackenbury Crook, B.A. Headley Bros., Ltd. 1s. 6d. and 2s. net.

A WARM welcome will be given by our readers to this series of tales of the Marne, the Meuse and the Aube by the Rev. Margaret Crook, whose name is familiar to most of them. But it deserves to be read for the more important reason that it is the direct result of a woman's experiences in a country devastated by the war, and that it makes us realise, as perhaps only a woman could do, the pitifulness of it all from the point of view of the helpless non-combatant. Others may write glowingly of the ideals which inspire great armies fighting for safety and freedom, or, with terrible realism, of the actual horrors of the battlefield. The enthusiastic military expert may dilate on the organisation which produces a great fighting machine, and the Red Cross worker enlarge with equal fervour on the wonderful efficiency—to say nothing of the heroic self-sacrifice—with which the task of succouring the wounded and repairing the disabled is carried on; but writers like Miss Crook bring home to us the inarticulate misery, the patient endurance, the curious bewilderment of decent poor folk with a narrow outlook on life, and little knowledge of the world, whose hopes are not so much ruined by the world-storm which has passed over them as their minds are dulled and their souls stunned by its noise and terror. She has worked, we believe, in connection with the Society of Friends' Relief Committees in those regions that have been desolated by the war; has talked with the villagers in the wretched hovels or cellars which now serve so many of them for homes; has seen the pathetic and often quaint contrivances to which they have been reduced in order to keep up the last shred of respectability and honest pride; and, for her, a "common greyness silvers everything," the greyness of ashes.

But this does not mean that humour is lacking in these pages, or that there is not much that speaks to us of goodness and beauty in these tragic annals of rural life in an invaded country. The story of little Roger Cuvelier's introduction to the garderie where Englishwomen, with an eye to the edification of the young peasant, were teaching play-work under the apple trees in a field full of bomb-holes, for instance, is a delightful study of childish tenacity and the passion for self-expression. 'The Z— Between,' too, which recently appeared in these columns, and tells of the troubles of Madame Lefèvre, who had a good word to say for the Boches even after they burned down her village, and who also finds something kindly to chronicle about them, gives a moving picture of desolation relieved by the radiance of a human soul not reduced to despair by the cruelty of "the enemy." 'Marcel' is another chapter full of pathos, and also not without intimations of the brave womanly spirit which can survive the downfall of all its hopes, and keep the fire of love brightly burning in a one-roomed cottage when the tide of battle has swept past. Then there is the episode of a winsome little blue-eyed French lassie whose one desire was for "une petite poupée" (after her pilgrimage of sixty miles south of the battle-lines), of Léon Lebrun, a returned prisoner of war, made happy with the gift of a pèlerine by "Les Amis"; of Madame Roze, a toiler at 4d. an hour, to whom the Relief Worker endeared herself in a way indicated by the following sentence from a letter, "Chère Mademoiselle, je conserve précieusement mon joli parapluie en souvenir de vous,"—all very fascinating in spite of their sadness. The book is, indeed, full of human interest, and throws into relief certain aspects of the war which it is well to have sympathetically focussed in a woman's way lest our hearts, quite against our will, should grow a little hard with the prolongation of the struggle.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

WILLIAM WOODING.

THE death of the Rev. William Wooding, which took place in London on January 12th, removes from the ranks of the Unitarian ministry an intellectually gifted man of fine character, who was much beloved by his friends. Modest, courteous, refined, sturdily independent, he belonged to that small minority of the human race who take the trouble to search out the meaning of things for themselves and to form opinions of their own. Widely read in history, literature, and theology, Mr. Wooding from his boyhood was a student and a learner. He was a delightful companion with whom to converse, and in his travels far afield it was a joy to be with him. The precision of the schoolmaster, his intimate knowledge of classics and mathematics, never impaired the largeness of his human outlook. To his friends he was always fresh and stimulating, vigorous in mind, active in body.

William Wooding was born at Turvey, a small village in Bedfordshire, November 4th, 1840. His parents were simple working folk, and he himself did ordinary work on a farm from his boyhood. He spoke in after years most gratefully of the help he received as a boy in the Sunday school from the vicar and his daughter, who lent him books to read. He was a diligent student, and succeeded in matriculating at the University of London, afterwards taking his B.A. degree. In a lecture which he prepared on the occasion of his visit to Australia and New Zealand in 1911, he gave an interesting description of 'Life in an English Village,' the village being his own native village of Turvey. His mind having turned towards the ministry he entered Spring Hill (now Mansfield College, Oxford) in 1860 and studied there for six years. In 1866 he was appointed minister of the Congregational Church, Castlegates, Shrewsbury, where he remained four years. His ministry terminated in 1870, owing to some divergence of theological views from what was considered orthodox by the general Congregational body at that time. In a paper read at Essex Hall in 1902 he described his religious development. His first open departure from orthodoxy was in regard to the inspiration and authority of the Bible; the scheme of Salvation and the doctrines of the Incarnation and the Atonement followed; and on further reading and reflection, he moved towards Unitarianism.

Mr. Wooding did not, however, seek another pulpit on resigning his charge at Shrewsbury. He became headmaster of a boys' school at St. Leonards; and then in 1875 he was appointed an assistant master at the City of London School, a position he held for thirty-five years. In 1878 he married Miss Evelyn Asquith. In the autumn of 1881 he became minister of the Unitarian Chapel at Newington Green, London. There he remained for twenty-five years, respected and beloved by the members of the congregation. Since his retirement in 1907, Mr. Wooding has preached occasionally, chiefly in London. He was elected a Trustee of Dr. Williams's Trust in 1901, and he rendered valuable services to that body. He was on the Council of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association for a number of years; and he and Mrs. Wooding represented the Association on a tour of the Unitarian Churches in Australia and New Zealand from November, 1911, to March, 1912. He was also a member of the Presbyterian Board. He was one of the tutors at the Pioneer Preachers' Hostel, and the young men who afterwards proceeded to the Unitarian Home Missionary College will remember his kindly and efficient aid in their studies.

Mr. Wooding was a thoroughgoing Non-conformist of the best intellectual type. He had no sympathy—one might almost say he had no patience—with clericalism and sacerdotalism in any shape or form. In the paper published in 'Types of Religious Experience,' after describing his revolt against orthodoxy, he adds: "I could not pray myself back again to the peace from which I had parted; I could only wish to be sincere and unsoiled in personal truth, and to possess a hardihood that should be undisturbed at the prospect of painful consequences.... The rest that came to me was a faith that had no conflict with reason or ascertained fact." His Unitarian convictions and sympathies became clearer and stronger as the years passed. He found that Unitarianism offered the widest spiritual and intellectual freedom to the individual, "and to the world an evangelism of a depth and fulness of meaning such as to reduce the earlier content of the word to insignificance." He concludes his paper with these words: "I am proud of that religious and intellectual home that calls no good man a stranger, and which offers a generous welcome to all who seek the Eternal in spirit and in truth." In a volume published in 1913, 'The Secret of Righteousness,' Mr. Wooding sets out his mature thoughts on ethics and religion with great ability. The book was prepared on the suggestion of his sons, who urged him to use his leisure in telling them and others what he regarded as the most important things in life and religion. A more elaborate treatise, in which he surveyed the whole field of historical and personal religion, he left in MS.

To his widow and four sons and a daughter we would tender our sincere sympathy in their sorrow; and an expression of our gratitude for a long life nobly lived, and for services worthily rendered.

W. C. B.

MR. E. B. SQUIRE.

By the death of Mr. Edmund Barnard Squire the congregation of Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, has lost one of its oldest and most attached members. The eldest son of the Rev. Henry Squire he was born at Great Yarmouth on June 3, 1832. When he came to London as a young man to practise as a solicitor he settled at Hampstead, and formed the close ties with the Chapel which continued unbroken for the rest of his life. After his marriage in 1863 with Miss Florence Fearon he went to live in the delightful house at the top of the Heath which was his home for more than fifty years. A man of quiet and deep affections he found one of the richest treasures of his life in his intimate friendship with Dr. and Mrs. Sadler. He never spoke of them in later years without deep reverence. It was a source of special delight to him after Dr. Sadler's death to assist in the preparation of some memorials of a ministry to which he owed so much.

He had a fine and discriminating taste in books and pictures, but his chief delight in his leisure hours was music. For a short time he acted as voluntary organist at the chapel—for many years he sang in the choir. Many people, however, will remember him chiefly for his beneficence and the courtesy which always made his kindness beautiful. With Mrs. Squire he took a deep interest in the Spicer Street Domestic Mission and in its later home in Mansford Street, and after her death in 1902 he maintained for many years the little country-home at Hampstead, to which she had given so much thought and care. In the Hampstead life of a generation ago, when it was a less bustling place than it is to-day, Mr. Squire was a familiar figure. He was keenly sensitive to its old-world charm, and valued its opportunities of quiet friendship with men like his neighbour, Canon Ainger. To many who can remember those days the news of his death will revive feelings of gratitude for a select company of men and women, who knew by nature the secret of quietness and benignity, in days when friendship was never in a hurry and there was still leisure to be kind.

MR. THOMAS F. BAGLEY.

SOME of those still left who worked together under Dr. Martineau in the Portland Schools half-a-century ago remember with special pleasure the infant classes both in Sunday and day school, and the happy faces with a maximum of singing and play and a minimum of lessons rare in those days. Into these classes, about 1870, came a quiet bright little boy, Tom Bagley, who in due course received his education in the British School and his moral and religious training in the Sunday school. He never lost his interest in the latter. On the last Sunday in the old year he was at his post as Superintendent. On the following Wednesday he was struck by paralysis, and on Friday, January 3, he passed peacefully away.

As a pupil in the Sunday school he was for sometime in Mrs. Edward Enfield's class. He often referred with gratitude and affection to her influence and kindness and the friendly relation that continued throughout his life. He more than repaid these by his own faithful work in the Sunday school and Institute.

One who worked with him for many years writes of him: "Devoted to the work of the Sunday school and Institute, always at his post, his sympathetic and unselfish nature, his good judgment and singleness of aim, his courtesy and his manliness gained the esteem and affection both of the young men and women of the Social Club and of the children of the Sunday School. It is as superintendent of the latter that his loss will be most severely felt. Gentle, though firm, and patient even with the most wayward, he seemed always to know how to call forth their better nature, and thus was able to maintain good order and a high tone without apparent effort."

Mr. Bagley leaves a widow and one daughter. Among the rewards of his diligent industry and loving devotion was his joy during last year of seeing his daughter complete her degree of B.A. with Honours in the University of London, and obtain a scholarship at Bedford College.

The funeral took place at Marylebone Cemetery, East Finchley, on the 9th inst., the service being conducted by the Rev. Francis H. Jones. The long wintry drive home from the grave-side was cheered by quiet talk of many happy memories of Sunday school days, and among the family treasures is a prize which Tom Bagley, in his boyhood, received from the hands of Dr. Martineau.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

156TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	19,673	16	3
S. C. (3rd)	10	0	0
Mrs. Roper	0	7	6
Highgate Unitarian Church (23rd)	7	14	0
Mrs. T. H. Russell (13th)	5	0	0
Miss E. S. Hollins (9th)	2	10	0
Miss S. J. Gregg (24th)	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty (43rd)	4	0	0
Mr. L. N. Williams (16th)	1	1	0
Mr. Arthur Taylor (6th)	0	10	0
Bootle Free Church War Relief Committee, per Mrs. Yates (32nd)	1	7	0
	£19,707	5	9

Parcels have been received from:—The Wimbleton War Workers Depot; Mrs. A. J. Gimson; Mrs. Chitty; Miss M. T. Worsley; H. J.; Miss Kelley; Mrs. W. Duckworth; Mrs. Wm. Healey; Mrs. J. Hunt; Mrs. Notcutt; Miss Lake; Mrs. Webb; Miss Brooks; Anon.; L. O. M.; Miss S. S. Patridge; Mrs. Reginald Wight; Mrs. David Capper; Mrs. Russell Martineau; Miss Spencer; Mrs. Helsby; Miss C. Harrold; Adult Class of the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, per Miss Abbott; Mrs. Basil Hardcastle and Miss Phoebe Hardcastle; Mrs. F. E. Baines; West Grove Women's League, Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox; Mrs. Cooke Taylor; Miss Anne Garrett; Miss E. A. Eveleigh; Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas; Miss M. B. Lamb; Miss K. F. Lawford.

WEEKLY NOTES.

THE first consignments of mufflers, hot-water bottles, mittens and bedsocks have reached the poor tuberculous soldiers in Savoy. Their letters express the greatest delight. Two very sick men were sharing a hot-water bottle before, having it in turns, and they are now each rejoicing in the undisputed possession of one for the whole time. Flannel belts would be very welcome to them also, and still more bedsocks, and mufflers and mittens. The cold is intense now and everything freezes in the wards at night. The English nurse writes she would be very thankful for a few warm dressing-gowns, as there is not one in the hospital. ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Men's dressing-gowns.
Bedsocks, mufflers, mittens (urgent).
Pyjamas, shirts, socks, and all sorts of men's underclothing.
Slippers, cardigans.
Clothing for women and children, especially stockings.
Games, jig-saw puzzles.
Calico bags, 2 ft. by 3 ft., and any smaller size.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

A MESSAGE FROM EGYPT FOR THE NEW YEAR.

WE are, as I write these lines, drawing into the last weeks of 1917. It is the hollow of the year, and overhead the sky is clouded. I can think of one and another of you to whom 1917 will always be a memory of pain and loss, the graveyard of your sons, in which the little blue forget-me-not never fades, where the other flowers have all withered and died.

The fellowship of the whole Church joins with you in everlasting memorial of your dead; it gathers the voices of your grief into that great swelling chant of aeonic suffering which it raises at its altars to the God of pity and love, who through the mystery of suffering and death, bringeth life and immortality to light. No great good has ever come to the world but through martyrdom; every dawn has been born out of the womb of night. What have we that those who have gone before us have not bled for and died for? Our knowledge, our liberty, our civilisation, our religion we have received from the hand of the past, all torn and blood-stained. Aye, we have taken them and enjoyed them, with little or no thought that they were the sacrament of men's flesh and blood. To-day it is different. We, too, are passing through the terror of terrors, that we may enter the holy of holies, where the sacrifice is rendered that creates and perpetuates the communion of the human with the divine. Life is no more a "sleeping and a forgetting," but a passion and a vocation. We have ceased to be epicures at the board and become priests at the altar. Existence is a mission. The solace for these sufferings we are undergoing must be found in this sense of the sacred function we are fulfilling. There can be no heights without depths. Redemption has always been a tragedy, regeneration a martyrdom, salvation a Calvary. God's law has not altered. It is only that we have ceased to be mere recipients and received the call to become agents in the Divine scheme.

And now a New Year has opened. And passionately we hope that it will bring peace, that the cup of the world's chastisement will be full, and the nations be brought to that repentance which involves redress and leads to reconciliation. Surely we can look for a new epoch in this New Year. At least we shall enter it with faith. The whirlwind and the fire are still passing before us, but soon we shall hear the still small voice of God again, and in the quiet after the storm be assured of His Presence and nearness as the eternal truth. We are cast down, but not unto despair. For if God's on His throne, all's right finally with the world. He is our hope and our strength. He is the alpha and the omega, the first and the last. Through the rise and fall of the human elements the form and motion of Deity passes on to its own mystic beatific ends. We look through the opening of the year on the sun-splendoured, night-darkened, now tottering, now towering, fabric of things, and we hear the old grand challenge of the soul to it: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in." R. NICOL CROSS, R.A.M.C.

Egypt.

(From The Mill Hill Chapel Record.)

THE opening of the Bose Research Institute in Calcutta, on November 30, is a memorable event in Indian annals, and this notable gift to India by one of her notable sons will ever be held in grateful remembrance. Sir Jagadis Chandra Bose, who is a leading member of the Brahmo Samaj, has won a world-wide reputation in the realm of science—a realm which knows no geographical or ethnographical boundaries. The honour which his fellow scientists have accorded to his research work on the border line between animal and plant life must be and should be gratifying to the eminent Bengali; but the great aim of his life beyond his actual work has been to give to India an Institute which shall provide for the Indian student a laboratory completely equipped for experimental research, and to bring facilities for study within reach of the poorest. The first part of his great desire is realised in the opening of the Institute which bears his name. To it he has devoted the earnings and savings of many years; at the cost of about five lakhs of rupees he has built and equipped the Institute.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Dean Row Chapel.—The Rev. E. A. Voysey, who resigned the ministry at Dean Row Chapel, Wilmslow, three months ago, terminated his ministry at the end of the year. On New Year's Day a meeting of friends was held, when farewell gifts were made to him and Mrs. Voysey as a token of esteem and regard.

Dewsbury.—The annual Congregational Social in connection with Unity Church was held on Saturday, January 5. A goodly number were present, including friends both new and old. Short and encouraging speeches were made during the evening by the Revs. W. R. Shanks (Bradford), Frank Coleman (Leeds), J. M. Bass (Wakefield), and the minister, the Rev. John W. Maw. Mr. Ernest Thornton (Chairman of the Committee) presided. The Annual Scholars Christmas Tea and Prize Distribution took place on December 29. The prizes were distributed by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Thornton. The sum of £8 5s. 7d. was collected in December in order to send Christmas parcels to all the young men on Army Service connected with the Church and Sunday school. Splendid progress has been made both in the Church and Sunday school during the past twelve months.

Geelong.—We are very glad to hear that Capt. A. O. Dowson (son of the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson) of the 12th Battalion Rifle Brigade, now in France, has received the Military Cross for services rendered as transport officer of the brigade in which his battalion is a unit, in taking up supplies under fire.

Huddersfield.—The weekly lectures in connection with the Fitzwilliam Street Social Union were resumed on Wednesday, January 9, when a large company trudged through the snow to hear an illustrated lecture on "Sunny Jersey" by Mr. Philip Ahier, B.Sc. Mr. Ahier dealt with his subject in an interesting manner, and introduced, by means of the lantern, pictures of the most interesting scenes in the island. As a native the speaker dwelt with natural pride upon the history of Jersey, and graphically described its agricultural and horticultural state. In the course of the evening the Rev. Robert A. Dickson referred to the excellent series of lectures which had been arranged. Within the next few weeks the "Union" would be addressed by Lady Barlow, Lady Margaret Sackville, the Rev. Dendy Agate, the Marquess of Crewe, Sir Thomas P. Whittaker M.P., Sir Robert Pearce, M.P., Mr. George G. Armstrong, and others. Mr. Dickson also reminded the members of the honour conferred upon their organisation a year ago by the Huddersfield Corporation, which, after discussing their lectures in committee, decided to reduce the charges for the use of the Town Hall from £12 per night to £6 per night, on the ground that the educational work of the "Union" was of value to the municipality and was therefore worthy of encouragement. He then read a letter from the Borough Treasurer intimating that this session the Corporation had decided to reduce the charges to £5 per night, and had expressed warm appreciation of the character of the work in which they were engaged.

Islington.—The Rev. J. Vint Laughland, minister of Unity Church, who has been doing munition work for some months under the National Service scheme, will preach at least once every Sunday as from the first Sunday in March from his own pulpit. He has recently been doing some very useful work in the Bomb Shop at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, among the men on night shift, who have employed the latter half of their dinner hour, from 1.25 A.M. to 2 A.M., in holding meetings at which he has delivered lectures on Democracy. "The lectures, which were enthusiastically received," says the Woolwich Pioneer "were as follows: two lectures on 'Abraham Lincoln,' 'Tolstoi,' 'Autocracy versus Democracy,' and 'Robert Burns,' the closing lecture being 'The State and the Individual.' The meetings were very ably presided over by Mr. A. Newton. General regret was expressed when it became known that the speaker would be unable to continue his welcome offices, owing to pressure of ministerial duties. Mr. Laughland has been invited to take the services at the Free Christian Church, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, on January 27, at 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M."

Liverpool.—On the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert R. Rathbone, a Reception was held at the Yamen Cafe, Bold Street, to meet the Rev. C. M. Wright, recently appointed to the ministry of the Ancient Chapel, and Mrs. Wright. The Rev. C. Craddock, former minister, and the Rev. F. K. Freeston, who has for about a year occupied the pulpit, sent apologies for their inability to attend, and their congratulations and best wishes for the happiness and success of the new ministry. A presentation of books had previously been made to Mr. Freeston as a small acknowledgment of appreciation of his valuable services in the interval between settled ministries of the chapel. Mr. Rathbone, in presiding, stated the reasons for a decision of the Committee to appoint a younger man than had been their traditional custom, and spoke hopefully of the results of this decision. The Rev. Dr. Mellor, in giving a welcome in the name of the ministers of the district, described Liverpool as the metropolis of the Free Churches, and the Liverpool laity as pre-eminent in virtue and services. The Rev. J. C. Hirst extended a welcome in a few gracious words on behalf of the Liverpool District Missionary Association of which he is President. Mr. R. H. Armstrong, welcoming Mr. Wright for the laity, admitted the metropolitan character of Liverpool with regard to Liberal Religion (choosing this term rather than "Unitarianism," and the description of their laity as given by Dr. Mellor; and pointed out the additional fact that Liverpool had owed much to Nottingham in the past, and was still to continue the debt in the person of the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne, from whom the congregation of High Pavement Chapel had unwillingly and generously consented to part in the interests of the Liverpool Domestic Mission. He hoped much from these new accessions to the Liverpool churches. Mr. Wright responded in a speech marked very pleasantly by the saving grace of humour. He touched on the beautiful traditions of the Ancient Chapel ministry, and the direction of his own desires and ideals; modestly asking them to "give him time" for their realisation now that he also had come to this Mecca of the Free Churches. He made a graceful reference to the father of the last speaker (the Rev. R. A. Armstrong), and hoped that the excellent relations dwelt upon by the other speakers would become part of his own experience.

Nantwich.—During the week ending January 12, a series of United Prayer Meetings were held in the various Nonconformist places of worship in Nantwich. The concluding one at the Unitarian Chapel on the Saturday night was among the most successful. It was presided over by the minister (the Rev. J. Park Davies), the address was given by the Wesleyan minister, and among others taking part were the Primitive Methodist, United Methodist, Congregational, and Baptist ministers. On the previous Sunday evening a very largely attended Meeting of Prayer and Thanksgiving was held at the Town Hall. The Rector presided, and all the other ministers (including the Unitarian) took part. Happily such fraternisation excites no surprise in Nantwich now. Among other recent activities connected with the Unitarian Church was a most successful Choir Social on New Year's Eve, at which a number of wounded soldiers were entertained. This was followed by a Watch Night Service in the Chapel, which was well attended. On the 9th inst. the Sunday School Treat was held. Twenty-five books were presented as prizes for good conduct and attendance, also ten certificates of attendance to members of the League of Young Worshippers.

New Zealand.—A Conference of the Unitarian Association of New Zealand was held at Auckland on Wednesday and Thursday, November 14 and 15, 1917. The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. E. Williams, B.A. At the public meeting several representative speakers delivered addresses, including the Rev. G. E. Hale, B.A., minister of the Unitarian Church at Wellington, and Mr. T. Macky of Auckland, son of the late Mr. Macky who went down in the Lusitania. Mr. Hale and Mr. Williams had arranged to exchange pulpits for a month.

Rotherham.—A Social Gathering was held on Thursday, January 10, for the purpose of welcoming the newly-appointed minister, the Rev. S. Spencer Bell, and his wife. Mr. T. Cocker (Chairman of Trustees) presided, and was supported by Mr. F. E. Brooksbank (Church Secretary and Trustee). A number of apologies for non-attendance from local ministers and ex-ministers of the church were read. Mr. R. D. Robinson (on behalf of the Church Committee and congregation), Mr. J. Foster (on behalf of the Sunday school), and Miss Elsom (representing the ladies) extended a hearty welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Spencer, their remarks being supplemented by several new members of the congregation, as well as by the Rev. J. W. Lee, Attercliffe. Mr. Spencer suitably replied to the welcome.

Warwick.—The Committee of High Street Chapel have received with much regret the resignation of the Rev. Gardner Preston, who has accepted a unanimous invitation from the congregation of Creffield Road Church, Acton. Mr. Preston's ministry will terminate at the end of March.

BIRTH.

JONES.—On January 17, at Eastbourne, to Mr. and Mrs. Arnold F. Jones, The Cottage, Station Road, Hendon, a son, Robert Fearon.

DEATH.

WOODING.—On January 12, at 21 Douglas Road, Canonbury, London, the Rev. William Wooding, B.A., aged 77.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, January 20.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. A. GOLLAND, M.A.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. C. HARGROVE.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 5.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11 and 5.30.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Mr. J. HARVEY LEWIS; 6.30, Mr. J. H. SMITH.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.
 South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM; 6.30, Mr. JOSEPH P. ROSLING.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. H. JONES.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11, Supply.
BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.
BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. FRED HALL.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.
BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. R. TRAYERS HERFORD, B.A.
CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.
CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.
OLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Mr. H. V. SALMON.
DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.15, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.
DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.
GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.
HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.
HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. A. COBDEN SMITH.
LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.
LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. FISHER SHORT.
LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. E. JENKINS.
MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. E. HAYCOCK.
MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HOESLEY, M.A.
MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.
NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.
NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.
PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11, Rev. J. W. LEE; 6.30, Rev. W. J. POND.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.
WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

Notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week should be sent to The Publisher, 13 BREAM'S BUILDINGS, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

The name of the Minister of the Church is inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

January

20. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES.

11.15 A.M., Devotional Service only without Sermon, after which an important Meeting of the Congregation will be held.

3.0 P.M., Children's Service.

27. Rev. VALENTINE D. DAVIS, of Bournemouth.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation. Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY,

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,

Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

2s. 6d. net (postage 4d. extra).

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS—JANUARY.

THE REIGN OF NONSENSE IN THE
WORLD, IN THE STATE, AND IN
HUMAN LIFEBy Prince Eugene Troubetzkoy
THE SOUL AS IT IS, AND HOW TO DEAL WITH ITBy Prof. Gilbert Murray
THE STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE AND
MUTUAL AIDBy Prof. J. Macleod
THE RESTORATION OF PALESTINEBy M. J. Landa
THE OLD TESTAMENT AND ITS
ETHICAL TEACHINGBy C. G. Montefiore
MORALITY AND CONVENTIONBy Prof. H. L. Stewart
PAUL AND PLATOBy Prof. E. L. Price
CHRISTIAN PRINCIPLES AND THE WAR SETTLEMENTBy Noel Buxton, M.P.
A PLEA FOR ARCHÆOLOGY AMONG
THE CLERGYBy the Rev. H. J. Dukinfield Astley,
M.A., Litt.D.
PREACHING AFTER THE WARBy the Rev. Joseph Wood
1517-1917: A RETROSPECT AND AN
ANTICIPATIONBy the Rev. Richard Roberts, M.A.
DISCUSSIONS, SURVEY, and SIGNED
REVIEWS

SUBSCRIPTION:

10s. per Annum, post free.

London: WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.2.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE,
F.S.I.
Miss C. GRADWELL.L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
H. J. VEZEY.

S. WHITE, LL.D.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Situations, Vacant and Wanted.

LADY requires DAILY or PART-DAILY EMPLOYMENT. Useful Companion, Secretary, or assist War or Social Work.—Address E., INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

EXPERIENCED & successful MANAGERESS desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. Private Canteen or otherwise. Daily preferred.—Address A., INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

WANTED in FEBRUARY, a superior MOTHER'S HELP for Four Children, ages 9, 6½, 5, and 4 years, eldest attending Day School. Good walker and needlewoman essential.—Apply Mrs. ARTHUR READ, 25 Woburn Square, London, W.C.1.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED HALF HOUSE TO LET. No children taken. Suit two ladies or gentleman and wife. Other occupant, one lady. Attendance by arrangement.—Address M., 20 Alytt's Gardens, Golders Green, N.W.

Miscellaneous.

HUCKABACK TOWELLING in bundles of Remnants, sufficient to make six full-sized Bedroom Towels, only 7s. 6d., postage 6d. Send postcard for this month's Bargain List, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

OLD FALSE TEETH wanted for their precious metals; now worth up to £12 per set; any condition; surplus jewellery; broken jewellery from £2 to £5 per ounce given. We give the highest possible value; before remitting we make offers by return. If not accepted goods returned post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street,
MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

FALL OF JERUSALEM.

NEW LECTURE NOW READY.

For dates and conditions write: THE HON. SEC., S.S.A., Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

. All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS
TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.;
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken. Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2;
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines; extra lines 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenaeum Press 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate, Saturday, January 19, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER]

Barkeley, California

[THREE HALFPENCE.]

No. 3943.
NEW SERIES, No. 1046.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1918.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	25	Prohibition During the War	28	The Spirit of the Training Camps in America	29
FOR REMEMBRANCE	26	NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS	28	Our Fallen Comrades	30
THE POSSIBILITIES OF SUNDAY	27	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—		The Recognition of Dr. Fort Newton	30
CORRESPONDENCE:—		Belgian Hospital Fund	28	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	30
The Book Room in Havre	28

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

THE appeal made in the Rev. W. H. Drummond's letter on another page will surely not be in vain. The money he asks for, £25 to £30, to provide good literature for the Y.M.C.A. book-room at Havre—that ever busy centre of soldier traffic—is modest; the aim is an excellent one, and readers of THE INQUIRER who care to give substantial form to their good wishes to him as he sets out on the lecturing campaign which was announced last week can now do so. Since war broke out, as is well known, Mr. Drummond has not only thrown himself energetically into a public writer's part in the great struggle, but with equal zeal into many pieces of good practical service, of which this latest is certainly not least. We shall all follow with deep interest such of his experiences as he may be able to report, and sincerely trust that while his labours may be fruitful among men and officers (not excepting those who are themselves Y.M.C.A. workers) they may continue to be in the best sense enjoyable to himself, and not too severe a tax on his happily vigorous health.

* * *

WHETHER the observant laity will regard the incidents prior to the consecration of Dr. Hensley Henson as Bishop of Hereford in the light of comedy or the gloom of tragedy must be left doubtful. In some regards they provoke a smile; in others they occasion profound regrets. Here is Dr. Gore, Bishop of Oxford, whose consecration sixteen years ago was opposed on an allegation of his heretical (Old Testament) opinions; he has now led the opposition to Dr. Henson, imploring the Archbishop of Canterbury not to proceed with the ceremony. Here is the Archbishop himself, replying in a long letter to Dr. Gore, after a close examination of the supposed heresies (New Testament) of the Bishop-elect, and finding that, though some of his pages are marked by "want of balance and a crudity of abrupt statement," by "almost irreconcilable inconsistencies," he is really not unsound in the faith. In passing, his Grace adroitly, perhaps a little mischievously, reminds Dr. Gore of a certain volume known as 'Lux Mundi,' which in its day was something more than suspect. And here, finally, is Dr. Henson assuring the Archbishop, in reply to direct inquiry by him, that he repeats the words of the Creed ex animo, and without any desire to change them. And so the true faith is once more guaranteed to a very sad, very perplexed, and very sin-stained world.

* * *

THE Prime Minister addressed on Friday week the final Conference of representatives of the trade unions affected by the Government's man-power proposals. In the course of his remarks he pointed to the fact that thus far, while military replies had been given to the Allies' recently announced 'War Aims,' no civilian minister in Germany had been allowed to say a word. Obviously soldiers are still paramount in that country, and people in this country must still brace themselves for the stern fight with that class of controversialists. The democracy must be of one mind, ready for the extremest sacrifice. In conclusion, he said there must be no immunity from the obligations involved in this great struggle against militarism.

You and I in the past have been fighting against privilege. I hope that we shall be fighting on the same side again. We are fighting now against the privilege claimed by a military caste. Democracy, if it means anything, must mean that the people of all classes, all sections, all trades, and all professions must merge their privileges and their rights in the common stock. ("And wealth.") Certainly. Now, gentlemen, what I want to say in conclusion is this: If any man standing in my place can find an honourable, equitable, just way out of this conflict without fighting it through, for heaven's sake let him tell me. My own conviction is this: The people must either go on or go under.

* * *

THE address given by Mr. Purdy at Nottingham on Wednesday, in his capacity as President of the Labour Conference, reaffirmed the note of steadfastness in the aims of the British people in the war, and once more made appeal to the German people, as distinct from the autocrats who control their destinies, to declare in plain terms what their own aims are. The eight hundred delegates, representing nearly two and a half million workers, though not in quite unanimous agreement with their President—that could hardly be expected—were evidently for the most part with him, and the opposition given to the subsequent "peace resolution" was confined to a mere handful of extremists. This resolution, moved by Mr. Henderson, included approval of a further Conference in London, February 20, of the Labour and Socialist Parties of the Allied nations, with a view to arriving at a general agreement on War Aims; and, assuming such an agreement, directed that pressure should be brought on the several Governments to allow facilities for an International Conference, preferably in Switzerland, where the working classes of all the belligerents should be represented.

* * *

Two disturbing additions have been made to the causes of public anxiety this week. One is the outbreak of a temper among certain workers akin to that which in Austria has developed into apparently formidable strikes. We may be comforted by these doings in an enemy land; it is another thing to be threatened with their like ourselves. All sober-minded people will earnestly hope that the declarations made in certain quarters that the men will "down tools" at the end of this month unless this or that peace proposal is put forth by the Government will prove a false prophecy. That way madness lies; we have little trust in despotism, none in anarchy. Let us believe that British common sense will prevail. We can do that quite sincerely while still conceiving that it is well to indicate to our own military extremists that the sooner we can really get in sight of useful negotiation the better a good many plain citizens will be pleased.

* * *

THE other untoward symptom is the breaking out once more of that sinister Press agitation which has been so marked a feature in political and administrative circles since the outbreak of war. The vast power wielded by certain journals over a large section of the public is undoubtedly a menace to the State; and when it is used, as now, to effect momentous changes in high military and naval commands, it may work irreparable mischief. The offence is certainly none the less in view of the fact that the master of the group of journals referred to has even ostentatiously refused to accept the responsibility of bearing a strong man's share in the nation's service, preferring evidently to work the puppets of the show as pleases him. We hail with satisfaction the general condemnation these tactics have received.

* * *

THE meeting to give a welcome to Dr. Fort Newton at the City Temple last week is described in another column. But we may say here that although the list of speakers included no representative of our own churches, a hearty invitation had been sent to a number of Unitarians, and several were present on the platform. The attendance and greetings of the Rev. R. J. Campbell, after an interval of two years, were good evidence that, whatever turn his theological or ecclesiastical opinions have taken, his feelings are as cordial as ever towards the City Temple. As for Dr. Newton himself, he must be hard to please if that crowded and enthusiastic gathering did not assure him that his own desire for the welding of the two great English-speaking nations into abiding unity of spirit is heartily reciprocated on this side. We sincerely wish him the truest success in his ministry.

* * *

DR. C. W. WENDTE of Boston, whose life during many years has been fruitful in two special directions—the supply of singing for young people and the organisation of inter-church and of international goodwill—has pleasantly surprised us by the issue of a handsome new volume of carols and stories for the season. Despite his personal and public sorrows, which are many and deep, he evidently still possesses the secret of bright and cheery song; and we heartily congratulate him, and ourselves, on this latest evidence that his love is of the right quality, never failing, enduring all things, hoping all things. The appearance of the book at a time when handsome books are a luxury has this added reason—it marks, we understand, the gifted author's attainment of his 70th birthday. In the name of his many friends on this side of the sea we venture to express the sincere wish that he may long preserve his vigour and his faith; and that we may all join him, in a speedy by and by, in singing the carols of a realised peace on earth.

FOR REMEMBRANCE.

A HUNDRED years ago, on January 24, 1818, John Mason Neale was born in London, the son of an evangelical clergyman, who died before the boy was 6 years old. Sherborne School, some private teaching, and then Trinity College, Cambridge, brought him to graduation in the year before the publication of Newman's famous 'Tract Ninety,' and by that time Neale was fully launched into the stream of the Tractarian Movement. Mathematics, notwithstanding his father's brilliant record at Cambridge as Senior Wrangler of his year, had been from the first abhorrent to his nature, but he was a fine classical scholar, with poetic gifts, and his whole heart was given to historical research. Thus he was eminently fitted to render service to that revival of mediæval piety the first impulse of which came from Oxford, but which was by no means lacking of response in the sister University.

Neale ranks among scholars as historian of the Eastern Church and as a devoted student and editor of ancient liturgies, but yet more memorable and of more permanent, far-reaching influence was the work he did in the field of early and mediæval Christian hymnody. Diligent and enthusiastic in research, he was a notable pioneer, especially in the wide field of Greek hymnody. His translations, both from the Greek and the Latin, brought a large body of hymns within the reach of English-speaking people, and there are also hymns of his own which go to the heart of a true devotion. He had a happy gift in translating, with not too formal a literalism, and a genuine note of melody; and while some of his work stands as a very faithful rendering of the spirit, if not of the actual words of the old hymns, there are other instances, and these among the best-known and most popular of his hymns, on the borderland between translation and original production. Thus the well-known hymn, 'Art thou weary, art thou languid,' which is sometimes noted as a translation from Stephen the Sabaite, seems to have been prompted by some phrases of the old writer's, as is the case also with 'O happy band of Pilgrims,' but both of these may be taken as practically original to Neale himself. On the other hand, the equally well-known 'Brief life is here our portion' and 'Jerusalem the golden' are definitely translations of parts of the 'Hora Novissima' of Bernard of Cluny. Two other of the most widely accepted of Neale's gleanings from the old world are his evening hymn, 'The day is past and over,' based on the Greek of Anatolius, and that delightful outpouring 'The strain upraise of joy and praise,' which is a rendering of one of the Latin "Allelulatic Sequences" of the ninth-century Benedictine, Notker of St. Gall.

The citing of these hymns may be accepted as sufficient reason for our grateful commemoration of John Mason Neale, as one whose voice is heard, not unworthily, in the great concord of devotion and thanksgiving which rises from the Universal Church. It is always delightful to realise how the separations of dogma and ecclesiastical exclusions fall away in the union of self-forgetting worship, and how our hymn-books are enriched by singers of every school of thought and belief. The differences, of course, remain, but they can be set aside, for there is a deeper spirit of aspiration and worship that unites. In that higher fellowship it is good to remember Neale with Keble and Lyte and Newman, but also with the Wesleys, with Anna Laetitia Waring and Whittier, with Martineau and Stopford Brooke, and a host of others, who in an ecclesiastical marshalling of forces would be poles asunder.

Neale was an uncompromising advocate of the extreme Orthodox and Sacerdotal positions of the Tractarian School, and during his lifetime, in those early days of the movement, suffered much obloquy on that account. The only preferment ever offered him in the Church, and it was of the very humblest, he was obliged for reasons of health to decline. Threatenings of consumption had early declared themselves, and at the opening of his career he was obliged to leave England and spend a year in Madeira. Then, at the age of 28, he was appointed Warden of the old foundation of Sackville College, East Grinstead, an almshouse, with a salary of £27 a year. The remaining not quite twenty years of his life were spent in that position. During fourteen of those years he was inhibited by his Bishop, and only very gradually lived down the prejudice by which he was assailed. He was the founder of the Sisterhood of St. Margaret at East Grinstead, against which, as against himself, there was at first violent prejudice. On one occasion he and some of the sisters, attending the funeral of one of their number at Lewes, were subjected to actual mob violence, because of some preposterous story which had been told about them. But through those years, up to the time of his too early death, Neale pursued his way with quiet dignity and consistent faithfulness, diligent always in those studies which did so much for the enrichment of the hymnody of the Church.

It is in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' that he seems most at home. The first edition of that book was brought out five years before his death in 1866, and to the most recent edition he is still by far the largest contributor in amount, for out of a total of 643 pieces 64 bear his name, though chiefly as translator of the ancient hymns. These mark his position in the ecclesiastical world, and most of them can appeal only to those of his own school. It is chiefly for the hymns mentioned earlier in this article that he will be more generally and most gratefully remembered, and for ourselves we confess that we value most an original hymn of his, which, curiously enough, has not found its way into 'Hymns Ancient and Modern.' That Neale has a word also for these troubled times will be seen if we quote the first two verses of this hymn:—

Need it is we raise our eyes
Up from earth towards the skies,
Thinking of the souls that rest
In the mansions of the blest;
Lest we faint in our distress,
Through exceeding heaviness.

Thee in them, O Lord most high,
Them in Thee we glorify:—
Noble athletes, that went home
Through the sea of martyrdom,
And the saints, through toil and shame,
Brave confessors of Thy name.

THE POSSIBILITIES OF SUNDAY.

IN a fleeting visit to New England some eighteen months ago the writer was greatly impressed by the religious, intellectual and above all social usages of Sunday.

Sunday was a refreshing and enterprising day, something of a Lord's day, above all it was a sociable day. It was not perhaps the writer's ideal of what a Sunday might be; but it had about it a happy elasticity of mental outlook, a variety of occupation, religious, musical and intellectual, compared with which an English Sunday is a thing of sap-dried fibre.

In America men recognise more cordially than we the need of coming together. The public meeting has been the great open sesame to American citizenship. Colour prejudice, pride of race, the homesickness of the new immigrant, always ready to assert themselves on a week day, yield before the magic of Sunday. In Ford Hall, Boston, on a Sunday afternoon these tendencies are in the melting pot. Throughout Massachusetts, where Sunday afternoon and evening forums abound, it is the same. Black and white, Jew and Gentile sing, consider, cheer, debate in good humoured fraternity. Whatever the particular programme, religious, social, musical or literary, something else not defined nor definable is propagated. Serb and Albanian, Negro and Russian Jew are drawn into a milieu henceforth to be their common possession. The audience carries away something that becomes part of itself in its individual life, an atmosphere that, once breathed, enters into the blood and bone, turning out good American citizens by the score, or even the thousand.

Could we in Europe create a free religious milieu as appealing and compelling and turn out good Christians as America turns out good citizens, then would the minister's vocation indeed be one of zest. Could we but induce a love of clean living, clear thinking and good feeling, along with the worship of God, we should be doing society yeoman service.

The American churches have their own way of emulating the vogue of the Sunday Forum. Not a few have their own Sunday evening Social Clubs. A morning service is held much like our own; but an evening service is apparently the exception rather than the rule. Sometimes a brief afternoon service is held at 4 o'clock. During the evening a Social Club will meet in the church parlour. Proceedings open with a hymn and prayer, and are followed by an address upon some social or literary subject, attended by friendly debate. The evening winds up with the singing of a few hymns, often chosen on the spot by the singers themselves. The whole approximates to a big, friendly, democratic drawing-room meeting under religious auspices. The address is by no means always given by the minister. There is frequent interchange with men from other churches, University professors, women social workers, teachers, doctors; every one with anything to give is asked to contribute. Among the large and interesting roll of members will be many who can themselves upon occasion act as speakers for the evening.

It is not to be supposed that any one over here would want to adopt the American Sunday as it stands; but the New England customs seem on the face of things to have certain advantages. They tend to save the churches from being too much a one-man concern. Religious service is free to be more than usually devotional with a good conscience, since an open platform for debatable subjects is provided for minister and congregation alike, a platform that is nevertheless under the ægis of religious enterprise.

The method of the Social Club provides facilities for the Sunday-school scholars to graduate into the full membership of the Church community, in a society that, though it may be predominantly composed of young people, is yet open to all.

In England the minister is apt to regard any extension or innovation in Sunday observance as the last straw that may, very truly, break the camel's back. He, therefore, of all people should be willing to give considerate hearing to any suggestion that might tend to the alleviation of his burden, or lead to the re-arrangement of his pack.

Co-operation is the order of the day. Co-operation between minister and minister, and minister and congregation, would be but one more step on the common high road. We are actually, owing to the exigencies of warfare, in process of a considerable change in the hour of the evening service. Six o'clock, or even four, is no unheard-of hour. Brief evening services are the usual thing. Shall we not continue on these lines as the war comes to an end and institute our Sunday Social Clubs? These gatherings might be held, preferably not in the chapel, but in the homelier, freer atmosphere of a beautified school room, or, if we possess it, a church parlour.

Institutional work is now often at a discount. Members are too much occupied in other pursuits upon a week-night. It is more than likely that this state of affairs will outlast the war, perhaps for many years. Sunday, in short, will offer the best opportunity for religious and social life. Congregations, too, will be changed in their quality. They will include travelled, or otherwise experienced members, many of whom should be willing, may even welcome, some chance of putting their spiritual and practical wealth at the service of the community in their own and in neighbouring churches. Finally, there never was a time when men and women were so keen as they are to-day to find out what they themselves think, believe and hope for. The minister's task is changing from this very reason. His most vital service is, as always, to feed the fires of the religious life; but beyond that he is usually a man of some considerable mental training. Might he not as a fellow member of a Sunday Social Club find a great opportunity to help men and women to think clearly and tolerantly, to assist them to ground the principles they adopt in respect of practical affairs upon a religious basis? In so doing, might he not stimulate in ways more far-reaching than ever the endeavour after the religious life?

MARGARET B. CROOK.

OUR Boston contemporary, The Christian Register, which now attains its 97th year of issue, announces a change of editorship. The new editor is the Rev. Albert C. Dieffenbach, hitherto minister at Hartford, in succession to the Rev. J. T. Sunderland. He was born in Maryland, 1876, educated at the John Hopkins University, and became field missionary at Pittsburgh for the Reformed Church until 1911, when he joined the Unitarian fellowship. He has had considerable editorial experience already, and enters on his duties with the confidence of his American friends, and the good wishes of all on this side—they should be many—who know The Register and welcome its cheery, thoughtful, and generous pages.

THE honour of a Knight-Commandership of the British Empire has been conferred on Dr. R. Robertson, F.R.S., for his services to the State in connection with explosives. Lady Robertson is a daughter of the late Prof. Hugh Stannus, F.R.I.B.A., well known to our readers for his work in the Unitarian cause.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and the address of the senders.

THE BOOK ROOM IN HAVRE.
AN APPEAL.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—There has lately been opened in Havre in connection with the Y.M.C.A. a book room and literary lounge, which will be a great boon to officers and men of literary tastes, of whom there is a great number in the Army. There is the beginning of an excellent reference library of good literature which can be consulted or borrowed, and the literary papers will also be provided. To complete the scheme, in which I have been able to take some personal interest, there is great need of a supply of some of the best books as soon as they come out, such as Morley's 'Recollections,' Jacks's 'Life of Stopford Brooke,' new volumes of poetry, &c. It is difficult for people at home to understand the excitement with which things of this sort are greeted by many of our men abroad. I shall be very glad to see that the book room is supplied with books of this kind if some of the many book lovers among your readers will contribute to a small fund for this purpose. £25 to £30 would carry us along for a few months, and I shall be glad to send a report from time to time about the success of the scheme. Donations should be sent to me at 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, London, N.W.3, and, with your consent, will be duly acknowledged in your columns. —Yours, &c. W. H. DRUMMOND.

January 21, 1918.

PROHIBITION DURING THE WAR.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I was surprised to read the letter of E. F. Cowlin in your issue of the 19th, in which he reproduced a statement of Dr. Fort Newton: "When I see American boys staggering in the streets drunk I hate London. Every opportunity is offered, every trap set to debauch our [American] boys on their way to and from the front." May I ask if your contributor has verified these statements from personal knowledge, because he says "these facts speak for themselves?"

I know London very well, having lived and worked there for many years, and I am surprised at any one who knows it thoroughly "passing on" such a grotesque assertion. That there are some dark spots we know quite well, but London is as clean and as sober as any city in Europe. "White men" need have no fear of London, but the other sort—Yours, &c., W. J. CRAWFORD.

New Barnet.

January 21, 1918.

NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS.

[A short Notice in this column does not preclude a review in a later issue.]

Barrington (Joseph). RECOLLECTIONS OF; with an introduction by George Birmingham. London, T. Fisher Unwin, Ltd.; Dublin, The Talbot Press, Ltd. xx—485 pp., 3s n.

A welcome addition to "Every Irishman's Library," Barrington's 'Recollections' is a classical document for the life of the old-fashioned rollicking Irish squire. It belongs to the same world as Levers' stories and the Irish R.M. George Birmingham, with his own love of the burlesque, is in his element in the introduction.

Benson (A. C.). LIFE AND LETTERS OF MAGGIE BENSON. London, John Murray. 446 pp., 7s. 6d. n.

In these pages Mr. Benson has paid an affectionate tribute to his sister's memory. "The world suffers," he writes, "when men and women hoard and garner for themselves their knowledge of fine, distinct, beautiful characters, and when they refuse to share them. I do not want oblivion to cover up as with a cloak the courage and brightness of my sister's life and example." As in the case of his brother Hugh, Mr. Benson has drawn largely upon his own early memories, not always, it may strike some readers, with an adequate sense of the relative importance of trivial incidents to the family circle and the outside world.

Cunningham (W.). THE COMMON WEAL: Six Lectures on Political Philosophy. Cambridge, at the University Press. xiii—117 pp., 2s. 6d.

These lectures were written for the British Workers League. They deal with the fundamental problems of political society under the following heads: 'Nationality and Sovereignty,' 'Personal Monarchy and Parliamentary Government,' 'The Mechanism of Society,' 'Good and Bad Government,' 'The Sense of Citizenship,' and 'Personal Character.' Archdeacon Cunningham is a firm believer in the gradual improvement of society through the indwelling of the Christian spirit in the individual. He holds that it would be a disaster "if the influence of this personal religion should be diverted from its work of gradually regenerating mankind, by insistence on visionary ideals for society."

Drummond (Margaret). THE DAWN OF MIND: an Introduction to Child Psychology. London Edward Arnold. xi—179 pp., 3s. 6d. n.

This is a study of the development of the mind of a little child, based largely upon careful personal observation. The writer, who is Lecturer on Psychology in the Edinburgh Provincial Training College, is anxious to encourage the study of child psychology by teachers as a means of avoiding the stunted and crippled mind. "We are beginning to realise," she writes, "how much may be done during the first years of life to secure that priceless boon, a healthy, well-developed body; we shall, I believe in the near future, realise also how much in these same years may and must be done if we are to secure the equally priceless boon—a healthy, well-developed mind."

Ferguson (Sir Samuel). POEMS. With an introduction by Alfred Perceval Graves, M.A. London, T. Fisher Unwin, Ltd.; Dublin, Talbot Press, Ltd. xxxvii—403 pp., 3s. n.

It was a happy thought to include an adequate selection of the poetry of Sir Samuel Ferguson in "Every Irishman's Library." More than any other man he inspired the modern literary revival in Ireland. Here are the best of 'The Lays of the Western Gael,' 'Ballads and Poems,' and 'Lays of the Red Branch.' 'Congal,' his long epic poem, appears in a condensed form, but Mr. Graves pleads that its dramatic action is really improved by the omission of some "introductory and side excursions into the regions of history and archaeology." In addition to his introduction, based upon the memories of a long family friendship, Mr. Graves contributes a memorial sonnet.

Gwatkin (Henry Melvill). CHURCH AND STATE TO THE DEATH OF QUEEN ANNE. London, Longmans, Green & Co. vi—416 pp., 15s. n.

This volume was unfinished at the time of Prof. Gwatkin's death, but the editor, Canon Watson, has found it possible to publish the MS. substantially as he left it. The importance and originality of the work will be seen in the following words from the editor's preface: "His verdicts upon movements, given with full knowledge and in trenchant words, must speak for themselves. It is deeply to be regretted that death has deprived us of Dr. Gwatkin's delineation of the men and the events of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. It would have been impartial and philosophical, and would have inculcated the lesson, never more needed than by our own generation, that progress is divinely ordered to come through change, and that in the life of a national Church no plan can be found."

Jacks (L. P.). THE COUNTRY AIR; ALL MEN ARE GHOSTS; AMONG THE IDOLMAKERS. London, Williams & Norgate. 233, 254, and 237 pp., 2s. 6d. n. each.

These are three new volumes in the welcome popular edition of Dr. Jacks' Stories and Sketches. Two of them have appeared already, but the contents of 'The Country Air' are published in this collected form for the first time. Many readers will recognise 'Father Perryman' and 'Mary' and be glad that they have been rescued from the dim world of back numbers. 'A Gravedigger Scene' appeared originally in our own columns.

Lind-af-Hageby (L.). MOUNTAIN MEDITATIONS AND SOME SUBJECTS OF THE DAY AND OF THE WAR. London, George Allen & Unwin, Ltd. 217 pp., 4s. 6d. n.

This book takes its title from the first essay on 'Mountain-Tops,' in which Miss Lind-af-Hageby writes of her delight in mountain scenery and shows a happy acquaintance with books about the Alps. In this feeling for the mountains she finds a symbol of the climbing mind. Her other subjects are 'The Borderland' (dealing with psychical problems), 'Reformers,' 'Nationality and Religion in Transition.'

Macnutt (F. B.), ed. THE CHURCH IN THE FURNACE: essays by Seventeen Temporary Church of England Chaplains on active service in France and Flanders. London, Macmillan & Co. xxi—454 pp., 5s. n.

A series of essays written by men who have been in close contact with the realities of war, arranged under various headings, such as 'Faith,' 'Fellowship,' 'Worship,' and 'Education.' The point of view is that of the Church of England, in a few cases rigidly so, but the wider issues of religion as they affect all Christian men are not lost sight of. We may call special attention to the two essays dealing with the 'Training of the Clergy.' It is the discovery of the inadequacy of their own professional equipment and tradition to meet the religious needs of the common man which has filled many of these chaplains with disquiet of spirit and made them eager for reform.

Newbolt (Henry). A NEW STUDY OF ENGLISH POETRY. London, Constable & Co. vi—306 pp., 10s. 6d. n.

This volume consists of twelve essays dealing with such important themes as 'What is Poetry?' 'Poetry and Rhythm,' 'Futurism and Form in Poetry,' 'Poetry and Education,' and 'The Poet and his Audience.' Chaucer and Milton are the two poets selected for special treatment.

Russell (George W. E.). BASIL WILBERFORCE, ARCHDEACON OF WESTMINSTER: A Memoir. London, John Murray. 177 pp., 8s. n.

An attractive sketch of the life of Archdeacon Wilberforce, written with Mr. G. W. E. Russell's familiar lightness of touch. The author has shown good judgment in not attempting too much. Wilberforce owed his success to the sensitiveness of his mind to new impressions and his native gift of eloquence rather than to any vein of originality. He attracted men and women by his charm and his unfailing sympathy, and it is these qualities which live in Mr. Russell's pages. There is an excellent portrait.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium. (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais. (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

157TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	19,707	5	9
Mrs. Adlington (2nd)	2	0
Mrs. Lewis (7th)	1	0
Miss Swaine (33rd)	2	0
H. J. (7th)	2	0
Mrs. Bryan Johnson (7th)	2	0
Miss E. M. Greg (4th)	5	0
Mr. F. Maddison (34th)	0	10
Miss Annie Garrett (13th)	2	0
Miss A. Freeman (4th)	2	0
Mrs. Wm. Tangye (23rd)	10	0
Colonel Locke Blake (9th)	10	0
Mr. Hyndford Rawlins (9th)	0	10
Miss Rawson (15th)	2	2
Miss Isaacs (5th)	2	2
The Millers of Kent, collected by Mr. C. W. Chitty (3rd) ..	166	13	4

	£	s.	d.
All Souls' Church, Belfast, per the Rev. E. H. Pickering (19th)	1	16	0
"Denis"	0	2	6
	£19,919	1	7

*Parcels have been received from:—*Mrs. Woolley; Mrs. Beard; Mrs. Woodhouse; Mrs. Murray Macdonald; Mrs. Freeston; Miss Suttill; Miss Phipson; Miss E. C. Harvey; Miss Eleanor F. Garrett; Mrs. Babington; Mrs. Frank Hopps; Mrs. Sydney Martineau; the Misses Suttill; Gifts from Oakfield Road Sale of Work, Clifton, per Mrs. Long; Mrs. Wigley; Mount Pleasant Working Party, Sidmouth, per Miss Barmby; Mrs. Newton; Miss Baumann; Mrs. S. Wilson; Mrs. Crookshank; Anon. (Liverpool); Miss A. Smith; Mrs. M. R. Green; Miss Swaine; Miss Gertrude Martineau; the Misses Pearse; Miss Mary E. Dalby; Mrs. Smith; Mrs. Bartram; the Misses Wetherman; Ladies Sewing Circle, Brixton Branch, Effra Road, per Mrs. Stevens; Miss Colfax; Miss Harcourt; the Rosslyn Depot, per the Mayoress of Hampstead; Mrs. Oliver; Anonymous; Mr. Ronald P. Jones; Mrs. F. Perrot; Miss M. T. Worsley; Mrs. Bryan Johnson; Mrs. and Miss Carter; Women's League, Fitzwilliam Street Unitarian Church, Huddersfield, per Mrs. C. Brooke; Clapham Ladies War Relief Committee; Stoke Newington War Hospital Supply Depot; Mrs. Forrester; Mrs. Cliff; Mrs. Helsly; Mrs. Buckton; Anonymous (Liverpool); Miss Rose Morris.

WEEKLY NOTES.

I HAVE just received the report of the "Rose Allen" hospital for children near Yvetôt for last year. One hundred and twelve children have been received during the year. The majority of the cases have been diptheria, occurring in children just brought down from the Front, but there have been a number of other childish complaints treated also, and several accidents and cases of general debility. There have been three deaths, one from diptheria and two from bronchopneumonia. The children are kept there for their convalescence, and as there is a big field (with cows in it) attached to the house, they have a very good time in summer. The French local doctor is in constant attendance and takes the greatest interest in all the children. The sister-in-charge writes enthusiastically of all the arrangements, and says they are very happy there.

Letters from Chambéry continue to arrive. I have now been able to supply each man with a hot-water bottle, and there are mufflers and mittens for all. The men write most gratefully and some of their letters are very quaintly expressed. I have not yet sent enough bedsocks, but they are coming in daily and are despatched as they arrive.

Mr. C. W. Chitty of Dover has again made a collection among the millers of Kent for the Belgian Hospital Fund, and has sent a cheque for £166 13s. 4d. This is the third year he has done so.

ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Men's dressing-gowns.
Bedsocks, mufflers, mittens.
Pyjamas, shirts, socks, and all sorts of men's underclothing.
Slippers, cardigans.
Clothing for women and children, especially stockings.
Games, jig-saw puzzles.
Calico bags, 2 ft. by 3 ft., and any smaller size.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THE SPIRIT OF THE TRAINING CAMPS IN AMERICA.

DR. SAMUEL ELIOT, the President of the American Unitarian Association, has written a cheering account in The Christian Register of the training camps where the young men of his country are preparing for the part they must play in the great European conflict. He has had exceptional opportunities for getting into closer relations with them in the Officers' Training Camps, at certain of the Camps of the National Army, and at two or three of the Naval Stations and schools, and, as he said in a letter which we have already quoted, his own house at Cambridge "swarms with these splendid boys." In addition to this he receives the reports of the thirty or more volunteer chaplains appointed by the War Work Council of the Unitarian Churches, of which he is chairman, and he is, accordingly, in touch, more or less, with nearly all the Camps. "Physically," Dr. Eliot says, "the Camps have done wonders for these young men. With two or three exceptions the health record is above normal. One is impressed with the visible improvement from week to week in the set-up, bearing, and bodily vigour of the men. The too characteristic American slouch has disappeared. Mentally, too, there is a focussing of attention and a serious purpose to learn this new trade quickly and effectively, which means real intellectual quickening to many a sluggish youth."

"The tone of the Camps is generally wholesome. There is neither excitement nor depression. The average man stands the test of these unusual and undesired experiences remarkably well. Sound character, good personal habits, comradeship, loyalty, and public spirit are all not so much developed as disclosed. There is respect for law, a willingness to submit to necessary discipline, and a sense of sober responsibility. There is some natural growling over preventible blunders, but little resentment or evasion of duty. Our officers and men are carrying into this novel business of soldiering a commendable energy and thoroughness. They are braced up to a high standard of proficiency by the seriousness of their task and by the knowledge that failure to attain adequate training may involve disaster and death. There is, therefore, very little tendency to rebel against the drudgery of drill or to hold one's self above the sordid details of camp life. The men recognise that safety and success depend upon knowledge, discipline, and skill. At the same time, the Yankee has not lost his native versatility, resourcefulness, and practical capacity. These young men are still primarily mechanics, farmers, teachers, mill operatives, clerks, or whatever their occupation was before they enlisted or passed the examination of the exemption boards. Soldiering is their present duty but not their real business in life. They have not become cogs in a machine."

"There is no evidence as yet of any development of an undue militaristic spirit. There are a few young men who have a real zest for this new work and who seem to regard war in the light of a peculiarly exciting game. There are also a few men who want to have a part in punishing the enemy, but without exception these are men who have been in France since the war began and who have seen with their own eyes something of the atrocities that have marked the German occupation and spoliation. The vast majority of our soldiers and sailors are, however, men who are just doing their plain duty without any liking for it, without any revengeful or destructive spirit, and whose chief desire is to get over with it as soon as possible and go back to their normal jobs and careers. "The perils that beset the camp life have been amply emphasised in the drives for the Red Triangle work and for the various agencies of community service. My observation is that the life of the camps and neighbouring zones is essentially clean. The dangers are those of the cities to which the young men go on 'shore leave' or on the Saturdays and Sundays when they are off duty. Even there conditions are much better than we have had reason to fear. The local police authorities are alert and public sentiment aroused."

After alluding to certain "minor and preventible pests," including a certain type of religious demagogue who uses the most lurid language in trying to "save the souls" of the boys before they cross the seas, Dr. Eliot continues:—

"Of the military preparations I am not well qualified to speak, but one cannot but take satisfaction in the quiet, steady, competent way in which army and navy are being mobilised and equipped. We are still too far from the realisation of a genuinely democratic military system, for our traditions in these matters are still German and English rather than French and Swiss. But many of our young officers understand what needs to be done, and the French officers who are helping in the training of our men are persuasive teachers. I am convinced that in our military organisation we should seek to combine American idealism with German efficiency. The enthusiasm, the initiative, the disregard of embarrassing precedents, the capacity to cut across lots, which characterise the Americans, must be united with the discipline and steady effectiveness that we associate with the German foe. That combination of qualities is not an impossible achievement, and we must attain to it if we are to succeed, not only in the conflicts of arms and of industrial efficiency, but also in our endeavours for the supremacy of the political and spiritual ideals to which we have dedicated the lives of our noblest youths."

SUNWARD!

Sunward marching toward the Light,
Hills behind us, hills before,
Soon will fall the shades of night,
Soon our wander-days are o'er.

When the last hill-top we scale,
When the westering sun has set,
Blurred and lost the winding trail,
Drawn night's shrouding coverlet:

Is the world's light blotted out?
Is all dark o'er land and sea?
Then I heard an angel shout—
God's own dawn is yet to be!

H. H. JOHNSON.

FOR one reason or another, the Government have declined to issue "Premium Bonds." The financiers say there would be little or nothing to gain by offering this type of inducement to investors, and those of us who object to all gambling—even at bazaars—are well satisfied to be relieved of the prospect of this particular lapse into shady methods. Others, who "see no harm in a little speculation" now and again, will still have the chance of backing horses for which the Government politically allow a supply of oats even amid the present food difficulties.

OUR FALLEN COMRADES.

IN MEMORIAM.

THE lengthening list of names of men connected with Unitarian churches who have fallen during the war, which has been compiled at Essex Hall from press notices, Church magazines, and private communications, led the Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association a few weeks ago to ask for full information from the churches and schools for its 'In Memoriam.' A number of replies have been received, and unfortunately they reveal a high percentage of deaths among those who belonged to our household of faith. Out of 84 churches and schools from which the lists have come only 8 have so far suffered no loss. Forty-five have to mourn the deaths of less than 5 men; and in 17 instances the losses are between 5 and 10. Sheffield (Upper Chapel), Bury, Chesham, Stockport, Bootle, Stoke Newington, Mansfield, Gee Cross, and Newchurch report losses varying from 10 to 20; while Bury (Bank Street), Todmorden, Nottingham (High Pavement), and Birmingham (Church of the Messiah) range from 20 to 30. The total is over 440. The names are those of sailors in the Royal Navy; men in the merchant service whose ships were mined or submarined; soldiers killed in action, dying of wounds in hospitals, or from sickness in camps at home or abroad; and nurses who have been killed or have died of sickness. From many homes two sons have been lost; the Bury report mentions two boys of the school who were killed by the same shell; and three of our men went down with the Hampshire, Lord Kitchener's ship. The lists also add the names of many missing men, some of whom have not been heard of for more than a year; and there are, in addition, the names of many prisoners of war.

The Committee of the Association interpreting the desire that our community should in some way express its profound sense of the loss "of those whose companionship in former years made the happiness of the family circle," and whose places are now vacant, recently prepared a message of sympathy for the near relatives of those who have died. The message was signed by Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter, President of the Association, and Mrs. Sydney Martineau, Chairman of Lawrence House, and it has already been forwarded to many of the bereaved families. The message recognises that "we are all losers when a life full of vigour and promise, such as can be ill-spared from our churches, or by the country, is suddenly cut off. Yet," it adds, "we may also share something of your pride that husband or son or brother should have gone out from among us, inspired by the same faith, and ready to give their lives for the great cause of Right and Liberty." With the message is issued a bound copy of the Rev. W. G. Tarrant's book, 'For Those Who Mourn,' and there is an inscription to the relatives from the President and Committee of the Association, "in grateful remembrance of those who have died for Freedom and Right. May that great cause be securely established by the achievement of an enduring peace; and in your grievous loss may comfort and hope arise for you out of a new and better order of the world."

It is requested that ministers, superintendents, and officials who have not yet sent in their lists will kindly forward information from their own churches and schools to the Secretary of the Association at Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., as soon as possible.

T. P. S.

THE RECOGNITION OF DR. FORT NEWTON.

THE public meeting for the recognition of Dr. Fort Newton was held on Thursday evening, January 17, at the City Temple, which was filled with a large and representative gathering. The proceedings, from the moment when the Chairman (Dr. Clifford) and those who were to speak took their places on the platform, amid prolonged applause, were characterised by an enthusiasm which had a large element of patriotic emotion in it, and the International Anthem, combining 'God Save the King' with 'My Country, 'tis of Thee,' was sung with much spirit. The Rev. R. J. Campbell, who had a specially warm welcome; Capt. Blades (one of the City Sheriffs representing the Lord Mayor, who was unable to be present), Canon Adderley, the Rev. Thomas Yates (Chairman of the London Congregational Union), Mr. William Ward (of the National Brotherhood Movement), and Miss Maude Royden (Dr. Fort Newton's assistant and colleague at the City Temple), addressed the meeting, and one and all dwelt upon the great opportunities which the war has created for a revitalisation of the Christian spirit, and a breaking down of the barriers which have too long sundered those who differed from each other in ways that are now found to be unreal and a hindrance to the forward movement of humanity. The historic importance of the occasion, also, emphasising as it did the significance of the new alliance between the people of America and Great Britain, was dwelt upon in a most cordial spirit, and Dr. Clifford made a special point of it in his stirring opening address. "The Pilgrim Fathers came back again to Europe last year," he said, "and we look to Dr. Fort Newton's ministry in this country as one more sign of the solidarity of the Anglo-Saxon race never to be broken so long as the sun and stars exist."

It was a matter of keen regret to all present that Dr. Hensley Henson, the Bishop-Elect of Hereford, was prevented, together with the American Ambassador and many other well-known public men, from attending the meeting. In the course of a letter pleading "unexpected and peremptory" engagements upon which he had not reckoned, Dr. Henson expressed his cordial goodwill, and claimed the right, on many grounds, to join in the public good wishes which Dr. Fort Newton was receiving. "He is," he concluded, "a minister of Christ, pledged as I am to the highest and most difficult of all human tasks. Never surely did mankind need more evidently the service of true and courageous men of God, men who will neither fear the frowns of society nor seek its favours, but give themselves fully and frankly to their Master's work. If I might venture to offer Dr. Fort Newton a motto for his ministry, I would do so in the old Latin adage—Manus ad clavum; oculus ad coelum. 'The hand on the helm; the eye on the pilot-star.' It is the formula of self-respecting and rightly directed work."

In the course of his reply Dr. Fort Newton said he regarded himself as an ambassador to England representing the Christian Churches of America, who had sent a message that they were setting apart the week beginning with that very day for the purpose of asking all Christian people to pray for the reunion of the Christian Churches. Of that reunion the gathering he was addressing was at once an example, a symbol, and a prophecy, for the fulfilment of which they must pray with their words, but also, and much more, with their deeds. It was customary, on such occasions, he believed, for a minister to make a confession of his faith and beliefs for the benefit of those who might doubt his soundness. Of course, if such a thing were required, he would not do it, but as there was no such requirement, he would have been happy to do so in all frankness. Fortunately, however, the new ministry had gone far enough along the way to reveal the fact that it was concerned chiefly, not with the things that divided men and Churches, but with those greater things which united them. Its emphasis was placed upon those truths which underlie all sects, those ideas and hopes which overarch all creeds, in behalf of that catholicity that is in Christ and that brotherly love and fellowship without which the most perfect theology was as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. Its emphasis was further laid upon Christian truth in its experimental and practical aspects, on its uses in the service of life, both as a personal fellowship with things immortal and a social expression leading to a purer and juster social order, a more prophetic national life, and a Christian international spirit and policy. Never again could we think in terms of one nation alone, or of one Church alone, but in terms of one humanity and one Christianity. In conclusion, Dr. Fort Newton referred once more to the ties of sympathy between America and Great Britain. "If these two people," he said, "having one blood, one language, one religion, and one ideal of civilisation cannot be cemented in a lasting friendship, it is idle to talk of a League of Nations after the war."

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Aberdeen.—The Rev. Henry Dawtrey, who in 1912 succeeded the Rev. Dr. Walsh as minister to the Free Religious Movement in Dundee, has accepted an invitation to the church here, and will enter on his new duties on March 1st.

Dundee.—After a period of 5 years, during which he has been the leader of the Free Religious Movement in Dundee, the Rev. H. Dawtrey has resigned his ministry there, having accepted a unanimous invitation to the Aberdeen Unitarian Church. His resignation, which takes effect at the end of February, has been received by the congregation with great regret.

Hale.—The Rev. Joseph Wain, the newly-appointed minister of Hale Chapel, conducted the services for the first time on Sunday, January 6. A report of the meeting to welcome him, which was held on January 11, will appear in our next issue.

Huddersfield.—In proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. Thomas Smailes, the speaker at the Fitzwilliam Street Social Union on Wednesday, January 16, when a series of slides illustrating the works of British artists during the nineteenth century was shown, the Rev. R. A. Dickson said there was no doubt that the love of beauty was capable of refining the taste of the individual, and, through the individual, of the community at large in such a way that the unnecessary and wasteful uglinesses and abominations of our industrial system would no longer be tolerated. It was futile to contend that the love of beauty did not minister to man's material necessities and conveniences, or that it had no economic value. The smoke nuisance was a case in point. It had been estimated by one of the most eminent living engineers that the elimination of the smoke nuisance in an average sized industrial town would effect a saving equal to a 6s. in the £1 rate in the cost of household and municipal cleanliness, and the entailed wear and tear of goods and property. The abolition of smoking chimneys, therefore, would enable us to minister to our love of beauty, enrich our pockets, minimise our labour, beautify our homes, purify our air, and lengthen our days.

Kilburn.—A sale of work was held in connection with the Unitarian Church, Quex Road, in Unity Hall, on December 6, for the purpose of reducing the financial deficit. Mr. G. H. Edwards opened the proceedings, which included a musical and dramatic entertainment largely contributed by Mr. Alan Forbes and his friends. Mr. R. Pain provided a St. Dunstan's stall and the successful results achieved were largely due to the energy of the Misses Poole and Yerbury. £53 was realised in addition to donations amounting to £30.

Manchester.—The Rev. H. C. Horsley received a public welcome to the ministry of the Moss Side Unitarian Church on January 4. The Recognition Service which preceded the meeting was conducted by the Rev. Henry Gow, and the sermon was preached by Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter, his subject being 'The Church and the Ministry in War-Time and After.' Several ministers of other denominations were amongst the congregation, and letters of apology for inability to be present had been received from others representing the Congregationalists, Primitive Methodists, Wesleyans and Swedenborgians. Short addresses of welcome, &c., were delivered at the meeting by the Revs. H. Gow, C. Roper, T. P. Spedding, Morley Mills, and J. McDowell, Mr. G. G. Armstrong, and the Rev. F. Y. Leggatt, minister of the neighbouring Congregational Church. The remarks of the latter concerning Unitarian thinkers and writers of past and present times, and his kindly expression of good will towards the Church, were much appreciated. The Rev. H. C. Horsley suitably responded to the hearty welcome which he had received.

Pudsey.—The settlement of the Rev. R. Newell a year ago as minister of the Unitarian Church was celebrated by a Minister's Anniversary on the 13th inst. and a Week's Mission during the following week. "Our Message" was the opening topic of the minister on Sunday morning, January 13, when he dealt with the rise and development of Nonconformity, following upon the stand for religious freedom by the ejected 2,000 in 1662, confirmed and extended by the Open Trust Deed and the attitude of the open mind so eminently characteristic of the Unitarian and other liberal religious bodies which arose out of the Free Religious Movement. The evening subject, "The Lamp of Power," was an adaptation of one of Ruskin's "Seven Lamps of Architecture" to religion. Thus the idea of power in religion came to be the topic for the week, which was expressed in various ways by the Rev. A. Cobden Smith in the "Will to Power" on Monday, "The Power of God Unto Salvation" by the Rev. J. Morley Mills on Tuesday, on Wednesday by the Rev. R. Newell "The Power of God in Service," and on Thursday by the Rev. H. Bodell Smith, "The Greatest Power in the World (Religion)." The weather conditions were exceptionally severe all the week and kept many people away, but notwithstanding the attendance was as good as could reasonably be expected, and full use was made of the local press to reach the larger audience outside.

Sidmouth.—The death occurred on the 16th inst., at Sidmouth, of Miss Elizabeth A. Harris, a daughter of the late Rev. George Harris, who rendered signal service to our churches. About thirty years ago Miss Harris settled at Sidmouth, and during her long residence there closely identified herself with the congregation worshipping at the Old Meeting. She was a member of the Chapel Committee, the Treasurer of the Benevolent Fund, and an official of the Sewing Circle. A regular attendant at public worship, she was known to all, and had won the love and regard of every member of the congregation. She was connected by family ties with many of the most active and generous Unitarian families in the North, and kept in close touch with the representatives of honoured names in her father's various congregations. She had, indeed, a wide circle of devoted friends. The war, however, brought her much anxiety for the younger members of that circle, in whom she was deeply interested. Gentle, transparently sincere, resolute in her integrity, as became a lineal descendant of Oliver Cromwell, unobtrusive above all, and good, she was the embodiment of the finest traditions of the children of the Manse. She was a friend to the stranger within the gates, and many a visitor to the Old Meeting will recall her kindly interest and gracious hospitality. The end came without pain, and was in striking harmony with the gentle spirit of her life.

Southern Unitarian Association.—A special course of Sunday evening addresses on "Religion and National Reconstruction" will be given under the auspices of the Southern Unitarian Association in the churches of the District on the following dates: February 3, 'The Responsibility of Those who Survive'; February 10, 'Home Life: Housing, Health'; February 17, 'Educational Reform'; February 24, 'Industrial Co-operation'; March 3, 'Citizenship'; March 10, 'Religion and Social Reform.' The addresses will be given at the following churches: Bournemouth, West Hill Road; Newport, High Street; Parkstone, Emerson Hall, Hermitage Road; Poole, Hill Street; Portsmouth, High Street; Ringwood, Meeting House Lane; Southampton, Church of the Saviour, London Road; and Wareham, South Street, by the ministers of the District, each in his own pulpit, and are intended to mark the vital importance of these questions of National Reconstruction.

BIRTH.

SUTTILL.—On January 2, at Inglefield, Potter's Bar, to Daisy, the wife of Assistant-Paymaster R. Suttill, R.N.R., a son.

MARRIAGE.

BOND—BROOMHEAD.—At Elder Yard Chapel, Chesterfield, on January 16, Capt. Kenneth Hills Bond, M.C., Sherwood Foresters, eldest son of the Rev. Kenneth and Mrs. Bond, was married to Miss Ethel Mary Broomhead, only daughter of Mr. Charles George Broomhead, Borough Accountant, and Mrs. Broomhead, of Chesterfield.

DEATHS.

CLARKE.—On January 18, at Leicester, Phoebe Mary, widow of the late John Chatfeild Clarke, of Newport, Isle of Wight, aged 76 years.

CROMPTON.—Killed in action in France on October 1, 1917, John Jennings Crompton, Private in N.Z. Imperial Infantry Forces, eldest son of the late Jardine Crompton of N.Z., and a great grandson of John William Crompton, formerly of Maple Bank, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

HARRIS.—On January 16, at Southcroft, Sidmouth, Elizabeth Agnes, the third and last surviving daughter of the late Rev. George Harris of Newcastle-on-Tyne, aged 84.

TAYLER.—On the 22nd inst., at Southport, Constantia Elizabeth Tayler, of 163 High Street, Oxford Road, Manchester, surviving daughter of the late William Venning Tayler, of Manchester, in her 74th year. Funeral will take place at the Southern Cemetery, Manchester, on Saturday next, at 12 noon.

WRIGHT.—On January 19, Eleanor, widow of William Wright of Leicester, in her 87th year.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, January 27.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. A. GOLLAND, M.A.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. T. MUNN.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 5.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. A. J. HOWARD HULME; 5.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Miss ACKROYD; 6.30, Mr. JOHN BEGG.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11, Mr. R. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Mr. JOHN BEGG; 6.30, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
 South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. G. W. GALE.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL; 6.30, Mr. JOSEPH P. ROSLING.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. VALENTINE D. DAVIS, B.A.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.
 ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. FRED HALL.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
 BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. Dr. C. HARGROVE.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.
 CLETON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. H. E. HAYCOCK.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.15, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.
 HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. THOS. PAXTON.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mrs. F. SPENCER YATES; 6.30, Rev. J. E. JENKINS.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOHN MOORE.
 MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.
 NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas St., 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.
 WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

January

27. Rev. VALENTINE D. DAVIS, B.A., of Bournemouth.

February

3. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.
10. Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.
17. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A., Devotional Service only, without sermon, after which a Meeting of the Congregation will be held.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY,

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,
Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON.

FOUR PUBLIC ADDRESSES on RELIGION

Will be given on THURSDAYS, at 5 p.m., at the above College, on Feb. 7. By The Right Rev. JAMES COOPER, D.D., Regius Professor of Church History in the University of Glasgow: Moderator of the Church of Scotland.

Chairman. The Right Rev. The BISHOP of SOUTHWARK.

Feb. 14. By The Rev. E. W. BARNES, D. Sc., F.R.S., Master of the Temple.

Chairman. The Right Rev. and Right Hon. The BISHOP of LONDON.

Feb. 21. By The Rev. D. S. CAIRNS, D.D., United Free College, Aberdeen.

Chairman. The Right Rev. The BISHOP of STEPNEY.

Feb. 28. By The Rev. W. H. FRERE, D.D., Superior of the Community of the Resurrection.

Chairman. The DEAN of KING'S COLLEGE.

Admission Free.

FALL OF JERUSALEM.

NEW LECTURE NOW READY.

For dates and conditions write: THE HON. SEC., S.S.A., Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I. H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss C. GRADWELL. H. J. VEZEY.

S. WHITE, LL.D.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Pulpit Vacant.

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, Narborough Road, Leicester. — PULPIT VACANT. Applications invited. — J. C. BURTON, Cuthbert Leye, Oadby Hill, Leicester.

Situations, Vacant and Wanted.

LADY HELP WANTED (London) for Two Ladies, one engaged during day. — F. E., INQUIRER, 13 Breams Buildings, E.C.4.

WANTED in FEBRUARY, a superior MOTHER'S HELP for Four Children, ages 9, 6½, 5, and 4 years, eldest attending Day School. Good walker and needlewoman essential. — Apply Mrs. ARTHUR READ, 25 Woburn Square, London, W.C.1.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD. — "HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking. — Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON. — Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED HALF HOUSE TO LET. No children taken. Suit two ladies or gentleman and wife. Other occupant, one lady. Attendance by arrangement. — Address M., 20 Alytt's Gardens, Golders Green, N.W.

SOUTH DEVON. — Pleasant APARTMENTS overlooking hills, near station, post, shops. Terms moderate. — B. BURGESS, 1 Hill View Terrace, Sidmouth.

CITY GENTLEMAN seeks quiet HOME. Partial board. References exchanged. — T., 8 Romilly Road, N.4.

Miscellaneous.

IRISH LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, with shamrock, damask, hemstitched ends, 22 x 40 inches, good reliable quality, four for 8s. 6d., postage 6d. Send for Bargain List, free. — HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

OLD FALSE TEETH wanted for their precious metals; now worth up to £12 per set; any condition; surplus jewellery; broken jewellery from £2 to £5 per ounce given. We give the highest possible value; before remitting we make offers by return. If not accepted goods returned post free. — I. RAYBURN & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT. — Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 20s. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

* * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.; PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken. Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2; INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines; extra lines 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Atheneum Press 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate, — Saturday, January 26, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3944.
NEW SERIES, No. 1047.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	33
LABOUR, WAR, AND LIBERTY	34
BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—
The Aims of Education	35
WHAT CAN WE GIVE YOU?	36
NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS	36

AN INTERNATIONAL PARLIAMENT	36
UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE	37
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Prohibition During the War	37
BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	37
THE BOOK ROOM IN HAVRE	37

MEMORIAL NOTICE: Berkley, California	38
The Rev. George Critchley	38
THE THEISTIC CHURCH	38
SHEFFIELD DISTRICT	38
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	38

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

ON another page we draw attention to the past and present of the Theistic Church, London, so long identified with its founder, the late Rev. Charles Voysey. It will be seen that with the beginning of this month, the Rev. J. Tyssul Davis, whose name is familiar to readers of this journal, will enter on the ministry of the church. He is an alumnus of Carmarthen and Manchester Colleges, and has been a Unitarian minister since 1894. An important educational post among the Ceylon natives for a short period has varied his experiences from the ordinary routine, and has doubtless added to the originality recognised by all who have read his articles. We trust that his valorous endeavour to build upon the foundation now opened to him will prove abundantly fruitful in strengthening the resources of religious freedom and progress in the metropolis.

* * *

THE "New Americans" department is a notable feature of the work of the American Unitarian Association. It has long tried to help immigrants from Europe in the matter of new religious life in their new home; hitherto its chief efforts have been among the Scandinavians in the far north-west of the States. An interesting novelty is the formation of an Italian Unitarian Church in Boston itself, which resulted from a course of evening services conducted for several months in the ancient King's Chapel, by the Rev. Filoteo A. Tagliabue. The effort is none too soon, if a city long familiar in advanced religious thought is not to be wholly surrendered to the Roman Catholicism of its Southern European elements. The fact is, we believe, that these elements now form a predominant factor in old Boston. Now, would it not be possible to seek out an Italian reformer, imbued with the spirit of Mazzini, who might similarly help the Italians in London? There are certainly thousands of them, and some, surely, are ripe for the word.

* * *

THE Joint Committee of the East Cheshire Christian Union, the Manchester District Association, and the North and East Lancashire Mission, have issued a stirring and thoughtful appeal on 'The New Situation: How to Meet it,' in connection with their "United Mission" to the congregations now proceeding. Pointing out the more definite demand made in our time for a teaching of religion that shall be fitted to meet the deeply felt needs of men, they emphasise the urgency of the duty laid upon all who "believe that the same grand truths that have been the stay and the inspiration of uncounted generations are the need of to-day."

* * *

The appeal continues with these weighty words: "It will not do, merely to present our Faith in a 'take it or leave it' manner, to minds whose tenderest feelings and convictions have been torn and harrowed up by the late awful occurrences. Our teaching and our worship will have to acquire a more solicitous regard for the strangely bewildered state of many, and a fuller, more confident note, as well as a more buoyant and cheerful welcome for the new optimism of faith which we pray may grow out of the present chaos." Such is the keynote of a really valuable four-page leaflet, and we could wish ministers and secretaries throughout the land might have copies and meditate them. Regular daily devotion in private, and "the vitalising of the sadly deteriorated Art of Combined Worship," are counselled, in conclusion, as a means of preparation for the great, and indeed supreme, task of helping truly in a revival of the spiritual life of the nation.

THERE cannot be any need to direct attention to the speeches just delivered by Counts Hertling and Czernin; they have been scrutinized and discussed on every hand. The question has especially been raised whether they were designedly different in tone or not. Count Czernin's intention, at any rate, seems to have meant a "practical" "peace" advance towards President Wilson, who, however, has denied receiving a copy of the speech before delivery. But, whatever this intention imports on behalf of Austria, the lines maintained in the German Chancellor's address appear, no less certainly, to face away from any possibly acceptable basis for peace. In America, where war weariness is as yet unknown, the tendency is distinctly to discount all present suggestion of negotiation, and to push on unrelentingly the preparations for reinforcing the strength of the Allies till it shall prove overwhelming.

* * *

READERS who may wish to keep by them a handy record of the official and representative utterances made on behalf of the belligerent (and neutral) nations, during the last eighteen months especially, and currently, may be glad to be referred to Goodwill, the bi-monthly journal of the British Council for promoting International Friendship through the Churches. The January issue, now to hand, contains over 70 large pages of such records; it may be had on application to the Secretary, 41, Parliament Street, S.W.1.

* * *

Two books of reminiscences are announced as to be issued this year, in each of which our readers, or some of them at least, will be highly interested. Former students at Manchester New College, as it was styled when domiciled at University Hall, London, will recall the stimulating lectures in psychology and philosophy given at University College by Prof. Jas. Sully, Grote Professor. Among his many psychological studies are some dealing specially with the child mind and its development; some irreverent students, we remember, declared their belief that the learned philosopher was in the way of experimenting on his own tender offspring a little ruthlessly, in the pursuit of childhood's secrets. His circle of friends has included George Eliot, Meredith, Kinglake, Leslie Stephen, Darwin, Spencer, and other great Victorians. His 'Life and Friends: Psychological Memories' will be an attractive book to read.

* * *

THE other autobiographical volume is to come from Mrs. Humphry Ward, and will be entitled 'A Writer's Recollections.' Although Mrs. Ward's backward glance does not cover so long a span as Prof. Sully's, it is now quite sufficiently extensive to afford much worthy of preservation from oblivion. What an age it seems since 'Robert Elsmere' took the world by storm! Its author has had the satisfaction of realising her dreams, or some of them, in her settlement (the Passmore Edwards), and her novels show that, while prolific (dare we say) in fiction for the market in two Continents, she has never forsaken the task of delineating social conditions in a way that calls for serious thought. It is, fortunately, not yet necessary or appropriate to attempt the summing up of her influence on her generation; how far her 'Recollections' will differ from the harvest of mere anecdote, can best be judged in view of her recent valuable contributions to the literature of the war—'England's Effort' and 'Towards the Goal.' Her new book may be expected in the autumn.

* * *

MUCH that is offered as evidence in the matter of temperance reform is singularly questioned on one side and the other; but as the subject of Canadian policy on the subject of alcoholic drink is to the fore at present we may cite some testimony as to Toronto's experience, which seems remarkably weighty. Toronto has now had over a year's experience of the results of Prohibition, and the opinions of the members of the Board of Trade for the province have been sought as to these results. Nearly 400 members replied: 366 declared the law a success; 15 were non-committal; 13 were unfavourable. These figures are surely a sufficient proof that in the great Dominion, at any rate, the policy pays; and one cannot be surprised that eight provinces have adopted it.

* * *

WE drew attention recently to the very serious perils of our elementary school work just now. Another aspect of the question is illustrated by the following typical incident. A boy, recently reaching the earliest day when he might leave school, promptly left. That is what in these times is only natural, no doubt. But, not being at all a bright boy, he was at once as warehouse lad able to command a wage of 18s. a week; indeed, the amount was raised to 21s. before the first week was out. Consider the economical effect of such things on the industrial world generally, and the personal effect on such lads in particular. There will, indeed, be need for vast efforts to get things better ordered "after the war."

LABOUR, WAR, AND LIBERTY.

If any people in the world want peace, and want it soon, and want it intensely, it is inevitably they on whom the war presses most severely. They are the people who at all times find it a difficult matter to make ends meet, and who now suffer most amid the general worries and deprivations arising from scarcity of food. Other conditions they share more or less equally with the rest of the community. All classes are mourners, all have lonely hearths, all go daily under the load of anxiety for their men in the forces, all share in risks from raids or worse. But the slenderer purse that always means risk of want, means something perilously near to actual tragedy at these times. It is true that a good many workers are now handling more money than usual, some of them much more money, but the nominal increase of earnings mocks at the actual value in purchasing power. The experience of wives and mothers in these days of queues comes as a startling climax to a long-growing sense of domestic trouble, none the less aching for being kept so long inarticulate. One can now hear ominous expressions in public, in the cars, in the streets, around the empty shops. We hope, we believe, that the British temperament of cheery self-control is capable of getting us through without such explosions as are being witnessed in some of the belligerent—and non-belligerent—countries of Europe. But we must not deceive ourselves as to the facts. Behind the recent and current Labour manifestoes, discussions, and movements, rises this massive fact of widespread disquietude, to give it no stronger name. Debates, such as those of last week's Nottingham Conference, as well as those that have taken place and are still taking place between Government representatives and the leaders of the various Labour organisations, depend for their practical issues upon much more than the logic of the case. Even in high places, where the intellect has had a chance of cultivation, this is evidently just as true; else how account for the different receptions given to the speeches of politicians and statesmen who are now so much before the world audience?

If we thus deliberately attempt to recognise in full the deep popular feelings to which we refer—we would not exaggerate them, there is no need of that—it is that we may the better decide upon our duty in so far as any of us have the power and opportunity of influencing public opinion. The crisis to which we have come is, we believe, more serious than any in the whole course of events since the war began. Now, more than ever, the demand is for clearest thinking, gravest judgment; and indispensable to both is the warm sympathy that can enter with understanding into the reasons why the paramount factors in the national situation are as they are. Among these factors, undoubtedly, is the strengthening and consolidation of Labour sentiment, and the more definite direction of Labour policy. If anything could carry conviction as to this, it would be the remarkable attention paid by Mr. Lloyd George, as well as some at least of his Ministers, to the representatives of the workers. Whatever the Premier's merits or defects, he is credited with the faculty of gauging the strength of the various currents of public opinion. He, at least, is under no delusion that Labour may be lightly reckoned with; and a good many of us are coming to realise it more clearly every day. The reckoning will be all the more serious when by the side of the male voters, who hitherto have had to represent the feelings and opinions of their million homes, the female voters take their place, and cast a weight that may prove widely decisive in the election of Parliament.

What sort of "Labour" is it that is thus, then, to play its part in full limelight? That is the question. It affects not only the future, that "after the war" period which is so much spoken of. It bears critically on the carrying-on period, on the terminating period of the war. We seem to see the shaping of most important developments in the very near future. The forces of Labour, and of those who not being of that class are in close sympathy with its members, are drawing together in all lands, apparently with the prospect of more practical effect than heretofore. The prospect is not a happy one to some of us, not necessarily through lack of desire for popular advance. A shrewd estimate of the possibilities cannot exclude those that are seen at their worst in Russia at this moment. On the Clyde, we are told, there is something like a volcano slumbering, or, indeed, not too slumberous. Ten thousand workers are said to have unanimously declared themselves, last Sunday at Albert Hall, in favour of the Russian formula of a "Peace without annexations and with self-determination." Defiant intention of striking on an ominous scale unless negotiations be forthwith begun on this basis have been expressed. A few days will show whether extreme counsels will prevail, or whether once more the threatening elements have been controlled into orderly action.

It is imperative, therefore, that both now and steadily onward, every one who in any degree can influence the mind of the workers will realise the gravity of the subject, and do all he can to help the evolution of a healthy and well-balanced mind in this as in every other section of the nation. This cannot be done if we scold; it will fail just as certainly if we try to patronise. Good citizens of all classes will make it more than ever their aim to show that all classes belong to the one national life; and while their efforts are unceasing to redress what is wrong—and a great deal is very wrong—in the present state of society, they will maintain the proposition, which is not so self-evident to the ardent "proletariat" as it seems to others, that good motives without skill and experience are as little likely to guide a nation's policy as to voyage safely the stormy seas. Labour may well ask, and insist upon having, a real share in the highest counsels of the State. It may well demand that the utmost wisdom shall be applied to the urgent problem of how to end the war so that, so far as may be, war itself shall be ended. What it cannot afford to do is, by sheer weight of numbers and the possession of a paralysing power in regard to vital industries, to precipitate a conclusion to hostilities before the cause is won, before the workers' own and others' liberty is rendered secure, and before that good is attained for which we have paid so great a price. They are, indeed, more likely to generate a crippling strife in the nation, just when moral and material unity is of greatest value, than to succeed in forcing such a conclusion. If the right conclusion must yet be postponed—we are by no means sure that it must be long postponed—it is only in the interests of the peoples themselves that this can be justified. Let us keep our minds clear on the issues, re-fortify our resolution, and help our fellow-citizens as much as we can to sustain their share, which is so heavy a share, of the national burden.

DR. ESTLIN CARPENTER'S Case Lectures this term at Manchester College, Oxford, (Tuesdays at 5 P.M.), deal with 'The Doctrine of Life After Death in Greek and Roman Religion—Part II.: From Plato to Plotinus.' Other lectures include courses on 'The Idea of God' and 'Homiletics' by the Principal, Dr. Jacks; 'The Pentateuch,' by the Rev. D. C. Simpson; and 'The Synoptic Gospels,' by the Rev. Henry Gow.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

THE AIMS OF EDUCATION.

IN Lord Bryce's introduction to the volume of 'Cambridge Essays on Education' * "three chief aims" are suggested in regard to the training of the "best minds" discoverable among the nation's children. Granted, he evidently thinks, that for the general run of children it must suffice if they are provided with adequate elementary instruction; this he believes is possible if they can be kept at school longer and receive more encouragement to continue education after leaving, and if—important proviso—the teaching can be effectually improved. But he maintains that the next problem, and it is the principal subject of his remarks, is "how to find the finest minds among the children of the country and bring them by adequate training to the highest efficiency." Like, everything that Lord Bryce touches, his treatment of this subject is luminous, stimulating, and gracefully wise, and it certainly directs one's attention to the very centre of the whole matter before entering with the successive essayists into the special fields of inquiry assigned to them.

These writers, eleven in all, include the Masters of Manchester Grammar School, Wellington College, Sherborne School, Haileybury College, Bedales, and Mill Hill respectively; the Director of the John Innes Horticultural Institution; a Joint Secretary of the Cambridge University Tutorial Classes Committee; the Secretary of the Teachers' Registration Council; and two distinguished men who might be described in a merely scholastic list as former assistants at Eton, but who are known better as the Dean of St. Paul's (Dr. Inge), and the Master of Magdalene, Cambridge (Dr. A. C. Benson), who edits the volume. Their several subjects include most of the points perennially confronting educators—Religion, Citizenship, Literature, Science, Athletics, Leisure, the training of the Imagination and of the Reason, and preparation for Practical Life. The concluding essay deals with 'Teaching as a Profession.'

Highly important at any time, such themes are to-day of the utmost possible importance, and it is a great gain to have them treated by writers so experienced. We cordially welcome their united effort, and if we cannot even attempt to summarise what each has said in his turn, the reader may be assured that all the essays deserve careful perusal. One decided merit is their conciseness; the whole volume, except for the purpose of reflection en route, may be read in an hour or two. With the exception of a reference to an interesting point in the essay on 'Training for Practical Life,' with which we shall close, we must confine ourselves to what we, and we hope our readers, consider to be "the very centre of the whole matter," viz., the aims of education. Unless we get the centre right the entire structure will be unsymmetrical, and may even break down in ruins.

To Mr. Paton of Manchester, whose essay appropriately follows Lord Bryce's introduction, we owe a brief but helpful extension of his Lordship's survey of the subject. Admitting with regret the failures of the nineteenth century, and heartily deprecating for the new age the mere pursuit of material gains, he sets forth as ideals, first, a "fuller liberty of self-fulfilment," and second, a "fuller and stronger social life." Lord Bryce's own statement is somewhat more detailed. He maintains that our aims should be: (1) to fit the "best minds" to explore, if not to be discoverers, in the fields of science and learning; (2) to fit them to be "leaders in the field of action"; and (3) to give them "the taste for, and the habit of enjoying, intellectual pleasures."

Now, it may seem a quaint confession to make, but we have caught ourselves wondering, as we have studied these suggestive pages, whether, in effect, a good deal that is most wisely advanced here does not closely range alongside of antique conception of the chief end of man—"to glorify God, and enjoy him for ever." Antique, and perhaps antiquated, the words may be, but (pace the rather pugnacious tone of the writer on 'Science') we venture to believe they embody principles for ever worthy of the attention of educators, at whatever stage their work may be in progress.

Beyond the immediate and subordinate objects of instruction and training, is there not a real gain in keeping these two principles well in view? On the one hand is the ideal of worth, on the other that of joy. It is surely a great thing, we think the greatest, to hold up a standard of true "value" for the pupil; and to find this either in the Self at its best, or preferably in the Not-self—one's family, school, nation, it may be; or, in maturer hours, mankind at large. If the scholar can, indeed, be led to discern behind all such embodiments of august authority—even behind that best Self which is so mysterious an entity—the most august of all, an authority Divine; and if he can be led to the ideal of "glorifying" that by his life, he is sped on his career with a splendid purpose. Happily, something of such a purpose is already seen at work in many educational circles.

As to the "pleasures" which Lord Bryce commends, not without some apology, let us boldly maintain their propriety, even their necessity, if young people are to become truly worth their utmost to their generation, and—in the old phrase, not yet outworn—to "their Maker." Not to mould human clay into well-devised bricks for use in building the State, but to generate force in truly human lives, disciplined, but free, each abounding in energy, lives of conquerors, who are willing to pay the price of triumph for the joy it brings, as they advance against "old chaos and the dark"—something like this cries out for more explicit recognition than it has received. The educators—whose lot is too often devoid of the "hope and enthusiasm" of which Mr. Paton speaks, should certainly have a share in this joy, enabling them to toil through its drudgery with spirit unharmed; they will be dull artists otherwise, and their pupils cannot escape infection by their dullness. When the nation, as a whole, feels that the duty it owes to the rising generation brings a splendid delight, the work of "educational reform," now demanded on every side, will receive immense impetus. Till then, we confess, we cannot expect any great advance.

And here let us reassure the "practical men," who look askance on enthusiasts, and ask for solid results in the departments of scientific discovery, mechanical invention, productive organisation, and commercial enterprise. With an eye to these and similar things we are often bidden to "scrap" much of our educational methods, and to apply our energies in strictly specialised directions betimes, lest international competition find us hopelessly out-classed. Such advice, except for its mistaken estimate of the wealth of nations, has, we freely admit, much to recommend it. A good deal of time and effort, we are convinced, is spent in vain, or worse, in many schools and colleges. The issue of the present volume testifies to a clear sense that all is not well. But before we surrender, in a panic, to the policy of forsaking long-trodden paths of general culture as a preparation for the varied and separate tasks that await young minds on entrance to the world's work, let us carefully note the following pregnant testimony (quoted by Sir J. D. McClure, Mill Hill, from an address given in January last year) by Mr. W. L. Hitchens, the chairman of the great engineering firm of Cammell, Laird & Co.: "Specialised education at school is of no practical value. There is ample time after a boy has started business to acquire all the technical knowledge that his brain is capable of assimilating." Again, and more broadly, he says: "Strong pressure is being brought to bear to commercialise our education, to make it a paying proposition, to make it subservient to the God of Wealth, and thus convert us into a money-making mob. Ruskin has said that 'No nation can last that has made a mob of itself.' Above all a nation cannot last as a money-making mob. It cannot with impunity—it cannot with existence—go on despising literature, despising science, despising art, despising nature, despising compassion, and concentrating its soul on pence." Such words from a great Captain of Industry deserve all possible emphasis. W. G. T.

* Cambridge University Press, 1917. Pp. 232. Price 7s. 6d. net.

WHAT CAN WE GIVE YOU ?

What can we give you when you come ?
(Hope sings her melody)

Come to the light and warmth of home,
And the days that are to be ?
Picturing the old, familiar places,
Yearning for the dear, beloved faces,
For the music and the mirth
Of the brightest spot on earth,
Soldier and Sailor—

What can we give you when you come ?

Refrain :—

Our hearts are yours, and our hands are swift

*To follow the call of joy ;
Love, music, mirth are in the gift,
And all we have and can employ
Are ready for the Boy.*

Absence has held us ever true;
(Faith whispers low and sweet)
True to the boy we found in you,
And the man we long to meet :
Steadfast through the night of gloom and sadness
Memory often brought a dream of gladness,
With the wonder and the might
Of your reverence for the right,
Soldier and Sailor—
Absence has held us ever true.

What can we other ? Here we wait;
(Love is our guest and king)
Wait for the word at the golden gate,
And the Peace the Angels sing.
Truth and Justice make a country's glory,
Men of Mercy tell the wondrous story,
Let your thrilling voice reveal
What the human soul can feel :
Soldier and Sailor—
What can we other ? Here we wait.

J. L. HAIGH.

NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS.

[A short Notice in this column does not preclude a review in a later issue.]

Sampson (George). HAZLITT : SELECTED ESSAYS. Cambridge, at the University Press. xxxviii—251 pp., 3s. 6d. n.

An admirable selection by an enthusiast for one of the best of English critics. Mr. Sampson has written an introduction and voluminous notes, for as he says: "Hazlitt is the most allusive of essayists, and to extend his snatches of quotation and expand his tantalising allusions is a pleasure as well as a duty."

Streeter (Burrett H.), and others. IMMORTALITY : an Essay in Discovery Co-ordinating Scientific, Psychical and Biblical Research. London, Macmillan & Co. xiv—380 pp., 10s. 6d. n.

This is another interesting result of the method of group study, which is specially applicable to questions of religious faith, where the evidence is drawn largely from experience, which gains both in richness and definiteness of meaning through fellowship. It is a companion volume to the one on 'Prayer' issued recently. In addition to the editor, Canon Streeter, the writers are Mr. A. Clutton-Brock, Mr. J. A. Hadfield, a naval surgeon who writes on 'The Mind and the Brain,' the Rev. C. W. Emmet, and the author of 'Pro Christo et Ecclesia' (Miss L. Dougall).

Thompson (A. Hamilton). SELECTIONS FROM THE POEMS OF WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. Cambridge, at the University Press. vi—203 pp., 2s. 6d. n.

This is a new volume in the "Cambridge Series of English Romantic Poets," and is intended to form an introduction to the study of Wordsworth's poetry. Unfortunately for this purpose some familiar poems like 'The Happy Warrior' have been omitted in order to make room for others which are less well-known. Selections from the 'Prelude' and 'The Excursion' are included. The introduction deals with Wordsworth specially as an interpreter of nature.

Toynbee (Arnold J.). THE GERMAN TERROR IN FRANCE. London, Hodder & Stoughton. xv—212 pp.

A continuation of the author's 'The German Terror in Belgium.' It is based upon a careful investigation of all the available documents, with full references. There are four maps and numerous illustrations.

Ward (A. W.) and Wilkinson (S.). GERMANY : vol. 2, 1852-1871. Cambridge, at the University Press. xvi—588 pp., 12s. n.

The first volume of this history of modern Germany took the narrative from the Congress of Vienna to 1852. The present volume includes the history of the Franco-Prussian War and the events which led to the creation of the Empire. Sir A. W. Ward has had the assistance of Prof. Spenser Wilkinson, who is responsible for the maps, the war bibliographies, and a few pages of the text. The account of the later developments of the Schleswig-Holstein question is largely based on the papers of his father, the late Mr. John Ward, C.B., who was accredited to the Hanse Towns from 1860 to 1870, and had exceptional opportunities for watching the course of events.

Whibley (Charles). POLITICAL PORTRAITS. London, Macmillan & Co. 327 pp., 7s. 6d.

Mr. Whibley needs no praise as a master in the art of prose narrative. In the present volume he has again used the essay as a medium for historical portraiture. Among his subjects are Clarendon, Charles James Fox, Talleyrand, Metternich, and the leading men in the Anti-Corn Law League.

The above include the notices of books which lack of space has prevented us from referring to before. In future particulars of books received will be inserted in the last issue of each month.

THE Church League for Women's Suffrage announces Special Thanksgiving Services to be held on the Saturday immediately following the day when the Royal Assent is given to the Representation of the People Bill. Particulars may be obtained at 6 York Buildings, Adelphi, W.C.2.

AN INTERNATIONAL PARLIAMENT.

ADDRESS BY MR. G. G. ARMSTRONG.

AN address on the subject of 'An International Parliament' was given on Wednesday, January 23rd, under the auspices of the Fitzwilliam Street Social Union, at the Fitzwilliam Street schoolroom, Huddersfield, by Mr. George G. Armstrong, the Rev. R. A. Dickson presiding. Mr. Armstrong said that the nations had come to realise that an alternative to war as a method of settling international differences was the first essential to the preservation of civilisation itself. We none of us realised until this war came what war meant, and what a crime we had all committed against our kind by the light-heartedness with which we left the settlement of international disputes to the chance of a settlement by force. We must find an alternative to war. Assuming the idea of a League of Nations, they would require an international Executive to set up their courts, to see to the execution of their judgments, and to modify as far as might be existing international law. Further, there must be given some kind of international police force, at any rate, during the period of transition. If that was to be done, the prized sovereign independence of nations would in time have to give place to international law, to super-national control. The authority that was to be strong enough to give the necessary confidence to the nations must be something a great deal bigger than a mere international bureaucracy made up of diplomatic and military delegates from the various States' Governments. The new international Government was to be the servant of all mankind, but it had to be the master of individual Governments. We must get rid of the fiction that the interests of the different peoples were necessarily conflicting. We must get rid of the whole of the principles of secrecy between them. President Wilson and the Bolsheviks were getting rid of them. We must supersede Governments, diplomats, and bureaucrats by peoples, and not Governments but Parliaments, at least, must appoint the representatives, who must be responsible at least to the Parliaments. He looked forward to the time when the true Parliament of Nations would be elected by the people themselves. The idea of the revolutionary Socialists of the "International," in its sane explanations, was the ideal to which the nations were tending.

In a book which he had had the temerity to write on the subject, Mr. Armstrong said, he had suggested one representative in the new Parliament from every two million people. Britain would thus send 23, Germany 32, Russia 63, Portugal 3, the British Colonies 8 amongst them, and the United States were to send 47. Let them just think what that would mean—the mere fact of their meeting. They cut right across frontiers and got all kinds of points of view. Was that an impracticable scheme? We had lived through long decades of peace, seeing reforms come so slowly that we had got into the habit of thinking that no great change ever came quickly. But during the ages there had been moments when big changes occurred. The greatest event in the centuries—this great war—happened to-day, and there was no reason why it should not be followed by an overwhelming change in human institutions. It depended upon individuals having faith in justice and right and in the worth of human nature when it was given a chance. Only that stood in the way of a regenerated democracy and a regenerated world.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

In connection with the College a School for Ministers was opened at Summerville on January 7. The School meets every Monday until March 11, four lectures being given each session. Sixty-six ministers and lay workers are on the roll of members. Of these a few from a distance attend only at intervals. During the first month the average attendance has been thirty-three. The lecturers on Biblical subjects are: Principal Bennett (Lancashire Independent College), Principal Marshall (Brighton. General Baptist College), the Rev. H. McLachlan (Warden Unitarian Home Missionary College), Prof. Peake (Manchester University), and the Rev. T. Wicklin (Warden Hulme Hall). The lecturers on Science and Philosophy are Prof. Weiss (Manchester University), Prof. Mackintosh (Lancashire Independent College), Prof. Alexander (Manchester University), and Principal Mellone (Unitarian Home Missionary College). The lecturers on 'Social and Educational Problems' and 'Modern Religious Movements' are Principal Graham (Hulme Hall), Principal Jacks (Manchester College, Oxford), the Rev. C. Peach (Secretary Northern Counties Education League), Mr. Fred Hill (Lecturer Co-operative Union), Mr. G. B. Wilson (Secretary United Kingdom Alliance), Dr. George Jessel (Tuberculosis Officer Lancashire County Council), Councillor Margaret Ashton, the Rev. W. L. Schroeder, and the Rev. Lawrence Clare. Lectures are followed by questions and frequently by discussion.

The afternoons of March 4 and 11 will be devoted to Conferences on the 'Intellectual and Practical Difficulties of Modern Unitarian Ministers' opened respectively by the Revs. J. C. Flower and C. J. Street. The members of the School include a few representatives of the Church of England, the Congregationalist, Wesleyan, United Methodist, and Presbyterian Churches. Considerable use is being made by members of the School of the books in the library, and the interest displayed in the various courses of lectures is very marked.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and the address of the senders.

PROHIBITION DURING THE WAR.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—W. J. Crawford must not let his love for London make him blind to its temptations. He admits that there are "some dark spots." Yes, the Waterloo Road and Victoria districts are two of them, and the daily papers, from time to time, bear witness to the state of things there. It is notorious that strong drink is at the bottom of all the trouble and "white men," as well as others, are falling victims.

No, unfortunately, Dr. Fort Newton's statement is far from being "grotesque," and perhaps the Doctor will have something to say on this point, so I will not further encroach on your space.—Yours, &c.,

E. F. COWLIN.
19 Northwood Road, Forest Hill, S.E.23.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The objects of the Fund are : (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium. (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais. (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France. The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

157TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	19,919	1	7
Mr. and Miss Barnes (11th) ..	1	0	0
Bank Street, Bolton, Women's League, per Mrs. Wm. Ashworth	1	1	0
Miss Mason	0	5	0
Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hall (monthly)	2	0	0
R. L. (17th)	0	10	0
Miss Rowlands (3rd)	0	5	0
Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wilson (12th)	10	0	0
Mrs. Charles H. Allen (3rd) ..	3	0	0
Northgate End Chapel, Halifax, per Mr. J. Teal (20th) ..	1	14	4
Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Grundy (3rd)	10	0	0
Mrs. J. M. Perry (9th)	1	0	0
Mr. Clement Webster	0	2	6
Mr. and Miss Hirst (26th) ..	2	2	0
West Grove Branch of the Women's League, Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox (30th)	0	17	0
Miss Colton and the Misses Gillespie (31st)	0	7	6
	19,953	5	11

Parcels have been received from :—Mrs. Walter Baily; Mrs. Hamer; Miss Short; Miss H. Norton; Miss Leigh; Mrs. William Tangye; Mrs. Kent and family; Miss M. K. Winser; Miss E. Higginson; Mrs Ricketts; Monton Church Women's Congregational Union, per Miss E. Leigh; Mrs. Thomas Worthington; Miss Margaret Ashton; The Misses Garrett; Mrs. Prewett; Lewins' Mead Domestic Mission; Girls' Sewing Class, Bristol, per Mrs. Gaylard; Mrs. Dent; Platt Chapel Dorcas Society, per Miss A. Fryer; Mrs. Harold Coventry; Mrs. Wooding; Plymouth Branch of the Women's League per Miss Bond; Miss C. Sharpe; Rosslyn Hill Sewing Society, per Mrs. Thos. Cobb; Miss Newling and Miss Bendelack; The Newland Sewing Party, per Mrs. Roscoe; Miss Shannon; Bournemouth Unitarian Church Working Party, per Mrs. V. D. Davis; L. O. M.; Mrs. Nanson; Essex Church Work Party, per Mrs. Weatherall; Mrs. S. Wilson; Mrs. J. Murray Macdonald; Ullet Road Sewing Circle, Liverpool, per Mrs. Odgers; Miss Leigh Browne; Mrs. Haigh; Finchley Branch of the Women's League, per Mrs. Blake Odgers; Mrs. Ernest Wallis; Miss Warren; Miss E. M. Greg; The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas; Miss Martineau; Miss H. Crosskey.

WEEKLY NOTES.

It may interest subscribers to know what a typical consignment of goods consists of. This week, for instance, 15 bales and cases left this house :—a bale of shirts, socks, and games for a regimental hospital in the Cantonments, whose doctor wrote last week begging for warm clothes and amusements for his men (he also wanted several small instruments, which went out by post at once); a bale of 40 pairs of knickerbockers and jerseys for a little boys' school; 4 bales for a large military hospital at Le Havre (a nurse had written the week before, "We have no socks in the store-room and a large convoy of soldiers expected at once"); 4 bales for a hospital of 1,200 beds at Calais, containing shirts, pyjamas, treasure bags, towels and all sorts of woolly comforts; 2 bales for the civil hospital, containing clothes for the crèche babies and men's and women's clothing; a bale of girls' clothes for a girls' school; a bale of pyjamas, shirts, and many small comforts, for the tuberculous patients at Chambéry; a case containing a fine gramophone and records kindly given by Mrs. S. Wilson of Hull. To these will be added at the docks several cases of surgical instruments of various sorts, a bale of tent-cloth to repair our recreation hut at the front; four dozen folding chairs and a lot of hot-water bottles for the consumptives; 300 mugs for the Calais Hut, &c. &c.

In addition about 30 parcels weighing 4 lbs. each have been despatched during the week by Belgian military post. These parcels have gone to the front :—to various Colonies Scolaires, to Chambéry, to Calvados, to Rouen, to several places in the Pas de Calais, &c., and they contained things wanted in a hurry—the majority being small instruments urgently needed by doctors at the front or in the hospitals.

Here is a letter from a consumptive soldier at Chambéry, whom I mentioned a week or two ago: "I am under treatment at the military hospital at Chambéry, and have suffered much from the intense cold since November. Of course we help each other, and so another man and I shared a hot-water bottle and had it by turns. Imagine, then, my joy when our nurse gave me a bottle sent out by you! A hot-water bottle all to myself, day and night! You cannot imagine what it means for me and all the thoughts I have about you. I think the best is how good it is to know there are kind hearts thinking of us and trying to assuage our sufferings. I want to thank you so warmly, dear Madame, and all your friends, for this comfort. Now I am not constantly awakened by the cold. I can sleep comfortably and my last thoughts before falling asleep are grateful ones. As I shut my eyes, I whisper, "Thank you, Madame."

ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

- Men's dressing-gowns.
- Bedsocks, mufflers, mittens.
- Pyjamas, shirts, socks, and all sorts of men's underclothing.
- Slippers, cardigans.
- Clothing for women and children, especially stockings.
- Games, jig-saw puzzles.
- Calico bags, 2 ft. by 3 ft., and any smaller size.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THE BOOK ROOM IN HAYRE.

THE following sums have been received in response to the appeal in THE INQUIRER last week :—

	£	s.	d.
Mr. T. Oliver Lee	1	0	0
Mr. G. J. Notcutt	0	10	6
Mrs. Roberts	0	10	6
Mr. C. G. Montefiore	3	0	0
Mrs. Lawford	0	2	6
Miss E. S. Nelson	0	10	0
Miss Hutton	0	10	0
Miss E. M. Greg	1	1	0
Miss K. H. Greg	1	1	0
Miss Leigh Smith	3	0	0
Dr. J. E. Carpenter	1	1	0
Mrs. Walter Baily	5	0	0
L. G. A.	0	2	6
	£17	9	0

Further donations to the appeal for money to buy new books for the Y.M.C.A. Book Room at Havre may be sent to the Rev. W. H. Drummond, 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, London, N.W.3.

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

THE REV. GEORGE CRITCHLEY.

WE regret to announce the passing away of the Rev. George Critchley, B.A., which occurred at his home, St. Leonard's, on Saturday last. Educated for the ministry at West College, Plymouth, he became pastor of a Congregational church in 1870. In 1900 he entered the Unitarian fellowship, and had charge of several London congregations in turn till 1907, when, although he continued in active service as an occasional preacher, he was obliged by failing health to give up regular duty. A man of deep sincerity, of wide reading, and of impressive pulpit power, he made many friends among us, and his memory will be cherished as that of a faithful ally in the cause of a free and intelligent religion. He was in his 75th year.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH.

THE Theistic Church, founded by the late Rev. Charles Voysey, since vacating the building in Swallow Street on the termination of the lease, has had no permanent place of meeting. The ministry of the Rev. Dr. Welsh ended in a division, and he has given to his movement a new description, while the name of the Theistic Church is retained by the surviving members of Mr. Voysey's congregation. Services were held for a time in a small hall in Kensington; at present Essex Hall has been hired for Sunday morning services, although the members are looking forward to possessing a church building of their own.

Those who remember the aloofness towards co-operation with Unitarians—probably caused by misunderstandings on both sides—will be glad to observe that this feeling has now passed away. A considerable number of Unitarian ministers have recently conducted the Sunday morning services at the Theistic Church. Their assistance is gratefully acknowledged, and a list of the names is published in the notices announcing the weekly services. The names of the following ministers are recorded: the Revs. A. H. Biggs, R. H. U. Bloor, W. Copeland Bowie, A. A. Charlesworth, Rudolf Davis, Charles Hargrove, James Harwood, Bertram Lister, S. H. Mellone, W. G. Tarrant, J. H. Weatherall, and E. A. Voysey. The services in the Theistic Prayer Book, compiled by Mr. Voysey, are used in an abbreviated form; and a quartette of solo voices, with the aid of the organ, render the choral parts of the service in excellent taste.

The Rev. J. Tyssul Davis, who during the past four years has been minister of the Unitarian Chapel at York, has been appointed minister of the Theistic Church and will begin his ministry on Sunday next, February 3. Mr. Davis in his sermon will deal with the mental doubts and emotional complexities widely felt at this time of widespread sorrow, and will speak on the subject 'Does God Care?'

As we go to press news comes of the death, on January 18, of Pfarrer Alfred Altherr of Basle, who sestrking personality will be vividly remembered by visitors to the International Councils of Religious Liberals held in Boston and elsewhere in recent years. Born in 1843, Altherr was educated at Zurich, and entered the ministry in 1867. From the first he manifested liberal opinions and vigorously defended them against orthodox attacks. He wrote a life of Theodore Parker, and was specially invited to take part in the Emerson Centenary celebrations at Boston in 1903. For thirty-seven years pastor at Basle, he retired through ill-health seven years ago.

SHEFFIELD DISTRICT.

THE Annual Meetings of the Sheffield District Association of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches were held at the Free Christian Church at Mexborough on Thursday, January 24. In the morning a Ministers' Meeting was held at which the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne of Nottingham introduced for discussion the relation of the District Associations to all the work and organisation of our Churches. The General Committee met in the afternoon, and Service followed in the church, conducted by Dr. Estlin Carpenter, President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, who preached an admirable sermon on 'Fellow-workers with God.' The Mexborough friends contrived to provide tea for about sixty visitors. The congregations of the district were well represented, and at the public meeting in the evening there was a large attendance. The retiring President, Mr. W. R. Stevenson of Sheffield, occupied the chair. The Annual Report and Accounts and the Report of the Lay Preachers' Union were read and adopted, and the officers were elected, Mr. W. E. Taylor of Doncaster being the new President, and Messrs. W. R. Barclay and J. B. Taylor Hon. Secretaries. Addresses were delivered by Dr. Carpenter (British and Foreign Unitarian Association), the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne (North Midland Association), Mrs. Laycock (Women's League), Mr. George Verity (Yorkshire Union), Mr. J. Dungworth (Lay Preacher), the Rev. C. J. Street and S. Spencer.

THE Friends' War Victims' Relief Fund (91 Bishopsgate, E.C.2), by which much invaluable help has been given in the different countries ravaged by the war and is still carried on, makes an urgent appeal on behalf of refugees from Poland and Galicia, many of whom were first sent into Turkestan, where their sufferings were intense, and who are now collected in the Government of Samara, in the far South-East of Russia, adjoining the Caspian. Here, "in a neglected backwater of the great whirlpool which to-day constitutes Russia, they wait helpless before their enemy—Hunger." In short, over 100,000 people, mainly women and children, are in immediate danger of starvation. The Fund has some thirty workers engaged in their relief; these have cabled for the sum of £30,000 to get food from Siberia.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Birkenhead.—The Bessborough War Savings Society in connection with the Unitarian Church which was started a year ago has now 126 members, and £889 11s. 6d. has passed through the treasurer's hands. Certificates have been taken out both by single payments and by weekly subscriptions, a great many of the members paying most regularly each week. Only 15s. has been withdrawn from the society since it started. The children of the Sunday School have been encouraged to join, and already 14 certificates have been completed and taken out by them.

Bradford.—Major Thirkill, R.E., officer-in-charge of the Wireless Signal Company operating in the British East African Campaign, has been awarded the Military Cross. Major Thirkill is the son of Mr. Wm. Thirkill, warden of Chapel Lane Unitarian Chapel. He is a fellow of Clare College, Cambridge, and left his duties in Cambridge to take up wireless work on the outbreak of war in 1914.

Ditchling.—The Free Christian Church has lost a lifelong supporter through the death of Mr. J. W. Brooker of Haywards Heath. He has bequeathed £50 to the Trustees towards the up-keep of the Old Meeting House and Burial Ground.

Dudley.—At the Old Meeting House, Dudley, on Sunday last, the Rev. E. Glyn Evans took for his subject at the morning service 'Dean Henson and Religious Progress.' The text of the sermon was: "And without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness: God....

manifest in the flesh' (A.V.). A large congregation assembled. Several of the leading citizens of the town were present, including the Borough member and his wife, Sir Arthur Boscawen, M.P., and Lady Boscawen.

Exeter: George's Meeting.—The Rev. Donald Fraser, formerly of the David Thomas Memorial Church, has resigned the charge of Pembroke Chapel, Liverpool, to become minister here, in succession to the Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, of Brighton. Mr. Fraser begins at Exeter in March.

Hale.—The Rev. Joseph Wain, the newly-appointed minister at Hale Chapel, conducted his first services on Sunday, January 6, when large congregations gathered at both the morning and evening services. On Friday evening, January 11, a crowded meeting was held in the Hale Chapel schoolroom for the purpose of welcoming the Rev. Joseph Wain, the newly appointed minister, and Mrs. Wain, and of introducing them to the members of the congregation. General regret was expressed when it was known that Mrs. Wain had found it impossible to make the journey from Scarborough. Mr. Albert Nicholson (Chairman of the Chapel Committee) presided, being supported on the platform by the Rev. Edwardes Evans (vicar of the parish), the Rev. Edgar I. Frupp (Altrincham), the Rev. Matthew R. Scott (Sale), Mr. W. Howard Goulty (treasurer), and Mr. Robert H. Wolff (secretary). Apologies for absence were read from the Revs. J. Crowther Hirst, Dendy Agate, G. A. Payne, F. Heming Vaughan and others. The Chairman, in moving the resolution of welcome on behalf of the congregation, spoke of its origin in Commonwealth times, when they were served by ministers of the Presbyterian way of thinking. The services at Ringway, where this congregation then worshipped, were left for many years unmolested, even after the Restoration. A change came about in 1720, when the parson was forcibly ejected from the pulpit and the congregation turned out of the Chapel. Until the present Meeting-house was erected the congregation continued to meet in a farm building. In recent years, it was pointed out, the residential population had increased rapidly, and this was likely to continue. Mr. Nicholson had confidence that under Mr. Wain's leadership the congregation had a great future. The resolution was seconded by Mr. Howard Goulty. The Revs. Edgar I. Frupp and Matthew R. Scott gave a welcome in the name of the ministers of the district, expressing their sincere wishes for the happiness and success of the new ministry. The Rev. Joseph Wain in responding thanked them for the hearty welcome given him and the kind words spoken of him. He came as a Christian minister to lead in the service and worship of God, in the spirit of Jesus Christ, and to help all who came to their venerable chapel in the development of the true spiritual life. A great future was open to the Christian Church if its people would only be true to its highest ideals. What those ideals were would be his message, which, together with Divine worship, would create a spiritual atmosphere whereby they, as a congregation seeking Divine help and strength, would be trusted to find what they needed. The times in which we lived called for greater faith and trust, and only the Infinite Pity was sufficient for the infinite pathos of human life. The Rev. Edwardes Evans extended a welcome to the village and neighbourhood in a few gracious words, and expressed his great pleasure in having been invited to take part. Mr. Robert Wolff, Hon. Secretary of the Chapel, also welcomed the new minister with cordiality.

Lewes.—The Annual Sunday School party was held in the Unitarian Chapel Hall on Wednesday evening, January 23, and was a very happy gathering. In the course of the evening the Rev. J. M. Connell spoke of the work of the school during the past year, and referred especially to the resignation of Miss Duplock as superintendent and teacher, upon which the school had presented her with a writing case in recognition of her long and devoted services. The prizes were distributed by Mrs. Franklin Browne, and a short address was given by Mr. J. Foster Howe.

Liverpool.—The Rev. H. McLachlan, who has been giving lectures to Sunday School Teachers at various centres in Lancashire and Cheshire, reached the last—the forty-third—of the series here on January 28. As a mark of grateful appreciation he was presented on this occasion with a number of books. We hope to give notes of one of these lectures in our next issue, and that those of two others will follow.

Manchester Women's League. The Winter Meeting of the above was held in the Memorial Hall, Manchester, on January 26, 1918. Miss Johnstone presided. There were fifty ladies present, representing the following Branches: Bury (Bank Street), Chesham, Denton, Oldham Road, Manchester, Monton, Mossley, Oldham, Stalybridge, and Stockport. Miss Andrews, of the New Thought School, Manchester, gave an address on 'Woman's Duty To-day,' which was listened to with rapt attention. She showed the part woman was meant to play in the progress of the human race by reason of her special mental characteristics, and her address was a challenge to each individual woman to play her part worthily. If one fails to make good the progress of the race is retarded. A most cordial vote of thanks was given to Miss Andrews at the close of her address. Tea and a Conference on League business completed the programme of a pleasant gathering.

Midland Sunday School Association.—The Annual Meeting was held on Saturday last, Jan. 26, at Gibson Road Church, Handsworth. There was a very good attendance, most of the Schools in the Association being represented. At an informal Conference in the afternoon, and again at the Evening Meeting, the Rev. Bertram Lister, who represented the Sunday School Association, gave much information and wise counsel. The Committee's Report reviewed a year of successful work, except in the matter of the Visitation of Schools. Mr. Herbert Crabtree was appointed Visitor for 1918. The Treasurer (Mr. T. Graham) and the Secretary (Mr. L. Lloyd) were re-elected. The Rev. H. Warnoch gave an Address based on the Visitor's Reports, and was succeeded in the Presidency by the Rev. J. M. Whiteman. A warm vote of thanks was accorded to the officers, also to the Gibson Road friends for hospitality. The Rev. Stanley Mossop responded.

Notlage.—Under the auspices of the National War Savings Association the minister of the Unitarian Chapel, the Rev. W. J. Phillips, has recently given three lectures, illustrated by lantern slides, to large audiences. They were delivered in the Unitarian, Calvinistic Methodist, and Church of England schools respectively.

Portsmouth.—The ladies of the Sewing Circle in connection with St. Thomas Street General Baptist Chapel have worked very hard for several months in order to provide articles for a Sale of Work in aid of St. Dunstan's Hostel. The Sale was held on Wednesday, January 23, when £25 was realised.

Provincial Assembly of Lancashire and Cheshire. Advisory Committee.—The Rev. Donald B. Fraser, of Pembroke Chapel, Liverpool, having applied for a certificate as to character and general fitness, has received the Committee's Certificate and is commended to the Churches.

Sheffield.—The Roll of Honour for the Sheffield District Association has just been published. It contains 350 names, borne by men from Upper Chapel and Unity Church, Sheffield; Attercliffe Unitarian Church; Church of Our Father, Rotherham; Underbank Chapel, Stanington; the Old Chapel, Bradwell; and the Free Christian Churches at Doncaster, Barnsley, Bolton-on-Deane, and Mexborough. An interesting series of Sunday evening addresses on burning questions of the hour will be given at Upper Chapel during February and March. The subjects chosen are as follows: Feb. 3, 'Ought Christians to Fight?' (the Rev. C. J. Street); Feb. 10, 'Why does not God Intervene?' (the Rev. Alfred Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne); Feb. 17, 'Is Prohibition Urgent?' Feb. 24, 'What is Wrong with the Church?' Mar. 3, 'What of the Rising Generation?' Mar. 10, 'Can War be Banished?' (by the minister, the Rev. C. J. Street); Mar. 17, 'What can we do for the Nation?' (the Rev. A. Ernest Parry, Liscard); Mar. 24, 'How would Jesus regard it all?' (the Rev. C. J. Street); and Mar. 31, 'What of the Fallen?' (the Rev. John W. Lee).

Wellington, N.Z.—The December Calendar of the Unitarian Free Church refers to a recent Unitarian Conference at Auckland at which ten delegates were present from Auckland, Wellington, and Christchurch. The following officers were elected: President, Mr. Geo. Stephenson; Treasurer, Mr. Jas. Godber, J.P.; Secretary, Rev. G. E. Hale. The movement at Christchurch was affiliated. A souvenir of the Conference is to be published, and will probably be continued as a quarterly magazine. Addresses were delivered by Mr. T. H. Macky (Chairman), the Rev. J. H. G. Chapple, Messrs. G. Stephenson and S. J. Elliott, and the Rev. G. E. Hale. A sermon was preached by the Rev. W. E. Williams, on 'The Universal Faith.'—Lieut. H. Mackenzie, son of Professor and Mrs. Mackenzie, has been chosen as the Rhodes Scholar for New Zealand. He was on his way to the front when this announcement was printed, but we trust that it will not be long before it will be possible for him to enter into the privileges thus conferred upon him.

The preachers during Lent Term at the morning service which is held at Manchester College, Oxford, on Sundays at 11.30, will be: Feb. 3, the Principal; Feb. 10, the Rev. Henry Gow; Feb. 17, the Principal; Feb. 24, the Principal; March 3, Dr. Carpenter; Mar. 10 the Rev. Henry Gow.

DEATHS.

CHAPMAN.—On January 25, after a long illness patiently borne, Jane Elizabeth Chapman, of Maidstone, and formerly of Hackney, youngest daughter of the late Thomas Chapman, of Goodman's Fields, London, in her 81st year.

CRITCHLEY.—On January 26, the Rev. George Critchley, B.A., of "Oversea," West Hill, St. Leonard's-on-Sea, aged 74.

FULLAGAR.—On January 13, after three days' illness, Fanny Elizabeth Fullagar, in her 73rd year.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, January 27.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. ARTHUR GOLLAND.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 5.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM; 5.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Roaslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 6.30, Rev. B. DE LA FAILLE, D.D.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 62 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Mr. JOSEPH P. ROSLING.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Wexch Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. FRED HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. W. R. CLARK-LEWIS.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.15, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DURLEN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut.-Col. BULLOCK.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. H. FAULKNER; 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE SCOTT.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.

TOBQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

Notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week should be sent to The Publisher, 13 BREAM'S BUILDINGS, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

The name of the Minister of the Church is inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

February

3. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.
 10. Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.
 17. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A., Devotional Service only, without sermon, after which a Meeting of the Congregation will be held.
 24. Rev. ADDISON A. CHARLESWORTH, of Highgate.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL ON MODERN LINES
WITH PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

The aim of the Religious Teaching is to instil a simple Christian Faith and personal religion. There is full Morning Service in the School on Sunday. In the evening boys may, if their parents desire it, attend a place of worship in Nantwich.

Full Prospectus, apply to the Head Master:
H. LANG JONES, M.A. (Oxon.).

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND NATIONAL DUTY.

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,

Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

THE THEISTIC CHURCH.

Founded by the late REV. CHAS. VOYSEY, B.A.

Services will be resumed at

ESSEX HALL,

Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.,

by the New Minister, the Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIS, B.A.,

On FEBRUARY, 3, 1918, at 11 a.m.

Mr. DAVIS will deal with the Mental Doubts and Emotional Perplexities widely felt at this time of widespread sorrow, and speak upon the subject,

DOES GOD CARE?

A Cordial Invitation is extended to all earnest Religious Inquirers.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

The Acting Treasurer, Mr. G. W. BROWN, will be much obliged if subscribers to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association will kindly remit their subscriptions for 1918 to Essex Hall, or pay them to the local treasurers. There are still a few subscriptions unpaid for the year 1917, which he would be pleased to receive.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

Deputy Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.
 Miss CECIL GRADWELL. | H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
 L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I. | H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Pulpit Vacant.

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, Narborough Road, Leicester. — PULPIT VACANT. Applications invited.—J. C. BURTON, Cuthbert Leys, Oadby Hill, Leicester.

Situations, Vacant and Wanted.

WANTED LADY HELP, to do the work of house. Mistress helps, and boy for boots, &c.; to live with family; three children, who go to school daily. Moderate terms.—Apply Mrs. F. PREWETT, Acacia Lodge, North Parade, Horsham, Sussex.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED HALF HOUSE TO LET. No children taken. Suit two ladies or gentleman and wife. Other occupant, one lady. Attendance by arrangement.—Address M., 20 Alytt's Gardens, Golders Green, N.W.

BRIGHTON.—TO LET, Furnished, SITTING-ROOM AND BEDROOM. Near Station and trams. Very clean and sunny. 15s. a week. Vacant on February 14th.—W. care of INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Miscellaneous.

BLEACHED PLAIN COTTON SHEETS, ready hemmed, good reliable quality, 70 x 100 inches, two pairs 22s. 9d.; 2 x 3 yards, two pairs 24s. 9d. Bargain List free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

OLD FALSE TEETH wanted for their precious metals; now worth up to £12 per set; any condition; surplus jewellery; broken jewellery from £2 to £5 per ounce given. We give the highest possible value; before remitting we make offers by return. If not accepted goods returned post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street,
MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS
TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.;
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken. Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2;
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines;
extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word.
Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s.
Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d
Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenaeum Press,
11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and
Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company,
Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4.
Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—
Saturday, February 2, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3945.
NEW SERIES, No. 1048.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	41	MEMORIAL NOTICE:—		SOUTH-EAST WALES UNITARIAN SOCIETY	45
AT THE CRISIS	42	Miss Katharine Bruce	44	A CAMP COLLEGE	45
VERSE: THE MANTLE OF ELIJAH	43	BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	44	THE PENAL REFORM LEAGUE	46
OUR CHURCHES AND OUR MINISTRY	43	THE BOOK ROOM IN HAVRE	45	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	46
		A MINISTER'S HEROISM	45

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

THE new Franchise Act marks a truly momentous era, perhaps most so for the women of the land. We are all so deeply preoccupied with many other things that the magnitude of this step in the nation's progress cannot be realised at once. We must all endeavour to grasp its full meaning, however, and for our own part we shall return to the subject next week.

* * *

DR. RATTRAY'S outspoken remarks this week on the subject of our churches and the training of their ministers will doubtless challenge other opinions. Our columns, to the extent that space permits, are, of course, open to frank discussion of so important a subject; and, while not endorsing all that he says, we decidedly share our contributor's view that its consideration ought not to be postponed till the war ends. But the briefer contributions are, the better.

* * *

THE savage sentence passed on British airmen who have been captured in Germany after distributing leaflets has not so much astonished us as deepened our disgust at an enemy apparently quite lost to decent considerations. There is a call for reprisals again, as also in respect to the placing of officer prisoners in zones raided by air-craft. We confess to little hope of impressing the Germans by any such retaliatory measures. What is really worth noting is that the sentence referred to is obviously in proportion to the German fear of their people's mood when they happen to be told the truth from our side; and the best policy we can adopt is surely to use every possible means of telling it to them.

LAST month we observed in an article by the military expert of an important Midland newspaper the statement that the writer was so far from being disposed to consider a modus vivendi with Germany that he was resolved, should he ever be on a jury, to ignore any evidence a German litigant might offer, and give his verdict invariably against him, whatever the merits of the case might be. Which may be magnificent but is not peace. More promising is the indication of the just mind, usually thought characteristic of our race, given this week by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Two German ships, this Court decides—against the Court below, which condemned them—are to be still held in reserve pending the interpretation which may be hereafter given by German jurists on the Hague provisions which apply.

* * *

AN inadvertence in Dr. J. Beattie Crozier's 'Last Words on Great Issues' recently published should not go unrectified. Referring to what he calls the "scale in the Mind" whence moral judgments derive, Dr. Crozier thinks his pamphlet 'God or Force?' written over thirty years ago, first enunciated that conception, and thus—as he supposes—anticipated Dr. Martineau's well-known exposition of it in 'Types of Ethical Theory.' It is true that this work was published after the pamphlet, but of course it contained the substance of lectures delivered at Manchester New College during many years previously. And the same idea of the 'Scale of Worth' was explicitly set forth in Martineau's essay on 'Whewell's Morality,' 1845, and alluded to in subsequent publications. It is interesting to see that just as Martineau held that this moral "scale" does not depend on an arbitrary act of divine will but exists in rerum naturâ, so Dr. Crozier considers it to be an "ultimate" beyond which the mind cannot go.

* * *

"PLAIN living," perforce, we are now to have, evidently; perhaps we shall be bodily none the worse for it in the end.

But how about the other half of Wordsworth's ideal—"high thinking"? Is it impracticable, even impossible for people placed as most of us are? A good while since we ventured to remind our readers of brave old Thomas Fuller's cultivation of 'Good Thoughts in Bad Times,' and even in 'Worse Times.' When our own times approach the "worst," as they would appear to be doing, have we in our turn courage and sense enough to cultivate the "best thoughts"? If not, we shall undergo the "worst" indeed ourselves; and, what is of more consequence, our work will not be done with the maximum of sane personal energy.

* * *

AND so, with all modest but persistent urgency, we venture once more into that same path of reminding—if it be necessary—though we are pretty sure that among our readers are many who do not need it. They know well that the periodical literature of the day (even of the week!), especially in its present minimised forms, cannot adequately give the food for thought required by an alert and living mind. One of the sanest men we know of, not being easily able to discover new masterpieces—who is?—has deliberately turned to his Old Masters again; not (he says) in vain. It was when Wordsworth revisited the banks of the Wye that his mind expanded to the magnitude of conceiving the famous 'Lines' composed above Tintern Abbey. Going back to our teachers, may we not hope that we, too, after three years of greatly mingled experience, may learn from them to see and feel and live, as we never did before?

* * *

OUR readers, who have been so constant in their generous support of the Belgian Hospital Fund, will share our satisfaction in observing the completion of £20,000 in the amount raised thus far. May we not say, very gratefully, that this is a sure sign of what our people can do when a sufficient cause is shown. The need continues; and having done so well hitherto the supply, we believe, will continue also.

AT THE CRISIS.

No one can doubt that at the present moment the world is passing through the greatest revolution the ages have seen. It is not simply that the social order which has served us and our fathers is dissolving before our eyes: the social centre of gravity has shifted. Democracy, so overwhelming in its numerical preponderance, has come to a consciousness of its power and is eagerly insisting on the most startling experiments. The process had begun before the war, but since, and chiefly owing to the war, the pace has been accelerated tenfold. All Europe is in the melting pot and what will come out of it not the wisest among us can predict. Certain it is, however, that when democracy is once in the saddle there will be a changed world. It would be folly to attempt any picture of what the world will be like three years hence. To-day everything is in a state of flux and confusion. The wild welter of war is driving us, it may be towards a happier condition; it may be towards a precipice where most of the things that men and nations value will be overwhelmed in a horrible catastrophe, and all schemes of betterment and security will go down the gulf. The waste of human life, the waste of treasure, the overthrow of long-established governments, the demands of extremists, whether military extremists in Germany and at home, or of peace extremists in Russia or on the Clyde, the tragedy of swift disruption, the blind forces of passion, revenge, and anarchy, the anger of whole populations against intolerable conditions of life brought about by the stupidities, the callousness, the ambitions and pride of rulers—all these have brought the civilised world to a crisis, in which a choice has to be made either of a return to barbarism or an advance toward the realisation of a larger and more effective Goodwill than the world has yet known. Often in the past critical occasions have called forth great leaders, but where are such leaders to-day? With the exception of President Wilson none of the world's rulers seem to be big enough to carry through the business—the business of making the world free. If it is done at all it will have to be by the united efforts of the democracy. The fact is, while governments and rulers are on their trial democracy is also at the crossroads. The rise of the common folk of the belligerent Powers into new responsibility may tell in one of two ways. One way is that indicated by Mr.

Henderson and the Labour party he leads; the other is the way of the Clyde workers.

The demands of the Labour party as a whole are on the line of President Wilson's declarations of aim and Lord Lansdowne's speech in answer to the critics of his famous letter. If workmen in the countries at war are united and resolved there is no doubt they can force on their present rulers, in quite legitimate ways, the policy of peace by negotiation. That does not mean the least relaxation of effort to carry out the ideal aims which raised so much enthusiasm when the war began. Of these aims Belgium, its full freedom and full reparation, stands first in any proposals of peace which have the least chance of public approval. On this point Mr. Henderson is as stout and firm as any member of the War Cabinet. And Belgium freed is a symbol of other things.

The Labour method for achieving as soon as possible the ends we desire is that of the education of public opinion by means of national and international conferences on all the questions involved, and so arriving at a common agreement. It is to be hoped our Government will throw no obstacle in the way of such conferences. If the last utterances of Mr. Lloyd George are to be taken at their face value he, President Wilson, and Mr. Henderson are not so far apart as to preclude finding a basis for concerted action. Peace by negotiation does not mean giving up the great aims to which we pledged ourselves in 1914. But it does mean taking advantage of every opportunity for persuading the peoples of Germany and Austria that what we are out for is the establishment of public right as against military might, that we are not out for annexation, nor economic war, nor any kind of ascendancy, but to secure for all time conditions of peace and goodwill.

But the method of the Clyde workers, and to a certain extent of the Engineers' Union, is by a "down tools" rebellion to compel an immediate armistice at any cost, without reference to Belgium or to any other of the German atrocities—a policy of peace at any price which would leave Germany in a position to renew the war at the first favourable moment.* It is not for any one section of the nation to speak for the whole. "Down tools" means the victory of Hindenburg. It is a threat to the nation, which if ruthlessly carried out would end in wreck and ruin. It is not for the Clyde workers to govern the country but for Parliament. Nothing but anarchy can come of threats and strikes for compelling the Government to be false to the aims which animated the nation at the first. It is here that democracy is at a crisis and on its trial. By wise and resolute action through its representatives in Parliament it can do much to bring about the peace we all desire. The vast majority of working people in this country only need reassuring that the spirit and purpose and aims with which we entered the war are the same to-day as then—not to crush the German people, not to acquire territory or anything else for ourselves, but to secure for the world the right to live freely and peacefully according to the dictates of justice, freedom, and goodwill—and then our people will be as willing to suffer and endure as they were willing at first to face death and destruction. The craving for peace is manifest in all lands, but not a peace which will leave militarism in the ascendant. It is that which makes the "down tools" policy criminal.

* The resolution was as follows: "That we view with grave concern the attitude of the Government in introducing the Man-Power Bill and their insistence upon passing it into law. We are strongly of opinion that the Government should immediately open up negotiations with all the enemy countries, and that facilities be afforded the Labour and Socialist bodies of this country to meet with Labour and Socialist bodies of the Allies and the Central Powers that their views may be obtained; and, further, we warn the Government that unless they do afford such opportunities to Labour in Britain, or if they fail to give satisfactory guarantees that they will open up negotiations, we will down tools."

Europe appears to be this very hour at the crisis of her agony and fate. Confusion reigns almost everywhere. No man can predict what the course of events will be in the next few weeks. Only two things stand out with growing clearness—first, that there can be no security for the peace of the world, no freedom, no higher life for the masses of mankind while Germany still remains an armed camp, and the German Government a military despotism. The miseries of Europe, the baulked hopes of social reform, the steady backward lapse into brutality and barbarism, all arise out of the deadly spirit of militarism. Secondly, it is perfectly plain that mere retaliation—an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth—will never bring about a permanent peace. It is surely a hopeful sign that the wild talk too common among us only a little while since of a "knock-out blow," the "crushing of Germany," "pushing Germany beyond the Rhine," "economic war when the blood-lust is appeased" is now scarcely heard.

It is true that The Morning Post and the Northcliffe press still raise their voices for revenge, and the destruction of Germany whether as a military or economic factor in the life of Europe. But the good sense of the nation as a whole has recovered itself from this poisonous gas of a spurious patriotism. Retaliation in kind helps no one. To be brutal as Germany is brutal is only still further to harden Germany's heart. Yet another thing is coming more and more into view and taking an increasing hold on the minds of men—the idea embodied in a League of Nations. The great diplomatic formula which has ruled in Europe for the last hundred years, the Balance of Power, has turned out to be a rotten reed in our hands. It led directly to watchful jealousies, suspicion, increasing armaments, and a lying diplomacy. But a League of Nations, which must include Germany if it is to have any chance of success, points as nothing else does to a way not only out of the present horrible mess, but to the prevention of anything of a like nature in the future. The solution of the present crisis will not be found in the cultivation of hatred, nor the boycotting of Germany, nor by a trade "war after war." All this is a kind of insanity, since it contains the seeds of future wars, and promises the growth instead of decline of the military spirit. If the world is to live at peace and in freedom it will not be by "right of conquest," but by that increase of the spirit of goodwill which can alone make a League of Nations possible.

THE MANTLE OF ELIJAH.

In fire and flame Elijah passed away
As now pass myriads of the sons of men
On flaming fields, in burning towns, even
Upon the seas and in the air, where day
By day among the clouds they cleave a way
Through fog, through darkness, in the glare of sun:
Chariots indeed of fire: these fought and won
In combats stern, in battle's fierce array.
E'en as Elijah cast his mantle o'er
His faithful servant, ere he left him lone,
So may their mantles over us be thrown;
That we with eyes of faith may see the door
Of Heaven opening and hear a sound:
The horsemen and the chariots gathering round.

* * *

THE Rev. F. L. Hosmer, our celebrated hymnist, now well beyond his threescore and ten, has been staying recently at Dorchester, where the grim New England weather has rather tried his strength, and made him look longingly towards his beloved California. His greeting to friends there was one acceptable to his friends everywhere: "Peace and inward satisfaction."

PROF. JULIUS WELLHAUSEN, of Göttingen, one of the greatest and most influential Biblical scholars of modern times, died last month. He was born in 1844. A notice of his life and work will be given in our issue next week by Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter.

OUR CHURCHES AND OUR MINISTRY.

FOR a number of years before the war it was evident that in increasing numbers our people were ceasing to look upon chapel-going as of the established order of their lives. The process has gone on. Chapels and Sunday schools "went down." It became the fact that only ministers exceptional in the powers of getting people to attend public worship provided the exceptional instances where things were otherwise. However good ministers might be in other ways, congregations would not rally round them. The war has precipitated this among other changes.

As a practical prospect, it is not to be hoped for that congregations of themselves will save the situation. The only hope, therefore, is in getting in time a sufficient number of ministers of the natural gifts and of the education to get the people. When a young man goes through a theological college he gives hostages to fortune. The ministry is not rich in the things of this world: it is a highly precarious profession. By going through a theological college, a young man unfits himself for other ways in which he can make a decent living.

Now, whether we like it or not, there is such a thing as our denomination—the denomination of churches of the free basis. Our denomination is ceasing to exist. Soon, unless there be a sudden reorganisation, there will be no churches of the free basis. If we do not want this to happen, it is necessary that we recognise that we are a denomination. Union is strength. The different twigs are being broken. It is only as a bundle we can survive.

In fact, we are a denomination. It is idle for Manchester College to pretend that it is not denominational. Our denomination is practically its constituency. Our denomination appeals for students for our colleges. We have a responsibility to these men. If we want to save our churches of the free basis, it is necessary to offer some guarantee that a young man after having, it may be at our appeal, risked his life, shall not, if he be unsuccessful in getting people to attend his church, be left alone to sink or swim.

The first agendum, therefore, is for the denomination to look after churches that are able to pay a decent stipend. Young men fresh from College may not have acquired confidence or developed their powers enough to justify the confidence of our larger churches. But there are more obscure "causes" among us which from endowments are able to pay a decent stipend. These ought to be brought together—the young men and these churches. Small causes that are hopeless ought to be closed, and denominational funds used to provide adequate stipends at churches that are not hopeless.

On the other hand, it ought clearly to be recognised that we ought not to invite young men, however good otherwise, unless they show some reasonable promise of being able to "get people." There ought to be a denominational committee for the selection of men for the ministry. The committee, faced with a candidate whom natural defects have practically foredoomed to failure in the ministry, ought to say to him, in effect: "We cannot accept the responsibility of your proceeding further. If you choose to do so on your own responsibility, we cannot stop you, but we cannot accept the responsibility."

Now, as to education, circumstances of to-day are very different from the circumstances of yesterday. The sermon to-day that is acceptable is not founded and produced as was the sermon of yesterday. True, the student ought to have at least a short, scholarly, accurate knowledge of the history of the Bible, the history of Christianity and of religion in general, of philosophy, of sociology, of the practical work of the ministry. It is of very great importance that he should have the culture of the scholar, that he should be alive to life, to art. These things he could learn through the above mentioned studies, but not through them alone. Therefore, quite apart from the special training for the ministry, he ought to know "something of everything and everything of something."

Now, when students come to a theological college, their previous education may not have been wide enough or deep enough. It is, therefore, necessary to provide tuition in those subjects which undoubtedly tend to awaken in him the culture of the scholar, to make him alive to life, to art. To meet the needs, the teaching would have to be reorganised, and ought to include general literature, devotional literature, religious art and music, liturgies, hymnology. The practical problems of providing this reorganised teaching are not really difficult. The staff ought to be chosen, not as at present as Old Testament tutor, New Testament tutor, philosophy tutor, &c., but as men capable of dividing the requisite fields of study among them, as far as possible, the specialisation being according to the new values. Visiting teachers could be arranged for if necessary. Tuition in religious music could be taught by the college organist.

The time calls for bold reconstruction. Would it not be possible that some modus vivendi should be arranged between our colleges so that their respective advantages might be shared, at least, by students who desired this? It is wrong to model our colleges on those of other denominations. Where theological education is free, our colleges are behind. The present writer knows that some of the most honoured teachers at our own colleges are strongly in favour of the changes before us, but are not able, as can be readily understood, to speak out. He may be permitted to say from personal knowledge that in Germany and in America all the additional subjects were, before the war, and doubtless are now, available for theological students. It could quite easily be the case for our theological students. We could again lead the way in theological education.

It is a critical question, the getting ministers who could "get people."

R. F. RATTRAY.

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

MISS KATHARINE BRUCE.

At the junction of Beethoven Street and Herries Street in the Queen's Park district of Paddington, but at some distance from the Park and amid mean streets and poor houses is a small triangular bit of land, which for some years lay unoccupied and desolate, with the usual scattering of brickbats and refuse. It seemed unsuitable for ordinary buildings, and was in some danger of being used for an inferior public house. Miss Katharine Bruce, a member of the Board of Guardians and the Borough Council, secured the land, thought out the best use for it, had it fenced round with a light iron railing, laid out with a cheerful broken-flag pavement, with a narrow flower border round it planted with trees, seats placed against the sunny wall on the north side formed by the ends of the adjacent houses, a fountain in the middle, the gift of her sister; and then having made the waste place beautiful, a quiet rest corner where old people can sit in the sun and children can play about, she gave it to the Borough of Paddington. On the wall above the seat is a tablet bearing the names of men from the Queen's Park district who have given their lives for their country. The quiet rest corner, a desolate place made beautiful, has now become a memorial of a woman who gave her life for her fellow men.

Katharine Bruce, born January 1, 1852, died January 24, 1918, was the youngest of the eight children of Henry Bruce, son of the Rev. William Bruce of Belfast. She was five years younger than her next sister, and was a delicate and sensitive child. But they were a gifted family, inheriting the talents of the Bruces and the Swanwicks. Her mother, Mary Swanwick, was sister of Anna Swanwick and was one of the innumerable descendants of Philip Henry. One of her brothers was Alexander Bruce the memorial of whom stands in University College, London, testifying to his genius and the loss sustained by the medical world in his early death; another was William Wallace Bruce, whose work on the London County Council, especially as Chairman of the Housing Committee, ranks high among the records of the wise and faithful service of able men who have taken up public work with a sole view to the public good. Endowed with artistic talent of a high order, she had every opportunity for study and for the practice of her art, and might have indulged herself in the exercise of her natural talents with all the comforts of life and all the luxuries that she cared for, and the friendship of many friends, and nothing to thwart or distract her. And just at the time when she was most entirely free for this, she relinquished the Art which she loved; and, for the sake of those less fortunate than herself she took up public duties which were in themselves peculiarly difficult and even painful to her. She was not of the temperament that enjoys public life. She had no delight in its conflicts, little satisfaction in its victories, which indeed are generally very incomplete and insecure, and she felt deeply its frequent defeats. On the Board of Guardians she and those who were with her in her efforts for more consideration for the aged and better care for the children and better treatment for the sick, had hard work and met with much opposition. On the Borough Council she was the first woman to be elected, and had to bear alone not only opposition but insult to her position and her sex. Happily we all forget these things easily and quickly, and she was quick to forgive, and it is all covered now by the appreciation in Paddington, and especially in the Queen's Park Ward, of her work and her character, of which Dr. Nolan and Alderman McKenzie spoke with such deep feeling at the Funeral Service in Queen's Park Congregational Church. But at the time of her election there were men in most of our Municipalities wise enough to see the danger to their supposed "interests" that would arise if they had women like Miss Bruce on the Borough Councils, and base enough deliberately to set to work to make the position intolerable for such women. But in her was a reserve of strength they had not reckoned on, the love that beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things, and she went on in spite of disappointments, not merely trying to get for the people the things they wanted and demanded, but creating and fostering in them the demand for the things that they ought to want. No ideal was too high for her or for them, nothing could be too beautiful, nothing too good. She would never bring things down to the level of the popular taste and be satisfied because the people were satisfied. It was not enough that their homes should be sanitary and supplied with the necessary appliances and accommodation for healthy life. She wanted every home to be comfortable and to be beautiful, and to have beautiful things and beautiful lives in it. There was no comfort, no luxury of her own that she did not want others to have. She cared for them with a wise and generous care. She wanted others to care for them in the same way. But above all she wanted them to care for themselves and their children in the same way.

A mere catalogue of the things she did on the Board of Guardians and the Borough Council, though it would be a long list, would give but little idea of her real work. She served on many important committees and was most diligent in her attendance. She was specially interested in the consumptive and designed a special shelter bed for them which is widely used in the open air treatment. Another special care of hers was child welfare, and the work of the various maternity centres. She was the first woman to be on the Public Health Committee. She organised Arts and Crafts Exhibitions in the Queen's Park Hall, and met the expense of them. The Day Nursery in Lancefield Street for children whose parents are at work was of her making, and it is to her that the children owe their recreation ground in Queen's Park. There were few charities in the Borough to which she did not contribute.

But there was much more than all this. Her personal care and devotion was unrelenting, unwearying. She was a welcome, nay, a beloved visitor in homes where there was sickness or trouble and sorrow. She gave not only her time, her money, her intellectual and artistic powers, but herself.

And in all this there was the same yearning for an unattainable ideal as in her art. She left many unfinished pictures. Her two greatest finished works, complete, perfect to the minutest detail, Antigone, and the Five Foolish Virgins, breathe an unsatisfied longing for something lost, whether by victory or by defeat, out of our reach, yet somehow ours in spirit in the very desire. The brave quiet figure at the foot of the stairway, the two figures descending together from the door that is closed against them betray no sense of despair; and among the unfinished works two of the most striking are the figure of Truth breaking her way through a barrier of thorns, and a winged female figure gazing down with infinite tenderness and compassion and hands outstretched to beckon and uplift.

F. H. J.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium. (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais. (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

157TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	19,953	5	11
Mr. George Banks (36th)	1	0	0
Dr. Vandenstein, Belgian Army Medical Service	2	11	1
Mr. W. N. Martin (17th)	1	1	0
Mrs. Julian Winsor (37th)	1	0	0
Mr. H. Woolcott Thompson (20th)	25	0	0
Mrs. Haydn Morris (3rd)	0	10	0
Miss K. A. Finer (9th)	0	5	0
Lewes Unitarian Sewing Circle, per Miss M. Duplock	2	2	0
Mr. J. Arthur Kenrick (11th)	10	0	0
The Rev. and Mrs. T. Bowen Evans (27th)	1	0	0
X.	1	0	0
Mr. C. Sydney Jones (4th)	50	0	0
	£20,048	15	0

A donation of one guinea was put down last week to Bank Street, Bolton. It should have been Bank Street, Bury. Will our friends at Bury please accept our apologies for the mistake?

*Parcels have been received from:—*Mrs. Henry Woodall; Miss Mary Dendy; The Misses Garrett; Mme. Dumont; Miss C. Sharpe; Mrs. Mayer; Miss Webster; Miss L. C. Jevons; J. S., Plymouth; Miss Shaen; Mrs. Wilkinson; Miss Partridge; The Dowager Lady Jenner; Anon.; Mrs. James Forman; Mrs. Drummond; Miss Grundy; Miss Swaine; Bank Street, Bolton, War Workers' Circle (per Miss M. Ramsden); Redlynch House Work Depot (per Mrs. Robinson); The Patients at the Mauldreth Hospital for Incurables, Heaton, Mersey (per Mrs. Massey); Mill Hill Sewing League, Leeds (per Mrs. P. Jackson); Mrs. Webb; Miss Hervey; Mrs. Hanna; Miss Lee; Mrs. E. Oliver; Mrs. Edward Hecht; Mrs. de Zouche and Miss Garrington; Miss B. Reed; Rosslyn Hill Sewing Society (per Mrs. Thomas Cobb); Miss Colfox; Miss E. Heaton Wall; Miss Thorneley; Miss M. H. Poynting; The Misses Badland; New Meeting Society, Kidderminster (per Miss Badland); X.; Mrs. Kenrick Champion; Miss Shannon; Mrs. Tom Cook; Miss Leigh Browne.

WEEKLY NOTES.

Subscribers will rejoice with me that the donations to this Fund have this week reached over £20,000. As the work started in January, 1915, this works out to an average of about £20 a day. In the same time we have received 135,000 gifts in kind, or about 144 a day. I have estimated the value of these and the 144 cannot possibly be worth less than £20—so we may confidently say we have sent out over £40,000 worth of goods to the Belgian military hospitals and civilian institutions. Among the gifts I have not included such large ones as a motor car, an American organ, and a few other similar gifts.

I am glad to say that each man at the Hospital for Tuberculous Soldiers at Chambéry has now what he required in the way of mufflers, mittens, bedsocks, and hot water bottles. I have just heard that the American Fund for French Wounded are starting a depot at Chambéry, and will now be able to supply all needs on the spot. We have tided over a time when no other help was available and now we can leave them to this American society.

There have been recently a considerable number of Belgian doctors who have been sent back from Germany, after spending many months in captivity (against all the laws of the Geneva Convention). These men have joined the Belgian Army Medical Corps and are serving at the front and in hospitals. They had no instruments whatever, so we have been able to provide them with the most essential. These we send in a little pocket khaki waterproof case which is considered by them all to be very practical and useful. I have a great many applications for these cases from such men and from medical students working under qualified men out there.

Miss Holmes writes that they are very busy at the Hut in Calais in spite of all the raids there. There were 900 men to dinner on one day, a rather severe strain on the commissariat. But entertainments, &c., go on as usual, and so far the Hut has escaped injury. There was a serious fire just across the road a week or two ago, with the wind blowing towards our Hut. Fortunately the English Army Fire Brigade arrived in time to prevent the fire spreading across the road. The Maternity Home has also escaped injury, but there have been very few cases there lately. All who can, naturally, go away from the town, but for those who cannot it is a real boon still.

ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Men's dressing-gowns.
Pyjamas, shirts, socks, and all sorts of men's underclothing.
Slippers, mufflers, mittens.
Clothing for women and children, especially stockings.
Games, jig-saw puzzles, writing paper.
Calico bags, 2 ft. by 3 ft., and any smaller size.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THE BOOK ROOM IN HAYRE.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged ..	17	9	0
Mrs. Robinson ..	5	0	0
Mr. E. F. Grundy ..	1	0	0
Miss A. Smith ..	0	5	0
Mr. E. Henry Lee ..	1	0	0
H. ..	0	10	0
Miss Swaine ..	1	0	0
Henry Hirst ..	0	10	0
B. J. Hobbs ..	1	1	0
	£27	15	0

A MINISTER'S HEROISM.

GALLANT CONDUCT OF REV. H. TAYLOR.

ON Sunday morning last the Rev. J. C. Odgers spoke at Ullet Road Church, Liverpool, in the course of his sermon, of the terrible adventure recently experienced by the Rev. Lieutenant Harman Taylor, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., and the finely heroic part he played in it. He was in a transport crowded with soldiers bound for Palestine, which, while on the way to Alexandria, was torpedoed and sunk. Mr. Taylor acted throughout with entire coolness and courage. He was thrown into the sea, but swam to a boat where he took command and rescued numbers of men, attending to the wounded and inspiring confidence. Over 700 men were drowned. The boat was eventually picked up by a trawler, and Mr. Taylor and his companions are safe. Mr. Odgers spoke with pride of the heroism of his former assistant. It was what all had expected of him, and when fate made the sudden demand he was found calm and ready. This was yet another entry on the roll of fine achievement so conspicuously the possession of Ullet Road Church.

THE SOUTH EAST WALES UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

THE quarterly meetings of the above Society were held in the Unitarian Church, Pontypridd, on Monday, February 4, when delegates were present from most of the affiliated churches. The morning session was devoted to transacting the business of the Society, including the presentation of reports from grant-aided churches, and the report of the District Minister. The President, Mr. D. R. Llewellyn, was in the chair. In the afternoon a conference was held after a brief devotional service, the chair being taken by the Rev. Simon Jones. The subject chosen for discussion was 'The Churches after the War,' and the principal speakers were Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter (President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Society), and the Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe (Wood Green) who also attended as a representative of the parent association. Both utterances were timely and helpful, and brimful of wise suggestion. The Rev. E. T. Evans opened the discussion, speaking from a minister's point of view, while Mr. John Lewis spoke of the outlook as it presented itself to the mind of a layman. A useful discussion followed in which several speakers took part. Many valuable suggestions were thrown out, and it is to be hoped, as a result of the Conference, that the churches will be awakened to a sense of their present duty, that they may be prepared, to some extent at least, to deal wisely with some of the many urgent social and religious problems which will press upon them for solution after the war. At the close of the Conference the delegates were entertained to tea by the members of the Women's Guild, a strong branch of which is doing splendid work for the church. A religious service was held in the evening, the devotional part of which was impressively conducted by Miss E. R. Lee, B.A., Pentre, Dr. Carpenter being the preacher. The subject of the sermon was 'Fellow-workers with God.' The main thought developed in the course of it was that humanity is linked to a purpose greater and more far reaching than it knows; a purpose, moreover, which places itself at the disposal of humanity, ever working in and through it for all noble ends. Profound in thought, clear in diction, lofty in its moral and spiritual conception, universal in its application, and often-times impassioned in delivery, the sermon created a deep impression upon the large congregation present.

There were large and representative gatherings at all the meetings, and in addition to the ordinary meetings of the Society, others of a missionary nature were held at various places in conjunction with them. Dr. Carpenter lectured at the Old Meeting House, Aberdare, on the previous Saturday evening, and also preached at two of our churches on the Sunday, whilst the Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe likewise preached at two other churches on the same day, and conducted religious services at Cefn Coed on Tuesday evening, February 5, and Highland Place Church on Wednesday evening, Feb. 6. There were some who rather doubted the expediency of making this missionary effort at what they feared would be an inopportune time; but the very successful results which have been everywhere achieved hitherto, and the interest which the visit of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association representatives has aroused, have fully justified the committee in deciding to carry it out. The committee, too, are profoundly grateful to the Association for the very generous way in which they have placed their services at the disposal of the Society, and great satisfaction was expressed on all sides at the fact that the President of the Association had honoured the churches in visiting the South East Wales area three times during his tenure of office.

A CAMP COLLEGE.

THE educational movement of which the University of Vimy Ridge is one of the most interesting illustrations had its origin, it appears, at Witley Camp, the headquarters of a Canadian division in England. This was the first of the Canadian camps to launch an educational programme in our country, and it is interesting to learn that Khaki College, as it is called, "began under a tree in the 'Pine Grove,' much in the same way as the most famous of ancient schools of Greek philosophy began." An article on the subject has appeared recently in The Times Educational Supplement, from which we learn that Khaki College has eight departments: classics, modern languages, English, Celtic, literature, history, mathematics and engineering, business, and agriculture. Each department has a head and also a full teaching staff of recognised academic standing. The constitution of the college provides that the governing body shall consist of a Chancellor, who shall be, ex officio, the G.O.C. of the Division; a Senate comprising all the active teaching staff, together with two representatives in each infantry brigade, one from each artillery brigade, and one from each unit of the divisional troops, to be appointed by their respective commanding officers, and an executive faculty, consisting of the heads of the departments, together with two others appointed by the Senate. The Senate elects the president and secretary, the latter being an officer of the Y.M.C.A. The functions of the Senate are to review the general work of education, to receive reports from the Executive Faculty and to decide appeals, and it alone has the right to alter the constitution. The practical administration of the college is in the hands of the Executive Faculty, whose duty it is to secure teachers, to arrange classes, to provide necessary accommodation, and to supervise all the courses of study which must be submitted to it for approval. The heads of departments are held responsible for the work of their own department. Certificates of proficiency are issued by the college on the recommendation of the heads of each department concerned, such certificates being signed by such heads, and countersigned by the Chancellor and the President. It is further provided that the Chancellor, the Senior Chaplain, and the Y.M.C.A. Area Supervisor shall, ex officio, be members both of the Senate and of the Executive Faculty.

The President of the College is Lieut.-Col. Day, formerly Professor of English in the University of New Brunswick, and subsequently Professor of English in the Carnegie Institute. The Chairman of the Executive Faculty, who is also head of the Department of Classics, is the Hon. Capt. J. A. Petrie, formerly Lecturer in Oriental Languages at Queen's University, Kingston, Ont. Major R. L. Calder, of Laval University, Montreal, is head of the Department of Modern Languages. The head of the Department of History was Capt. C. McKinnon, Principal of Pine Hill College, Halifax, until he went to France to establish the University of Vimy Ridge, and was succeeded by Lieut.-Col. J. A. Cooper, a Canadian journalist and an ex-President of the Canadian Press Association. The heads of the other departments are: English, Lieut.-Col. Day; Celtic Literature, Hon. Capt. A. J. Macdonald; Mathematics and Engineering, Lieut.-Col. Malcolm, Professor of Municipal Engineering and Surveying, Queen's University; Business, the Hon. Capt. W. G. Frisby, ex Assistant Principal of Kent School and teacher in the School of Finance, Toronto; Agriculture, Lieut. P. Stewart, District Supervisor in New Ontario. There are two lecturers in history, three in English, four in classics, three in modern languages, and one in Celtic literature, these subjects forming the literary course, or, as we in our English Universities would call it, the Faculty of Arts. There are four lecturers in mathematics and two in engineering, four in book-keeping and two in shorthand, and one each in commercial history, commercial law, economics, and penmanship. In the Agricultural Department of the College there are lecturers on animal husbandry, on field husbandry, on horticulture, on farm book-keeping, &c.

Although Khaki College has only been in full swing for some five months, examinations were held at Christmas in all the various departments. There are over 900 enrolled students, of whom about 370 sat for the first examination.

THE PENAL REFORM LEAGUE.

No Quarterly Record has been published by the Penal Reform League since that for July, 1914, but we are glad to see an announcement in the Report which has recently been issued for 1914-17, that it is hoped to commence the publication of it again shortly. The past year has been marked by a renewal of activity with a revival of public interest. Great uneasiness has been manifested in regard to the urgent problem of juvenile delinquency, and the Howard Association issued a thoughtful little book by Mr. Cecil Leeson, their new secretary, under the title 'The Child and the War,' which will be found of great value by workers in this field. The Home Office also formed a committee of representatives of agencies for juvenile welfare, which is a hopeful sign of the times, and at a conference on 'Juvenile Delinquency' held in Caxton Hall last February, under the auspices of the League, the following resolutions were passed:—

1. That juvenile delinquency is largely the result of the community's neglect of its children and of their parents (especially the mothers), and is to be combated by providing for all children a full education for life, including ample scope for play, and for all parents the means of performing their duties efficiently, rather than by punishing delinquents without helping them to a better use of their time and energies.

In the meantime there is immediate need of greater opportunities for healthy activity for children and young people, and this conference strongly supports the scheme of the Howard Association for Provisional Councils of Child Welfare in populous centres, and would also urge measures for enabling the Scout Movement to reach those strata of lads and girls where there is particular need of guidance.

2. That a Committee be formed to draw up a memorandum setting forth a policy with regard to the problems involved in juvenile delinquency, and, if possible, to promote the organisation of Provisional Councils of Child Welfare for each of the London boroughs, the Committee to consist of the following members, with power to add to their number: Lord Henry Cavendish-Bentinck, M.P., Chairman; Mr. Cecil Leeson, Secretary of the Howard Association; Miss Philp, State Children's Association; Arthur St. John, Penal Reform League.

A memorandum drawn up by the Committee thus appointed, entitled 'A National Minimum for Youth,' has now been published as one of the Penal Reform League Series, and can be obtained from the Hon. Secretary, Capt Arthur St. John, 68A Park Hill Road, London, N.W.3. A memorandum on 'Penal Reform' which was submitted to the Russian Minister of Justice on the outbreak of the Revolution, as the result of a suggestion made by a friend of M. Kerensky, and which contains some helpful suggestions as to the wisest, most practical, and humane methods of dealing with crime and the criminal, is added to the Report in the form of an appendix.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Belfast.—The death occurred on January 19 of Mr. Stuart S. Little of Castlelodge, Greenisland, a member of the First Presbyterian Church, Belfast, after a short illness. The funeral service both at the house and at the graveside on January 22 was conducted by the minister, the Rev. H. J. Rossington, and the very large number of persons present at the interment bore witness to the respect in which Mr. Little was held both in business and social circles.

Belper.—The Rev. A. Leslie Smith, B.A., has accepted a unanimous invitation to the Hunslet Unitarian Church, Leeds. He leaves Belper at the end of March, after a ministry of nine years in the town.

Blackpool.—A sound financial position, with a balance in hand higher than any of recent years, was reported by Mr. W. McKinley, Hon. Treasurer, at the annual congregational meeting of the Waterloo Road Unitarian Church, held after evening service on Sunday, February 3, Mr. W. Hartley Bracewell (President) in the chair. Mr. A. Wilkinson, Hon. Secretary, stated in his excellent report of church activities that several families had joined the church during the year, and that the prospects were very encouraging. Mr. Bracewell was unanimously re-elected President, and the other officers were re-elected.

Bournemouth.—The first of a series of addresses on 'Religion and National Reconstruction' was given by the Rev. V. D. Davis in the Bournemouth Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, on Sunday evening. He said they had tested new and better ways of using their resources; and these, which had served them in war, must be used with yet greater effect in peace, to make good the losses and secure an ampler, worthier life for the peoples of every land. The years of conflict had brought inevitably a great impoverishment of the nations. Their burdens must be accepted, not in bitterness nor with a greedy scramble of the strong and selfish for what they could get at the cost of the less fortunate, but with mutual aid, sympathy, and brotherhood as their watchwords. They could learn to be content with fewer things and simpler ways of life, slowly building up again the desolations and nurturing a healthy, temperate life, with joy in the universal gifts of beauty and delight, which God provided for them so richly in His world, feeding their hearts on admiration, hope, and love.

Chatham.—The Rev. F. Cottier, of the Pioneer Preachers and the Home Missionary College, Manchester, was inducted to the ministry of the Hamond Hill Church on Saturday, February 2. The service was held at 4 o'clock, conducted by the Rev. W. H. Drummond, minister of the Provincial Assembly, who also gave the charge to the congregation, the charge to the minister being given by Principal Mellone. In the evening a public meeting was held. The chair was taken by Miss Waite, Chairman of the Church Committee, who, after reading letters of regret for absence from the Rev. R. J. Campbell, Vicar of Christ Church, Victoria Street, S.W., and the Rev. Dr. Orchard of the King's Weigh House, and the Rev. H. McLachlan, Warden and Tutor of the Home Missionary College, Manchester, welcomed Mr. Cottier on behalf of the congregation in a delightful little speech. Addresses of welcome were also given by the Revs. Dr. Mellone, W. H. Drummond, and T. P. Spedding, and by Mr. Atwood, the senior churchwarden. Mr. Cottier in his reply said that he felt he had learnt much during his recent experience with the Y.M.A.C. in France, and hoped that he would be able to live up to the many friendly things which had been said about him that day.

Huddersfield.—On January 30 a lecture on 'My Indian Tour,' with special regard to the four religions—Hinduism, Buddhism, Jainism, and Mohammedanism—illustrated by lantern views, was given by Sir Robert Pearce, F.R.A.S., M.P., at the Temperance Hall, Huddersfield, under the auspices of the Fitzwilliam Street Social Union. The lecturer described a tour made through India, from Bombay, northwards past the famous cliffs in which were the religious colleges and churches cut out of the face of the rock, towards Jaipur, Gwalior, Delhi, and then down the Ganges to Benares and Bhagadpur. Some beautiful pictures of Indian architecture were thrown on the screen.

Ilford.—At the Annual Meeting of the congregation of the Unitarian Church on Saturday, February 2, a letter was read from the Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., stating that after much anxious thought he had accepted an invitation to take charge of the church at Mansfield, Notts. He therefore tendered his resignation, which will take effect in June next. He cordially acknowledged the kindness of the members during the nearly seven years of his pastorate, and said he should feel the parting very keenly. Several speakers testified to the value of Mr. Biggs's services and spoke of his many lovable qualities. As the first minister of the church he has done excellent work in many directions, especially among the young people, and in building up the Sunday school. The resignation was accepted with regret. Mr. E. R. Fyson, who was Chairman of the church during the first ten years of its existence, was elected to his former office in view of the special circumstances which had arisen; and he called for a strong committee and the enthusiastic support of the congregation to overcome every difficulty which may have to be encountered before a suitable successor to Mr. Biggs is discovered and appointed. Mr. Arthur Beecroft was re-elected Treasurer; Mr. A. L. Riggs Secretary; and Messrs. Walter Russell and H. Huntley auditors, together with a committee of twelve. The evening services are to be held at 6 instead of 3.30 on and after the first Sunday in March.

Leeds.—The fifty-fourth Annual Meeting of the Leeds Unitarian Friendly Society was held on January 26, when the Report and Balance Sheet were presented. The membership is now 329. The sum of £172 2s. 2d. has been paid out for sick benefits and £48 in death claims. Members' contributions amounted to £178 12s., which would have been increased by £35 had not the contributions been suspended to members now on active service. Of these there are 56—three having fallen during the past year, and two are now reported missing. A resolution was passed requesting the President and Secretary to send a letter of fraternal greetings with a copy of the Report and Balance Sheet to each of these. The claims of sick benefit and death claims have been normal, and this enables the Committee to carry forward the handsome sum of £170 1s. 7d. on the year's working, which was mainly due to the investments now made, and which are free of income tax. The funds now stand at £3,240 5s. 6½d., £1,570 being invested in the War Loan and £1,450 in Corporation Stocks. The President congratulated the members on the financial status of the Society, and the excellent spirit and good feeling in the Committee and among the members, assuring them that the interests of all were safeguarded, and that the Society merited the confidence of all. The President (Mr. Charles Stainer), Treasurer (Mr. J. E. Broadbent), Secretary (Mr. Edward Hill), and other officers of the Society were re-elected.

Leicester.—At the recent exhibition by the Leicester Society of Artists a landscape by the late Miss Fanny Fullagar, for many years a member of the Great Meeting congregation, whose death took place on January 13, was on view, and there were also two pictures by the Rev. Kenneth Bond, formerly of the Free Christian Church. One of the latter pictures, 'The Fellow Sufferer,' depicts a wayside crucifix before which figures in black are in communion. Nature is shown large in comparison with the smallness of the human figures. Near by is a tree twisted as if by torture. Miss Fullagar, for whom beauty of life was wedded to the beauty of art, had rendered many practical services to the town in which she resided, being the first lady Guardian of the Poor in Leicester, the first to institute ambulance classes, and also known for her work among indigent ladies and in protecting children from cruelty. Mrs. Wright, who died on January 19, was another constant attendee at the Great Meeting who was ever engaged in good deeds, and active in the pursuit of duty up to the end of her long and useful life.

London: Hampstead.—The Rev. H. Gow is giving Sunday evening addresses on Dante's 'Divine Comedy' during February—except the 10th, when the Rev. F. K. Freeston will conduct the services. The Rosslyn Hill Vigilance Fund Committee has again contributed its annual £70 to the Central Fund.

London: Theistic Church.—On Sunday morning there was a large congregation at Essex Hall on the occasion of the first service by the new minister, the Rev. J. Tyssul Davis, whose sermon on 'Does God Care?' was heard with evident appreciation. Pointing out that God works not by miracle but by undeviating law, he said man had struggled upward in a long ascent of life, saints and sages fore-gleaming a still higher condition. If we face our troubles bravely the strength of the ages is with us as we advance in sonship to God.

London: Wandsworth.—On Sunday evening the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, speaking on the subject of the 'Origin of War,' said the love of domination, a sense of injury, or other emotional impulse might sometimes precipitate war; but usually, he believed, the desire for other's possessions was the chief motive. The remarkable fact had been observed that among primitive tribes, in all parts of the world, who had no fixed property, a great number were quite pacific and good-tempered; and such a condition, judging by the evidence of the earliest stone implements, was apparently that of primitive mankind. Was the "discovery" of property, then, a mistake, or an evil for the race? Only in the same sense as any other new sphere for man's activity might become an evil. Every new physical or mental endowment as it arose might be misused; and so it was with wealth. The pressing problem for mankind was how to use this marvellous extension of life's interests and potency so as to eliminate the evil results and extend the good. It is thus that the education of man proceeds, and his life's range is ever widened.

Maldstone.—The Annual Meeting of the congregation of the Unitarian Church was held on Monday evening, January 28, presided over by the Rev. Alexander Farquharson. The report stated that the difficulties of these unparalleled times had been safely overcome and the work of the church carried on with energy, devotion and success. The financial statement showed that the church and its institutions had all ended the year with balances in hand. The "Roll of Honour" contained the names of seventy-eight of the young men of the congregation who had gone to the war, and especial remembrance was given to those of them who had been wounded and those who had been killed. Satisfaction was expressed that the land next to and behind the present church had been purchased, on which to erect a commodious hall for Sunday school and other purposes, and for needed improvements to the church, including a new front entrance with vestibule, better access to the galleries, and a church parlour and vestry behind. The report gave the warmest recognition to the work of Mr. Farquharson, the valued minister of the church, and assured him of the full confidence reposed in his leadership. By the influence of his own positive faith and his unflinching spirit of courage and cheer he had sustained the interest of the congregation in spiritual things through a time of national darkness, uncertainty, and sorrow. His work was beyond praise. The meeting expressed hearty congratulations on the results of a successful year.

Mansfield.—The Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., LL.M., has accepted a cordial and unanimous invitation to the ministry of the Old Meeting House.

Middlesbrough.—The congregation of Christ Church, Middlesbrough, have invited the Rev. W. H. Lambelle again to become their minister, and on Wednesday, January 30, over one hundred members and friends assembled to accord a welcome to him and Mrs. Lambelle. Mr. T. Y. Howcroft, J.P., occupied the chair, and among those present were Mrs. T. F. Ward, Councillor T. B. Davies, J.P., the Rev. A. Scruton, Mr. Wilson, and Mrs. Tyas (Stockton). In responding Mr. Lambelle appealed for the support of every member and well-wisher of the church. A musical programme followed, arranged by the organist, Miss Cosgrove.

North Cheshire Unitarian Sunday School Union.—The Quarterly Meeting of the Union was held at Ashton-under-Lyne on Saturday last, but owing to several causes there was a small attendance. A meeting of the Committee was held before tea, at which several important matters were dealt with. The Rev. A. Thornhill, ex-President, presiding. The Rev. Charles Travers took the chair at the evening meeting, in the unavoidable absence of the President and Vice-President, the latter being "somewhere in France." Mr. James Cope gave a lucid and well-informed lecture on 'Useful and Injurious Beetles,' which he illustrated by several cases of excellent specimens.

Plymouth.—On January 30 the fourth tea of the season for wounded soldiers was held in the schoolroom of the Unitarian Chapel. Guests were present from the South Devon and East Cornwall Hospital, Ford House Hospital, Devonport, and the Salisbury Road Military Hospital. Among them were two Unitarians, one from Dob Lane, Manchester, and one from Adelaide. The minister, the Rev. W. H. Burgess, welcomed the company, and an enjoyable afternoon was spent, making a pleasant break from hospital routine.

Yorkshire Unitarian Union.—A Conference has been arranged for Saturday, February 23, at the Fitzwilliam Street Schoolroom, Huddersfield, when the principal speaker will be Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter, who is preaching at Lydgate and Huddersfield on February 24. His subject will be 'Religion in War-Time and After.' Mr. Grosvenor Talbot, J.P., will preside.

BIRTH.

REDFERN.—Sunday, February 3, at 17 Cecil Road, Norwich, to the Rev. and Mrs. Lawrence Redfern, a son.

MARRIAGE.

BRIGGS—HANKINSON.—On February 2, at Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (by the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas), Charles Lionel Briggs (R.A.M.C.) younger son of the late Thomas James Briggs, and of Mrs. Briggs, King's Norton, to Hilda, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Hankinson, Alvechurch (formerly of Dean Row, Cheshire).

DEATH.

HALL.—On February 3, Norman Heaton, late Sapper, Royal Engineers, younger son of the late Thomas Howard Hall and Mrs. Hall, of 46 Queen's Road, Finsbury Park, N., aged 24.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, February 10.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 5.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 5.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11, Mr. E. R. FYSON.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
 South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.
BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.
BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE; 6.30, Rev. THOS. GRAHAM.
BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. FRED HALL.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.
BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.
CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.
CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.
CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. W. T. LUCAN-DAVIES.
DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.15, Rev. O. A. GINEVER, B.A.
DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.
GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.
HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.
HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Dr. CHAS. HARGROVE.
LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.
LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. W. NEWALL; 6.30.
LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.
MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.
NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.
NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. LEE.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.
TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.
WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15.
WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

February

10. Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.
17. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A., Devotional Service only, without sermon, after which a Meeting of the Congregation will be held.
24. Rev. ADDISON A. CHARLESWORTH, of Highgate.

March

3. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON, of Kentish Town.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY.

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,
Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

3s. net, postage 3d.

OUT OF THE HEART OF THE STORM.

Twelve Sermons preached at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, and Manchester College, Oxford.

BY

Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

The sermons are written by one who believes with President Wilson that "right is more precious than peace," and that no personal sorrow or loss should discourage us and turn us from our firm resolve to overthrow the Prussian autocracy. They are written too in the growing confidence that faith in God and in the supremacy of Love has become more and not less possible and real through the conflict and agony of recent times.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

THE

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

NOW READY.

"YOUNG DAYS"

ANNUAL.

Edited by Rev. J. J. WRIGHT,

192 pages of Stories. 100 Pictures. Frontispiece—Portrait of Editor. A most attractive Present for Young People. Boards, 1s. 6d. net. Cloth, 2s. net. Postage 5d.

We will post copies direct if names and addresses are sent to us.

London:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN
ASSOCIATION.

The Acting Treasurer, Mr. G. W. BROWN, will be much obliged if subscribers to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association will kindly remit their subscriptions for 1918 to Essex Hall, or pay them to the local treasurers. There are still a few subscriptions unpaid for the year 1917, which he would be pleased to receive.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

Deputy Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.
Miss OECIL GRADWELL. | H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I. | H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.O. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED HALF HOUSE TO LET. No children taken. Suit two ladies or gentleman and wife. Other occupant, one lady. Attendance by arrangement.—Address M., 20 Alytt's Gardens, Golders Green, N.W.

BRIGHTON.—TO LET, Furnished, SITTING-ROOM AND BEDROOM. Near Station and trams. Very clean and sunny. 15s. a week. Vacant on February 14th.—W. care of INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Miscellaneous.

IRISH LINEN ROLLER TOWELS, extra strong and durable quality, 2½ yards by 17 inches, 1s. 9d. each, three for 5s. 2d., postage 5d. Send for Bargain List, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

OLD FALSE TEETH wanted for their precious metals; now worth up to £12 per set; any condition; surplus jewellery; broken jewellery from £2 to £5 per ounce given. We give the highest possible value; before remitting we make offers by return. If not accepted goods returned post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2½ on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

* All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS
TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken. Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 9, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3946.
NEW SERIES, No. 1049.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	49	DEMOCRACY ON TRIAL	52	AN EXPERIMENT IN RELIGIOUS CO-OPERATION	54
BISHOP HENSLEY HENSON AND THE ETHICS OF CONFORMITY	50	VERSE	53	THE BOOK ROOM IN HAVRE	54
MEMORIAL NOTICE:—		BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	53	A NOTABLE SCOTSWOMAN	54
Julius Wellhausen	51	BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—		NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	54
CORRESPONDENCE:—		St. Francis Xavier	53
The Churches and the Ministry	52

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S latest speech once more sounds the most hopeful note for the future of humanity amid the strife of tongues. Clear, patient, insistent, resolute, it gains an immense reinforcement in the knowledge that America is "all in" for armed backing of its appeal. He is spoken of by some as an "idealist"—with a covert suggestion that practical statesmanship is not his strong point; but, if we were as well-assured of the wisdom of statesmen nearer home as we are of his who has so dexterously led the States to an all but unanimous consent to intervene in the war, we should be in better case than we are.

* * *

'THREE Years in Belgium under the German Occupation' is the title of a most interesting and impressive article, from the pen of Miss Hélène Goblet d'Alviella, which we hope to print in our next issue. The author has had exceptional opportunities of judging what the temper of the Belgians is under German rule, having resided in Brussels till recently, when she joined her parents at Havre. Her father, Count Goblet d'Alviella, holds an important position in the Belgian Cabinet, and has long been known to scholars in Europe and America as one of the foremost living authorities on the History of Religions. He sent a cordial message to the Boston International Conference of Religious Liberals in 1907. It will be seen that in addition to her own keen observation of the facts Miss d'Alviella has exceptional means of estimating the general situation.

* * *

At many places of worship congratulatory reference was made last Sunday to the political enfranchisement of women. Illustrative of the various public meetings held to commemorate the event is that held at the Manchester Reform Club on Saturday, when Mr. W. Royle and Mr. G. G. Armstrong gave a reception to a large gathering of workers for women's suffrage in that district. As Mr. Royle said, Manchester had been largely responsible for launching the movement, and he appropriately recalled the names of Lydia Becker and Jacob Bright, who had led the way long years ago. Councillor Margaret Ashton declared the victory now won was not an end but a beginning. The present crisis showed how necessary it was for men and women to go forward together. Mr. C. P. Scott paid tribute to the signal service rendered to women's cause by John Stuart Mill. It was absurd to fear that women would be unsexed by a larger scope of life; they would be enabled to be not less but more themselves. Mrs. H. M. Swanwick and Bishop Welldon also spoke, and the whole proceedings were gratifying and memorable.

* * *

LAST week was a busy one at Lawrence House. On two nights the couch in the Rest Room was brought into requisition as a bed, seven men sleeping at the hostel each night. Several others who did not wish to stay the night turned up during the daytime to sit and rest and chat and leave their packs while they went for a stroll to see something of London. A couple of sailor lads came just for the luxury of a hot bath, which they greatly appreciated, their last dip having been in the Mediterranean when their boat was torpedoed. One of those who stayed for several nights was a wounded Australian on his way to visit friends in Ireland. During December 127 beds were made up at Lawrence House, and during January 134. The Bulletin sent out at Christmas time has been greatly appreciated and several hundred letters of thanks have been received. It is most gratifying to find how much our men appreciate a word of sympathy and encouragement from an organisation that is of larger scope than the particular church or Sunday school to which they belong. It gives them a sense of fellowship, and a feeling that people personally unknown to them are nevertheless interested in their joys and their troubles.

* * *

SOME idea of the magnitude of the scope of the new Reform Act may be gathered from the following figures given in The Times. The Act of 1832 (which in its day was regarded as "the end of all things") added half a million middle-class voters to the register; the total then being about a million, or 1 in 24 of the population. In 1867 a million working class (urban) voters were added: total on register, two and a half millions, 1 in 12 of the population. In 1884 two millions (largely agricultural labourers) received the vote; total on register about five millions, 1 in 7 of the population. This year's Act adds eight millions (five millions being married women and one million unmarried, and two millions men); and the new register will thus have no fewer than sixteen million voters, or 1 in 3 of the whole population.

* * *

If the last quoted figures are correct, we may well rub our eyes. This is democracy indeed—at least the potency of it. When a former extension of the franchise was granted a not over-pessimistic statesman called it "a leap in the dark"; Carlyle, more suo, described it as "Shooting Niagara," and rather thought "the better kind of our nobility" should leave oratory thenceforward to "Cleon the Tanner & Company." More serviceable was the conclusion of another that "we must educate our masters," which remains—or rather intensifies as—the most pressing of duties. And to "masters" we must add "mistresses"; what would our grandfathers (and grandmothers) have said!

* * *

BUT in soberest earnest, the advance now taken is surely big with immense and quite incalculable possibilities. Questions rush on the mind from all sides: What average level of opinion will be exhibited by this vast electorate? What type of appeal will the party organisers devise? Will the baser elements, mere ignorant prejudice, class cupidity, class fear, swamp the finer political moods of our people? Clearly, the old landmarks are over-whelmed as with a flood, and much time is likely to be needed to evolve anything like orderly procedure. Every one, nearly, appears to be convinced that Labour is destined to make a great stride in power, and minds are hopeful or the reverse in the degree of their trust in the sagacity of the workers. One thing, as we have said, is indisputable—political education is imperatively needed. It includes information on many things—economics, history, even geography. But it also includes high principles—the love of a freedom which others may share beside ourselves; the faith that justice is the only solid foundation to national, as to individual life; the resolve to give our best to our nation as truly as to seek our best at its hands.

* * *

REFERRING to correspondence in our columns recently, Mr. A. G. Tarrant sends his testimony concerning soldiers and their morals; we can only give space for a brief summary of his letter. As one who was two years in the ranks he knows well how the troops generally regard the absurd extremes of their extollers on the one hand and their censors on the other. As a whole, the men are neither paragons nor "vulgar Tommies"; what they were in "civies" they are in "khaki." If easily temptable before joining up they are so after; but not usually so if they lived straight. As to the American troops, our correspondent reluctantly adduces evidence that sometimes they are far from decorous on arrival in the Northern camp near which he is stationed; and their misconduct cannot be set to the account of the tiny English village which, we regret to hear, has suffered badly from their rowdyism. As to prohibition, there have been wilder orgies, he declares, in Arras or Laventie—where the sale of spirits is forbidden—than in Woolwich or Chatham. His own conclusion is that danger lurks less in facilities for temptation than "the atrophied individual morality that yields to every onslaught."

* * *

LORD DESBOROUGH reminds managers of working boys' clubs in London that a Federation of these clubs has been in existence for thirty years and has enrolled a considerable number of the better known clubs, large and small. But it is most desirable that, so far as possible, all should be enrolled, and thus reap the advantages of experienced advice in the support and conduct of club life. The Government Committee dealing with "Juvenile Organisations" have looked to the Federation as a leading auxiliary in the planning out of schemes for the future bettering of young workers. Any one desiring further information should write to the Hon. Secretary, F.L.W.B.C., 2 Summer Street, Southwark Street, S.E.1. We are assured that there is no financial or other obligation involved in enrolment.

BISHOP HENSLEY HENSON AND THE ETHICS OF CONFORMITY.

DR. HENSLEY HENSON preached a fine sermon on 'Pharisaism' at the Temple Church last Sunday.

"The early Pharisees exhibited a disposition which belonged to all nations and all Churches and which had perhaps nowhere received more exaggerated expression than within the sphere of Christianity. It implied the assumption of a special measure of spiritual insight, and that orthodox opinion was a pledge of soundness." He set the words of Christ side by side with the arrogance of the Pharisees in order to exhibit the contrast. "The one implies that spiritual knowledge is the gift of God: the other claims that it is the acquisition of man. The one roots Christianity in discipleship; the other in orthodoxy. The one makes religion essentially moral; the other makes religion intellectual and ceremonial. The one is broadly catholic, making an appeal which is co-extensive with the conscience and reason of mankind: the other addresses itself to theological experts and the timorous host of conventionally religious believers."

Such words as these, of course, call forth our warmest sympathy. We say "Amen" to them with all our heart and mind. They express our inmost faith. We are glad they should be spoken by an Anglican Bishop. But at the same time we are puzzled. How can a Bishop who has accepted the Articles and who repeats the Creeds make Articles and Creeds agree with such a broadly catholic utterance? We are reminded of Henry Sidgwick's words in the days when Stanley and Jowett and Temple were attacked by Puseyites and Evangelicals: "I confess I feel less and less inclined to take my stand on the unstable footing of Liberal Anglicanism, and though practically I sympathise more with the Liberal Anglicans than with their opponents, yet in my inmost heart I lean towards the others (or rather in my inmost mind)." As Liberal Christians we all sympathise like Sidgwick with the catholic Christianity of such men as Dean Stanley or Bishop Henson. We do more than sympathise with it: we share it. We recognise that they are expressing our own thought and ideals. But, on the other hand, we cannot help feeling that those who really believe in the Creeds and Articles are justified in urging that Deans and Bishops, not to speak of clergymen generally, ought to believe the Creeds that they repeat and the Articles to which they sign their name. We are obliged to recognise that the truly Orthodox have a higher standard of intellectual veracity than Broad Churchmen, and in this sense our sympathies are rather with the former than the latter in this conflict.

It is still the habit of some people to talk of Unitarians as a small obscure sect holding odd and perverse views about religion which are regarded by the vast mass of Christians as untrue, and which are more and more seen to be in a back-water outside the main stream of Christian thought and life. The exact reverse of this is true. The Gospel of Christianity taught by such men as Channing, Martineau, Thom, or Beard is the Christianity with which the majority of thinking men and women in all Protestant Churches agree. A belief in a God of Wisdom and Love as the Supreme Power, a belief in divine revelation through human life and human goodness, and a belief in the atoning sacrifice of love, finding their central expression and meaning in the life and death of Jesus Christ, this is becoming more and more in all the Churches the essential of belief. The miracles of the birth and resurrection are disregarded or disbelieved. To disregard them is to disbelieve them. If they were true, orthodoxy is right in thinking they are of stupendous importance. To treat them as unessential is practically to deny them. The only real difference between Broad Churchmen and ourselves is that they are inside the Anglican Church and we are outside. It is a difference as to the ethics of Subscription and the ethics of repeating Creeds in a non-natural sense. They hope to make the Church free from within. They submit to the yoke of Orthodox Creeds and Articles in order to destroy it. We prefer, at all costs, to be free men. We recognise that we pay a heavy price of isolation and neglect and misunderstanding. We feel the attractiveness, the historic dignity and beauty of the Church of England. We are most of us, like our Presbyterian ancestors, unwilling Nonconformists, and like them we feel no hostility or bitterness towards the National Church. It is respect for veracity alone which prevents us from being Broad Churchmen. We do not desire to judge such men as Bishop Henson. We are confident that it is not base personal motives which keep them within the Anglican Church and persuade them to conform outwardly to doctrines and ceremonies which are not in accordance with their highest thoughts.

But we believe they are making a mistake if they think that by so doing they are serving the best interests of religion. We talk much of the need of a revival of religion. It is not a new religion but a deepened sense of the reality of the old religion of Christ which is needed. If the Broad Churchmen, lay and clerical, refused to be bound any longer by Creeds and Articles, there would be a revival of religion such as has not been seen since the days of Puritanism, and with more hope for Catholic Christianity because it would be free from the dogmatic prepossessions and bitterness of Puritanism.

There might be forty years in the wilderness for such brave spirits seeking a new home, but they would reach in time the Promised Land. Rooting Christianity in discipleship they would found the true Catholic Church which is the Church of Christ. H. G.

THE 'Life and Letters of Edward Everett Hale,' by his son, is announced by Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., Boston. The work is in two volumes.

THE Editor of THE INQUIRER, the Rev. W. H. Drummond, crossed over to France on Wednesday, and our good wishes follow him in the important work for the Y.M.C.A. which he has taken up. May we remind our correspondents that all communications should be addressed, during his absence, to the Office of THE INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4, and not to Hampstead, as formerly.

IN Convocation last week the Archbishop of Canterbury declared that he had thoroughly investigated facts and found there was "practically nothing at all" to support the charges of widespread immorality among the women workers, or the members of the W.A.A.C. Moreover, he maintained that "no one could make a general accusation against our army compared with most other armies in the world," though grave facts do exist. Profiting by our experience, the American authorities had made excellent rules and arrangements for the safe-guarding of their troops.

THE Christian World, emphasising the fact that in the enlarged war work of the Y.M.C.A. "Unitarians have taken an honourable share," adds "We are confident that nothing but good has resulted from such co-operation." And it expresses satisfaction that Dr. Campbell Morgan, who feels difficulty in co-operating in this way, none the less admits his debt to Channing and Martineau.

THE Annual General Meeting of the Peasant Arts Guild will be held on Wednesday, February 20, at 3 P.M., in the Guild-room, 17 Duke Street, Manchester Square, instead of on the 13th as was stated in the programme issued some time ago. The Toy-Making and Weaving Schools will be open for inspection, and all friends are invited.

JULIUS WELLHAUSEN.

THE death of Prof. Wellhausen last month closed a long life of various labour and far-reaching influence. He was born in 1844 in the ancient little town of Hameln on the Weser, five and twenty miles south-west of Hanover. The son of a pastor he was naturally marked out for a university career, and as a student at Göttingen he came under the powerful influence of Heinrich Ewald. There in 1870 he began to teach. Two or three early essays, notably a bold treatment of the text of the books of Samuel (1872) and another on the Pharisees and Sadducees (1874), of which it was said that "it would have been epoch-making if anybody had read it," soon attracted attention, and he passed through a series of appointments at Greifswald, Halle, and Marburg, till he returned at the height of his reputation to Göttingen in 1892. For one-and-twenty years he continued to lecture; but at length increasing infirmity led to his retirement in 1913, and his work was done.

Its main achievement, as every reader of the Old Testament now knows, was to supply a brilliant reconstruction of the development of the religion of Israel on lines already marked out by the insight of previous investigators. Since the days when Astruc (in 1753) pointed to the composition of the book of Genesis out of antecedent documents, a long series of scholars had been engaged in resolving the whole Pentateuch into its constituent elements. Three great groups had been clearly distinguished: (1) a brief summary of the patriarchal period beginning with the stately narrative of the creation in Genesis i.-ii. 4a, and leading up to the great body of the Levitical legislation in the middle books; (2) a second series of stories also starting from the origin of the human race, in the garden of Eden, and concentrating its interest in prophetic style on the fortunes of the patriarchs and the Mosaic age; and (3) a book of exhortations and laws, ascribed to the great Liberator on the eve of the entrance of the Israelites into the promised land, Deuteronomy. Literary criticism had reached substantial agreement on the main outlines of this scheme. The contents of the laws and narratives in the priestly group (P) could be clearly distinguished from those of the prophetic (JE) and the Deuteronomic (D). But in what relation did they stand to each other? Ewald had made the priority of the Priestly Code the basis of his great 'History of Israel,' and his powerful personality long swayed the critical schools. For a whole generation, however, before Wellhausen took the field, suggestions, hints, inquiries, had pointed to a different solution, placing the great mass of Priestly legislation last instead of first, and carrying its publication down to the fifth century under the authority of Ezra in 444 B.C. On this hypothesis Kuenen of Leiden founded his scientific reconstruction of the development of Israel's national faith in his well-known 'Religion of Israel' (1869-70). But the proof of this hypothesis still lacked completeness. Much of the evidence was, indeed, accumulated by Kuenen himself in the elaborate notes to his History and in critical essays of the finest discrimination in the pages of the Dutch Theological Review. But a full treatment of both sets of problems, the literary relations of the documents to each other, and their historical position in the centuries of their evolution was urgently needed. This twofold demand was supplied by Wellhausen with a force and brilliance which carried all before it.

He dealt first with the actual contents of the different strata of the Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua, in which the presence of the same constituents had long been recognised. In a series of articles in the 'Jahrbücher für Deutsche Theologie (1876-77)' he examined the whole 'Composition of the Hexateuch,' and proved the literary dependence of Deuteronomy on the "prophetic" materials of JE and the sequence of the Priestly Code on Deuteronomy. It remained to bring this order to the test of history. For two generations, ever since the days of De Wette, Deuteronomy had been identified with the "book of the law" on which the reformation of Josiah was based in 621 B.C. The Priestly Code, therefore, which Wellhausen proposed to designate by the symbol Q (for the Latin quatuor, four, because it contained four covenants), must be carried down later still. The historical investigation of its multifarious contents, and the ideas which lay beneath them, formed the subject of a further work issued in 1878, as the first volume of a History of Israel, afterwards translated into English (1885) under the heading of 'Prolegomena.' It contained a searching criticism of the Levitical institutions. The conditions of worship, its place, its sacrifices, its feasts, its sacred orders of Priests and Levites, were successively reviewed, and tested by the evidence of the historical books. The demonstration of the late character of P was triumphantly successful. Prof. Robertson Smith invited Wellhausen to contribute the article on 'Israel' in the ninth edition of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica' then in progress (1881), and from that date his construction of the development of the religion of the Old Testament acquired continually increasing recognition. It was not his way to fortify his position by reference to his predecessors. He claimed a proud independence at the same time that he asserted that he had learned from them all. But though he did not quote from Kuenen, he made the acquaintance of the great Dutch scholar, and remarked afterwards, "That's the man I should like to annex Holland for."

In 1894 a sequel to Wellhausen's critical labours appeared in the form of a survey of Israelite and Jewish history down to the fall of Jerusalem in the year 70 A.D. The final chapter on the Gospel revealed his religious position: "Jesus did not found the Church; he pronounced the condemnation of the Jewish theocracy. The Gospel is only the salt of the earth; if it seeks to be more it is less. It preaches the noblest individualism, the freedom of the children of God." His views were not acceptable to the ecclesiastical authorities of Berlin. Disappointed of his hopes of further promotion (so it was rumoured), he turned to the Arabic studies in which his scholarship found ample scope without exciting theological opposition. He had assimilated the origins of religion among the early tribes of Israel with the type of Arabian practice. He saw the whole science of cuneiform decipherment grow up around him, but he took no notice of the bearing of Babylonian discovery on the Old Testament. The wide outlook which distinguishes younger representatives of his critical school like Gunkel, or interpreters of prophecy and psalm like Duhm and Gressmann, was closed to him. The problems of Israel's religion are handled now on a broader basis than the actual literary record; Mesopotamia and Egypt must be taken into account. The whole method of treatment has expanded; new factors have been introduced, and the area of comparison has been immensely enlarged. To some extent a similar limitation applies to his New Testament work. His brief commentaries on the Synoptic Gospels and his discussion of their relations (1903-5) are full of pregnant criticism and incisive remark; but in the dictatorial confidence of his aphorisms the reader constantly desires a fuller and freer discussion and a clearer appreciation of the manifold influences which shaped their records. But all students will long continue to learn from him. He seemed to himself to have adventured along untrodden paths; he recognised frankly how much yet remained to be made clear; the labours of his successors, while they have opened up inquiries whose significance he did not perceive, have fundamentally justified his results.

J. ESTLIN CARPENTER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and the address of the senders.

THE CHURCHES AND THE MINISTRY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—There is one point in Dr. Rattray's article worthy of serious consideration—the closing of small struggling causes with small endowment, and a pooling of the funds to help those places where there is more hope of success. As layman, trustee, and secretary, the writer has been connected with such a chapel for about thirty-five years. Every effort is made, but there is always the tendency to deadness. We advocate freedom of thought, and so we have many amongst us who revolt at the idea of a regular mechanical service. Cheap books abound, and the spread of education, a good thing, seems also to be a difficulty for preachers in our body. May I cordially unite with Dr. Rattray in his sympathy for men or women entering our ministry. "Why don't you get so and so?" is a common remark to a secretary. But how can one expect a brilliant man to struggle against the dead-alive conditions prevailing in some of these centres? And may I remark that a secretary of such a place has his difficulties quite as much as the pastor. The children of the old families drift away, and the State Church, with its tempting, broadening tendencies, is a formidable rival.—Yours, &c.,

E. HILL

(Hon. Sec. Warwick Chapel).

February 11, 1918.

[Dr. Jacks, Principal of Manchester College, and Dr. Stanley Mellor, have also written important letters on this subject. We hope to insert them both next week; but writers must realise that our available space is very limited.—EDITOR.]

MADAME PAUL HYACINTHE LOYSON who has been doing such splendid work at the Soldiers' Convalescent Hospital in Paris, has refused the "Medal of French gratitude" which the authorities wished to give her. She believes that a reward of this kind is contrary to the spirit in which she has always worked, and finds ample recompense for anything that she has been able to do "for love of suffering humanity" in the joy and honour of being able merely to serve.

SINCE his removal to London, the Rev. R. T. Herford, author of 'Christianity in Talmud and Midrash,' has won gratifying recognition among Jewish scholars as an authority upon Rabbinical literature. A learned paper read by him to the Society of Hebraic Studies on 'The Effect of the Fall of Jerusalem upon the Character of the Pharisees' was printed last year, and we understand that he has another paper in the press.

DEMOCRACY ON TRIAL.

It could be forcibly and justly objected to the title of this article that democracy has never yet been on trial. England, France, and the U.S.A.—and, I suppose, Russia at this hour—are called democracies, but, as a matter of fact, no such thing as a democracy exists now—least of all in Russia—or has ever existed. Democracy in its true sense can, then, only first be tried when its principles are applied, not to mere sections of society, but when its principles are the very life-breath of the whole social organism.

I know of no apter definition of democracy than that of President Lincoln: "the government of the people, by the people, for the people." But the word people here means the whole people, and this government can never be tried until it is representative of the whole people, motivating and directing and controlling the people's energies, and itself motivated and directed and controlled by the people in return. Its operations, too, should extend over the whole area of religious, educational, and industrial life, and even over the arts. The alternative of choice lies between an untrammelled individualism on the one hand, and an effectual social organism on the other, in which both individual and social factors, in so far as they contribute to the well-being of the whole, receive the recognition which is their due.

No matter how men would, they cannot permanently stem the democratic tide: it will eventually and inevitably overrun their dykes. If they are wise, they will dig channels through which the flood of waters may irrigate and fertilise the land. If they are unwise, and do not dig the channels, they will sooner or later be swept away. So terrible a force, for good or for evil, was never let loose in the world before. It were well to dig those channels, and wisely to distribute and apportion them! There is the best fertilising material in the alluvial deposit, veritable mud of old Nile!

One neither marvels at the passionate dread of democracy felt by Edmund Burke, confronted by the horrors of the French Revolution; nor, on the other hand, does one marvel at the ecstatic hopes of democracy cherished by Mazzini and Whitman. The people may be a Nero, revelling in blood, or a Marcus Aurelius; a Caliban, or a Prospero.

Looking forward, looking with faith and hope, what sublimer goal could ever be set before humanity than this?—

"Imagine a people a hundred million strong, each conscious of his own responsibility, each contributing his genius, self-control, and provident pity to the nation as a whole—a hundred million wills all working together to one goal, a hundred million intellects reflecting upon one problem, a hundred million hearts beating with love for the redemption of each through the integrity of the whole!"

But there is a long, long way to be traversed, a way full of dangers and menace not unknown to the terrors and the despairs, and it will demand all our faith, and hope, and charity to keep us undaunted on the march, and only through the faithfulness of man to man, and the utter resignation of his will to God's, will the goal of that far pilgrimage at length be won. Who shall hold in Behemoth? Who shall bridle Leviathan?

You will never have your one hundred million wills all working together toward one democratic goal; you will never have your one hundred million intellects all reflecting seriously upon one democratic problem; you will never have your one hundred million hearts all beating with love for the redemption of each through the integrity of the whole—until you have one (or more) embodied, democratic personality, whose will, intelligence, and love shall fuse, direct, and control all these, and be fused, directed, and controlled by them in return. For me, the one commanding, fusing, democratic personality is Jesus Christ: we need those who shall live and triumph in his spirit.

The feudal and aristocratic world managed, somehow or other, to discover its feudal and aristocratic chiefs; the democratic world, too, must discover its democratic chiefs, or perish and prove the most tremendous failure of time. The whole issue and crux of the democratic problem lies there. "Produce great persons; the rest follows." If there were men in this land to-day like Cromwell and his Ironsides of the Commonwealth—religious men and men of action—yet more democratic than these, and understanding better than these the scope and purpose of democracy; if there were a writer, a prophet, like Milton, to inspire and direct them, the future of democracy in this land would be sure. Where to-day are the Ironsides of democracy?

Here I agree with Walt Whitman. He writes:—

"I can conceive of no better service henceforth by democrats of thorough and heart-felt faith, than boldly exposing the weakness, liabilities, and infinite corruptions of democracy."

Again he writes:—

"Democracy, the destined conqueror, yet treacherous lip-smiles everywhere, and death and infidelity at every step."

Cheap optimism is as fatal as the most pernicious pessimism. We must not shrink from gazing steadily even into the abyss.

I suppose there was never a truer democrat than Walt Whitman. His definition of a democrat is the best I know: "One who accepts nothing which all cannot have their counterpart of on the same terms." In this spirit he lived—"I claimed nothing for myself which I have not carefully claimed for others on the same terms." Thoreau said of him "He is democracy." Yet Whitman did not hesitate to expose to the full glare of day the terrible evils of the democracy of his time. Read the passage in his 'Democratic Vistas' which begins: "Society in these States is cankered, crude, superstitious and rotten." These evils were due not to democracy, in the sense in which I trust we shall more and more understand that word, but to anti-democracy, or premature democracy, or rather to a dearth of true democracy. Carlyle would not abuse a true democracy. It was a false democracy which fired his satire and his scorn. It was when he saw Caliban elect Stephano, the drunken butler, to be King of the Island, in lieu of the sage Prospero, that he vented his maddened rage, and called us, as we deserved, unutterable blockheads and fools. Democracy presupposes the capacity of the people to choose its best representatives. Upon its ability to choose these the future of democracy depends. And it is a fact of most auspicious omen that the people of the U.S.A. have chosen for their Presidents men like Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Wilson; and that the people of France choose worthy men for theirs.

The looming dangers of the future lie not in democracy but in an ignorant, unethical, and irreligious populace. The safe-guarding of the nation's well-being lies not in the abandonment of democracy, but in the enlightenment—intellectual, moral, and spiritual—of the people. And, meanwhile, we may be thankful that certain surviving anti-democratic and even feudal forces still operate as conservative national safeguards, and they will not be, and ought not to be, abandoned until democracy has demonstrated without the shadow of a doubt that it can stand and rule alone.

Educate! Educate! Yea, and learn first of all what true education means. It is the development of all men and women to their fullest possible extent—physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually. It is to have no unnecessarily stunted bodies, blunted minds, blighted characters, or withered souls. It is to direct all these fully-developed physiques, minds, characters, and souls toward the common general good for the greater glory of God.

H. H. JOHNSON.

"YOUR KING AND COUNTRY NEED YOU."

(August, 1914.)

'Twas no cruel command,
From a tyrant's hand,
That flashed through our land at kingly behest;
But a tender appeal,
Bold, and true as of steel,
And our hearts, with glad tears, gave their bravest and best.

'Tis for freedom and Right,
And true Peace that we fight,
And God's Light leads us on though the battle cloud rolls.
Our hearts you may break,
Our lives you may take,
But never, thank God, shall you conquer our souls.

Though thoughts of the morrow
Bring weeping and sorrow
More deep when the tumult of battle shall cease,
Yet beyond the dark night
Shines a Vision of Light
From the nobler world born at the Dawning of Peace.

AGATHA RUSSELL.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium. (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais. (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

158TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,048	15	0
Miss E. C. Harvey (13th)	..	3	0 0
Mr. B. J. Hobbs (2nd)	1	1 0
Miss F. Booth Scott (13th)	..	1	0 0
Nurse Copeman (15th)	..	0	10 0
Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry (monthly)	..	1	0 0
Miss Swaine (34th)	..	2	0 0
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty (44th)	..	4	0 0
Mr. C. E. Hudson (2nd)	..	1	0 0
Collection at Meeting of Women's Fellowship Guild, Leicester, on Feb. 9, per Mrs. Squirrell	..	4	9 0
Mrs. A. H. Paget, Leicester (6th)	..	5	0 0
Mr. and Mrs. Pratt, Leicester (3rd)	..	1	1 0
Miss Mary B. Lamb (13th)	..	2	0 0
Mrs. du Vallon (16th)	..	4	0 0
"Thomasina Smith" (8th)	..	1	0 0
	£20,079	16	0

*Parcels have been received from:—*The Misses Newling and Bendelack; Mrs. Bowen Evans; J. S. (Plymouth); Mrs. Thos. F. Ward; Mrs. Wallace Bruce; Miss Short; Mrs. and Miss Carter; Miss C. Sharpe; Working Party at the Unitarian Church, Newport, Isle of Wight, per Miss Ruddle; High Pavement War Relief Committee, Nottingham, per Miss Guilford; Miss Swaine; Mrs. G. Walker (Swarthmore, U.S.A.); Miss Hall; Master Charles W. Hall; Miss Fretwell; Miss F. Booth Scott; Mrs. Harold Coventry; Miss Kent; Miss K. Freeston; Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas; Platt Chapel Dorcas Society, per Miss A. Fryer; Mrs. Frank Manvell and friend; Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel Branch of the Women's League, per Mrs. Athelstane Tayler; Miss Terry; Miss A. J. Partridge; Miss Clephan; Anonymous (Surrey); Mrs. Titterton; The Misses Tedder.

WEEKLY NOTES.

AMONG the letters received this week are the following:—

From the Belgian Front acknowledging some socks and other comforts.

"Mothers have the secret of guessing what their children need. You are a mother to us and we feel ourselves well looked after. The socks arrived at the moment when we were stationed at a specially wet place. You ought to have been present when I distributed the socks. You would have felt well recompensed, but you have all the trouble and I have all the pleasure."

From a Colonie Scolaire for little boys.

"Thank you from my heart for the parcel of eight pairs of knickerbockers for our little boys. I cannot tell you how welcome they are. I do so like to see our children decently dressed and without your aid I certainly could not do it. We shall remember you with gratitude all our lives."

ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Men's dressing-gowns.
Pyjamas, shirts, socks, and all sorts of men's underclothing.
Slippers, mufflers, mittens.
Clothing for women and children, especially stockings.
Games, jig-saw puzzles, writing paper.

Calico bags, 2 ft. by 3 ft., and any smaller size.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

ST. FRANCIS XAVIER.

THE LIFE OF ST. FRANCIS XAVIER. By Edith Anne Stewart. With translations from his Letters by David Macdonald, B.D. London: Headley Bros., Ltd. 12s. 6d. net.

THE lives of the saints can never be told too often. Because there is something universal in their genius every generation puts them in a new setting composed of its own thought and experience and the romantic illusion which surrounds the achievements of the past with a halo of glory. The Catholic may plead that the Protestant can never understand his special types of piety, but he cannot rob M. Sabatier of his insight into the heart of St. Francis of Assisi; and there is nothing incongruous in the appearance of a life of one of the most distinctive figures of the Counter-Reformation by one who reveals no papal prepossessions, though it is difficult to agree entirely with the judgment that "Xavier as a Protestant would not have been very different from Xavier of the Company of the Name of Jesus. The greatest of Loyola's disciples was the least of the Jesuits. At home or abroad, within the visible Church or without it, Francis, after his conversion, knew nothing but Christ and Him crucified, and could do nothing but preach Him to the Gentiles." In this judgment we think there is some tinge of historical mis-statement. St. Francis Xavier belonged to the missionary type of the Society of Jesus. He had nothing to do with the world of ecclesiastical intrigue or the school of moral casuistry with which we often associate the name. But he was a Jesuit to the core in the completeness of his obedience and the narrow intensity of his vision. It was by his sympathy and his tenderness that he excelled his teachers, and here he owed little to his training. No mechanism of goodness could crush the rare spiritual qualities which made him a saint.

Miss Stewart has had many predecessors, but the recent completion of the 'Monumenta Xaveriana' has placed many new documents at her disposal, especially in the form of letters. Apart from her own sympathetic interpretation of character, it is the larger use which has been made of these letters that gives a distinctive value to her book even for those who are familiar with some of the older lives. Those written from Japan are documents of first-rate importance, for they contain the earliest descriptions of the country by the hand of a European. It is, however, the intimate passages of spiritual autobiography which are most precious. In a few lines, without a trace of self-consciousness, he reveals the matchless courage, both physical and moral, with which he faced danger or administered rebuke.

"The Chinese ports," he wrote in 1549 "have all risen against the Portuguese. But not for that will I give up going to Japan, as I have written you. Since there is no greater rest in this laborious life than to live in great danger of death when it is all undertaken without any other motive than the love and service of God our Lord, and the increase of our holy faith."

About the same time he sent the following words of solemn warning to the King of Portugal:—

"Be prepared, for kingdoms and lordships finish and have an end. A new thing it will be, and something that never happened to your Highness before, to find yourself dispossessed at the hour of your death of your kingdoms and lordships, and to have to enter into others, where this new thing must happen to you, to be sent, may God forbid it! out of Paradise."

Miss Stewart says that St. Francis Xavier was dominated by the greatest of all passions, the passion for souls. This is true, and yet it was a passion which was largely inspired by religious conceptions which for us have lost their power. The mediæval doctrine of hell and the fate of the damned brooded over his life and filled his soul with a frenzy of pity. To baptise thousands of natives, while they were still without much knowledge of the Christian faith, was for him a supreme act of charity, for it decided their fate in the conflict between the devil and God. Men of the modern world are not moved by this sense of peril for all who have not passed through the water of baptism into the safe fold of the Church. For them the passion of souls must take a very different form. But the qualities which made St. Francis Xavier great, his courage, his tenderness, and his unflinching zeal for his cause are not bound up with this doctrine of a lost world, which gave such driving power to all his missionary activity. In all ages they shine with heavenly brightness in richly gifted and dedicated souls, and passing beyond the human limits of thought and speech make one fellowship of the saints of God.

We cannot leave this deeply interesting book without congratulating the publisher as well as the author upon its attractive appearance. Paper, printing, and the series of fine illustrations will all bear the scrutiny of the most exacting taste.

AN EXPERIMENT IN RELIGIOUS CO-OPERATION.

To many of his Boston friends, interested in the growth of inter-denominational good feeling, it was a sign of the times when Boston Central Congregational Church (U.S.A.) invited the Rev. W. Harris Crook, of Manchester College and Harvard, as a Unitarian, to become its Assistant Minister. This step has helped to pave the way, during the present shortage of fuel in Boston, to a further form of co-operation between Congregationalists and Unitarians. The Committee of Central Church, feeling itself fortunate in possessing a supply of coal sufficient to meet all present needs, got into touch with its neighbour, the "First Church" (Unitarian), during the week of January 6, and sounded the views of the latter with regard to union of services in the interest of coal conservation. The coal supplies of the First Church were somewhat low; and when, as a result of preliminary overtures, the formal invitation was issued by Central Church, the response was immediate and hearty.

The first joint service was conducted on January 13 in Central Church by the Rev. Willard Sperry of Central Church, and the Rev. Charles E. Park of the First Church was the preacher. The two choirs combined and the two organists co-operated.

The Fuel Administration at the State House has assured the congregations of these churches that such a union will be of real value as an example and an influence. It was difficult, the authorities said, to get secular organisations to agree to such co-operative measures unless religious bodies were willing to lead the way. Pew-holders at Central Church are showing towards this sudden influx of a considerable body of people into their already well-filled church the greatest hospitality and goodwill.

THE BOOK ROOM IN HAYRE.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	..	27	15 0
R. B.	..	5	0 0
Miss Evers	..	0	10 0
D. F. B.	..	1	1 0
	£34	6	0

A NOTABLE SCOTSWOMAN.

MRS. SELLAR, widow of Prof. W. J. Sellar, of the Chair of Humanity in Edinburgh University, has just died. An accomplished and brilliant woman she numbered among her friends some of the most notable men and women of her time. She was very intimate with the author of 'Rab and His Friends,' and with Thomas Stevenson, at whose wedding she had acted as bridesmaid, and with "R. L. S." she was, of course, familiar from the days when he was merely a "fractious baby." At Oxford she had as friends "whole successive generations of the Fellows," and it is said that in her company Jowett lost all his shyness and silence. Of Kenbank, in Galloway, where the Sellars made their home in 1872, Mr. Andrew Lang, Mrs. Sellar's nephew by marriage, wrote in some of his verses, and it was to her that he dedicated his 'Ballads and Lyrics of Old France.' Though not a literary woman in the strict sense, Mrs. Sellar has left behind her a charming volume of 'Recollections and Impressions,' published in 1907, and one of her daughters, Mrs. MacCunn, is well known for her historical studies of John Knox and Mary, Queen of Scots. The following passage from an account of her life which appeared in The Times last Wednesday gives some idea of the wonderful vitality and charm of this remarkable woman: "Her personality eluded description, as her face was the despair of the portrait painter; strongly marked, grave and almost stern in repose, but hardly ever in repose for five minutes together, irradiated by the quick play of feeling and lit up by boundless kindness. Burne-Jones, who like every one else was captivated by her at their first meeting, made a little drawing of her—she was then 65—under the figure of a nymph dancing through a wood among birds and flowers."

WE recently quoted some weighty words spoken last year by Mr. W. L. Hichens, Chairman of Messrs. Cammell, Laird & Co. Here is an extract from an address given by him at Greenock last month at the Watt anniversary: "No man can serve two masters; he cannot serve himself and the community; for then the kingdom would be divided against itself; he can only serve himself by serving the community, and this is surely the only sound foundation on which industry can rest. If we are ever to solve the great industrial problem it can only be by recognising that industry is primarily a national service, and that the object of those engaged in it is first and foremost for the good of the community as a whole."

THE Bishop of London drew attention at the Upper House of Convocation of Canterbury which met at Westminster on February 5 to the fact that wet canteens had been started in the special battalions, formerly Territorial Reserve battalions, but now called "Young Soldiers' battalions" of boys of 18. Headmasters of the country at a recent meeting were very much disturbed about it, and without taking any fanatical attitude he considered that for boys of 18 these wet canteens were serious things. The Archbishop of Canterbury expressed agreement with what had been said and promised to bring the matter before the War Office authorities.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Barnard Castle.—At the conclusion of a farewell service conducted a fortnight ago by the retiring minister, the Rev. J. B. Robinson, a presentation was made to Mr. and Mrs. Robinson by Mr. George Morton, the Treasurer, on behalf of the congregation. A silver-mounted walking-stick was presented by Master Robbie Morton on behalf of the Sunday scholars. Mr. Robinson has also been the recipient of gifts from the National Home Reading Union, which he and Miss Mary Smith founded in 1912, and of which he continued to be the leader. The presentation was made by Miss M. A. Smith, who expressed the regret the members felt at parting with one for whom they had such esteem and affection. Mr. Robinson has been very active in connection with the National Egg Collecting Movement, and owing to the response made to his appeal some 65,713 eggs and £102 in cash have been sent for distribution among the base hospitals in France. The eggs are received at the Unitarian school-room.

Bradford.—At an Interdenominational Conference of ministers of religion and Christian workers at the Hotel Metropole, which has been secured for Y.M.C.A. work, Dr. Campbell Morgan spoke of the Mildmay Colony, which is a centre for hut workers, a training place for Y.M.C.A. workers, and a centre for Bible study. A question having been raised by the Rev. Thomas Paxton, who was present, Dr. Campbell Morgan expressed his opinion that, when it came down to "bases of service," there could not be co-operation with Unitarians. Mr. Paxton, to whose fine work in connection with the Khaki Club in Bradford we have drawn attention in THE INQUIRER more than once, gave as instances of co-operation the Sunday school forward movement in Birmingham, of which he was founder and secretary, and which provided University lectures for Sunday school teachers of all denominations. He was sorry if the constitution of the Y.M.C.A. precluded Unitarians from co-operating. Dr. Campbell Morgan said: "I have the profoundest respect for his [the Unitarian's] position. I never preached on the new theology in my life; I should not think of doing it; but there is a difference between that and my co-operating with any one who does not render to my Master the absolute worship of Deity. My friend cannot do it, and I respect him, but I do not see how he and I are going to work together in training the young or anything else. We may as well be frank about these things. I owe a great deal—I do not know what I should have done at one time without Martineau and without Channing. I think they have done enormous service in that they have helped the Church from mediævalism to the human Jesus. But I do feel there are things I cannot yield them." In reply to further remarks Dr. Campbell Morgan said there was no doubt they had been helped by Unitarians in the direction of war-work, but it was in regard to the question of training that he had made the statement quoted above.

Burnley.—A very successful Sale of Work has been held in aid of the Trafalgar Street Unitarian Church. A pleasing feature was the presence of many former members of the church now living in other towns, including Blackpool and Bury, and there was a very large attendance at the opening ceremony, which was performed by Mr. Lawrence H. Clegg of Bury. Mr. Waddington of Bury presided, and was supported by Mrs. and Miss Clegg, the Rev. F. Coleman, Mr. J. S. Mackie, Mr. J. W. Jackson (secretary), and others. The devotional part of the proceedings was conducted by the Rev. H. B. Hannah of Immanuel Baptist Church, Burnley, who has accepted a unanimous call to the Horwich Unitarian Church. The receipts amounted to £135 15s.

Croydon.—The Committee of the Croydon Domestic Mission have very cordially invited the Rev. D. Delta Evans (who recently resigned his ministry at Woolwich under the London District Unitarian Society) to undertake the responsibility of the institutional work at Dennett Hall, West Croydon, and to revive the evening service there.

Hapton (Norwich).—The Rev. J. B. Robinson, formerly of Barnard Castle, has been appointed to the ministry here.

Ilford.—The Annual Meeting of the British Women's League was held last Tuesday. Mrs. E. R. Fyson presided over a good attendance. The Annual Report, which was read by the Secretary (Miss Clark), showed an increase in the membership, and described the various activities of the year. Several members who have left the district have joined the recently established Fellowship Section, and appreciative letters from seven of these absent members were read. The Sewing Circle Treasurer (Mrs. J. G. Foster) and the War Fund Treasurer (Mrs.

C. Dupuy) presented their balance sheets, which, together with the general balance sheet, showed money in hand. The officers were re-elected. The increased subscription was again voted to headquarters, and work for the coming year was discussed and settled.

Leicester.—At a meeting of the Great Meeting Women's Fellowship League on February 9, Mrs. Bernard Allen gave a very interesting account of the work done for the Belgians in France through the Belgian Hospital Fund. There was a large attendance, and the collection taken, although it had not been announced beforehand, amounted to £5 10s. On the following Sunday afternoon Mrs. Allen also addressed the Sunday school. By her visit she has quickened hearts and minds, and movements have been stimulated into action which will bear fruit later on.

Lewes.—The Rev. F. K. Freeston will lecture to the Literary Society in connection with Westgate Chapel on February 19, Dr. Blake Odgers on March 5, and Dr. W. F. Adeney on March 12.

London: Dingley Place Mission.—Owing, we regret to say, to rather serious illness, the Rev. F. Summers has been obliged to resign the charge of the Mission to which he has devoted himself with continuous and self-denying service for thirty-nine years. The deep sympathy and good wishes of a wide circle of friends will go out towards so genial and stalwart a veteran in his illness. He is at present under Dr. Weir, at the Homœopathic Hospital, Queen's Square, W.C.

Nottingham: High Pavement.—A notice board having stated that the congregation here was founded "by the three clergymen who were ejected from the churches of St. Mary and St. Peter, in this city, under the Act of Uniformity, 1662," a correspondent to The Nottingham Daily Guardian, Mr. D. S. Ransom, denied the claim of the founders to the style of "clergymen," on the ground that they were not episcopally ordained. Mr. John Warren replied, giving reasons for adhering to the description on the notice board, and the discussion was continued in six letters. They are printed in full in The High Pavement Chronicle for February, and, as our readers would expect, Mr. Warren, who is President of the Unitarian Historical Society, shows himself master of the evidence, and an energetic defender of the rights of our Presbyterian pioneers to full recognition as clergy in the eyes of the law in their day.

Nottingham: Resignation of the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne.—At a meeting of the congregation of the High Pavement Chapel which was held on Wednesday evening, January 17, Mr. E. Wilford, Chairman of the Council, presiding, a letter announcing his resignation was read from the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne. In expressing his warm appreciation of the kindness which had always been extended to him at the High Pavement, and his love and reverence for the place and the congregation, Mr. Ballantyne said that it had been a matter of serious deliberation with him whether he could best serve the churches and the ministry as a whole and follow his own aptitude to the fullest extent by remaining at Nottingham, or by accepting the responsibility of becoming "Minister to the Poor at the Mill Street Mission, Liverpool." The whole matter was not one of personal likes and dislikes but of duty. He was glad that their answer, when the question was put to them, though it was considered right that he should go, was given with reluctance. He would go to Liverpool as a son of the High Pavement, proud of that designation. The Chairman, after voicing the sorrow with which they must all have heard of Mr. Ballantyne's resignation, and their warm gratitude for his devotion, energy, inspiring enthusiasm, and kindness, moved the following resolution: "That this meeting of the High Pavement congregation has received with deep sorrow the resignation of the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne, on his acceptance of the charge of the Liverpool Domestic Mission, a resignation which they most regretfully accept. They desire to record their sincere regret at this severance of the ties between him and them, which were daily growing stronger, and to express their indebtedness to him for all his good work among them in the district. Mr. Ballantyne will take with him to his new charge the assurance of the deep regard and affection of every member of the High Pavement congregation, and of their warmest wishes for the future welfare and happiness of himself and Mrs. Ballantyne, and their family." Mr. J. T. Perry seconded the resolution, and after other speakers had addressed the meeting, it was carried unanimously.

Southern Provincial Assembly.—It is requested that during the absence of the Minister, the Rev. W. H. Drummond, in France, all communications connected with the supply of pulpits in the province and the work of lay preachers should be sent to the President, Mr. E. R. Fyson, 16 Airlie Gardens, Ilford.

BIRTHS.

BARNES.—At 22 Park Hill, Ealing, on 7 February, the wife of Mr. A. Barnes, S.O., a daughter.

HERFORD.—On February 8, at 153 Gatley Road, Gatley, Cheshire, the wife of Robert Osler Herford (née Aldyth Johnson) of a son.

SANDS.—On January 29, to the Rev. W. H. and Mrs. Sands of The Manse, Framlingham, a daughter.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, February 17.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. A. GOLLAND, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Lieut. G. W. H. TROOP.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 5.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM; 5.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND; 6.30, Rev. J. H. MUMMERY.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Miss ROSALIND LEE, B.A.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11, Mr. J. W. PETERKEN.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Miss M. FRANCIS.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11, Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. THOMAS MUNN.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. H. McLACHLAN, M.A., B.D.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.15, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MARGARET B. CROOK, B.A.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut. Col. BULLOCK.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. R. F. LISTER; 6.30, Mr. W. JACOBSEN.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STEET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

Notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week should be sent to The Publisher, 13 BREAM'S BUILDINGS, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

The name of the Minister of the Church is inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

February

17. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A., Devotional Service only, without sermon, after which a Meeting of the Congregation will be held.

24. Rev. ADDISON A. CHARLESWORTH, of Highgate.

March

3. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON, of Kentish Town.

10. Rev. Dr. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER of Manchester College, Oxford.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND NATIONAL DUTY.

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,

Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

GRESHAM COLLEGE,

Basinghall Street, E.C.

FOUR LECTURES on ROMAN LAW,

as compared with English Law, will be delivered by Dr. BLAKE ODGERS on TUESDAY, Feb. 19, WEDNESDAY, Feb. 20,

THURSDAY, Feb. 21, and FRIDAY, Feb. 22,

at 6 P.M.

Free to the Public.

SUSTENTATION FUND

FOR THE AUGMENTATION OF MINISTERS' STIPENDS.

The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Contributors will be held at ESSEX HALL, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.2, at 12.30 P.M., on WEDNESDAY, February 27, 1918, to receive the Report and Accounts, elect Three Managers, appoint Officers, and transact other business.

WILLIAM H. DRUMMOND,

Acting Hon. Secretary.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

THE

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

NOW READY.

"YOUNG DAYS"

ANNUAL.

Edited by Rev. J. J. WRIGHT,

192 pages of Stories. 100 Pictures. Frontispiece—Portrait of Editor. A most attractive Present for Young People. Boards, 1s. 6d. net. Cloth, 2s. net. Postage 5d.

We will post copies direct if names and addresses are sent to us.

London:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

The Acting Treasurer, Mr. G. W. BROWN, will be much obliged if subscribers to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association will kindly remit their subscriptions for 1918 to Essex Hall, or pay them to the local treasurers. There are still a few subscriptions unpaid for the year 1917, which he would be pleased to receive.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

Deputy Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

Miss CECIL GRADWELL. | H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.

L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I. | H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT

FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

RAWTENSTALL UNITARIAN CHURCH.

The Pulpit of the above Church is now VACANT. Candidates are invited with a view to the appointment of resident Minister.

Apply WALTER J. SCAIFE, Hon. Sec., 31 Thorn Street, Rawtenstall,

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

MISS KINGSTON much regrets that owing to continued ill health she is obliged to CLOSE her Boarding House at 15 Endsleigh Street, W.C.1, on FEBRUARY 25, 1918.

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED HALF HOUSE TO LET. No children taken. Suit two ladies or gentleman and wife. Other occupant, one lady. Attendance by arrangement.—Address M., 20 Alytt's Gardens, Golders Green, N.W.

BRIGHTON.—TO LET, Furnished, SITTING-ROOM AND BEDROOM. Near Station and trams. Very clean and sunny. 15s. a week. Vacant on February 14th.—W. care of INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Miscellaneous.

GENT'S HANDKERCHIEF BARGAINS, hemstitched Irish Linen, slightly imperfect, size about 13 or 19 inches, six for 4s. 7d., postage 3d., twelve 9s., postage 4d. Bargain List, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

* All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken. Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenaeum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 16, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3947.
NEW SERIES, No. 1050.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	57	BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	59	NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS	62
THREE YEARS IN BELGIUM UNDER THE GERMAN OCCUPATION	58	CORRESPONDENCE:— The Churches and the Ministry	60	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	62

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

MAGNIFICENT heroism, once more, and even beyond record, is revealed in the account now published of the stand of our British troops at Bourslon Wood, Nov. 30, and on the Cambrai front generally. No words can express the admiration and profound gratitude evoked by this new evidence that our race is true to itself still—faithful, gallant, self-sacrificing, dutiful. Can the people at home read this story and not be moved to share so much of like qualities as are demanded of them? It is but very far short of their degree that we are called upon to be brave and loyal in our respective posts of duty.

* * *

PROFOUND uneasiness, to give the feeling no weightier name, evidently exists far and wide in view of recent political developments. At the moment when the nation needs most of all to be staunchly united and resolute it is almost tragic that the very centre of Government should be suspect. The Prime Minister of a nation like ours, daily faced by tasks so immensely urgent and so deeply complicated, may well engage the sympathy of all thoughtful citizens. We believe that many people have loyally refrained for a long while from criticisms which at other times would have been freely uttered. But there are limits, and if we care at all for the good name and real prosperity of our nation's cause we Englishmen must not hold silence too long. The sinister prominence of Lord Northcliffe in the inner circle, itself of very dubious elements without him, has become a menace. A man with his public record is emphatically not a man we can trust. Recently, Mr. Austen Chamberlain much surprised his friend Mr. Balfour by an explosion of sound democratic sentiment instilled into his mind by the Radical education of his youth. We are indebted to Mr. Chamberlain for letting Mr. Lloyd George know, on Tuesday in the House of Commons, that the type of publicist he now favours is unworthy of him, and that, in the lobbies and outside, there is emphatic condemnation of this Press alliance.

* * *

THE letters of Dr. Jacks and Dr. Mellor which appear in this week's issue show with sufficient clearness that the question of the Churches and the ministry is already uppermost in the minds of our leaders. We offer no comment at present on the different points raised by them; no doubt further considerations will be suggested by other writers. The only remarks we submit here are these. In the first place, the discussion, to be fruitful, must certainly cover no narrow ground; and a mere "attack" on the Colleges or any of them is least likely, in our judgment, to do the slightest good. Critics may assure themselves that most serious attention—the attention of skilled and experienced workers, be it remembered—is constantly converged upon the special problem of the education of our students. Secondly, this problem is so far from being peculiar to ourselves that it is raised just now in connection with many, if not most, of the religious fellowships; and a standing committee is charged with its investigation to-day among our Boston brethren. Last, but not least, we should very much like to know what the man in the pew thinks about these and kindred matters. If we could only get at that we should be the more likely to be in touch with the living needs of people outside all pews.

* * *

THE decision of the A.S.E. to reject the Government's man-power proposals is, apparently, not taken in responsible quarters as so ominous as might at first be judged by the outside observer. We are assured, indeed, that there has been a decided change for the better in the tone of the workmen at their meetings and in their workshops, and that much voluntary enlisting is going on.

We can only trust these indications are of real value; but the worst folly is the optimism that ignores ugly facts—which certainly do exist in this case.

* * *

PROF. H. WILDER FOOTE has recently given (in The Harvard Theological Review) an account of a discovery interesting to hymn-lovers, especially Unitarians. It refers to a hymn to be found in several American collections, and known on this side from its inclusion in Dr. Hunter's hymn-book, in the first edition of the Essex Hall Hymnal, and others, and attributed variously to "Anon.," Caroline Gilman, and Dr. Martineau. The reason for the last-named ascription is that the verses, which begin: "He who himself and God would know," are obviously based upon a passage in Dr. Martineau's sermon on 'Silence and Meditation' printed in the 'Endeavours After the Christian Life.'

* * *

DR. MARTINEAU himself said, however, twenty-five years ago, that he knew nothing of the hymn's authorship. Prof. Foote says he last year accidentally found a letter, in a copy of the 'Unitarian Hymn and Tune Book' (1877) on the shelves of the library of the Union Theological Seminary in New York, which was written in 1880 by the Rev. Samuel Longfellow, and in which the writer states that he "versified it" "from a passage in one of Martineau's sermons." That a writer of so many noble hymns, familiar in many collections, "versified" this one may perhaps lead to its wider inclusion by future editors. In any case, the point is worth remembering. The article—printed in last quarter's Review—contains other valuable information as to Samuel Longfellow's hymns.

* * *

OUR Chicago contemporary, Unity, January 17, gave a very good portrait of the late Rev. T. Lloyd Jones of Liverpool, "a Genial Worker for Humanity" whose passing was a loss and grief to a large number of people, of very diverse rank in society. He was a kinsman of the editor of Unity, the Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, who has pride in reprinting the testimonies to our late friend's character and influence published over here at the time of his death, last October. Speaking of visits paid by him to America, we are told how the friends there, the social workers especially, "much enjoyed his buoyant good cheer. He was a breezy, cheerful, joyful, radiant kind of man, who would promptly adopt into his heart as a member of the family whoever came within reach of his cordial hand clasp and warm heart clasp."

* * *

DR. WASHINGTON GLADDEN, vigorous veteran that he is, does not shrink from denouncing the orthodox dogmas which, as he maintains, are largely responsible for nourishing a disposition to war. He says:—

If God hates all sinners with such a hatred as is implied in the doctrine of eternal punishment, then it cannot be wrong for men to hate one another and for nations to hate one another; it must be the natural thing for men and nations to hate one another; and a firm foundation is laid for endless enmities and eternal wars. And whatever the churches have done in their theologies to cultivate and justify these elements of enmity must have helped to keep smouldering in human hearts the embers of war.

The insistence upon the doctrine of eternal punishment which makes the centrality and eternity of hate the cornerstone of Orthodoxy; the insistence upon the infallibility of the Bible which conserves, like flies in amber, the paganisms of past ages and turns them into laws of life for this generation; the acquiescence in the atheistic nationalisms of modern centuries which make every nation a law unto itself and every other nation its enemy, and utterly repudiate the fact of the divine Fatherhood and the law of universal love—these are facts which no man can dispute. We think they explain the shrinkage and depression, and sense of failure of the Church in these last days.

* * *

WE are interested to observe that efforts to utilise old machinery for new and more pressing—at any rate, more possible—out-put extends to educational as well as to mechanical work. Our own colleges, largely denuded of students as readers will know, have provided short courses of study for ministers engaged in active work; and the Settlements in London and elsewhere are following similar lines. "Mansfield," Canning Town, for example, has a new training scheme in operation under the title 'Education as National Service,' by which experts are helping to equip students (mostly women and disabled officers) for advance in Continuation teaching. Another branch of its activity consists of "Social Study Schools," and endeavours to do similar work for ministers, deacons, employers, schoolmasters, and others, in addition to ordinary students. One excellent feature in the latter course is the introduction of working men and women as speakers to classes mostly composed of the well-to-do.

THREE YEARS IN BELGIUM UNDER THE GERMAN OCCUPATION.

BY MISS GOBLET D'ALVIELLA.

IT is very difficult to give a concise idea of Belgium under the German Occupation. The continual haunting presence of the enemy and the extreme difficulty of material life has reduced existence to a few simple interests. What it has lost in complexity it has gained in intensity.

A wonderful feeling of brotherhood unites all classes of society. Rich and poor are in hourly contact and help is given as simply as it is received. Literally one half of the nation is carrying on the amazing task of feeding and clothing with his own hands the other half, become destitute. Life is at stake, and knowledge of this leaves one no respite in unceasing toil. Notwithstanding this immense social work, the population of Belgium is daily being reduced in health and vitality. Tuberculosis is increasing among the many weakened by growing privations. Everything is being done to stem this frightful disease, but now years of underfeeding and strenuous living are beginning to tell. Even among the rich a grey haggard look is on every face. During the last year food has risen to such prices that wealthy people's incomes are spent chiefly on getting staple nourishment. But there is little complaint. It is war. This fact is thoroughly grasped by everyone. The nation is straining its every nerve to "live on" to weather this unmerited storm of calamity. "To make the best of it" is felt to be a patriotic duty. It is not talked about, it is felt. There is very little talk in Belgium. Three years of life without newspapers have left the nation without self-consciousness. One does not look at oneself living. One lives.

Lack of news is felt as a greater privation than lack of food. Except by intermittent correspondence with Holland and Switzerland (correspondence which can only convey the vaguest and the most "neutral" information) Belgium is completely cut off from the outside world. To have no news of those fighting at the front is a torture difficult to realise for people whose mail daily brings them in touch with their dear ones. It is only equalled by the utter loneliness of the Belgian soldier on this side, cut off from his home and family, ignorant of their welfare and often of their very existence, unable to realise their present conditions of life, and always coming across and believing the wildest tales.

What has hurt Belgium deeper than any other wrong inflicted by the Germans is the deportation of her men. All the world knows how, against all rules and conventions of war, Belgian workmen were dragged away from their families and sent to work in Germany, freeing in this way German soldiers who could be sent to the front. The parting of these men from their wives and children led to the most heart-rending scenes. Their departure in every town and village gave rise to patriotic manifestations, the men singing forbidden national songs at all the stations they passed through. The treatment they endured in Germany was such as to be almost unbelievable. Only the sight of the stricken bodies of those that returned carried home to us what tortures they had gone through rather than consent to work for their country's enemy.

There seems to be a strange tendency among the Allies to consider Occupied Belgium as being simply a dead weight on their hands. Our country seems to them to have for the time being become a part of Germany and is reduced in their minds to a store-house for German troops. The inhabitants are chiefly "the poor Belgians" passively suffering under German oppression, but in no way participating in the great world struggle for liberty. In reality, this is not so. The whole of the nation under constant menace of imprisonment and death is fighting, without arms, against German power and influence. There is no need of pro-Ally propaganda in Belgium. The presence of the enemy is propaganda enough.

The daily attitude of the people towards the Germans is one of open defiance and hostility. In the streets they are chiefly ignored. This being "overlooked" is particularly amazing to the acuteness of their childlike vanity. They have slowly learned during these past three years that a man wearing the German uniform is an object of hatred, and that a Belgian risks his reputation in the eyes of his fellow-people if he is seen speaking to one of them. Even in the loneliest country villages the German soldier and the peasant who lodges him do not fraternise. They sit apart at the café, they are shunned in all places of reunion.

In reality the whole of the country is one vast conspiracy against the Germans. Everyone in every class of society is engaged in some secret work, passing letters, sending out information, helping recruits to cross the frontier.

The forbidden paper La Libre Belgique still flourishes, a thorn in the German flesh. Prisons are filled with its editors, its collaborators, its porters. Still the paper appears, more vengeful after each fresh condemnation.

The martyrdom of Miss Cavell is a daily recurring tragedy. Men and women unflinchingly go to their death with the cry of "long live Belgium" on their lips. The people who come out of prison tell moving tales of the heroism they have witnessed. In a prison in Germany is an old woman condemned to ten years hard labour for some patriotic work which the Germans name "treason." This woman was giving last messages to a fortunate companion who was leaving: "Tell them over there," she said, "they must not make a bad peace. I would rather die in this prison than think the Allies would make a bad peace."

And that is the general feeling in Belgium. We have suffered too much, we have been fighting too desperately to bear the thought of all our work being annihilated by a peace which would not be based on the triumph of the Allies.

The Germans having found that the Belgian spirit was unconquerable have tried their favourite method of stirring up race feeling. The task appeared easy. Belgium is divided into two races: the Dutch element represented by the Flemings, the Latin or French element represented by the Walloons. These two races are entirely different in character and language. The sudden onslaught of the Germans had brought about a fine unity of national feeling, and against this rock all efforts to "germanise" the Belgians have repeatedly failed. The Germans, then, have tried to disunite our people. In these attempts they have signally failed. The leaders of the Flemish party who before the war were clamoring for "rights" have preferred to be sent to prison in Germany rather than accept the fulfilment of those same rights when proffered to them by the German Government. Against the people's will, the country has been divided into two different administrations, but the public officials of Belgium have resigned in great numbers rather than countenance a measure imposed on us by the enemy.

Love of freedom is a long inherited passion in the Belgian heart. Our patriotism consists chiefly in a fierce love of the soil. Belgium's whole history is one long record of struggle against oppression. Again and again the iron heel of the conqueror has crushed our nation, drenching the land with the life-blood of our heroes. We are a marvellously tenacious and "living" folk, rebellious by instinct to all attempted tyranny.

And in this dark hour this instinct has not failed us. It is alive to-day among the children of our people. Last August I was at a way-side inn in the country with a party of club girls from our Brussels "East End." The landlady's son, a little boy of twelve, knew a great amount of those patriotic songs that are chiefly taught—since they are forbidden. He stood on a table amidst a sea of our girls and sang song after song in a high clear voice. After a while, we asked him to sing the 'Brabançonne,' our national hymn. He started, but suddenly broke down in the middle and began to cry. I thought he was merely over-excited, and taking him out in the garden I tried to comfort him—as one would a little child. And he said to me among his tears: "It's not all that, Mademoiselle, it's that I do so want to be free."

And this child did but voice the longing of all our hearts. Three years of misery and oppression have strangely spiritualised the Belgian nation. The harder life becomes the more the people rise above material circumstances.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium. (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais. (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

159TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,079	16	0
Highgate Unitarian Church (24th)	3 11 7
L. O. M. (23rd)	1 0 0
Cabfare	0 2 6
Mr. and Mrs. John T. Osler (7th)	20	0	0
Dr. Eliaert, Belgian Army Medical Service	1 16 5
Mr. J. W. Belfield (2nd)	0 10 0
Todmorden Branch of the Women's League, per Miss Shaw (2nd)	5 0 0
Mr. J. Evers (6th)	6 0 0
	£20,117	16	6

Parcels have been received from:—Mrs. Notcutt; Miss Mary B. Lamb; Miss Gertrude Martineau; Miss Wimble; Mrs. W. Nuttall; Anon.; Ladies of the War Distress Effort of the Upper Chapel, Sheffield, Branch of the Women's League, per Mrs. Wm. Laycock; Essex Church Work Parties, per Mrs. Worthington; Mrs. Long; Miss C. Harrold; Anon. (Eccles); Mrs. Harrison; Mrs. Newton; Rosslyn Hill Sewing Society, Hampstead, per Mrs. Thomas Cobb; Anon. (by hand).

WEEKLY NOTES.

THE following letter from a correspondent at the Belgian Front, gives an interesting account of the education which is being carried on among the men. The Belgian army contains many young men who joined at 16 or thereabouts in 1914 and have been fighting ever since. It has been felt that something ought to be done to fit them for a civil career after the war.

"For some time past we have, at the instance of our Minister of Science and Arts, M. Pouillet, begun the work of instituting courses of teaching for our soldiers at the front—a voluntary piece of work which our military help as much as they can by granting all facilities. The work consists in placing 'précis' of courses in the hands of the soldiers—these 'précis' having been prepared by professors chosen among the officers, the chaplains, and the soldiers themselves. Up to now, it is divided into three sections: (1) Primary education, given viva voce to groups collected together in the cantonments. (2) Secondary and professional education, given chiefly by correspondence. The professors send papers and advice and correct written work. The men are prepared for the examinations for the Chamber of Commerce and for the administration of public offices, such as the post office and railways. (3) Higher education, including preparation for the entrance examination into the universities, and for examinations in the various faculties of the universities such as philosophy, science, medicine, law. This is done partly by classes partly by correspondence. As the Belgian universities do not exist now, the Minister of Science and Art has appointed bodies of men to examine and carry on the work of the universities. He considers that after the war it is of the greatest importance that there should be a number of young men fit to take up professions at once, and it is to secure this that this work has been organised by co-operation between official authority and private enterprise. One of my chaplains is at the head of the university section. The young men themselves are very keen to continue their education at the times when their military duties leave them free, and they attack their work with heroic ardour under conditions which might well daunt them. The number of students is considerable and increases daily. It is unnecessary to insist on the enormous moral influence such a movement must have in the ranks of our army beside the real necessity from the intellectual and scientific point of view for the people of to-morrow of whom we have here the most vigorous and deserving element."

ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Pyjamas, shirts, socks, and all sorts of men's underclothing.

Slippers, mufflers, mittens.

Clothing for women and children, especially stockings.

Games, jig-saw puzzles, writing paper.

Calico bags, 2 ft. by 3 ft., and any smaller size.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THE BOOK ROOM IN HAYRE.

Already acknowledged	..	£34	6	0
Mr. James Bradshaw..	..	1	0	0
Total	..	£35	6	0

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and the address of the senders.

THE CHURCHES AND THE MINISTRY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—All who are engaged in the training of the ministry will greatly welcome the correspondence on this subject to which you have opened your columns and will look to it for many helpful suggestions. But may I remind your correspondents that suggestions are not helpful when they pay no regard to what is practically possible in the conditions under which we work. By emphasising the practically possible I do not wish to lower the aim of the discussion but to call attention to such simple facts as that we have only a certain amount of time at our disposal, that there is a limit to the number of lectures and classes a student may be reasonably expected to attend (coupled, I might add, with a tendency on the part of the student to put the limit rather below than above what is reasonable), and a further limit to the number of subjects which even the most gifted and industrious person can profitably study at the same time. These are only a few of the practical considerations that have to be remembered. Suggestions which ignore them are not likely to prove helpful.

What I would suggest to your correspondents is that after drawing up what they consider an ideal training or curriculum for the theological student, they should then make out a specimen timetable showing us how we are to cover the ground in the time at our disposal and with due regard to the powers of the student. Those of your correspondents who are acquainted with the working of the Home Missionary or Manchester College would have no difficulty in doing this. It would be an immediate test of the practical nature of the proposals and would save us from discussing impossible things.

Further, when your correspondents come to subjects with which the students ought to be acquainted I would beg them to make out the list in the order of importance. This is the only method which will lead to good results. If there is no discrimination between the essential and the important, and a haphazard list presented of all the knowledge the student should acquire, we shall find ourselves unable to stop, for there is no limit to the number of subjects that might be named as belonging to the proper equipment of the minister. Dr. Rattray gave a long list in his letter; but there are many others I could add, for example, Science and European History, of which no minister in these days can afford to be totally ignorant. But if we go on in this way the discussion ceases to be helpful; for we are constructing programmes which turn out unworkable the moment they encounter the bare necessities imposed upon us by the calendar and the clock. I endorse Dr. Rattray's statement that a minister should know everything of something and something of everything. But I venture to say that a college which taught "everything of something" would find enough in that alone to fill its timetable and to tax its students' powers to the uttermost. It would have no time, and certainly no energy, for the immense demands of the other half of the programme—"something of everything." Here, too, we need to discriminate between the essential and the important. Which is which—"everything of something" or "something of everything?" I can imagine a college coming to grief through not making up its mind on that point.

My own experience, so far, has been that a college which confines itself to essentials will find itself more than fully occupied. There is, of course, a question as to what the essentials are, and it will be most helpful to learn the opinions of your correspondents on this point. But I think all of them will find, if they will check themselves by making a time-table, that when they have named three or possibly four essential subjects—no matter what—they will almost have exhausted both the working hours and the powers of the student. At present Manchester College regards Old Testament, New Testament, Christian History, and the Philosophy of Religion as the four essential subjects, with Homiletics and Sociology added, and we find that even a moderate attention given to them brings the student to the end of his time and energy. Of course we might change the four essentials for another four; for art, music, general literature and liturgies; but if we were to add the new four, and the others mentioned by Dr. Rattray, to the old list we should find ourselves utterly at a non-plus.

Of course the difficulty could be met to some extent by giving a little of each, and by making it very little we might greatly extend our list, and even attack the problem of teaching the student "something of everything"—though we should then have to omit "everything of something." And this seems to be Dr. Rattray's point when he speaks of a short knowledge of these subjects. But then he adds two other adjectives, scholarly and accurate. Now, for my part, I do not know how to teach either the Bible or philosophy so as to make the result scholarly and accurate as well as short. Accurate and scholarly knowledge of the Bible demands knowledge of Hebrew and Greek, and there is no short form of it that would serve the purpose either of accuracy or scholarship.

I might summarise the above remarks by asking your correspondents to weigh the following points before making their suggestions: (1) Is there any part of a minister's culture which he may reasonably be expected to acquire for himself, or at all events through other agencies than those of a theological college: in other words, is "what the minister ought to know" the same thing as "what the College ought to teach"? (2) Should a college, in forming its curriculum, be guided exclusively by what needs to be taught, without paying attention to what the students are capable of learning, in view of the time at their disposal, the degree of their previous education, and the average quality of their mental powers? (3) Are we to consider the number of students likely to be available at any given time, or are we to neglect this and make up a many-sided programme which would be quite workable with a large number, say 100, students, who might be segregated according to aptitude, but quite unworkable if the number were so small as to make segregation impossible? These are the chief practical considerations I wish to emphasise. We who are engaged in college work know how important, indeed how inexorable, they are. But we find them frequently overlooked even by the most loyal and well meaning of our friends.

Lastly, in discussing the method of selecting students for the ministry, about which Dr. Rattray makes some admirable suggestions, may I again ask your correspondents not to forget that any method of selection we may approve presupposes that we have the material to select from. This is the root question of all; and here it is that I find Dr. Rattray most disconcerting. What troubles me is not so much his statement that Manchester College is denominational—though I don't agree with him—but the statement which precedes it—viz., that the denomination with which the College is connected and on which it depends is ceasing to exist. If the denomination is ceasing to exist we can hardly escape the conclusion that the supply of young men for the ministry is ceasing to exist also. The two things are intimately correlated. We may establish our method of selection, but with a perishing denomination behind us we shall find there is nothing or very little to select from. And not only will the young men become progressively fewer in number as the denomination ceases to exist, but they will be poorer in quality—men who represent the declining faith of a dying cause. This is a very serious outlook, and at once raises the question—Where is the supply to come from? Shall we say it will come from "outside"—from other denominations? But surely we are indulging an idle dream when we expect that "outsiders" will be eager to serve a denomination which is ceasing to exist and is publicly described in those terms by one of its ministers. Suppose a young man from the Wesleyan body were to consult me about entering Manchester College and I were to tell him, as Dr. Rattray tells your readers, that Manchester College is a denominational institution dependent on a denomination which is ceasing to exist. I venture to say that the Committee of Selection would have no further trouble with that young man.

I can quite understand the frame of mind which, believing that the denomination is ceasing to exist, calls on the Colleges to come to the rescue. But if the Colleges are dependent on the denomination they are equally in need of rescue themselves. College and denomination are like two drowning men tied together by a rope and it is hard to see how either can save the other. Here, surely, we are moving in a vicious circle from which, so far as I can see, the reform of our College curriculum is not likely to deliver us. This is at least what follows if we tie ourselves down, as I do not, to Dr. Rattray's double proposition that the College is a denominational institution and that the denomination is ceasing to exist.

L. P. JACKS.

Oxford, February 14, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Dr. Rattray has raised an issue of great importance to "our churches and our ministry." He believes that, unless we bestir ourselves, our "churches of the free basis," as he calls them, will cease to exist. He may be right; but it is not an encouraging prospect. What he seeks, apparently, is a new and rich supply of ministers to save us from this impending doom, and he seems to think that we may secure the ministers by making changes in our theological colleges, and by reorganising our denominational machinery in other ways. Though I sympathise with much that he says, I am in the end left dubious and wondering, and what I wonder most is whether Dr. Rattray has reached the essence of the matter he brings before us. Let me, as briefly as I can, state the grounds for this hesitation in my mind.

No one, I suppose, would suggest that our Colleges, admirable institutions in many ways as they are, could not be improved. Certainly I think, and I believe there is a growing feeling in that direction, that real good might result from some closer union and co-operation between our colleges in Oxford and Manchester, and from some scheme whereby students for our ministry might regularly enjoy the advantages of both colleges, and under which the two colleges should function as one instrument. But, in all discussion of the colleges, we ought to remember that the vitality of the colleges depends on the vitality of the churches, rather than vice versa, and that, during the past ten years at any rate, according to actual statistical records, our colleges have not supplied half the ministers who, in that period, have entered our ranks. This is not because the colleges have been inefficient, unattractive, useless for their purpose. The colleges may be imperfect, doubtless are very imperfect; but they cannot train more men for the ministry than the churches send them or than are, in their youth, attracted by the prospect of service amongst us. The fact that our colleges have had the privilege and responsibility of supplying only so relatively few of our ministers during the past ten years indicates simply the further fact that our churches themselves have not been possessed of vitality sufficient to keep their own ministry going, let alone anything else. Our churches have not been able to inspire their own sons to enter the ministry of the faith and gospel in which they have been reared, nor to attract young men from outside to come in by the admittedly best and most satisfactory door that is open.

Will any re-organisation of the colleges alter this fact of depressed vitality in the churches? Is it a matter that can be dealt with by multiplication of committees and half-hearted attempts to improve or reform machinery? I do not believe it. Is there a kind of untapped reservoir of possible ministers outside, fine, intelligent, high-hearted young men, who will rush eagerly in to save us from ruin if only we re-organise our colleges? Again, I do not believe it. Young men and women, contemplating the vocation to the ministry, will look first at our churches and then at our colleges. They will ask what do these churches stand for, what is their gospel, what contribution are they making to the life of religion, what scope is there in them, what vitality, what power of the spirit? And if they ask this, as they should, what answer can we make to them, what will they see for themselves? Here, it seems to me, is the real issue, the "critical question," not "the getting ministers who could get people," but the discovery of an ideal and a purpose for our churches capable of revivifying their internal and now not very vigorous life, and of appealing to youth, within and without, as a cause and a crusade worthy the uttermost self-devotion.

Brevity has gone from me; but I cannot help it. I am not hopeless about our churches. I still believe they have a place to fill and a work to do; but I know that my view of that place and work is not the view of some of my brethren. And it is this difference of conception as to the ideal and purpose for which we exist that we must face. Let me speak, Sir, with complete frankness and, at the same time, with full sympathy with those who may differ from me. I see our churches perishing through lack of a central, unifying, thrilling mission and gospel. The service to be rendered by any denomination to the cause of Christianity in the difficult years ahead of us will not depend upon the number of its professing adherents, nor upon the number of its churches and ministers, but upon the quality, depth, power, and intensity of the religious life, purpose, and ideal represented by it. What is our purpose? What is our ideal? What is our reason for existing at all in the seething, tumultuous movements of life to-day, and amid all the amazing springtime of opportunity opening upon us?

Can it be that our purpose and ideal are simply to remain on the outskirts, far off on the extreme left, ultra-Protestant wing, of the main movement of Christianity, holding on, perhaps, to a somewhat intransigent theological sectionalism, for its own sake, fighting again and again forgotten battles with effete weapons, threatening a boasted freedom with the worst of schismatic heresies, the heresy of freedom itself? If that, or anything like that, be the ideal and purpose of our churches, I foresee two things at least. None of the young men and women who have breathed the intense, passionate, profoundly Christian air of twentieth century religious life, with its mysticism, its centralisation in Jesus, its personality, its social and democratic enthusiasms, its longing for unified fellowship of Christians will ever come our way, whilst, on the other hand, some whom to-day we count as ours, men and women not without merit and something of the fire of God and His Christ, will, with sorrow and pain in their hearts, depart from us for ever. The way of "liberal theology" can also lead to the confines of death, and, in any case, it is daily more evident that a bare humanistic Theism, no matter how morally pure and lofty in some of its aspects, is not the line coincident with the deepest religious needs and aspirations of our time, and does not contain within itself the gospel which will sweep the western world. I do not say that, by following this way, our churches would cease to exist: they might still be the haven of refuge for extreme views, and for a temperamentally irreconcilable minority, and they might still shelter valuable types of the religious life. But they would break with their noble history, and they would be outside the new life of that full Christianity which will, ere long, break upon the world.

Over against all this, I would suggest another ideal and purpose—this, namely, to take in both hands such treasures of religion as history and experience have given to us, for example, our love of intellectual and spiritual freedom, our eagerness for veracity in worship, our sense of the value of congregational liberty, our strong conviction that an upright and pure moral character is no small part of religion, and, with these treasures, follow the path of the great reconciliation, laying these as our gifts on the altar of a unified Christian Church, and receiving with gratitude from others all they can give to us, seeking the full fellowship of Christ and the majestic goal and service of manifesting Jesus to a redeemed humanity, going back to the main movement of the Christian Church and forward to the emergence of the Holy Catholic Church of Christ which alone can avail for the salvation of mankind. Are we going to tread the way of extremism still further into the wilderness of isolation, cherishing the delusive hope that the rest of Christendom will blindly follow us to death, or are we going to offer the gift of our historical and traditional principle of liberty, when it rightly belongs as our contribution to a unified Christian Church, thus following the path of reconciliation, which means not only giving but receiving as well, ready to revise our theology at the bidding of the new workings of Christ's spirit in the main body of the Church, to centralise with the rest of Christ's disciples our whole life and faith in his faith and gospel, and to join in the evangelisation, the full and complete Christianising, of the world?

This seems to me the vital issue, deeper than all organisation and machinery. For what purpose do we need ministers, and what ideal are we inviting men and women to serve?

"Union is strength," says Dr. Rattray. Quite true; but I protest that I am not anxious to secure the unity of a "bundle." We have had too much of that already. What I want is the unity of organic life, and this is achieved not by fastening broken bits together, but by the felt presence throughout the whole organism of a vivifying purpose and ideal.—Yours, &c. STANLEY A. MELLOR.

Liverpool.

IN the debate on the Address last week it was asserted, and not contested, that over half-a-million tons shipping would have been saved for the carriage of food if prohibition of drink had been adopted during the war. Mr. Hoover has ordered brewers in the United States to cease the purchase of barley, &c., for malting.

IT is gratifying to know that the Y.M.C.A., by means of their War Roll, are helping various Church organisations to keep in touch with the soldiers and sailors who belong to any stated denomination. By the courtesy of the Y.M.C.A. in sending to Essex Hall the Roll cards of men describing themselves as Unitarian, Lawrence House is enabled to check the lists already in their possession and to send communications to any whose names have not been supplied by ministers, church secretaries, or others. Already over one hundred of these Roll cards have been sent to Essex Hall and further small packets of them may be expected from time to time. The Y.M.C.A. thus performs an interdenominational work which we greatly appreciate.

WE understand that an earnest appeal has been addressed by the International Committee of the Red Cross to the various belligerent States, pleading that the competition in the direction of rendering more deadly in their effect the asphyxiating and poisonous gases to which the rival armies have had recourse may be stopped. It is pointed out that if the "odious practice" of using these gases is continued, there will be no end to the ferocity and brutality which we shall be led to sanction, and which must revolt humane men and women in all countries.

THERE seems to be every prospect that the demand of women to be admitted to the legal profession will be recognised before long, and Miss Helena Normanton, B.A., who is being warmly supported in her application to be received as a student of the Inns of Court, has received her admission forms. A number of Members of Parliament have signed a memorial to the Government asking that time may be given this session to the Solicitors' (Qualification of Women) Bill.

SCOTLAND too! In the manifesto of the "Disestablishment Council" against the transference of denominational schools as provided for in the Education (Scotland) Bill 1918 we find, following detailed criticism, these words: "The Council is not called upon to submit alternative proposals but it would approve of Education strictly secular being given in the schools by the State and Religious Instruction by the Churches at their own expense, through teachers approved by the authorities and under a conscience clause. This system has been working successfully in the training colleges since 1907."

"THE Greeks," writes from Salonica one of our Burnley lads in khaki, "seem a very queer people; and it is a common sight to see an old pack mule coming along, with the fat old Greek riding, and the poor wife and children walking behind!" He keenly looks forward to a visit to Lawrence House, "when this job is over."

NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS.

[A short Notice in this column does not preclude a review in a later issue.]

Belloc (Hilaire). THE FREE PRESS. London, Geo. Allen & Unwin. 102 pp., 2s. 6d. n.

We are convinced that the basis on which this book was written is true, but there is so much exaggeration that we fear many open-minded readers will dismiss it as untrustworthy, and mainly issued for the purpose of adding to the prestige of The Eye Witness, which the author started, and The New Age, in which the matter here reprinted first appeared.

Carr (H. Wildon). THE PHILOSOPHY OF BENEDETTO CROCE. London, Macmillan & Co. 209 pp., 7s. 6d. n.

A closely-reasoned introduction to the problems dealt with in the writings of Croce, one of the few living philosophers who is widely read and honoured outside his own country. It is Croce's theory of art and his doctrine that "beauty is expression" which has brought his name into prominence, and Mr. Wildon Carr, who translates from the original Italian and adopts the method of free paraphrase in order to render the meaning as clear as possible, is anxious to show how this contributes to "a new order of knowledge and a new meaning of life and mind."

Coulton (G. G.), compiled by. SOCIAL LIFE IN BRITAIN FROM THE CONQUEST TO THE REFORMATION. Cambridge, at the University Press. xvi—540 pp.

Readers of Mr. Coulton's 'Mediaeval Garner' will be glad to welcome another volume in the same kind. This volume of carefully selected extracts, drawn largely from Latin or Old French sources, is intended to supply the background of social history which is necessary to a sympathetic comprehension of our own literature in the Middle Ages. The material is grouped under various headings such as 'Town Life,' 'Rich and Poor,' 'House, Dress, and Meals,' 'Women's Life,' 'Architecture and the Arts,' 'Medicine and Justice,' and 'Superstitions and Marvels.'

Gardner (Percy), Litt.D., F.B.A. EVOLUTION IN CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE (Crown Theological Library). Williams & Norgate. 241 pp., 5s.

This volume is well worthy of its place in the "Crown Theological Library." Dr. Percy Gardner's previous works will assure the reader of scholarly, grave, and large-minded matter. "Loyal to the Church," he unhesitatingly espouses the modern view of life and the world, including Christian History, the Creeds, the person of Christ, &c. He urges the need of all who think with him in supplying their quota to the religious life of the nation, along with High Church and Low.

Gordon (Alexander), M.A. UNITY CHURCH, ISLINGTON: Its Early History, 1667-1758. London, Essex Hall, Essex Street, W.C.2. 24 pp., 6d.

The congregation of Unity Church has had a long and varied history and a remarkable succession of ministers, of whom the first, Matthew Sylvester, had as unpaid assistant for many years no less a person than Richard Baxter, and after that, for a short period, Edmund Calamy, then a young man and willing to give his services for £40 a year. A most interesting survey of its fortunes during ninety-one years was given by the Rev. Alexander Gordon in an address delivered at Unity Church on its 250th anniversary (November 11, 1917), which has now been published.

"Ignotus." THE QUESTIONS OF "IGNOTUS"; with replies by the Right Rev. Bishop Welldon, D.D., the Rev. Father Power, S.J. and others. London, Chapman & Hall. 244 pp., 5s. n.

This is a challenging book, consisting of articles (with consequent correspondence) that were published in The Manchester City News. The 'Questions' include such as: 'Why are the Pews Empty?' 'Can the Pews be filled Again?' 'Should Heretics be Condemned?' 'Why does Heresy Exist?' 'Need we believe in Miracles?' 'Does the World want Religion or Theology?' The writer, acute if not profound, represents a state of mind to be reckoned with. We cannot imagine a clergyman or minister whose thoughts would not be fruitfully stirred by his arguments and appeals.

Kidd (Benjamin). THE SCIENCE OF POWER. London, Methuen & Co. 298 pp., 6s. n.

In this arresting book Mr. Benjamin Kidd traces our Western civilisation to its roots in combativeness and the belief in force, points to the grave results of following the Darwinian theory of the "efficient animal" to its logical conclusion, and elaborates the idea that power in the future will be based upon "the emotion of the ideal in the collective mind" of which "the first stages have been displayed in the history of modern Prussia." The "first stages," with all their crudities and barbarities, must not, of course, be confused with later developments along the path of self-sacrifice and "the principles which subordinate us to the universal." Mr. Kidd's whole contention is that the lower standards of ethics must be replaced by the higher, and in dealing with the social integration of the future he gives a very high place to the influence of women in their relationship to power.

Murray (Gilbert). FAITH, WAR, AND POLICY: Lectures and Essays. Oxford, University Press. 280 pp., 6s. n.

A new volume by Prof. Gilbert Murray hardly needs any words of ours to commend it to readers of THE INQUIRER. The series of lectures and essays published under the above title are, however, of special interest at the present time in view of the changing political situation, and the authoritative statements made by Mr. Lloyd George and President Wilson in January, which Prof. Murray considers of the utmost importance. The volume includes the notable address delivered at the Triennial Meeting of the National Conference at Essex Hall in 1915 and subsequently printed in these columns.

O'Grady (Standish). SELECTED ESSAYS AND PASSAGES; with introduction by Ernest A. Boyd. London, T. Fisher Unwin. 340 pp., 3s. n.

A welcome addition to "Every Irishman's Library." Mr. Standish O'Grady's services to Anglo-Irish literature in the capacity of historian, novelist, dramatist, editor, and publisher have been many and varied, and love of Ireland and the ideal is the dominant emotion of his life.

Oman (John), M.A. GRACE AND PERSONALITY. Cambridge, at the University Press. 288 pp., 6s. n.

This book is based on a series of articles by Prof. Oman which appeared in The Expositor, commencing in the October number, 1911, but it is not a reprint of them, and has, indeed, been entirely rewritten. The work, as it now stands, is an effect of the war, though it avoids direct references to it in order not to divert the mind from the larger issue to which the thoughts of the writer are turned. What that "larger issue" is may be gathered from Prof. Oman's expressed conviction that "the greatest need even of our needy time, is a religion shining in its own light, and that, greater than all political securities for peace, would be a Christian valuation of men and means, souls and things."

Russell (Rollo). PSALMS OF THE WEST: 7th edition. London, Longmans, Green & Co. 148 pp., 1s. n.

In this, the seventh edition of a book which was first published in 1889, and is very well known on the Continent in translations, the author's identity is publicly revealed for the first time, though it has long been a familiar secret. The 'Psalms' are often used in many of our churches as pulpit readings, for which they are excellently adapted.

Smith (W. F.). RABELAIS IN HIS WRITINGS. Cambridge, University Press. vi—230 pp. index, 6s.

In this volume much use has been made of the researches of the Société des Études Rabelaisiennes, beside careful study of the older authorities and the earliest editions. Analyses are given of the principal works of Rabelais, and his wide range in science, history, law, art and religion is illustrated. His coarseness is admitted, but his earnest purpose as a reformer is maintained. There is a copious chronological list of his extant writings and correspondence, and of documents bearing on his life. The book is important to all students of the humanist movement of the sixteenth century.

Temple (William). ISSUES OF FAITH: a Course of Lectures. Macmillan, 1917. 75 pp., 2s. 6d. n.

A series of lectures delivered during Lent, 1917, on the last paragraph of the Athanasian Creed.

Thomas (Edward). POEMS. Selwyn & Blount. 63 pp. portrait, 3s. 6d.

One of the slightest in bulk and choicest in quality of the books of verse by soldiers who have fallen in the war. Some of the poems were occasionally published with the name of "Edward Eastaway" attached; but those who are in touch with the finer literature of the past twenty years have now the guarantee of the real name. Others, if "happy enough" (as Wordsworth said Coleridge was not) may soon get to understand why the book, published in October, is now in its third edition.

[Exceptional pressure on our space this week obliges us to hold over many short notices.]

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Bournemouth.—The second of the series of six addresses on 'Religion and National Reconstruction' was given by the minister, the Rev. V. D. Davis in the Unitarian Church on Sunday evening, February 10, his subject being 'Home Life.' Mr. Davis said it was their hope that as a result of the war, the world would be made "safe for democracy." But if the people, having gained that freedom and security from an evil tyranny, were not to perish through ignorance and a lack of self-restraint, there must be vision, and a clear understanding of the laws of life. There must be a devoted loyalty of service, in personal faithfulness, and the control of a sufficient force of public opinion, to secure the right obedience, for health and vigour and true welfare. With the questions of house room, cleanliness and wholesome surroundings, the question of a living wage was also involved. In the constructive work of the future that was a need which must be met, and when they considered the millions so freely poured out in the destructive work of the war, they might surely hope that patriotism would be equal in the future to that better ordering of their common life which was essential to the true welfare of the people.

Bradford.—The Rev. Thomas Paxton has written a letter to The Yorkshire Observer with reference to the attitude of Dr. Campbell Morgan to Unitarians engaged in Y.M.C.A. work, to which attention was drawn in our Church news last week. He disclaims any intention of introducing the bitterness of a theological controversy, but feels that the public is entitled to know whether Dr. Campbell Morgan's statement was his own personal opinion or the opinion of the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. "He was very explicit," Mr. Paxton says, "that he could not co-operate with Unitarians, while he very frankly made the confession of his own personal indebtedness to such well-known Unitarians as Martineau and Channing. We all know that the pre-war policy of certain branches of the Y.M.C.A. was not as broad as it might have been, and we all rejoice in the fact that in all its war work it has leaped the borders of sectarian prejudice. It seems to me that now there are some who wish to bring back the old tendencies. As a Unitarian minister nothing has given me more joy than to know some of my brethren have been able without any compromise to take a share in war work at home and in France under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. Many of our well-known laymen have contributed to the cost of the huts, &c. Dr. Campbell Morgan states 'that when it comes down to the bases of service there cannot be co-operation.' Surely Dr. Morgan is not as blind to the times as he would make us believe. There is already this co-operation. Men and women, heedless of their differences, have found, and are finding, these bases of service. I know what Dr. Campbell Morgan would say to this. He perhaps will qualify his statements and say it is only where Bible study is concerned he cannot co-operate. I would ask, then: Is Dr. Campbell Morgan's interpretation of the Bible, and those who think as he thinks, to be the only interpretation given? Are there not scholars in denominations which Dr. Campbell Morgan dare not exclude who differ from his teaching and interpretation on important points? But the question is a wider one than this. Have we not learned that whilst the minds of men may differ they can still be at one for the uplifting and enrichment of the life of the world? The world will only be saved by saintly life, for whatever is good is born of God, no matter what theologians think. The question, then, is a very vital one to the interests of the world and the Y.M.C.A."

Huddersfield.—A public conference will be held in the schoolroom of the Fitzwilliam Street Church, Huddersfield, on Saturday, February 23, at which Dr. Carpenter will deliver an address on 'Religion in War-Time and After.' Mr. Grosvenor Talbot, J.P., will preside. Dr. Carpenter will preach in the church on Sunday evening, February 24.

London: Essex Church.—A carved oak screen is being in the Church in remembrance of Mr. Richard Worsley, who died on Nov. 9, 1916. It is the gift of Mrs. Richard Worsley, and will form a beautiful decoration, in harmony with the oak work of the Church and with the window below which it will be placed. The window itself was Mr. Richard Worsley's gift, in remembrance of his father.

London: Mansford Street.—The Annual Sunday School Parties in connection with Mansford Street Church and Mission were held on February 9 and 16. Owing to the difficulty in getting certain provisions cocoa and buns were provided instead of the usual tea. There were 130 children and helpers on the first evening and on February 16, 235 were present. A performance of 'Sleeping Beauty' was given on both occasions by some of the children, who had been excellently trained by Miss Keen.

Midland Guilds' Union.—The Spring Meeting of the Union was held at Coseley on Saturday last. There was a good attendance, representatives being present from the Guilds at Old Meeting and Handsworth, Birmingham; Oldbury, and Walsall. After tea, kindly provided by the Coseley Guild, a Committee Meeting took place, when arrangements for the Annual Meeting on May 11 were made and other business was transacted. At the Conference which followed the Rev. A. H. Lewis of Small Heath gave a stimulating address on 'Utility,' for which he received the thanks of the meeting. The proceedings were opened with a hymn, and a prayer by Mr. H. Crabtree.

Northampton.—The annual meeting of the congregation of Kettering Road Church was held on Thursday, February 14, and was unusually well attended. It was reported that during the past year the adverse balances of the two previous years had been discharged by the special donations of members, that the membership had increased, and that the attendances at worship during the present winter were in advance of those of last winter. The various institutions of the Church had been kept vigorous and healthy, despite local conditions imposed by the necessities of the war.

Wandsworth.—A large gathering of friends was present at the Unitarian Church on Wednesday at the marriage of Miss Kathleen Joy to Sapper T. C. Boswell, R.E. The Rev. W. G. Tarrant, who officiated, in his address paid warm tribute to Miss Joy's excellent service in many branches of their Church's work, especially the Sunday school and Girls' Club. Following the ceremony a social meeting took place at the United Methodist Chapel, Mallinson Road, Battersea, friends from both congregations attending. Bride and bridegroom have long been zealous members of the Good Templar Lodge at the latter place of worship.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.
(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.
Deputy Chairman—F. H. A. HARCASTLE, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL. | H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I. | H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
PER YEAR, 8s. 3d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.
Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines; extra lines 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

BIRTH.

SAUNDERS.—Tuesday, February 19, at 11 Jefferies Road, Ipswich, to the Rev. and Mrs. John Saunders, a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

BOSWELL—JOY.—February 20, at the Unitarian Church, Wandsworth, by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A., Sapper Thomas Charles Boswell, of Walworth, to Lily Maud (Kathleen), eldest daughter of Mrs. Joy, of Wandsworth.

FRIPP—HARVEY.—February 12, at Knighton Church, Lieutenant Paul Fripp, son of Rev. Edgar and Edith Fripp, of Altrincham, to Mabel Seddon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rueben Harvey, Knighton Drive, Leicester.

DEATHS.

FRIPP.—Died of wounds at Camiers, on April 17, 1917, George Mackay Fripp, 7th Battalion Canadians, elder son of Robert Mackay Fripp, Vancouver, B.C., in his 25th year.

FRIPP.—December 16, 1917, his 61st birthday, Robert Mackay Fripp, architect, Vancouver, B.C., sixth son of the late George Arthur Fripp, R.W.S.

LAYCOCK.—February 14, Priscilla Mary, the beloved wife of Wm. Laycock, of 23 Wigfull Road, Sheffield.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, February 24.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. W. H. ROSE.
Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 5.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 5.30, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, and 6.30, Rev. Dr. HARGROVE, M.A.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11, Miss L. G. ACKROYD.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. J. W. GALE.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15 Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11, Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. W. S. MCCLAUCHLAN M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.15, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut. Col. BULLOCK.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, and 6.30, Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. REDFERN, M.A., B.D.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. G. A. FERGUSON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

February

24. Rev. ADDISON A. CHARLESWORTH, of Highgate.

March

3. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON, of Kentish Town.

10. Rev. Dr. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER of Manchester College, Oxford.

RAWTENSTALL UNITARIAN CHURCH.

The Pulpit of the above Church is now VACANT. Candidates are invited with a view to the appointment of resident Minister.

Apply WALTER J. SCAIFE, Hon. Sec., 31 Thorn Street, Rawtenstall.

ANSDELL UNITARIAN CHURCH,

Situated on the Lancashire coast, require a MINISTER.

Apply to (Hon. Secretary) Mr. J. RIDINGS, 165 Church Road, St. Annes-on-the-Sea.

SUSTENTATION FUND FOR THE AUGMENTATION OF MINISTERS' STIPENDS.

The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Contributors will be held at ESSEX HALL, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.2, at 12.30 P.M., on WEDNESDAY, February 27, 1918, to receive the Report and Accounts, elect Three Managers, appoint Officers, and transact other business.

WILLIAM H. DRUMMOND,
Acting Hon. Secretary.
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL ON MODERN LINES
WITH PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

The aim of the Religious Teaching is to instil a simple Christian Faith and personal religion. There is full Morning Service in the School on Sunday. In the evening boys may, if their parents desire it, attend a place of worship in Nantwich.

Full Prospectus, apply to the Head Master:
H. LANG JONES, M.A. (Oxon.).

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Macmillan's New Books.

IMMORTALITY:

An Essay in Discovery, co-ordinating Scientific, Psychical, and Biblical Research. By B. H. STREETER, A. CLUTTON-BROCK, C. W. EMMET, J. A. HADFIELD, and the Author of 'Pro Christo et Ecclesia.' 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"Important, stimulating, and interesting."—DEAN INGE in The Guardian.
The Methodist Times.—"The most important work published on the subject for many years."

This Life and the Next: the Effect on this Life of Faith in Another.

By P. T. FORSYTH, M.A., D.D., Principal of Hackney College, Hampstead, and Dean of the Faculty of Theology in the University of London. Crown 8vo. [Immediately.]

THIRD IMPRESSION.

The Church in the Furnace.

Essays by Seventeen Church of England Chaplains on Active Service in France and Flanders. Edited by F. B. MACNUTT, Senior Chaplain of the Forces, Canon of Southwark. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

The Spectator.—"We commend the book to the careful study of all thoughtful people."

"A book which ought to be read by all who have the interests of the Church at heart. While the writers do not spare the Church, they express their views with restraint. But they feel that the time has come for resolute and drastic action if the Church is ever to regain her hold upon the masses of the country."—Church Family Newspaper.

REV. WILLIAM TEMPLE'S NEW BOOK.

Issues of Faith.

A Course of Lectures. By WILLIAM TEMPLE, Hon. Chaplain to H.M. the King. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

The Guardian.—"We warmly commend them to the attention of Church-people for their clearness and felicity of expression. Mr. Temple's style is of unfailing freshness: he has the gift, commended by our Lord, of 'bringing out things that are old' as if they were 'new.'"

An Introduction to Early Church History.

Being a Survey of the Relations of Christianity and Paganism in the Early Roman Empire. By R. MARTIN POPE, M.A. Crown 8vo, 4s. net.

The Times.—"The author of this able and well-written handbook presents the faith in its relation to the Empire; its place among rival cults and philosophies, its opponents and apologists, and the causes which led to its triumph. Presents a clear outline of a complicated study, and the young student will welcome the attractive style in which it is written."

Watchman, What of the Night?

Being some thoughts on the Position and Ideals of the Church of England. By RICHARD HENRY MALDEN, M.A. R.N., F.R. Hist. Soc., Acting Chaplain to H.M.S. Valiant. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

THE Philosophy of Benedetto Croce: the Problem of Art and History.

By H. WILDON CARR, D.Litt., Author of 'The Philosophy of Change.' 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The Daily News.—"Mr. H. Wildon Carr is one of the most distinguished expounders of contemporary philosophy. In his new book he has written an able study and summary of the philosopher who has for some time been Bergson's rival on the lips of the learned. This is a book which was as they say, 'badly needed.'"

Macmillan's New Theological List post free on application.

Macmillan & Co., Ltd., London, W.C.2.

GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN, LTD.

PROBLEMS OF THE PEACE

By WILLIAM HARBUTT DAWSON, Author of "The Evolution of Modern Germany."

Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

"To students who wish to probe beneath the surface of things, Mr. Dawson's work should prove exceedingly helpful."—Scotsman.

DEMOCRACY AFTER THE WAR

By J. A. HOBSON. Cr. 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

"An original criticism of society as well as a summons to democracy to save itself."—Daily News.

TOWARDS INDUSTRIAL FREEDOM

By EDWARD CARPENTER.

Cr. 8vo. Cloth, 3s. 6d. net. Paper, 2s. 6d. net.

"A very fascinating essay. One hears his censure with real enjoyment, and everything he writes is worth reading."—Yorkshire Weekly Post.

OLD WORLDS FOR NEW

By ARTHUR J. PENTY. Cr. 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

"The only coherent alternative system of trade organization at present on the market is Penty's. We shall do well to examine its possibilities and its implications with the utmost care."—Everyman.

THE LAND: A Plea

By JOHN GALSWORTHY. Demy 8vo. 6d. net.

THE CAMP SCHOOL

By MARGARET McMILLAN, C.B.E.

Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

"The story narrated in a vivid, discursive fashion is as unlike anything ever read in a Blue Book as the fairy tales of Hans Andersen."—The Inquirer.

DR. HORTON'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY

Demy 8vo. Illustrated. 7s. 6d. net. Second Ed.

"It is told with infinite tenderness, self-revealing in its sweetness. It is the exquisitely sincere confession of a good man."—Mr. JAMES DOUGLAS.

40 MUSEUM STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C.2.—LECTURES on 'SOME ASPECTS OF INTERNATIONALISM,' by Prof. FOSTER WATSON, D.Lit.

Tuesday, Feb. 25. The Historic Factor.
Wednesday, Feb. 27. The Economic Factor.
Thursday, Feb. 28. The Religious Factor.
Friday, March 1. The Educational Factor.

The Lectures are free, and begin at 6 P.M.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

MISS KINGSTON much regrets that owing to continued ill health she is obliged to CLOSE her Boarding House at 15 Endsleigh Street, W.C.1, on FEBRUARY 25, 1918.

Miscellaneous.

IRISH LINEN SHEETS at Bargain Prices.—Snow white: superior quality. Single bed size, 2 x 3 yards, 30s. pair; double bed, 2½ x 3 yards, 45s. Catalogue free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 20s. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday February 23, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3948.
NEW SERIES, No. 1051.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 2, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	65	The Bishop of Hereford and Subscription	68	THE LATE DR. JOHN GLASSE	69
WHAT IS CATHOLICITY	66	Edmonton Military Hospital	68	THE FREE CATHOLIC MOVEMENT	70
CORRESPONDENCE:—		BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	68	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	70
The Churches and the Ministry	67	NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS	69

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

THE announcement that the Rev. Christopher J. Street is to have as his co-pastor at Upper Chapel, Sheffield, the Rev. Alfred Hall of Newcastle will be good news to everybody—except Newcastle people. Mr. Street's long and unwearying work in the ministry has always been, as is well known, supplemented by important duties in other ways; among those of late years we may specially name the Ministers' Pension Fund and the Ministerial Fellowship, to both of which he has rendered invaluable help. While we may reasonably believe that the appointment of so able and energetic a partner for him as Mr. Hall will help to extend much further his period of pulpit service, it is good to think that he will be in a real measure relieved of the strain which only a rare self-devotion could so long have sustained. His ministerial brethren will heartily join us in congratulations and good wishes for the new departure, which should serve to keep the vigorous life of the Sheffield district fully up to its best.

* * *

SHOULD representatives of the Allies meet in conference with representatives of the Central Powers? Our Government, it will be remembered, emphatically thought not, when the proposed Stockholm meeting was to the fore last year. Will they now consent to such meetings? The proposal for one comes from Scandinavian bishops, who suggest that members of every branch of the Church, among both neutral and belligerent nations, should at least come together for common worship and meditation, as a means of generating the temper of goodwill which alone can secure lasting peace. Our Presidents, Dr. Hargrove and Dr. Carpenter, warmly commend this scheme to the support of our churches, and we can hardly doubt that such support will be given. The Conference, we hear, is to meet in August—not April, as first intended.

* * *

AND now the Inter-Allied Congress of Labour and Socialist unions, in its remarkably unanimous endorsement (with some modifications) of the Labour Manifesto issued a short time ago in this country, has just forwarded another proposal for a conference between representative workers from all belligerent nations. So far we have not observed any sign of Governmental opposition this time; but the ways of our officials are hard to forecast. It seems to us that the veto of such proposals can only arise from a fear lest "the democracy"—to which so much lip-homage is now given—should really begin to shoulder off the burden of office-holders, who have indeed done many really great things during the war, but who cannot do the greatest—end it. As to the idea that somehow, "German gold" or "German craft" will bribe or hoodwink every one who talks with Germans, what a preposterous and insulting one it is! The Manifesto to which we refer is as whole-hearted in its denunciation of Prussianism, and in determination to fight it to the death, as any one can wish, and we believe Labour men are too sensible in the West to lean on such a sentimental policy as has brought the Russians into so pitiable a plight. But they are also too sensible to believe that merely to fight one another in the dark is the way to secure amity among the peoples of the earth.

* * *

ON Monday, at a special meeting of the General Purposes Committee of the Birmingham City Council, Alderman Neville Chamberlain presiding, the Lord Mayor reported that Alderman Sir George Kenrick had offered to the Corporation the building in John Bright Street known as the Athletic Institute, and also the playing fields, about 16 acres, in Pershore Road. This generous gift is unconditional, we are informed, but it is suggested that the properties could be utilised by the Education Committee, of which Sir George has long been chairman, in connection with the further facilities for physical training contemplated by the new Education Bill. So timely and useful a civic endowment, which is in line with many others bestowed by Unitarians in their respective communities, and which is but the latest of many benefactions from the same generous hand, might well be imitated just now elsewhere.

* * *

FROM a large number of letters received, evincing the greatest interest in the subject of the Churches and the Ministry, we print this week a representative selection, reserving a further communication from Dr. Rattray, whose article started the discussion, till a general survey of the correspondence may be taken. We are especially glad that our invitation to others than ministers has been responded to by several writers; we still think that if this stratum of opinion could be more frequently sampled the effectual life of the Churches, and through them of the whole community, would be more likely to benefit than it possibly can from the well-devised, but obviously one-sided, advice of professional men and women. If things are wrong in religious culture as usually practised—and the indifference of the vast bulk of people would seem to prove it—where, precisely, lies the mistake; and how, practically, can it be set right?

* * *

THE Rev. E. W. Lummis, whose signature revives kindly memories, pleads in his letter on the case of Bishop Henson against a too rigorous verdict in regard to the more or less ambiguous Broad Church use of prescribed terms and formulas. We admit that in certain circumstances a man may employ a phrase just in its conventional shape, without necessarily being supposed to endorse its literal meaning. What staggers the mind, however, is how this kind of action is conceived to be justifiable in the moment of declaring, ostensibly, the man's solemn belief. It is so conceived, we know, and by men of recognised probity, but we still wonder how.

* * *

OUR friend the Rev. Wilfred Harris of Adelaide has been moved to warn his fellow-citizens against the growing ascendancy of Roman Catholicism in Australia, as evidenced by a recent pronouncement of the Archbishop of Sydney. That prelate had taken the strongest line of opposition to the referendum on compulsory military service, on the ground that it would jeopardise the liberty of Romanist teachers and priests. This "glaring instance of sectarianism," says our good brother, should rouse Australia to a sense of the self-aggrandising policy indicated, which would set the interests of his own denomination first, even in the greatest national and international crisis known to history.

* * *

MANY Unitarians in England will learn with regret of the death of the Rev. Joseph May who for a quarter of a century was the beloved minister of the First Church in Philadelphia. Mr. May graduated at Harvard in 1857, and from the Divinity School in 1865. He had brief ministries at Yonkers and Newport before going to Philadelphia. Mr. May was a cultivated and thoughtful preacher, a charming host, a public-minded citizen,—a man whom to know was to love. He was the author of a 'Life of Samuel Longfellow,' and of 'Miracles and Myths in the New Testament.'

* * *

It is reassuring to see that, while covertly or openly, moved by weak or cynical suspicions, or by a downright British militarism, men in high positions have been disparaging the proposal of a League of Nations, leaders of religious life and thought have risen to their duty in stirring up the churches to a sense of their opportunity, and very grave responsibility, in the matter. In a letter to the press, signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, several bishops, the heads of Nonconformist churches, Labour leaders, and others, "Christian people at large" are called upon "duly to consider and openly to welcome the idea of such a League as shall safeguard international right and permanent peace," and endowed with economic or armed forces adequate to the restraint of any lawless and bellicose nation. What is wanted, say the signatories, among whom is Dr. Estlin Carpenter, is "to make manifest and effective the full force of Christian conviction in its favour"—a conviction still largely latent. We trust our ministers and people will do all in their power to diffuse a knowledge of this scheme and to generate for it the enthusiastic support of all sensible—not to say sane—people in the land.

WHAT IS CATHOLICITY?

At the present moment, when the desire for the unity of the Christian Churches is more widely and deeply felt than at any time since the Reformation, the word "Catholic" is a good deal on men's lips. Amid the claims to the use of that word made by differing Churches it is worth while asking what it means. Does it imply a type of doctrine or does it point to a disposition of mind?

According to the Oxford new dictionary "Catholic" means "universal, all embracing, the whole, the complete." But it is evident that this is not at all the meaning attached to it by the Churches and movements claiming it specially for themselves. None of them are universal and all-embracing. All of them are more or less exclusive—otherwise there would be no heretics. The Roman Catholic Church instead of all-embracing, shuts out all who do not submit to that Church as the supreme and final authority on all matters of faith and conduct. The Anglo Catholic Church will not admit any to membership who cannot assent to the Apostles' Creed. The old Catholics of Germany would not open their doors to one denying the Virgin birth. The Free Catholic Movement at its first Conference held last month deliberately excluded from its fellowship the Quakers,* whom every one admits to be among the most sincere and devoted followers of Christ the world can show. Some of our friends attended that Conference, but what Unitarians have to do with a movement which demands as a condition of membership a pledge of loyalty to a full and "rich blooded" Sacramentarianism is a mystery. Such a condition is of the nature of a test, from which their churches are supposed to be free. This new Movement is no more Catholic, according to the proper use of the word, than the narrowest of the sects. Oddly enough, we are reminded by The Times of the real meaning of Catholic in a description of science: "Science is truly catholic and bounded only by the universe." But the churches and religious movements now calling themselves Catholic are very strictly bounded by something else—by assent to certain disputable opinions or the observance of certain rites and ceremonies. We should have thought it obvious that no Church and no society or movement can be truly Catholic which makes opinion or observance a condition of entrance.

* See report in the Church Times for January 18.

In dealing with the claim of the Romish Church to "Catholicity," Dr Martineau, in his 'Seat of Authority in Religion,' points out grimly that to secure uniformity by excluding dissidents is a comparatively easy thing, only the process robs the supposed feature of the true Church of all its impressiveness. "It would affect us strangely," he says, "did we find a society, consisting wholly of one-eyed people; but the wonder would vanish if we learned that it was a rule to put out the other eye during the novitiate, and to remove out of the way all who objected to the operation. Such a monocular phenomenon is the orthodoxy of the Church.... That there are none but true sheep under the chief Shepherd means only that every goat is turned out of the fold." Is that the ideal of these latest claimants to the great name of "Catholic," with the added title "Free"?

The dictionaries give us a lead in a more attractive direction when they supply the secondary definition: "not narrow-minded, partial, or bigoted; liberal." Here, we venture to think, lies the path that Unitarians as a rule would prefer for themselves and wish for their neighbours in all the Churches. How else shall we solve the problem of Christian unity than by Churches ceasing to exclude, cultivating a genuine and warm-hearted sympathy, and developing, so far as may be, an active co-operation with all who live, or try to, in the Spirit of the Master, whatever forms may be adopted by them for worship or definition? Surely, if any Church could rightly claim the use of that beautiful word "Catholic" it would be the one which Oliver Wendell Holmes humorously called "the Church of the Gentiles," whose doors stand freely open to all the world without any barriers or pledges or tests. None are excluded from it by requirements of "assent or consent" to doctrine or ceremony. A Catholicity that begins by exclusion is a contradiction in terms, and the contradiction loses none of its absurdity from its belated imitation of the old bad methods of the "Catholicism" of old.

MR. ALAN LUPTON, whose death is announced, was the third son of Mr Darnton Lupton of Leeds and a brother-in-law of Mrs. Estlin Carpenter. As chairman of Messrs. H. R. Baines & Co., newspaper proprietors, he was an energetic and considerate employer; and has assisted officially in the Remount Department.

THE current Harvard Theological Review contains a full and valuable article by the Rev. R. W. Boynton, First Unitarian Church, Buffalo, on 'The Catholic Career of Alfred Loisy.' He believes Loisy's 'Choses Passées' "bids fair to become in its turn a classic," and take its place beside Newman's 'Apologia' and Renan's 'Souvenirs.'

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and the address of the senders.

THE CHURCHES AND THE MINISTRY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The point which attracts Mr. Hill is, in my opinion, the one defect in Dr. Rattray's very suggestive and timely article. We want more churches of the free basis—not fewer. To close a small struggling cause and to transfer its endowment to provide a decent stipend for a minister in another district is not only immoral, but it is also detrimental to the interests of a denomination. The difficulties may be real, but this short cut to a solution only prolongs the struggle of our denomination to make effective headway as a religious force in the community. If Unitarians realised more fully what Dr. Rattray emphasised in his article, that they do belong to a denomination, they would soon find there are other ways of dealing with the problem. Our denominational system of government is not sufficiently representative yet to keep alive a strong denominational consciousness.

The circuit system might solve the difficulties. Several churches could be grouped together under a representative circuit committee, with a superintendent minister at the head. The splendidly trained man, such as Dr. Rattray suggested might and should be produced, would be of enormous service to the cause as the guiding genius of a circuit where there was a group of young ministerial helpers, and lay preachers, to encourage and direct. It is not good for a highly trained man to waste his time and energies over small business details of church management. His qualities of mind and heart can be put to better service. Under the circuit system the really good man would, as superintendent, find ample scope for the work for which his qualities fit him and for which he has been trained. Moreover, the system would be relatively more economical, and thus be able to relieve the superintendent from personal financial cares, and set him free for his educational and spiritual work. Young men like the Pioneer Preachers in London would get excellent training under such a superintendent, and the lay preaching element would find ample scope, and at the same time be under the wise direction of one respected for his scholarship and ministerial experience. Denominational help would be far more profitably applied in enterprises like this than in giving little doles to small independent churches.—Yours, &c..

J. W. PETERKEN.

35 Gordon Road, Wanstead.
February 16, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May I, as a layman, venture upon a comment on this important subject. In the first place I would refer to the letter of Dr. Stanley Mellor in your last issue. Its full meaning does not seem very clear, and it would be interesting to know, for instance, what is meant by "laying our gifts upon the altar of a unified Christian Church," i.e., how such a project would work out in practice. One thing seems evident from his letter, viz., that he advocates a narrowing of the Unitarian outlook rather than a broadening. When he tells us "the Holy Catholic Church of Christ can alone avail for the salvation of mankind," surely he is trying to put back the clock many decades! Who are we that we should abrogate to ourselves the right to say to any "Mine is the only true Church"? I should have thought we had sloughed this old narrow spirit.

It is to be hoped that we shall learn many lessons from the terrible war that is raging—surely one of the most remarkable results so far has been to break down old barriers of various kinds and to inculcate the spirit of inclusiveness; and is our message to our Mohammedan fellow-subjects from India, for instance, with whom we have fought side by side, to be: "Your only method of obtaining salvation is to join the Holy Catholic Church"? It is unthinkable. We want something even more inclusive than Christianity, as interpreted in Dr. Mellor's letter. Which is more important: to make men Christians or to make them good?

There is a parallel between our religious life and our political life; both are tending towards greater freedom, to larger inclusiveness; many of us are hoping to see nationalism gradually replaced by internationalism; and, personally, I cannot look forward with much enthusiasm to a rousing of our Church life if it is to be bought at such a price as Dr. Mellor's words seem to suggest. I do not know whether he has ever realised that the position which he is advancing would have the effect, with some at any rate of his friends, of making Jesus a stumbling-block rather than an increased source of inspiration.

In the second place, as to what we do want, I am inclined to think that too much stress is being laid upon the intellectual equipment and capacity of our ministers. I am not suggesting that intellect and education do not matter—we all acknowledge their importance and influence—it is just a question of perspective. We want our ministers practical, dealing with the realities and problems of life as they come home to us day by day, rather than abstruse speculations on points of theology and philosophy; we want them to get, so far as in them lies, into intimate touch spiritually and mentally with our lives, and bodily with our homes. "A little less of the preacher, and more of the pastor" would perhaps be as good a motto as any for our Colleges.—Yours, &c.,

HAROLD COVENTRY.

1 Hamilton Road, Wallasey.
February 25, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—You say you would like to know what the man in the pew thinks about this and kindred matters. The criticism of one person in the pew is as follows. If our denomination is ceasing to exist the colleges are in no way to blame. They turn out fine men, when they have the material to work on, and the professors gain the gratitude and reverence and affection of the men, which is life long. There may be questions of the desirability of co-operation or re-organisation, and these may easily be left to be settled by the colleges concerned. As time passes improvements suggest themselves in every department of life. But these are quite minor questions and do not affect the vital issue under discussion.

It seems to me that our failure to keep up our congregations, and our supply of students for the ministry, lies entirely in our churches' disregard of our children. The Sunday school does good that is incalculable, and establishes a bond of affection between teachers and young people that can never be estimated and is never lost. But it will not make children loyal and enthusiastic supporters of a Church that has almost ignored them.

Why do we not learn from other churches? The Catholic Church is supreme in its care for its children and keeps them for ever. The rare exceptions prove the rule. The Church of England comes next with its definite instruction, and preparation classes before confirmation, and it loses comparatively few in the after years. I would suggest in every church a Children's Church: membership should begin at the age of 5 or 6, and at 15 or 16, after a simple confirmation service, the young people should be transferred to the church proper.

The services of this Children's Church should be held in the church with proper music, suitable hymns, short prayers with responses, a simple form of Belief recited by minister and children, and a short address. In this way, in simplest words, the children could be taught all that we stand for. The loving sympathy and interest of the minister, especially his interest in the boys as they grow into manhood, would kindle in them a love of their Church and a deep feeling of responsibility towards it. And would it not be a sure means of "getting" students for the ministry who in their turn would "get men"? A bright little girl rebelling against going to church, and being reminded of the attractiveness of the singing and the pleasant walk to and from, replied: "Yes, but there is the sermon, and I don't understand it, and if I indulge in my own thoughts the sermon interrupts me"! One is sorry for the small children who desire bread and are given a stone.

The objection to this suggestion of a Children's Church is, of course, the increased work that would devolve on the minister. For no one could take his place. But, if the matter is as important as I believe it to be, it should be done, even, if it must be, at the expense of the older members. Many of us are past praying for; some would enjoy the children's services, and all would have the opportunity of one adult service a day.

One word more about the colleges. If it is possible to teach a man, who does not see it for himself, the importance of a beautiful and dignified service, with collects and prayers culled from wiser and more spiritual sources than his own mind and heart can always give, it would be a real gain to our churches. Of course, the minister should always have the opportunity of expressing his own inspired thoughts and aspirations, but no man is always inspired, and sometimes our services are very bare and unsatisfying.—Yours, &c.
E. B. COOK.

Liverpool, February 25, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May a non-professional intrude into this symposium of experts to say that to some (doubtless, unpractical) minds this crude statement of "getting people," as the all-important aim of the churches, seems to miss the finest things, the essential things, altogether? It is a question of immediacy; that is granted; St. Francis himself would have been ineffective without hearers. But St. Francis would not have been without hearers, for many reasons: one of the chief being that he did not trouble so much about getting people as about what he got them for. When, or if, people are "got" this ultimate question remains—and indeed it is a common accusation of critical minds that this pre-occupation, rivalry, competition in getting people into the churches is not justified by the goods that are offered them when they have been got there. Why are ministers so anxious to get people into their particular churches? I submit that the secret answer each one gives to this is the whole crux of the matter. Fully as I endorse old John Donne's ironic assertion that "some degree of eloquence is necessary for the delivering of God's messages," and that this "eloquence," liberally considered, is an affair of the colleges, it is not here that men will re-capture the immortal gleam of which the vision alone makes churches, and the getting of people into them, worth while. That is not a question of a college syllabus, nor of a particular denomination. If a denomination ceases to exist we may take it for granted that the essential thing, and the prophets of it, have faded out. It is a Pentecost we want, not a particular curriculum; prophets, apostles, not merely professional "specialists in God"; men who are absorbed in an imperative message, not in the messenger; men who are passionate for the winning of souls, not so much for the getting of bodies into the churches.

It may be answered to this visionary contention that such exalted souls do not exist, or if they exist they are not to be attracted into the churches. If that is so, then indeed the churches are outworn paraphrases of a once living word, and the getting of people into them is beside the point; for counting heads and paying pew-rents are only of secular interest and irrelevant to the Kingdom of Heaven. But I believe that God has not left Himself without witnesses at any time, and, in fact, that it is dangerous to take the inferiority of men for granted—as the history of the last years proves. And that, the getting of such men into the pulpits and not the getting of people into the churches, is the real question.—Yours, &c.,

FLORENCE ROBERTS.

Liverpool, February 25, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—It is not, I suppose, for the ordinary layman to understand the workings of the clerical mind, but I doubt if Dr. Mellor's remedy for what is alleged to be our falling off as a denomination will commend itself to the general body of Unitarians. His suggestion is, in effect, that we shall have twice as good a time, if we but give up half our manhood. We are to bring to "the altar of a unified Christian Church" (among other things) "our eagerness for veracity in worship," and, leaving there our gift upon the altar, take away with us a readiness "to revise our theology at the bidding of the new workings of Christ's spirit in the main body of the Church." In other words, that we may increase our numbers, we are to give up what we have always held to be our most cherished possession—fidelity to what we believe to be the truth. I am happy to think that the vast majority of us would prefer that we should die out as a denomination than that we should give up this our birthright for a mess of Free Catholic pottage. If I misunderstand Dr. Mellor, perhaps he will tell us what he really means.—Yours, &c.,

JOHN C. WARREN.

Feb. 26, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—In your issue of February 23 you express a desire to hear what the laity have to say on the above subject. I, therefore, offer you my opinion.

1. Our denomination does not sufficiently emphasise the view that orthodox teaching of Christianity is largely responsible for the moral evil which exists because it fails to lay sufficient stress upon the commands of Jesus. It directs attention to theological speculations about him rather than to his precepts and example.

2. Ministers are insufficiently paid. We require a good Sustentation Fund to ensure each minister a decent livelihood, and we need an adequate Pension Fund to provide for ministers who are incapacitated by bad health or old age. A vast amount of Unitarian money is spent every year in promoting unsectarian philanthropic schemes. Much of this wealth would be more usefully employed in strengthening the denomination by giving ministers a sense of security against want.—Yours, &c.,

JOHN CAMPBELL.

Crescent House,
University Road, Belfast.
February 25, 1918.

THE BISHOP OF HEREFORD AND SUBSCRIPTION.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May I, against my friend H. G.'s definition of a Broad Churchman as an unvarnished Unitarian, set Dr. Mellor's words in your last issue: "a bare humanistic Theism, no matter how morally pure and lofty in some of its aspects, is not the line coincident with the deepest religious needs and aspirations of our time"? Men whose conception of God does not exclude His manifestation in humanity, His capital manifestation in one man, are not Unitarians; and men who recite the creeds for what they actually are, very ancient documents expressive of a faith they still share, through a medium of physical notions which are obsolete, are not necessarily unvarnished. Even an allusion to "Jesus Christ" or to the "Virgin Mary" by these current titles, without a conviction that Mary was a virgin or Jesus a Christ in the first meaning of those words, can only be called untruth by a somewhat harsh and dry system of morals. E. W. LUMMIS.

Kingston-on-Thames Grammar School.

EDMONTON MILITARY HOSPITAL.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I am visiting some Lancashire and Leicestershire men and others in the Edmonton Military Hospital, and hope to continue to do so for some months. It is a troublesome place to get to—takes about half as long again from Hampstead as the journey from Liverpool to Manchester—and consequently there are a good many men there who seldom see a visitor. If any of your readers, knowing of any one there who would like a chat to break the monotony of hospital life, sends me the man's name, I will gladly look him up next time I go. If I have the number in the Army list and the name of the ward it saves much time and trouble; but this is not indispensable, though very desirable if possible, as it enables me to give more time to the men and less to inquiries and waiting for information.—Yours, &c.,

FRANCIS H. JONES

51 Howitt Road, Hampstead, N.W.3.
February 25, 1918.

THE urgent need for the provision of additional means of healthy recreation for boys and girls who, in official language, "are without adequate control," is being recognised by the authorities, and it is understood that the formation of Juvenile Organisation Committees throughout the country to deal with this matter is being attempted. The Standing Committee appointed by the Home Secretary in 1916, which is representative of various organisations concerned in providing recreation and occupations for young people, has recommended this scheme being adopted in all large towns, and last year such committees were formed in fifty of them. A conference has recently been held at the Home Office at which there were present social workers from all parts of London, and an appeal is made for voluntary workers to step into the gaps left vacant by the absence of so many organisers of evening clubs, sports clubs, Scout troops, &c., and help to direct the energy and vitality of youth into the right channels.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

160TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,117	16	6
Mr. Thomas Chattaway (10th)	0	5	0
Melbourne Unitarian Young Peoples' Guild, per Miss Wren (3rd)	1	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Green (17th)	1	0	0
Northgate End Chapel, Halifax, per Mr. J. Teal (21st)	1	8	9
Bootle Free Church War Relief Committee, per Mrs. Yates (33rd)	1	7	0
Mrs. Burridge (6th)	2	0	0
	£20,125	7	3

Parcels have been received from:—Tadmorden Unitarian Women's League, per Miss Shaw; Miss A. L. Colfox; Mrs. Leys; Miss C. Scott; Mrs. Thorneley; Clapham Ladies War Relief Committee; Mrs. J. M. Gimson; Miss Whitfield; Miss Blake; Plymouth Branch of the Women's League, per Miss R. A. Bond; Miss Nettlefold; Mr. H. Jones; Mrs. Helsby; Miss Evers; Miss C. Wells and the children of Gardenfields School, St. Albans; Bury Branch of the Women's League, per Miss Johnstone; West Grove Women's League, Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox; Mrs. S. Wilson; Mrs. and Miss Carter; Mrs. Ussher; the Rev. W. Carey Walters; Trim Street Sewing Society, Bath, per Mrs. Taylor.

MRS. ALLEN writes:—"I have now received some more grey wool like that I had before, for making socks. The price is 6s. a lb., but if more than 5 lbs. is ordered at one time, it will be 5s. 6d. a lb. I shall be obliged if people will take as much as possible at one time as it will save much time and trouble in packing and posting."

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

[We regret that owing to the increasing pressure on our space we shall be obliged to discontinue the publication of the 'Weekly Notes' for the present. Mrs. Allen has, however, kindly promised to send us some record of the work that has been done in connection with the Belgian Hospital Fund once a month.—EDITOR.]

ADVERSITY has its uses. Scarcity of fuel has led in a considerable number of cases in the United States to a pooling of resources by different churches, including Unitarians and orthodox. Thus combined services are being held, with associated or alternate ministrations. We cannot doubt there will be mutual benefits, and that, as in the case of our Y.M.C.A., the broader sympathy evoked will tend to more practical religious effort in the future.

ACCORDING to the annual report of the Joint Finances Committees of the British Red Cross Society and the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, a total income of £8,451,790 has been received in the three years ended October, 20 1917, and £7,178,939 expended. The report contains a mass of detail which the committee recognise it is right that the public should be acquainted with, since it is the money of the public which is disbursed. The total personnel of the Red Cross, excluding members serving in auxiliary home hospitals or V.A.D. members in Government service, is 7,781; of this number 2,282 are unpaid workers.

NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS.

[A short Notice in this column does not preclude a review in a later issue.]

Bartlett (J. Vernon) and Carlyle (Alexander James). CHRISTIANITY IN HISTORY: a Study of Religious Development. London, Macmillan & Co., 1917. 633 pp. index, 12s. n.

This important book is the result of such close collaboration that there is no indication of the sections for which each author is responsible, though we are probably right in assigning Parts I. and II., which deal with the Beginnings and Ancient Christianity, to Dr. Bartlett, and Part III., the Mediæval period, to Dr. Carlyle. Part IV. deals with the Great Transition, including the break-up of the mediæval system from the time of the great Schism, the Conciliar Movement, and the Reformation. Part V., under the general title 'The Modern Period,' deals with the growth of Rationalism, the revival of religion in the eighteenth century, the romantic movement, philosophy and historical criticism in the nineteenth century, and the present situation. It is deeply significant of the new sympathies which are being created by the unfettered study of Christian life and thought that two scholars trained in different schools of ecclesiastical polity should be able to co-operate in a work of this kind. The long story of historical development which they unfold has an important lesson which it is clear they are anxious to press home upon the attention of their readers, namely, "the need for radical revision of traditional Christian conceptions in the light of modern knowledge and changed views as to the relations of God and man."

Drever (James). INSTINCT IN MAN. Cambridge, at the University Press. vii—281 pp., 9s. n.

In a sub-title this book is described as a 'Contribution to the Psychology of Education.' It consists of a thesis submitted for the Doctorate of Philosophy of the University of Edinburgh, where the author holds the position of Lecturer on Education. His purpose, he says, is "to attempt to give a psychological account of instinct in Man, and thereafter to study, still in the main from the psychological point of view, the relation of Instinct to Emotion, with special reference to human emotions, and the part which Instinct plays in that phase of human development to which we give the name Education."

Mackenzie (J. S.). ELEMENTS OF CONSTRUCTIVE PHILOSOPHY. London, George Allen & Unwin. 487 pp., 12s. 6d. n.

This is a new volume in the "Library of Philosophy" edited by Professor Muirhead. The author states that it was undertaken more than twenty-five years ago, and his object in writing it has been to clear up his own ideas on a number of fundamental problems. His treatment has been a good deal influenced by the writings of those who are commonly referred to as the New Realists. Special attention is given to some of the leading conceptions of Oriental speculation. Professor Mackenzie has written for those who take an interest in fundamental problems without being specialists in philosophy. He has endeavoured to avoid technicalities as far as possible, and to give a considerable number of simple illustrations; and he has not hesitated, especially in the more speculative parts of the work, to refer to writers who cannot in any strict sense be described as philosophers. "If this is an offence against the dignity of the subject," he writes, "I must crave the indulgence of the more purely scientific reader."

Mallock (W. H.). THE LIMITS OF PURE DEMOCRACY. London, Chapman & Hall. 392 pp., 15s. n.

At a time when the word "democracy" is on everybody's lips, though its full implications are very imperfectly understood, Mr. Mallock's searching inquiry into the ideas which it connotes is useful and opportune. He by no means admits that democracy can be achieved by the easy assumption of the doctrine of "equality for all," with authority for none, and his tendency to extol the power of oligarchies will hardly suit the popular temper of our time. It is, however, true that, as he points out, power must always reside with the few who are gifted with the qualities of leadership, and have the capacity to evoke the dynamic forces latent in the many.

Rogers (Clement F.), M.A. QUESTION TIME IN HYDE PARK. London, Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. 64 pp., 6d. n.

The price of this booklet makes its possession possible to most people to-day and we believe there is a wide need for it. Mr. Rogers displays real wisdom—knowledge combined with sympathy, broad-mindedness, and common sense, and we congratulate questioners on having such an able man to answer them.

Sugimori (Kojiro). THE PRINCIPLES OF THE MORAL EMPIRE. London, University Press, 18 Warwick Square, E.C.4, 1917. 247 pp. index, 5s. n.

From the commencement of the war the author has been pursuing his studies in different university centres in Great Britain. He has viewed the present conflict as one of the central problems of philosophy, and gives his ideas of a better way of life for mankind in the future.

Yeats (William Butler). PER AMICA SILENTIA LUNÆ. London, Macmillan & Co. vi.—95 pp., 4s. 6d.

This book, with its elusive title, consists of prose meditations. They are grouped under two headings, Anima Hominis and Anima Mundi, and are addressed to an anonymous friend who last summer was "at the age I was when first I heard of Mallarmé and Verlaine." It is steeped in Platonic mysticism, and owes much to the writings of Henry More.

THE Rev. Jos. P. MacCarthy, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., whose son is among the American soldiers in France, has arrived in England for a stay of six months. He has a high reputation as lecturer and preacher, and is open to take occasional duty in our pulpits. Address c/o Secretary, Essex Hall.

In the famous Oriental library at Baghdad, which, it is stated, has been burned by the Turks, there were some 20,000 volumes on subjects relating to Mesopotamia in French, English, Italian and German. The collection contained 2,753 Arabic MSS., written by scholars between the seventh and eleventh centuries. Of most of these no other copy exists; their loss is, therefore, irreparable.

In an interview reported in The Christian Commonwealth an interesting statement is made by Mr. G. W. Coleman, President of the American "Open Forum" Council, respecting religious affairs in the States. The "Forum" movement itself is significant. Resembling to some extent the Brotherhood movement in this country, it differs in being run by committees of citizens apart from church affiliation. Mr. Coleman has confidence, based largely on experience in this field, that a group of outstanding men has arisen representative of almost every denomination, including Unitarians, Universalists, Roman Catholics and Jews, "prophetic of a better social order." Liberal tendencies are chiefly marked in the Northern States. As indicative of the new spirit, he points to recent utterances of Mr. J. D. Rockefeller, junr., which by their trenchant blows against mere forms and ceremonies and insistence on the vital spirit in religion, have startled his Baptist brethren especially, but also a good many others of the orthodox.

THE Walthamstow Antiquarian Society announce a forthcoming monograph dealing with Essex Hall, Walthamstow, and the Eliezer Cogan associations. The monograph will be uniform with the series to date; large paper edition with eleven full-page illustrations. The text is contributed by Mr. George F. Bosworth, the Essex antiquary. Essex Hall, apart from its interest as one of the manor houses of the district, is famous for its associations with the Rev. Eliezer Cogan, the eminent Greek scholar and divine, who for the first quarter of last century conducted an academy there. Amongst Mr. Cogan's pupils were many who in after life became prominent men: Benjamin D'Israeli, Sharp the Egyptologist, W. E. Nightingale (father of the "Lady with the Lamp"), the Busks, Gurneys, Listers, Martineaus, and Sollys, to mention but a few. Further particulars may be had from the Hon. Secretary of the Society, Central Library, Walthamstow, E.17.

THE LATE DR. JOHN GLASSE.

MANY readers of THE INQUIRER will be interested in the following "appreciation" of the late Rev. John Glasse, D.D., the well-known successor of Dr. Robert Lee and Dr. Robert Wallace, as minister of the Old Greyfriars' Church, Edinburgh. It comes from one who both knew him personally and was a constant attendant on his ministrations until his retirement a few years ago. "Dr. Glasse was no ordinary clergyman; he was no ordinary man.... It has been said of him that he 'continued unimpaired that tradition of Moderatism' associated with 'Old Greyfriars.' In a sense that statement may be passed as true, but it is in the sense of a half truth, and it is thus permeated with its dangers. His theology was not only freer and more emancipated than that of any Moderate, but it was also deeper and more spiritual and vital. Indeed the theology of the Moderates can hardly be said to have been a living thing at all. And it is well known that they could combine with the Evangelicals in attempting to stem the upwelling of a vital faith as they did in the case of Campbell of Row.... He was one of those—it was in consonance with his whole philosophy of life—who believed that there was no real salvation for the individual apart from his working for the perfect society. Only with its realisation will we reach anything like the full measure of our stature. We are all bound together in the bundle of life. His outlook was objective—he consequently had no sympathy with that diseased individualism which pursues salvation in the wanderings of a morbid introspection. Certainly it was no Moderate who, when William Morris failed to gather an indoor meeting in Leith on an occasion memorable to a faithful band, joined that earnest propagandist in proclaiming their gospel to a meeting held at the foot of Leith Walk in a night of fierce inclemency. Of his attainments as a pamphleteer, a lecturer and a preacher, of his knowledge of history, economics and theology, of his appreciation of literature and of music I do not trespass on your space to speak. Certain it is that he contributed his part—and that not a small one—in bringing about that changed and more sympathetic outlook on social and economic relationships than that which obtained when he began his life work."

MRS. R. KUMARI DAS, who is known to many of our Unitarian friends, and who has lectured on India at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, has just obtained the "Teachers Diploma of the University of London." The Indian Women's Education Committee have been able to offer Mrs. Das, who is the first holder of the Gokhale Scholarship, the opportunity of completing her studies in England, and they have expressed their warmest appreciation of the excellent work which she has accomplished in three terms at the Teachers' Training College. In spite of the fact that her studies have had to be conducted in a foreign language, she has taken her place on equal terms, and held her own admirably in the College examinations. She has given several courses of lessons, and the Head Mistress reports that they have proved of real value to the elder girls. Mrs. Das is returning to India, and will undertake work in training students in her own country. On the invitation of Miss Talbot, the headmistress, she recently paid a visit to Channing House, and talked pleasantly to the girls, telling them of the customs and amusements of Indian ladies.

THE FREE CATHOLIC MOVEMENT.

The Free Catholic for February contains an article by the editor, the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, on 'The Free Catholic Conference, and After,' which is more in the nature of a general description of the movement than a record of what actually took place at the Birmingham meetings in January. The Conference lasted four days, and although no particular communion was officially represented, "actually there were represented Roman Catholics, Old Catholics, English Catholics, Broad Anglicans of the 'Modern Churchman' school of thought, Scottish and English Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists, Baptists, Quakers, Free Christians and various minor groups." Those who attended all united for prayer and praise, and, with the exception of "the priests of the Church of England," joined in the Holy Communion, the communicants including a bishop. This latest attempt to promote Christian re-union on a mystical and sacramental basis, without incorporation in the theological and ecclesiastical systems of either the Roman Catholic Church or the Church of England, was started, it should be remembered, "by half a dozen men in the atmosphere of simple devotion and during Retreat," and it is in that atmosphere of intense personal religious feeling and experience that its spirit has been created. There is no desire on the part of its promoters to draw up another creed or found another sect, but their avowed object is rather to "work as a leaven within all the denominations to promote the end of a United Catholic Christendom." Arising out of this is "the sacrificial passion for social reconstruction" which was voiced by Dr. Mellor of Liverpool, and the Rev. H. H. Johnson of Evesham, on the last day of the Conference, when the enthusiasm of those present was, The Church Times states in a sympathetic notice, "aroused to its highest pitch."

The opening address was delivered by Dr. Orchard of King's Weigh House, London, whose services and earnest preaching attract large congregations to his own church every Sunday. Later in the proceedings Dr. Orchard, we understand, delivered an address on 'The Theological Formulation of Christian Faith.' In the course of his remarks at the opening of the Conference he outlined the Free Catholic position in the following words (we quote again from The Church Times report, which has only just come into our hands): "Many who are looking for Christ consider that Church organisation is fatal to the Christian spirit. We utterly repudiate this ecclesiastical Manichæism. We are convinced that Christianity organised denominationally is bound to fail, because it is wrong, and condemned by the New Testament. We are not inspired in this condemnation because it is wasteful and unpolitic, but because it is fundamentally unChristian. Anglicans are necessary to our Conference, but they may find us vague and erroneous, and we shall be glad if they will put us right. But we think that members of the Catholic Churches must get free while we Free Churchmen get Catholic—and ours is the harder task. We have found the idea of a merely immanent Christ cloudy and insufficient. We have found ourselves drawn to the Altar, the Mass, and the Reserved Sacrament. This has held our heart, and is our first attraction to Catholicism. We crave for something besides a pulpit and the prophet. We want to convey something more than our own popularity and personality empowers us to give. We crave for the priesthood because we see that it is the only way of clinching the Evangelic Faith. We resent separation into prophet and priest, for these functions when divided are both unbalanced and dangerous." Dr. Orchard continued: "We see that an ordered faith is necessary for devotion and theology, and that Catholic doctrine holds more truth than we thought. We are not content with indefiniteness, for men must know what they are asked to die for, and we see that forms conceal something which we badly want. We need a theology which saints have believed and martyrs have died for; dogmas which will throw us, not on documents, but on a living Church which promulgates them. We shall be told that we ought to go to Rome or High Anglicanism, but we believe the Free Church principle is true. Disestablishment would make a profound difference to us, for many of us could never belong to a State Church. We believe that the Free Churches have a great deal to contribute to the Catholic Church, and without them it is hardly entitled to the name. We must stay inside the Free Churches, and Catholicise them. For all that is right and essential to both Free and Catholic ideas is reconcilable."

There were four Conferences: the first on Free Church and Catholic ideas; the second on Worship; the third on Faith; and the fourth on the 'Social Implications of the Movement.' The preacher at the service in the Old Meeting Church on the last day was the Rev. Conrad Noel of Thaxted, who is at present giving Lenten addresses on Free Catholicism at St. George's, Bloomsbury. He preached for nearly an hour on the freedom, breadth, and democracy of true Catholicism. The Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas was the chairman of the Conference.

It is understood that, while many suggestions were made as to the new "basis" of the movement, no final decision was arrived at, and The Free Catholic will appear without the usual statement on the cover until the revised or new basis is substituted.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Aberdeen.—The Scottish Unitarian for March contains an excellent portrait of the Rev. Henry Dawtrey, who has recently become minister of the Unitarian Church in succession to the late Rev. L. Tavenor, together with some account of his life and work in Sheffield, Manchester, and Dundee. While in Manchester, where he acted as missionary of the Manchester District Association of Presbyterian and Unitarian Churches, and had committed to his care Broughton Unitarian Free Church, he was the secretary of the Temperance and Anti-Gambling Section of the Manchester District Sunday School Association. His five years' leadership of the Free Religious Movement at Dundee has been marked by strenuous work, and a broadminded and sympathetic interpretation of Unitarianism which have won him the confidence and esteem of all connected with the cause in that town. It is felt that Aberdeen is to be warmly congratulated upon having secured his services.

Bournemouth.—The Rev. V. D. Davis gave his third address on 'Religion and National Reconstruction' on the 17th ult., dealing specially with Education. He said: "the hope of the future was with democracy. In a country where freedom and peace were assured the people must rule; but if they were to rule with justice and an equal care for the well-being of all alike, in a rightly ordered community, they must have knowledge, adequate knowledge, fitly trained capacity, and high ideals; and to that end the whole people must be rightly taught, men and women alike. That was brought home to them with a fresh urgency now that a beginning had at last been made in giving to women their rightful share of responsibility for the government of the country. More adequate knowledge, more efficient training in capacity were needed, if they were to secure in full measure the natural riches of the land in agriculture, and no less in industrial production, that the country might hold its own and make its full contribution to the world's work, and make the best use of its gifts by a more just and beneficent distribution of the fruits of labour. It was not only in the interest of technical and industrial efficiency that educational reform was required, but for good citizenship, for the better organisation of the life of the nation as a whole, that the opportunities of leisure for the culture of the higher interests of life might be more fully assured to the whole people." In conclusion he referred to the details of Mr. Fisher's Education Bill and urged a generous support of its principles and regulations.

Edinburgh.—The Rev. R. V. Holt began a series of six Sunday evening lecture sermons on 'The Permanent and the Passing in the Christian Gospel,' on February 24, dealing first with 'Stumbling Blocks in the Gospels.' Subsequent subjects are: March 3, 'Evolution and the Christian Gospel'; March 10, 'The Permanent and the Passing in the Christian Gospel'; March 17, 'First and Second Class Christians'; March 24, 'The Gospel and Wealth'; March 31, 'May Christians use Force?' Mr. Holt points out that in this course of lectures an attempt is made to discover and state the principles on which the permanent in the Christian Gospel can be distinguished from the passing. The limitations cease to be stumbling blocks when seen in the light of their time. The force of the permanent is no longer dissipated when separated from the passing, but the whole power of the Christian message is released to transform the life of to-day. There will be no turning back; there will be no attempt to re-create out of time in the twentieth century the conditions of the first. But the truth which the greatest of prophets saw, and which in spite of all the mistakes and unfaithfulness of those who came after him has done so much to reveal to men and women in the past the sacred value of human personality—that truth will inspire and strengthen the men and women of to-day in the establishment of the Kingdom of God here and now.

Huddersfield.—At the conference of members of the Yorkshire Unitarian Churches, held at the Fitzwilliam Street Unitarian Church on Saturday evening, February 23, Dr. Estlin Carpenter delivered an address on 'Religion in War Time and After.' Mr. Grosvenor Talbot (Leeds) presided, and was supported on the platform by the Vicar of Woodhouse; Baptist, Wesleyan, and United Methodists ministers, and the Revs. Robert A. Dickson (Huddersfield), M. Evans (Lydgate), J. S. Mathers (Leeds), John W. Maw (Dewsbury), R. Newell (Pudsey); Messrs. Owen Balmforth, J.P. (Secretary of Education, Huddersfield), Simeon Hall and J. Hess (Leeds). Dr. Carpenter said that in the main the prospects of the churches after the war would depend upon what the church had been during the war. If its temper had been vindictive, if it had shown revengeful impulses, if they strove for selfish ends, and their aim was to pursue war after war in order to hold down a conquered enemy, then he would say frankly that for such a church there was no future until they had changed their hearts. There were manifold signs in the public press and in private talks that such a feeling was spreading at home. It was a mood full of peril for their church life. Whatever it had of justice, it displayed no love of mercy, and knew nothing of the "lowly walk with God." It was in the decline of attendance at public worship that the decline of organised religion showed itself. They had themselves failed to sustain that interest in worship—they had not cherished it in their own homes. They needed a new philosophy of prayer and fresh helps, varied and elastic. On all sides immense problems would await them at the end of the war. Could they overcome the inertness of imagination and really learn to understand the wants and claims of those whose difficulties we were trying to settle in our own way? The churches fundamentally must be democratic. He was not speaking of a system of government, but of a spirit. It could not be fully realised all at once. They would have to train themselves to work out its many implications, even in the narrow field of their own fellowship. Would the church assimilate sociology as it had assimilated Biblical criticism, or, to a certain extent, scientific thought? Would those young men returning from the trenches enlist with the new church in the great fight to which they would call them? If so, a new day would arise, and the prophets would cry "Rejoice, for the kingdom of God is at hand." The Rev. A. Whorlow proposed a vote of thanks, which the Rev. D. W. Jenkins seconded. A short discussion followed.

Leicester.—The annual meeting of members of the Narborough Road Church was held in the schoolroom on Thursday, February 21, Mr. W. B. Martin presiding. Reports dealing with the work for the past year of the church and various institutions connected with it were presented, and it was stated that special donations amounting to £50 had been received. Nevertheless, the membership needs to be increased and the financial position improved. The church has been without a minister for two months, but the services are maintained by "supplies," and there is evidence that interest is being stimulated in the work of the church which, situated as it is in the midst of a thickly populated middle-class district, offers unlimited scope for development.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, March 3.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15.
 Berrnondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Miss MAUD B. BURTT; 5.30, Mr. J. BEGG.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 6.30, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11, Mr. E. R. FYSON.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
 South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 Rev. Dr. HARGROVE; 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15 Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
 BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.
 OLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. E. MORGAN, B.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.15, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.
 HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut. Col. BULLOCK.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. J. N. HEANEY; 6.30, Mr. J. ECCLES.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. C. BIGGINS, B.A., B.D.
 MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.
 NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.
 WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

Notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week should be sent to The Publisher, 13 BREAM'S BUILDINGS, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

The name of the Minister of the Church is inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary.

Liverpool and District Women's League.—By kind invitation of the newly-formed branch at the Dingle the Annual Meeting of the Liverpool and District League was held in the Ancient Chapel on Saturday, February 23. It opened with a hymn followed by a prayer by the President, Mrs. Mullereux. Mrs. Yates read an excellent report of the year's work of the Bootle Branch. There were two reports from West Kirby—that of the senior branch being read by Mrs. Holder, while a report from the junior branch contributed by a girl of sixteen was given by Miss Gotthardt. The reports of the District League were then given by the secretary and the treasurer, Miss Alison Hall. After tea a timely address on the Enfranchisement of Women was given by Miss Harriet Johnson, who spoke of the difficulties of registration and how they could be met, the qualifications necessary for the woman-voter, and the moral and material results expected from this tremendous addition to the voting power of the nation. The special causes claiming women's sympathy and ably handled by the lecturer were housing, communal kitchens, divorce and temperance. Votes of thanks to Miss Johnson, proposed by Miss McConnell, and seconded by Miss J. Willmer, and to the hostesses, proposed by Mrs. Stanley Mellor and seconded by Mrs. Lloyd Jones, were passed.

London: Brixton.—The Rev. J. Munn has accepted a cordial invitation to become minister of the Unitarian Church at Effra Road. Mr. Munn has until recently been the minister at Padiham, and was formerly (1907-1913) at Grey Abbey, Co. Down. His new duties begin in June.

Manchester District Sunday School Association.—The Home Missionary College, in co-operation with this Association, is again arranging for lectures for teachers to be delivered by the Warden of the College, the Rev. H. McLachlan, viz.: (1) 'The Use of the Bible in the Sunday Schools,' four lectures; (2) 'Chapters from the History of Unitarianism in England,' four lectures; (3) 'History as a Subject of Sunday School Teaching,' two lectures; and (4) 'Jesus, the Man and his Message,' two lectures. The lectures can be delivered at any centre to the teachers of any affiliated local Union, or groups of teachers from several neighbouring schools, and at any time which can be conveniently arranged between April 20 and June 29, 1918, on payment of travelling expenses only. Secretaries of Sunday School Unions and Sunday schools should write to the Hon. Secretary, the Rev. H. Bodell Smith, Mottram, Manchester, not later than March 23, stating what lectures are desired, at what centres and specifying the dates suggested—in time for the meeting of the Special Committee of this Association in April which has the arrangements in hand.

Sheffield: Attercliffe.—The Rev. J. W. Lee has received and accepted an invitation to become minister of the Attercliffe Unitarian Church, and will, consequently, cease to be the Assistant Minister at Upper Chapel in the course of a few months.

Sheffield: Upper Chapel.—In view of the fact that the Rev. J. W. Lee is to become the minister of the Attercliffe Church, the Rev. C. J. Street recently intimated to the Trustees and Committee that he felt the time had now come when he must seek relief from the strain of the work at Upper Chapel, which he found it increasingly difficult to bear. Accordingly he placed before them the alternative of a complete resignation, or semi-retirement with the appointment of a colleague who would undertake the greater part of the work, it being his own intention to live in the country. Very great regret is expressed that such a step has become necessary, but it is desired that Mr. Street shall give the congregation, whose minister he has been for fourteen and a half years, as much of his services as possible, and an invitation has been sent to the Rev. Alfred Hall to become co-pastor with him, which has been accepted.

Southampton.—The Rev. A. Victor Moody, who became minister here three years ago, resigns the appointment at the end of March.

THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.

SECRETARIES of churches which publish Calendars are requested to send the Calendars regularly, and as soon as possible after publication, to the Editor.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

March

3. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON, of Kentish Town.
10. Rev. Dr. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER of Manchester College, Oxford.
17. Rev. HARROLD H. JOHNSON of Evesham.
24. Rev. W. H. ROSE of the Rhyl Street Domestic Mission.

ANSDELL UNITARIAN CHURCH,

Situated on the Lancashire coast, require a MINISTER.

Apply to (Hon. Secretary) Mr. J. RIDINGS, 165 Church Road, St. Annes-on-the-Sea.

THE LEICESTER DOMESTIC MISSION invite applications for the position of MISSIONARY. Salary £120 to £150 according to qualifications. The Committee attach special importance to ability to carry on social and religious work among adolescents in a large working-class district, and to act as Superintendent of Boys' Sunday School.—Applications, with not more than three testimonials (copies only) to Mr. W. G. GIBBS, Hon. Secretary, 19 Lower Hastings Street, Leicester. No personal applications or canvassing.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL ON MODERN LINES WITH PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

The aim of the Religious Teaching is to instil a simple Christian Faith and personal religion. There is full Morning Service in the School on Sunday. In the evening boys may, if their parents desire it, attend a place of worship in Nantwich.

Full Prospectus, apply to the Head Master :

H. LANG JONES, M.A. (Oxon.).

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

ALL WHO DESIRE TO PROMOTE THE IDEA OF INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN BROTHERHOOD are invited to attend a

MEETING in

KINGSWAY HALL, KINGSWAY, W.C.1,

on

THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1918,
at 5 P.M.

to consider the duty of the Churches in the present situation.

CHAIR:—Right Hon. LORD PARMOOR.

SPEAKERS:—

The Very Rev. the DEAN of WORCESTER.
Father NICHOLAS VELIMIROVIC (of Serbia).

Rev. Canon DONALDSON.

Rev. Principal SELBIE.

Rev. THOMAS PHILLIPS, and others.

Admission free, by ticket only, from Miss M. E. ELLIS, International Christian Meeting, 77 Avenue Chambers, Southampton Row, W.C.1.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY.

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,

Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. 3s. 3d. net post free.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL MANCHESTER.

Contains 23 Illustrations of this historic Nonconformist building, and those associated with it, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes, and an Introduction by the late Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Chapel. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY, No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

Deputy Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

Miss CECIL GRADWELL. H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.

L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I. H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Situations, Vacant and Wanted.

WANTED, TWO capable LADIES to undertake the work of a modern and convenient house in Parkstone.—Address Mrs. SOLLY, Bankside, Avenue Road, Bournemouth.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

BRIGHTON.—TO LET, Furnished, SITTING-ROOM AND BEDROOM. Near Station and trams. Very clean and sunny. 15s. a week. Vacant now.—W. care of INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Miscellaneous.

"GALWAY" SUITING, all pure wool. 56 inches wide, 14s. 6d. per yard. Suit length, 3½ yards, 50s. 6d. Coat and skirt, 4½ yards, 65s. Write for free Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

OLD FALSE TEETH WANTED for their precious metals; now worth up to £12 per set; any condition. Old watches, surplus jewellery, broken jewellery, from £2 to £5 per ounce given. We give the highest possible value; before remitting, we make offers by return. If not accepted goods returned at once post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester.

* All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenaeum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate, Saturday March 3, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3949.
New Series, No. 1052.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1918.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	73	BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—		Unitarianism and the Divinity of Jesus	77
		Why Christ is God.	75	BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	77
PSALMS OF THE WEST	74	CORRESPONDENCE:—		NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	77
		The Churches and the Ministry	76

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

THE brilliant speech delivered at the Mansion House on Monday by M. Albert Thomas, in connection with the Anglo-French Society formed last October, should help to rally the mental forces which, naturally enough, have of late shown a tendency to ebb owing to the protraction of the war. He rightly recalled the essential fact upon which the great issue arose—the question of an independent national life of peoples great and small, and the free disposal of their lot. Against this idea was set the German idea of the domination of one race. M. Thomas acutely distinguished between cases where self-determination was at once feasible and where, in the interests of a people and its neighbours, it must be postponed to a riper stage of development. Our immediate duty in relation to fighting, he said, is to draft rules of a new international law, and to organise a supernational authority competent to prevent the dangers of dispersion and falling to pieces, as well as those of war.

* * *

ANOTHER memorable utterance of the past week was that of Sir William Robertson, the great soldier who from lowly beginnings has attained to foremost rank in his profession. Unlike some of his German contemporaries, Sir William does not let his professional zeal obscure his sense of humanity. Instead of glorying in the maintenance of great armies as not only inevitable but beneficial to mankind, he declared our chief aim in the present war to be the removal of the "disgrace to civilisation" involved in the waste of energy, material, and life, inseparable from the keeping up of huge armaments such as existed before this war began. The fact that our nation is now one of the greatest military Powers in the world, and that to secure the end defined by Sir William our whole strength is needed, must not, and we believe will not, dull the vision of a day when our civilisation will be freed from this "disgrace."

* * *

FROM Jerusalem a non-British resident sends the welcome news (though it is just what we should expect) that as soon as our troops took possession of the city they set about cleaning its dirty "streets," which within the walls are mostly dark, ill-paved alleys. Prior to their entry the sale of alcoholic drink, deliberately fostered by the Germans, was widely debauching the natives, Moslem as well as Jews; and prostitution, the usual accompaniment of drink, was equally rampant. By strictness as to the alcohol traffic the latter evil has been already successfully grappled with, and the "holy city" is a good deal cleaner, morally as well as physically, than it was a few months ago.

* * *

THIS, we say, is just what we should expect; but much nearer home the story is very different. Mr. Macpherson has been challenged in the House of Commons repeatedly to deny the charge that British military authorities are not merely conniving at the frequenting of brothels in certain districts of France by our soldiers, but, if the Dean of Lincoln is to be believed, actually encouraging the practice. The official replies have varied. At one time the attempt was made to saddle the responsibility on the French, who (it is said) tolerate "the brothel as an institution" proper to be maintained, and who (apparently) would not tolerate easily "any slur" their Allies would cast upon it by ruling it out of bounds. But this is precisely what the Americans have done; and we are now left to infer that an abominable laxity on the subject exists somewhere at our War Office. We believe there are enough decent parents in this country to make such a protest on behalf of their soldier sons as will greatly startle these officers and gentlemen—to whom a woman's soul is nothing if her body can be purchased. The Churches, especially, must speak out quickly and forcibly, in denunciation of this latest revelation of what our own militarists can be.

* * *

IN the death of Mr. John Redmond there has been opportunity once more, and the opportunity has been widely seized, to show how in this country there often exists true personal respect among those who appear to be bitterest opponents, and who do in fact stand in diametrically opposite camps of opinion and interest. The tributes of Unionists to the late Nationalist leader certainly look sincere, and there can be no doubt that the Convention has done something real, in spite of all regrettable delays, to inspire a degree of material consideration too sadly lacking formerly in Irish party politics. Unfortunately, these delays have yielded a fresh crop of agitation and lawlessness, which in turn tend to fresh bitterness and a despair of milder measures and concerted action. We must still trust, however, to the larger and more gracious temper of Irish patriots of all the parties to profit by the solemn reminder of Mr. Redmond's tragic passing, and to achieve that victory for peace and goodwill in Ireland which would have so great an effect, we believe, in securing the victory we seek on the larger field.

* * *

UNDETERRED by the chilly reception given in many quarters to his former letter suggesting a conference between representatives of the belligerents, Lord Lansdowne again commends an attempt to arrest the war. In particular, he sees in Hertling's most recent utterance an approach to President Wilson's scheme affording (if it be taken as in earnest) a promising opening. We think that a good many people, in view of the actions of the Central Powers in dealing with Russia and Roumania, will be unable at present to hope much in this direction. Rather, as we recognise the hardening of heart that seems to be going on, not only among the ruling caste in Germany but among people generally there, we have to make up our minds to a stern contest yet, and it may be a long one. Such, at least, appears to be the matured opinion of men on both sides of the Atlantic, who, if any, ought to know the real conditions and prospects. Peace we want with all our hearts, but it must be a "clean peace," as Lord Lansdowne insists, and not the kind of thing just concluded in the East.

* * *

WHATEVER theories as to Christian communion may be favoured by others, most Unitarians, we are sure, are true to the spirit which cordially welcomes lovers of God and man everywhere as belonging, equally with themselves, to the "One Holy Church" that "appears through every age and race." Perusing the reports now to hand of the All-India Theistic Conference held at Calcutta at the end of December, we recall with grateful satisfaction the wise impulses which in one generation after another moved our people to cherish close fraternity with Indian reformers. Sir Krishna G. Gupta, an honoured civil servant well known in England, welcomed the Conference, and another London friend, Mr. N. G. Welinkar, gave a fine presidential address, breathing an emotional fervour far remote from that "cold theism" which haunts the imagination of those only who are ignorant of Rammohun Roy, Debendranath, Keshub, Mozoomdar, and even of Tagore. Suggestive it is to see that in India, too, according to Sir Krishna, "a certain spirit of conservatism and a not unnatural fondness for ancient forms and symbols" are leading a few of the brethren there "along a path which is full of peril."

* * *

THE headship of our important public schools is a position of such potentiality, and, we may add, a position too often closed against people of our opinions—they might better be agnostics pure and simple—that we note with special satisfaction the appointment of Miss Drummond, Head of the Camden School, to be Head of the North London Collegiate School for Girls, in succession to Dr. Sophie Bryant. She has a high standard set her in the career of her predecessor, but we do not doubt she will acquit herself well in her new and more extended opportunity of service. As many of our readers will know, Miss Drummond is a daughter of the former Principal of Manchester College, Dr. James Drummond.

* * *

DR. FRANCIS G. PEABODY, formerly Dean of Harvard Divinity School, delivered a forceful address at a recent meeting of Unitarians in Boston, U.S.A. He declared that the dogmatic and sacerdotal methods employed by the Christian denominations in years gone by are utterly inadequate to satisfy the intellectual and spiritual needs of man to-day. A new valuation of Reality and of the eternal laws of righteousness and love must supplant the superficial and transient doctrines of the Christian Church, or the Christian Church must become merely a matter of tradition. Unless religious teachers become more alert and progressive in their thought, Christianity was in danger of becoming a mere survival of antiquity, welcomed only by the sentimentalist and the ecclesiastical functionary.

PSALMS OF THE WEST.

It will be four years this Easter since Rollo Russell died, a man of singularly pure and noble nature, of great humility and tenderness of heart, in whom the spirit of beneficence and brotherly kindness and self-forgetting service was in quiet ways very richly manifest. He was known as a writer on scientific subjects, on questions of health and human welfare, but there was one little book of his which for twenty-five years had gone upon its way anonymously, and had passed through six editions, which had exercised, and we believe is destined to exercise, a deeper and more lasting influence than any of his other writings. It has been for some years an open secret that he was the author of 'Psalms of the West,' and we are glad that a seventh edition has now been issued with his name upon the title-page.* The Psalms, as many of our readers will already be aware, are in rhythmic form. They are the utterance of a nature deeply religious and essentially modern in outlook and conviction. Though impersonal in their confessions, they are witness that the writer was one who had been through deep waters of suffering and sorrow, but found the way of deliverance, and knew the deeper joy of life. There are lovely pictures also of delight in the beauty of the world and the manifold wonders of Nature. Better than any attempted description to give an idea of the character of the work will be the citation of a few verses; and this we offer for the sake of those not yet acquainted with the book:—

Full of beauty and aspiration are the thoughts of the righteous, the strong souls whose wings are lustrous with touches of hope.

Great is the power of man to love thee, to worship thee, to glorify the high Unseen.

Lovely is the sacrifice of the saints, who gave every sweet comfort to the fire, and died that we might better believe thy will.

Round about thy throne is everlasting strength, and from thy kingdom shall the kingdoms of the earth be nourished.

Thou shalt found justice where oppression was strong, and equality where the guilty were princes.

Thou shalt pour freedom on the nations that groaned, and healthful intelligence on the people that trembled in darkness.

The cruel shall be turned to mercy, and in the spring of graciousness the unthankful shall open his heart.

The mean shall be lifted up in the zeal of the noble, and the weary ones shall sing unto thee in the worship of thy courts.

Mighty shall be the will of the least of the children of faith, exalted the honour of the humblest among the loving.

Love hath nought to lose, for loss of all is gain, and in perfect sacrifice the world hath been redeemed.

Surely the seen is an image, and the unseen alone hath power; the invisible hath created, and remaineth for ever, though the fixed stars be melted and moulded anew.

We will not mourn for death, we will pass to thy presence with thanksgiving, and our lives shall be hymns of gladness ascending to the home of souls.

Those are verses from the Psalm 'The Unseen alone hath Power,' and there are others, as in the Psalms on 'The Great Nation' and 'Let War cease and Goodwill prevail,' on which the experience of the past four years may serve, indeed, as tragic comment, but which, nevertheless, will stand in the strength of their steadfast faith in humanity, and may speak to us with prophetic power of that which yet shall be achieved.

So shall the ever-saving hope battle with despair, and the invisible shall become mighty over the visible, and tears will fall away in the sympathy of the All-suffering.

And a strength will remain, to reign over darkness for ever, and the insight of purity will remain, giving wisdom and peace;

And to the whole world will come the spirit of happiness, the will of God, the perfect obedience and the blessing that endureth for ever.

Rollo Russell died before the shadow of the great war fell upon his country. He was born in 1849, while his father, Lord John Russell, was Prime Minister, a man of stainless honour, one of the most trusted friends of Queen Victoria. Thus he was brought up in the tradition of a broad-minded, large-hearted Liberalism, devoted not to personal ambition, but to public service; and he was supremely happy in his mother and the beautiful home she made for her children. She also was of noble family, a daughter of the Earl of Minto, but a woman of the truest democratic sympathies and earnestly religious. It is of special interest for us to remember that in her later years Lady Russell, with her son and daughter, having long been severed by conviction from Orthodoxy, was closely identified with the founding of the Free Christian Church at Richmond, and was there to the close of her life a faithful worshipper.]

* 'Psalms of the West.' By Rollo Russell. Longmans. 1s. net.

Rollo Russell was educated at Harrow and Oxford. The service of his life was rendered not in any prominent sphere in politics, but, as we have said, in earnest scientific pursuits and in the field of social reform. What that meant to him is clearly reflected in 'Psalms of the West,' and we commend the book very earnestly to a new generation of readers.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

'WHY CHRIST IS GOD.'*

THIS sermon is a passionate outburst of emotion rather than a studied effort of reason—a criticism which we believe Mr. Thomas will appreciate. It is welcome from some points of view. It is welcome for the sake of clearing the air, because the author in his introductory note, while endeavouring to support his contentions with quotations from Dr. Martineau, at last makes the frank confession, for which we have long waited, that he has "developed and emphasised the universalising of the Athanasian doctrine for worship in a way which he believes Dr. Martineau would not sanction." This open declaration is a distinct gain. We know now where the author stands. One sign that Martineau was a great teacher is that men who take a theological attitude opposed to his, seek the ægis of his words.

Take the first of the quotations, of which Mr. Thomas says, "I am both comforted and fortified whenever I find my own convictions can thus far appeal for confirmation to his [Dr. Martineau's] illustrious and saintly name": "If there is to be any expression of the Divine character at all, it can only be through the lineaments of an individual soul, passing through a concrete and particular life." But why not go on to quote the explanation which follows on the next page?—"Nor let it be supposed that, when the medium of Divine expression is thus an individual, the thing expressed cannot be universal." Towards the end of the sermon in which these passages occur Martineau says, "Among all natures that can speak of duty and righteousness, and exchange ideas of right and wrong, there must prevail one system of values, one metrical notation; failing this, there could be no commerce of thought or sentiment. Hence we can neither deny to faithful, heroic, and holy men, to a Socrates, a Marcus Aurelius, a Blaise Pascal, an approach to Christ upon the same line, nor claim for him any pre-eminence that removes them from his fellowship." The echo of this thought is to be found in the phrase, with which Mr. Thomas says we were made "painfully familiar a few years ago"—"Jesus is God, so are you." Dr. Martineau closes his sermon with the sentence, "All minds that own a better and a worse are fellow denizens of the same City of God, severed by no antipathies of race or impassable barriers of rank; but inwardly conscious of the same authority and revering the same call; knit together in love, in proportion as they draw nearer to the beauty of holiness; and lifted at last into fellowship with the Supreme Perfection." We are convinced of Mr. Thomas's honesty, but we must respectfully ask him to refrain from quotations which may mislead the many who are not acquainted with Martineau's writings. Whatever else Mr. Thomas may be, he is not a theological disciple of Martineau, and it is sheer travesty to suggest that this great spiritual philosopher supports the contention that Christ is "very God of very God."

As a sample of the matter of Mr. Thomas's sermon, we select the following sentences: "The God of Christians is Christ: and not any merely cosmic Christ, but the Christ of Jesus of Nazareth and of his Holy Church. The philosopher, the man of science, even the theologian may describe another God, or the same God in other terms: but as worshipper and lover his God is Christ." After a vivid description of the horrors which take place in what appears to Mr. Thomas to be, hypothetically at least, godless Nature, though elsewhere he speaks of the Father being within Nature, he says, "Therefore, I still kneel before Thy Crucifix and say, Be Thou my God for ever, for thou art utterly divine." We detect in this passage echoes of Cardinal Mercier's famous pastoral letter! Again, "Christ became for Christendom, in the Nicene confession 'God of God, Light of Light, Very God of Very God.' It is a great, triumphant, resounding confession."

Mr. Thomas is obviously not a Unitarian, and if we adhere strictly to the Creeds, he is not a Trinitarian. He is a Christ-worshipper pure and simple. He is not very certain about the existence of God the Father. That appears to be an inference from the existence of Christ. There are passages in which the processes of heaven and earth come in for such severe censure, hypothetically at least, that the writer surely cannot repeat the words intelligently, "I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth." He will have none of your "merely cosmic Christ." Some of his criticisms of creation remind us of those we read in our teens in the pages of The Freethinker. Apparently, it is a sorry world we are living in. Neither the starry heavens above nor the moral law within fill the soul of this preacher with new and increasing admiration and reverence. No, it is in Christ, in Jesus of Nazareth that God is to be found—a rather sad look-out for non-Christians.

What impresses us most is the craving for an object of worship—sometimes Christ, and failing him a Crucifix. We are reminded of the saying of a friend, not a member of a Unitarian Church, that "Unitarianism is so spiritual that it will attract only a few spiritually-minded men. Most people require an object of worship." It will be readily understood that nothing derogatory to non-Unitarians was intended, but the view that Unitarians are among those who worship God as Spirit, as we have every reason to believe Jesus did. Doubting Thomas cannot believe unless he touch and handle and see, but a Unitarian can. The measure of a man's devotion cannot be taken; but there have undoubtedly been those who have worshipped God, God the ever-living and ever-present Spirit, as devoutly as those who have fixed their gaze on a crucifix, on a symbol of an embodied God.

But let us for a moment examine this appeal to Christ as the Supreme Revelation of God. Mr. Thomas, in spite of much that is nebulous in what he says, objects to "vagueness and indefiniteness." He compares ideals with facts, much to the discredit of the former. Will he tell us how he discovers that Christ is divine, if not by reference to the moral and spiritual standard in his own soul? Christ may be all that he asserts, but how did he find it out? That is a plain question. The Roman Catholic answers that the Church says so. The ultra-Protestant that the Bible tells us so. Many Christians dodge the question by saying that Christ is his own verification and there can be no other. What is Mr. Thomas's reply in the clear crisp language which he knows well how to employ?

The feeling is suggested by this sermon that some of us are not Christians, since we find God in his inward revelation of what ought to be, which is sometimes in glaring contrast to the fact of what is. We discover that our whole personal moral being, as well as that of Jesus of Nazareth, lives and moves and has its being in God. Daily, hourly, confidently and triumphantly some men live in this consciousness. Do they cease to be Christians because this immediate and ever present Life is the anchor of their faith, because they have felt a presence that disturbs them with "the joy of elevated thoughts," and because they cannot therefore restrict their view to one manifestation in history, which was temporal and local?

"Again, let me implore," says Mr. Thomas, "do not let us fly off into futile wrangling about differences in degree and differences in kind in order to save an inadequate theory." This is to burke the whole issue. Anyone who will take the trouble to study the history of the Doctrine of the Incarnation, even in such an orthodox volume as that of Canon Ottley, will see at once that the whole controversy concerning the Incarnation on its human side swings round these very differences. It is no use lifting beseeching hands, imploring us not to argue or think over the matter. This is not the hour to request that we shall accept in faith without enquiry and without study that which cannot be substantiated by reason. The suggestion that we should do so seems to indicate that the writer is inwardly conscious of the insecurity of his doctrine. As Dr. Martineau said eighty years ago, "reason is the ultimate appeal, the supreme tribunal, to the test of which even scripture must be brought." If scripture, then surely the creeds of later development and doubtful authenticity. To-day, at least, reason "means something—something decisive and tremendous for our Faith," and this is the factor Mr. Thomas implores us to leave out.

This sermon, evidently, is altogether alien to the spirit and genius of the leaders of our progressive faith and especially of Martineau. It is a purely exotic growth, which may perhaps with the judicious exercise of force be grafted into the Athanasianism of the fourth century, but never into the Liberal Faith of the twentieth century.

Mr. Thomas has always delighted in the word "Free," especially in the phrase Free Catholic, but he is not freed. Psychologically considered this sermon appears to be another instance of the recrudescence of early faith and influence, which may be pardonable in one who has been trained to love Mother Church, but is certainly not conducive to clarity of judgment and independence of thought.

ALFRED HALL.

BARON VON HÜGEL contributes a valuable letter this week to The Times Literary Supplement on Julius Wellhausen, giving some interesting personal touches and an estimate of his work, which he considers of great value in relation to the Old Testament, but less so in Gospel criticism.

* A sermon preached by the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, of the Old Meeting Church, Birmingham.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[We submit a further selection from the letters which still flow in upon this subject, and regret that several of much importance are too long for insertion this week. Again we appeal for brevity which present conditions renders imperative.—EDITOR of INQUIRER.]

THE CHURCHES AND THE MINISTRY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May I, as a layman who is deeply interested in the problem of 'The Churches and the Ministry' be allowed to express my views and offer one or two suggestions thereon? The whole of the churches of our Free Faith are indebted to Dr. Rattray for the manly letter by which he opened this discussion. The admission that not only individual churches but the denomination as a whole is in a state of decay and in danger of "ceasing to exist" is one that fills the mind with dismay. His suggestions for arresting the process of extinction are well worth consideration, though they are not all of equal value. With characteristic courage he declares that the only hope—of saving the situation—"is in getting in time a sufficient number of ministers of natural gifts and education to get the people." His proposition I take to be that the minister is the fulcrum upon which the leverage to uplift the Churches must be exerted. There is much to be said for this, but it is not nearly the whole matter.

Dr. Jacks, than whom no man is better qualified to say what inherent powers are in the colleges, their staffs, curricula, and atmosphere to produce the men of the standard set up by Dr. Rattray, says, in effect, the colleges cannot do much more than is now done, and refers the matter to the Churches, that they may send up the right kind of man and more of them for training for the ministry—men of soul, and power, and industry.

Dr. Mellor admits that whilst the colleges are admirable institutions for their purpose they might be improved in ways which he suggests. He backs up Dr. Jacks' statement that the colleges cannot train more and better men than the churches send them. He, however, goes on to say that, apart from the supply of men for the ministry, "the Churches are perishing through a lack of a central, unifying, and thrilling mission and gospel." This seems to me to be the vital question; it is deeper than organisation and machinery, and more directly touches the diseased part in our Church body. "For what purpose do we train and need ministers, and what ideal are we inviting men and women to serve?" This is the real question. Are we maintaining our colleges and churches merely to propagate and perpetuate a form of faith based upon individual and corporate freedom, and an ecclesiastical system of which we are justly proud? Or is our object, aim, and end to uplift man and to make the world a place better worth living in, and so strive to establish that kingdom of God on earth of which Jesus and all the ancient and modern prophets have spoken, by making life sweeter, stronger, purer, sincerer, and juster than it is now or ever has been? If the former is our object the present organisation is well fitted; but if the latter, much remains to be remedied.

If I may without presumption be allowed to ask and try to answer the question: "What is wrong with the Churches?" I would say it is not the form or statement of faith, nor our ideals as they are stated by our ministers. I conceive the mischief to lie in the levity, the coldness, and heartlessness of assent, in the hardness of heart which stands like a stone wall and prevents, in so many cases, the spiritual message from finding entrance to the heart; in the prejudice against any display of religious sentiment; in the manifest inconsistency between our professed belief in prayer and the practice or non-practice of private prayer. The effect of this more or less anti-religious spirit is that Unitarians and Free Churchmen are much like the conventionally religious men of all the denominations.

The disease of our Churches is the same in nature as that which afflicts the world generally—it is, plainly, materialism, practical Godlessness, Mammonism, the "getting-on spirit," the undue quest of money, power, and position; it is seen in profiteering, in class hatred, in oppression of the poor, in the dishonesty, now so prevalent, which prompts nearly every man to get his hand deep as he can into the pocket of his fellow-man; it is seen in insincerity and untruthfulness. The cure for this hydra-headed disease can be found only in a closer walk with the eternal spirit of justice and brotherhood and God, and this alone can improve the life of our Churches and send men to the colleges with "power to get people."—Yours, &c.,

J. WIGLEY.

Manchester.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—In THE INQUIRER of February 23, you ask what "the man in the pew" thinks on this subject. Dr. Rattray seems to suggest that a minister should be a "walking encyclopedia," but is it not a little doubtful if that would solve the problem of our empty churches? Is it not possible that one, if not the chief, reason of our dwindling congregations lies in the fact that one of the great lessons to be learnt from the life of Jesus has for so long been ignored? Jesus went about preaching, teaching, and doing good; and nobly do our ministers follow his example; but the other half of the lesson—the congregations' half—has been lost sight of. Jesus never tried to "get people," that was left for his friends to do. I think he never even preached to "get people," he simply preached what he was inspired to preach, as our ministers do now. In one place we read he definitely told two of his friends, "I will make you fishers of men,"—he nowhere says he himself will be a fisher of men: and his fame is "noised abroad," but surely not by himself. There are many other instances to be found which show that his friends helped him by their enthusiasm, and the parable of the "Great Supper" is definite teaching of the fact that the people of the house should go out into the highways and bring in people to partake of the good things provided by its head. If it could be brought home to our congregations, or even to our committees and officers, that they are not following out their share of the great object lesson of Christ's life unless they make it their business to see that their minister's teaching is heard, and are there to hear it themselves, we should soon see a difference in the attendance at church. It was the friends who believed in Jesus's teaching and his message, and who were always there, who helped to make the "multitude," and so "got the people." We invite a minister to come and spread the religion we profess to believe in as the highest and most vital thing in life, and then we, who should be his firmest friends and followers, often put anything else before the work of the church, and even before Sunday worship. While this is so, how can we expect outsiders to believe that we have something so really good as we have? Once make our committees realise that it is their business to get together a congregation, and when they have done it there will be no fear of our ministers not keeping it, without anything more than the education they already get at the colleges and their own love of their work. Just now times are very difficult, people are working at high pressure, and many think it right to put War work before Church work. Here are two suggestions which might help. (1) Instead of spending more money to alter, to try to improve, the education of our ministers, it might be used to pay one or two lay-workers to take the place of voluntary workers in any church that needed them, who would be at the service of the minister until the congregation could do its own work again; and (2) that instead of closing any churches (for they are surely needed now more than ever), some central body like the Sustentation Fund, or the London District Unitarian Society, or any other society that exists to help churches, should keep a register of voluntary workers with still some spare time, whom they could put in touch with churches needing workers, and who would work under the minister's direction, and so help to keep the church alive. If the young people in the congregation saw their own minister backed up with enthusiasm, and their church always put first, and small sacrifices cheerfully made for it, they would probably feel more encouragement to enter the ministry and bear its trials and hardships.—Yours, &c.

ELLEN H. GREEN.

Tudor House, Darnley Road, Hackney.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—As a "Lay-woman" I should like to say how absolutely and entirely I agree with E. B. Cook's letter in this week's INQUIRER. The solving of the problem of our "diminishing congregations" to-day, I feel sure, lies through the children (or rather, the "young people"). We keep the little children, I think—with our usually excellent Sunday schools—but just when the boys and girls grow to the "thinking age," when nearly all young people, in my opinion, begin to wonder and puzzle on the great mysteries, and when something is roused in their spirits (call it sentiment or "getting religion," or what you will), then we, "the churches," fail them. They "cry for bread," and we "give them stones"; at the impressionable age, when the soul and spirit lie open ready (and often eager) for any influence towards the Higher Life, they find nothing to help and feed them in our denomination..

And this, I believe, is the reason that so many (and all of them the best sort—the thinking, "spiritually hungry" ones)—are driven into other sects. I believe a more general "Dedication Service" on the lines of a Confirmation Service, preceded by regular instruction (always taken by the minister himself) might do much to prevent this. I also agree with Mr. Coventry, that "a little less of the preacher and more of the pastor" would, in many cases, have good effect.—Yours, &c. MAY WOLFE.

The Clough, Hale, Cheshire.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May one who describes himself on the census paper as a Congregationalist question the accuracy of Dr. Rattray's premise, which Professor Jacks and your correspondents seem to accept, that as a rule the ministers of the Unitarian churches are inferior in attractive preaching power to their brethren in the other Free Church denominations? Circumstances have made me for nearly two years a wanderer on Sundays among the London churches, including those of the Unitarian order, and I can express a very confident opinion that in the power to give forth a spiritual message in an effective way your ministers can easily hold their own with those of any other religious community.

Most of your congregations are small, and only men of great devotion and consecration could maintain their work, as they do, at a high standard. One of the most impressive sermons I have heard in the course of my wanderings was at Tolmers Square Congregational Church, with a seating capacity of a thousand, and a congregation of twenty adults and thirty children. Numbers are not everything. When Dr. Martineau preached at Little Portland Street, I am told that the galleries were only thinly occupied, and I know that during the years when I was a seat-holder at Bedford Chapel, during Mr. Brooke's ministry, there was usually room for everybody. The preacher who appealed to me more than any one I have ever heard, the Rev. S. A. Tipple, of Norwood, rarely had a larger congregation than one hundred and fifty.

The root of the whole matter is that the great majority of conventional church-goers are prejudiced against the undogmatic conception of religion which the non-subscribing churches stand for, and outsiders do not find in this conception any attractive force. While many orthodox ministers and laymen hold most liberal views, their church organisations and officials do everything they can to boycott and suppress what I assume they conscientiously consider to be heretical doctrine, and this continuous pressure does have its effect on superficial and uninstructed worshippers. With the coming of greater power to the democracy and the setting up of an ampler system of education, ecclesiasticism will be put in the melting pot and probably be stripped of much of its power; let us have faith that in this freshened atmosphere our prophets will find a more sympathetic response to their courageous message than they do to-day.

The Unitarian ministers as a body can, in my judgment, hold their own so far as equipment is concerned with any of their brethren. But they will never, so long as they are true to their ideals, fill places like the City Temple or the Metropolitan Tabernacle with an emotional and perspiring crowd. They must always be pioneers and venturers, leaders of a limited band of pilgrims in the continuous march to the City of God.—Yours, &c.

E. HOWARD.

24 Inverness Terrace, W.

UNITARIANISM AND THE DIVINITY OF JESUS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Mr. Lummis, in his letter, makes such an extraordinary statement about Unitarians that I think it ought not to pass without correction. He says: "Men whose conception of God does not exclude His manifestation in humanity, His capital manifestation in one man, are not Unitarians." To any one even superficially acquainted with the writings of representative Unitarians such a statement must appear directly opposed to obvious fact; for their thought is permeated with the belief that God is manifest in humanity, and that His capital manifestation was in one man. So pervasive is this teaching that it is needless to quote passages. It may, however, be interesting to quote from a writer who, owing to the exigencies of his time was a very pronounced and controversial Unitarian. My father wrote in 1830 the following words: "We believe that in him [Jesus] dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, or of the Deity substantially, and therefore he is properly entitled to the name of Divine.... We believe that the Spirit of God was in Christ, and that thus God was manifest in the flesh, as he is manifest in all the works of nature. We know not in what department of the universe, nor in what object of creation God is not manifest; but he was manifest in a more especial, and more conspicuous manner, in our Lord Jesus Christ, whom He made His Word, or the ambassador and interpreter of His divine will to the children of men." The theology prevalent among Unitarians has undergone important changes since these words were written; but on the central point it has only deepened, and been placed on a more philosophical basis. Those who are fond of exalting themselves on account of their superior attachment to Christ would do well to consider whether genuine love is fond of proclaiming itself, and does not rather silently pray to be warmer and more faithful.—Yours, &c.,

JAMES DRUMMOND.

Oxford.

March 3, 1918.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

160TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,125	7	3
Mr. A. H. Mathews (8th)	0	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hall (monthly)	1	0	0
Westgrove Women's League, Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox (31st)	0	10	0
Mrs. Julian Winsor (38th)	1	0	0
Miss Blake (21st)	2	0	0
Mr. George Banks (37th)	1	0	0
Miss Colton and the Misses Gillespie (32nd)	0	7	6
Miss S. S. Dowson (13th)	5	0	0
	20,136	14	9

*Parcels have been received from:—*Acton Branch of the Women's League, per Mrs. W. B. Sceats; Mrs. Oliver Winder; Miss R. Fairbrother; Stamford Street Girls, per Mrs. A. Tayler; Mrs. J. H. Green and family; Mrs. Nanson; Old Meeting, Birmingham, per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas; Miss Long; Miss G. Ready and Miss B. Stainer; Miss Rosa Robins; Mrs. T. Cook; Miss Partridge; Miss Brooks; Miss Hervey; Mrs. Hanna; Miss Bitteredge; Miss Smith; Miss Martineau; Anon. (by hand); Miss Minns; Essex Church Work Party, per Mrs. Worthington; Mrs. Neffen; Mrs. Roscoe; the Newland Sewing Party, per Mrs. Roscoe.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THE Rev. T. P. Spedding writes as follows: "Arrangements are being made for a Social Gathering of Unitarians in the Yarmouth Camps on Saturday next, March 16, at our School in the Middlegate, Yarmouth, and I should be glad if those who have friends in that district would send me corrected descriptions and addresses of our men so that invitations may be issued to all who are associated with us. The communications should be sent to me at Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.2."

A MEETING will be held under the auspices of the Council of the International Christian Meeting in the Kingsway Hall, at 5 o'clock on Thursday, March 14. Lord Parmoor will take the chair, and the speakers will include the Dean of Worcester, Father Nicholas Velimirovic, of the Eastern Orthodox Church, Principal Selbie, Canon Donaldson, and the Rev. Thomas Phillips. Further particulars can be obtained from the Hon. Secretary, Miss N. E. Ellis, 77 Avenue Chambers, Vernon Place, Southampton Row, London. Admission free, by ticket only.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Belfast.—The annual meeting of the Domestic Mission to the Poor of Belfast was held on Monday evening, March 4, in the Central Hall, Rosemary Street. The Rev. H. J. Rossington, who presided, expressed regret at the absence owing to illness of Miss Charlotte Bruce, who had so long acted as secretary, and Miss Frances M'Tear, a strong and faithful supporter of the Mission. The report of the Committee read by Mr. Rossington expressed entire confidence in their Missionary (Mr. Woolley). Mr. Hugh Erskine presented the report of the Provident Fund, which showed that the money from depositors during the year 1917 was £544 14s. 1d. Mr. John M'Kenzie submitted the financial statement. There was an income of £504, and debit balance of £14 7s. 5d. The Rev. F. Woolley, in presenting his report on the Mission work, said that of their young men 40 had joined the army, and he was sorry to say that 6 had been killed and 5 wounded. Over 200 families were connected with the Mission, and he appealed for helpers. The Mission was not in competition with any church or sect. It administered charity in many forms, and many men and women had been won from sin. The Chairman moved the adoption of the reports and statement of accounts, and the Rev. G. L. Phelps, seconding the motion, said no community could neglect its Christian duties. It was the neglect of the Christian duties of brotherhood and goodwill that had brought upon us this war. All efforts at reconstruction would fall far short of the mark—no matter how great the amount of public support, they would fail, and perhaps the last state would be worse than the first—unless there was an uplifting of the ideals and religious spirit of all peoples. Resolutions were also adopted acknowledging the services of Mr. and Mrs. Woolley and the voluntary helpers, and the Committee of Management and Ladies' Committee were re-elected.

Birmingham.—The Roll of Honour of the Church of the Messiah contains 182 names of members of the Church and schools who have volunteered for service with the forces, of whom 33 have been killed in action, while 3 have died on active service.

Bolton.—The Conferences on Religion will be brought to a close at a meeting at Bank Street Chapel on Wednesday, March 20, when the Rev. J. C. Flower will preside, and the Rev. V. T. Pomeroy, of Greenfield Congregational Church, Bradford, will speak on 'The Church and the Social Ideal: What can we do?' The Rev. Matthew Scott will preach the Spring Sermons on March 24. The Annual Meeting of the Temperance Society was held on Feb. 9, when there was a good attendance. At the business meeting the resignation of the secretary, Mr. Tom Battersby, was accepted with regret, owing to his joining the colours, and a vote of thanks was accorded to him for his services during the past two years. The Committee then elected Miss Marian Rutter as secretary. Miss Taylor took the chair at the general meeting at 6.15. A resolution in favour of the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor for the duration of the war was passed, and an interesting address was delivered by Mr. James Marsh on the effect of alcohol on the body. The death is recorded in the Calendar of Mrs. Grayson, wife of Victor Grayson, ex-M.P., and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Nightingale, in her 31st year.

Bournemouth.—Further addresses on 'Religion and National Reconstruction' were given by the Rev. V. D. Davis at the Unitarian Church on February 24 and March 3, when he dealt with 'Industrial Co-operation' and 'Citizenship' respectively. The whole trend of these discourses is towards the conception of organising and building, not for war, but for peace, and their practical value is the outcome of the literal application of the ideal of human brotherhood.

Bury.—The Joint Rally in connection with the Group Mission was held in Bank Street School on February 17, when over two hundred persons were present, each church in the Group being well represented. The speakers were the Revs. H. Bodell Smith and C. Travers, and Mr. G. G. Armstrong. It is hoped that other meetings of a similar character may be arranged in the near future.

Chesterfield.—At the annual meeting of the Elder Yard Chapel congregation on February 19, the minister, the Rev. Kenneth H. Bond, proposed the founding of an Elder Yard Chapel Historical Society, and a request is made for such books, sermons, pamphlets, prints, &c., connected with the chapel and its members as their present owners can allow the promoters to have. These things will keep alive the interest of the congregation in their ancient sanctuary, and there is excellent accommodation for them. It is suggested that a suitable album should be provided for the photographs of all the men on the Roll of Honour, with brief personal records.—The recent Memorial Service in honour of Second Lieut. Edmund Barnes R.F.C., whose death occurred in January as the result of an accident while flying last October, was made unusually impressive by the presence of some sixty of the Cadets, his late comrades at the Chesterfield Grammar School. Lieut. Barnes was a brilliant classical scholar, whose recently won scholarships had carried him to Oxford University, where he would undoubtedly have done great things.

Chowbent.—At Chowbent Chapel on Sunday morning the Rev. J. J. Wright concluded a series of seven interesting and useful sermons on 'Reconstruction.' His opening query was: "Reconstruction of What?" and the general trend of the discourses has been to the effect that as, except for nature, which is unalterable, the world as it now is has been made by man, so it can only be altered by man, and any new world that is to be will have to be created by man, for men are not only creatures but creators of circumstances—not only heirs of, but alterers of, heredity. Having spoken of the relationship between the temporal and the spiritual in personal and national life, Mr. Wright pointed out that a reconstructed world can only be made by reconstructed men. Of such men there are four kinds—workers, organisers, energisers, and initiators, and only some great renewal of life, of thought, and of labour in these can make the glad new world which surely is to come.

Dundee.—A meeting of the congregation of the Free Religious Movement was held in the West Foresters' Hall on Monday evening, February 25, to bid farewell to the Rev. Henry Dawtrey at the close of his ministry in Dundee. On behalf of the members Mr. J. F. Croal presented to Mr. and Mrs. Dawtrey a case containing treasury notes, and expressed appreciation of their work and regret at their departure. Other gifts have been made recently by the Ladies Guild to Mrs. and Miss Dawtrey; and by the Young People's Guild and by the Monitor of the Sunday school to Mr. and Mrs. Dawtrey.

Leeds: Holbeck.—The young ladies of the Sunday school are raising a fund for the cleaning, decoration, &c., of the Sunday school, and as a result of their efforts at Christmas, and in February, when a Social Evening was arranged, a substantial sum has been realised. The social evening brought in £4 15s. Another gathering will take place on March 16.—The photographs of the majority of young men connected with the chapel or Sunday school who are, or have been, on active service have been framed and handed over to the Sunday school. The cost has been generously defrayed by Mr. Lambert, to whom warm thanks are tendered.

Leeds: Hunslet.—The Sunday school Annual Report records an increase of 24 new scholars during the past year. The attendance is an advance on last year, and about 40 prizes are now given as against 18 previously. One teacher (the only male teacher left) and one scholar have joined the army during the year.—The Rev. F. Coleman concluded his services in December, and the teachers of the school, to whom he has been a true friend and a helpful leader, have presented him with a clock.

Leeds: Mill Hill Chapel.—Lieut.-Col. Bullock is preaching at Mill Hill Chapel every Sunday, morning and evening, (except next Sunday evening, March 10) up to March 24, when he concludes a series of four sermons on 'Beacon Lights of Literature,' and three sermons on 'Socialism and Democracy.' It is also hoped that he will preach the annual sermons on behalf of the Sunday schools on July 7.—Two poems by the late Driver Clifford Flower, R.F.A., an old scholar, and "one of the many young soldiers of the new army who have given promise of literary distinction" (to quote The Bookman), appear in the Record for March.

Leicester.—In the Great Meeting Calendar the names of 118 members of the congregation, sons of members, and members of the Sunday school who are serving in the Forces are given, also the names of eleven who have fallen or died of wounds; wounded and discharged, three; discharged through ill-health, three.—Miss Oldershaw, who has given such constant and loyal support to the institutions connected with the Great Meeting and is the Secretary of the Women's Friendly Society, and morning Superintendent of the Infant School, has received a presentation from the Leicester Women's Liberal Association in recognition of her five years' services as Secretary. In acknowledging the gift, Miss Oldershaw said that the public work she had been able to do had been inspired by the late Miss Edith Gittins. A further recognition of Miss Oldershaw has come from the North Midland Sunday School Association, which has elected her to its Presidency.—At the Friday evening gymnasium class for boys admirable tuition is being given by Mr. John Waddington, himself a Great Meeting boy, who joined the army very early in the war, was wounded seriously, and was recently discharged.

Liverpool: Ullet Road Church.—The Rev. L. Redfern will begin his pastorate on Sunday, April 7.—On February 20 a very successful entertainment, arranged by Miss Fry and her friends, was given in the Church Hall in aid of St. Dunstan's Hostel. Mr. Preece, who is himself blind, made a speech in the interval on behalf of the National Institute for the Blind. A sum of £14 4s. 7d. was realised.

Liverpool: Hope Street Church.—Dr. Mellor is giving a series of Sunday evening addresses on 'The Mind of Christ for Modern Life,' during March. The services are intended for the cultivation, deepening, and strengthening of personal religion and Christian faith in days of difficulty, and for those who seek in religion the intensification of their deepest inward life, and desire the fellowship of the Master. The first will be delivered on Sunday evening (March 10), the subject being 'The Mind of Christ and the Inward Personal Life.' On Thursday, April 11, a United Service, under the auspices of the Liverpool District Missionary Association, will be conducted by Dr. Mellor, the sermon being preached by Principal Jacks of Manchester College, Oxford.

Liverpool District Missionary Association.—On Saturday, March 16, a Religious Conference will be held, under the auspices of the Association, at the Mill Street Domestic Mission, at 4 o'clock, conducted by the Rev. C. M. Wright. At the evening Conference the Rev. C. J. Street, Mr. Richard Robinson, and Mr. H. R. Rathbone will speak on 'Religion and the Education of the People.'

London.—The President of the London District Unitarian Society, Dr. C. Herbert Smith, has addressed a letter to ministers and secretaries of the congregations in the metropolis commending the formation of War Savings Associations, &c., and promising a supply of literature or visits by speakers to meetings that may be organised. An association, formed over a year ago at Wandsworth, has already issued about £1,200 worth of certificates.

London: Hampstead.—On Sunday, March 10, the Rev. Margaret B. Crook, B.A., will conduct the services and preach morning and evening at Rosslyn Hill Chapel.—Those who have read the article in THE INQUIRER of February 9 headed 'A Camp College,' or who have seen the notices in various papers of 'Khaki College,' as it is familiarly called, will be interested to know that the secretary, Lieut. A. J. Ottewell, who is in private life a Professor of Alberta University, has promised to speak at the meeting of the Women's Union on Tuesday, March 12, at 4 P.M. A comprehensive scheme has been worked out on the lines indicated, and the details will be fully explained by Lieut. Ottewell.

London: Islington.—The Rev. J. Vint Laughland has been elected a member of the executive committee and of the educational committee of the Pioneer Club and Fellowship at Woolwich, of which Mr. Will Crooks, M.P., is President. These appointments are the result of the lectures delivered by Mr. Laughland to his fellow-workers at the Arsenal; the way is thus opened to him to extend his useful labour in a congenial field, and the sympathies of his congregation are with him in this new work.—Through the generosity of the Rev. Alexander Gordon, copies of the Anniversary Address delivered by him at Unity Church last November, which has now been published as a booklet, have been provided for free distribution.

London: Stratford.—The Annual Congregational Gathering of the Unitarian Christian Church, West Ham Lane, was held on Saturday last. At 6 P.M., after tea, a Public Meeting was presided over by the Rev. Basil Martin, of Finchley. There was a good attendance. The speakers included the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson (London District Unitarian Society), Messrs. Alan Forbes (Hon. Secretary London District Unitarian Society), Robert M. Willes (Church Secretary), Alex. Philpot (Church Treasurer), W. J. Heal, and the Revs. J. Harry Smith, F. G. Fincham, and J. P. Rosling, minister of the church. The Reports of the church and its institutions were all encouraging. In spite of the fact that over 40 of those who previously helped in the work have joined the Forces, and 12 or more of these have made the great sacrifice, those who remain have valiantly kept the flag flying. No part of the activities have been abandoned or limited, and all the societies are doing well. The attendances are being well maintained, and there is also an increased attendance on Sunday mornings. The Sunday school is as large now as in pre-war days, having 170 scholars and 30 teachers and officers. The week evening work includes a Choir Rehearsal, Children's Hour (attendance 100), Boy Scouts (troupe of 30), Girl Guides and Brownies (company of 40), Church Guild (attendance 25), Sunday School Singing Society, and a Women's League and Sewing Society. Frequent concerts and socials have also been held. All the speakers paid high tribute to the excellent work done by Mr. Rosling, who had given untiringly and willingly of his time and powers not only to help on the work of the Church and its societies, but also in giving practical help and friendship to many families who live in the vicinity. The success of the children's meetings is regarded as being entirely due to his efforts. Mr. Rosling spoke of the great task that lay before the churches in the future and paid tribute to the personal sacrifice made by many of the congregation for the good of the cause. It was a pleasure, he added, to all of them to have Mr. and Mrs. Noel, who were truly "the parents of the present congregation," still with them. The financial statement showed that £43 was raised by a Sale of Work held in November last, and that there was a good balance in hand at the commencement of the present year. Also a sum of £20 had been raised towards the £100 required to renovate and repair the Church premises: a work which badly needs doing. During the evening a letter was read from Mr. Ronald P. Jones, expressing his regret at not being able to be present.

Manchester: Gorton.—At the annual meeting of the congregation of Brookfield Church, on Wednesday, February 27, under the presidency of Mr. J. H. Bamford, the annual report and financial statement were unanimously adopted. These show that there has been an increase in church attendance, and in income, and that there is a balance to the good of £11 15s. 3d. Out of 130 young men attached to the church and school serving with the King's forces, 14 had been killed, and 14 others wounded. The report spoke with special commendation of the excellent work of the church guild, 35 members having attended church once each Sunday, while 11 had made more than 90 attendances, and several never missed. Special reference was also made to the initiation of a Girls' Friendly Meeting under the presidency of Mrs. Thornhill, with over 40 members all over 14 years of age who meet weekly for devotions, instruction in painting, music, needlework, elocution, &c. The society has proved so successful that a junior branch with over 20 members has just been organised. The work of the Ladies Congregational Society, the choir, and other departments of church activity, were warmly commended, and officers for the ensuing year elected, with Mr. J. P. Griffiths as secretary. A vote of condolence was passed on the proposal of the minister, the Rev. A. Thornhill, with the bereaved family of the late Mr. Alfred Dixon Worthington, a trustee of both school and church and parsonage, and a lifelong member of Brookfield, whose son, Mr. J. Leigh Worthington, F.S.A., serves both school and church as treasurer. Mr. Worthington's whole life, the Report states, "was one of unflinching devotion to Brookfield. His love for church and school was proved not by his words, which were few, but by his acts of service, which were innumerable. His interest in the church and graveyard were so great and his presence there so frequent that his personality seems fused into the fabric. So, too, has his lifelong testimony to the power of religion to satisfy the deepest needs of the soul become part of that body of tradition which is our most precious heritage—a tradition to which ancestors of his for many generations bore steady witness, and which he has handed on to his descendants of the first and second generation. Our sorrow at his death is tempered by our gratitude for his long life of noble service." At the annual meeting of the friends and supporters of the school held last Saturday under the presidency of the Minister, the reports showed that, apart from the young men serving in the Army and Navy, there were over 400 scholars and teachers on the roll, and that there had been an appreciable improvement both in morning attendance and in the attendance of teachers. Reports were received from many departments showing that in spite of war conditions the institutional life of Brookfield Church was never more virile and efficient, thanks to the unstinted devotion of a fine band of workers.

Manchester: Moss Side.—The entertainment arranged by the Musical Society for Saturday, February 23, was a great success, about two hundred being present who enjoyed an excellent and varied programme. The proceeds will be given half as a contribution to the Church Funds and half for the sending of parcels to old Sunday scholars now at the front.

Norwich.—The Rev. Lawrence Redfern, who has been appointed to Ullet Road Church, Liverpool, has addressed a farewell letter to the Octagon Chapel congregation, in which he expresses the gratitude felt by himself and Mrs. Redfern for the unfailing kindness and goodwill which have been extended to them during their sojourn in Norwich. "I suppose," he says in the course of the letter, "that no minister ever closes a chapter of his life's work without feeling that the record might have been better, and I cannot hide my regret that I have not been able to accomplish more for the abiding welfare of the Octagon Chapel." The Farewell Services will be held on Sunday, March 31.

Plymouth.—Speaking on the anniversary of the death of Faustus Socinus last Sunday, the Rev. W. H. Burgess sketched the great Unitarian's career, and pointed out that it was at Brest-Litovsk—now notorious in another connection—that (in 1588) Socinus formed a union of Polish and Lithuanian Unitarians.

Rochdale.—The idea of improving the school finances in celebration of the centennial of Clover Street Chapel has been taken up enthusiastically, and the Social Union, Primary Teachers, and Band of Hope have all organised social gatherings for the purpose of raising funds. A Birthday Scheme is being planned which, it is hoped, will be in active operation during the summer months.

St. Helens.—A course of addresses on "The Religion needed To-day" has just been concluded by the minister of the Unitarian Church, the Rev. J. Horace Short. The sub-titles were 'Religion and the Individual,' 'Religion and the Churches,' 'Religion and the Market Place,' and 'Religion and the Nation.' The course attracted a number of visitors on each Sunday evening.—The Annual Congregational Meeting was held recently, Mr. A. Dodd presiding. The reports of the church and its institutions were presented and bore evidence of health and vitality. During the year, the newly formed Women's Society had sent parcels of clothing to the Belgian Hospital Fund, and was busily engaged preparing for a Sale of Work to be held in April. In December the congregation had invited the blind people of the town to tea and an entertainment which had been greatly appreciated. The Sunday school had increased by ten scholars during the year and had instituted a Primary Department. The attendances at the services showed an increase of 17 per service as compared with 1916.

 THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.*

 Secretaries of churches which publish Calendars are requested to send the Calendars regularly, and as soon as possible after publication, to the Editor.*

THE late Dr. J. Glasse of Edinburgh was President of the Liberal Christian League from 1915 to 1917, and had only just retired when his last illness overtook him. The new President of the League is the Rev. C. J. Sharp, M.A., vicar of St. Mary's, Ealing, to which church the Rev. E. W. Lummis, a letter from whom appeared in our columns last week, has been appointed curate.

THE Minister of Reconstruction has very sensibly appointed a Women's Sub-Committee of the Advisory Council to collect information and give advice on housing plans from the point of view of the housewife. The members include among others: Lady Emmott, Chairman; Mrs. E. Barton, of the Women's Co-operative Guild; Miss A. Churton, of the Rural Housing and Sanitation Association; Dr. Janet Lane Claypon, Dean of the Household and Social Science Department, King's College for Women; and Mrs. Sanderson Furniss, of the National Women's Labour League. The Women's Labour League is conducting a housing campaign, and inviting the opinions of working women on structural arrangements for convenience and comfort in a home from all parts of the country.

BIRTH.

HAWKSLEY.—On February 28, at the Field House, Crowborough, Sussex, the wife of Leonard T. Hawksley of a son.

DEATHS.

BISS.—On the 6th inst., Adeline Harriet Biss, of 11 Clifton Hill, Exeter, widow of the Rev. C. F. Biss, aged 77.

KIRKHOPE.—Reported missing, April 12, 1917, Private Walter D. Kirkhope, Royal Scots, aged 25 years, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Kirkhope, 13, Fountainhall Road, Edinburgh.

LAYCOCK.—On March 4, at 20 Trinity Road, Scarborough, Katharine, widow of the late James Laycock, formerly of Sheffield.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, March 10.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Mr. JOHN KINSMAN.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. Dr. HARGROVE, M.A.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 5.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MARGARET CROOK.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.; 6, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Miss M. FRANCIS; 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 6.30, Mr. H. VIVIAN.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
 South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. A. J. HOWARD HULME.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. Dr. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
 BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. JOSEPH P. MCCARTHY, of Waltham, U.S.A.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. ALBERT THORNHILL, B.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.15, Rev. O. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45, Lieut. Col. BULLOCK; 6.30, Rev. FRANCIS WRIGLEY.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. H. FAULKNER; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARNOLD H. LEWIS, B.D.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. HUGON S. TAYLER, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

March

10. Rev. Dr. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER of Manchester College, Oxford.
 17. Rev. HARROLD H. JOHNSON of Evesham.
 24. Rev. W. H. ROSE of the Rhyl Street Domestic Mission.
 31. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY.

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,

Editor of The Inquirer.Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation Lacrosse,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000

Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY

The ANNUAL MEETING of this Society will be held at Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2, on SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1918, at 3 P.M.

Following the usual Business Meeting a Paper will be read by the Rev. John Begg (Pioneer Preacher) on 'The Success and Failure of the Sunday School,' to be followed by discussion.
The Meeting will be open to all interested.

A. STEPHEN NOEL, Hon. Sec.

42, Woodcote Road, Wanstead, E.11.

WINIFRED HOUSE
INVALID CHILDRENS' HOME,

Wray Crescent, Tollington Park, N.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at the HOUSE on WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13th, at 4.30 p.m. Mr. W. H. TRETHOWAN, F.R.C.S.,
Surgeon to Guys Hospital, will preside. The House will be open to visitors at 4 p.m.

Friends are invited.

(Ten minutes from Finsbury Park Station).

SUSTENTATION FUND.

At the Annual General Meeting of the Contributors, held at Essex Hall, London, on Wednesday, February 27, 1918, the Rev. C. J.
Street in the chair, the Annual Report and Accounts were presented, and the following resolutions adopted:—

That the Report and Accounts as presented be adopted and printed for circulation among the Contributors and friends of the Fund.

That the retiring Managers, Messrs. E. J. Blake,
W. H. Drummond, and W. Byng Kenrick, whose term of office has expired, having been nominated, and the requisite number of voting papers having been produced, be and are elected as Managers of the Fund.

That the thanks of the Contributors be given to the Rev. C. J. Street for his services as President during the past year, and that he be elected as President for the year 1918-19.

That the thanks of the Contributors be given to
Mr. Ronald P. Jones for his services as Hon.
Treasurer during the past year, and that he be appointed to the office for the coming year.

That Mr. Harold F. Pearson be re-appointed
Hon. Secretary, and the Rev. W. H. Drummond Acting Hon. Secretary for the coming year, and that the thanks of the Contributors be given to the Rev. W. H. Drummond for his services during the past year.

That the thanks of the Contributors be given to Mr. Herbert Gimson for his services as Auditor of the Fund, and that he be appointed Auditor for the coming year.

That the thanks of the Contributors be given to the Rev. C. J. Street for his conduct in the Chair.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

Deputy Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL. | H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I. | H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive
4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free
of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges
low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Situations, Vacant and Wanted.

WANTED, companionship and occasional help in return for use of rooms, furnished or unfurnished. Beautiful country house, three children, servant kept.—Mrs. MAGUIRE, Newbridge House, Billingshurst.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL
ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class
Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s.
Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent
Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

Miscellaneous.

IRISH ROLLER TOWELS, extra strong and durable quality, 2½ yards x 17 inches, 2s. each, three for 5s. 11d., postage 5d. Send for Bargain List, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—
Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite;
12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum.
Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street,
MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

OLD FALSE TEETH WANTED for their precious metals; now worth up to £12 per set; any condition. Old watches, surplus jewellery, broken jewellery, from £2 to £5 per ounce given. We give the highest possible value; before remitting, we make offers by return. If not accepted goods returned at once post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT. Cash or offer by return. Before selling make sure of their value by writing for FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any artificial teeth.—E. LEWIS, 29 London Street, Southport,
Lancs. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER

* All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS
TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2
INCH IN COLUMN, 8s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines;
extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word.
Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s.
Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d.
Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Press,
11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and
Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company,
Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4.
Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—
Saturday March 10, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3950.
NEW SERIES, No. 1053.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	81
DEFENCE OF THE PEOPLE OF ENGLAND	82
LEGAL AND SPIRITUAL ETHICS	83
"MAISONS TOLÉRÉES"	83

CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Churches and the Ministry	84
Unitarianism and the Divinity of Jesus	85
JUBILEE OF SHEFFIELD DISTRICT SUNDAY
SCHOOL UNION	85

MEMORIAL NOTICES:—
Mr. G. S. Woolley	86
Mrs. John Barron	86
BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	86
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	86

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

THE Premier's address to the Free Church Council on Wednesday unfortunately, and inevitably, was in part very like a defence; but we need not here consider the causes or the results of this attitude. What we welcome specially in his remarks is his recall to the high moods with which Free Churchmen and the nation entered into the war. "There was not a grain of selfishness then in the national aims. It was the business of the Churches," he said—surely not theirs, alone—"to see that there was none now, that the flag was kept waving high, that it was not bedraggled in the mud and soiled with vengeance, greed and savagery. Keep the war to the end a holy war. Anything else would disgrace the memory of the heroic dead." He closed by asking his fellow Free Churchmen to do what they could to sustain the heart of the people and help to complete the task appointed. To that appeal our group of Free Churches, though in form outside his audience, will, we believe, whole-heartedly respond.

* * *

IN reply to a writer who criticises ministers severely, in The Atlantic Monthly, for comparative dumbness and inaction in the face of the war, Dr. S. M. Crothers says he agrees that ministers cannot be neutral. "We must take sides. The whole force of the Church in America should support the Government in its tremendous effort on behalf of simple justice. I think, however, that the fact that the pulpits of America did not thunder with prophetic denunciations of the crimes of the Germans may be easily accounted for. Crimes like the atrocities in Belgium and the sinking of the Lusitania were literally unspeakable. They called not for wrathful words, but for heroic and effective action. Since the course of action for our country has been determined, most ministers, like other good citizens, have been hard at work. They are performing the necessary duties of the hour. They are also, I hope, doing a good deal of hard thinking." We may cherish a like hope for ministers on this side.

* * *

REPORTS have repeatedly reached us as to the very decided preference shown by the men at the front for a type of religious teaching which leaves antiquated forms and expressions, and deals in a practical way with the needs of the modern mind. The latest illustration to hand is that afforded by the official chaplains to the Jewish soldiers. Though all belonging to orthodox Judaism, they testify to the same kind of experience as that of the Christian chaplains. May we not, must we not, hope and believe that such an impetus toward a living actuality in religious teaching will result from all this, that the new type will more and more prevail in that blessed era—after the war?

* * *

WE understand that, encouraged by the very remarkable success achieved by the School for Ministers which was held at Manchester College, Oxford, during the October term last year, a project is already on foot to hold another School next autumn. The testimony of those who attended the former is emphatic that the opportunity afforded by the School was of the utmost interest and value, and we should be surprised if some of them did not try again to be at Oxford this year, though probably a second visit will be impossible to most. Others, however, should be prompt to profit by the offer, and begin at once making their arrangements. All necessary details of the proposed scheme may be obtained by letter to the College.

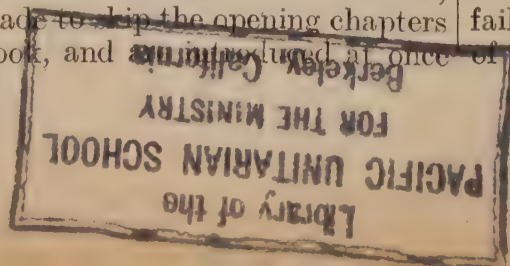

* * *

IN the first published instalment (in the March Cornhill) of 'Recollections,' by Mrs. Humphry Ward, which are to be issued in volume form in the autumn, we are made to skip the opening chapters of the book, and are introduced at once to the distinguished Oxford circle of friends whom it was her privilege to know from 1868 to 1872. She was then in her later teens and in her "Evangelical phase," she tells us—a phase which passed before this period was over. Her story begins with reminiscences of Mark Pattison and his wife, George Eliot and her husband; she holds that the novelist did not mean Pattison by "Mr. Casaubon" in 'Middlemarch.' We note that she herself admittedly founded "Grey" in 'Robert Elsmere' on Thomas Hill Green. Taine, Max Müller, Swinburne, Matthew Arnold, and others come into the record; but the fullest and most impressive picture is that of Jowett, who is contrasted with his opponents, Liddon and Pusey, and their group. We must content ourselves here with referring readers to the magazine itself for much interesting and valuable information about them.

*

BUT one passage in Mrs. Ward's account of the Oxford of half-a-century ago is of so deep significance that a few sentences must be quoted. "Is it not fair to say," she asks, after noting the practical social spirit animating Jowett, Green, Toynbee and their party, "that the 'condition of the people' question mattered little or nothing, either to Pusey or to Liddon, compared with the date of the Book of Daniel, or to the retention of the Athanasian Creed?" She points to the absence from Newman's religious controversies of the 'thirties and 'forties of any word of industrial or political reform. So with Liddon, "beautiful personality" as he was, "you will scarcely find a single letter that touches on any question of social betterment. How to safeguard the 'principle of authority,' how to uphold the traditional authorship of the Pentateuch...how to maintain the doctrine of Eternal Punishment against the protest of the religious consciousness itself"—it was to these things that the great High Churchmen of that period devoted their life. Mrs. Ward points to the failure of their efforts to stifle freedom of thought; she does not say, though she would be the first to admit, that the later High Churchmen have splendidly entered the field of social reform and quite obliterated the record of sterility of which she has reminded us.

* * *

In this connection an incident of the week comes into mind. The Bishop of London, himself of the High Church, has forbidden the Rev. Conrad Noel, a very zealous adherent of that school, and an indefatigable and inspiring social worker, to take part in a religious service at the City Temple. We know, of course, the Bishop's own sincere devotion to good works; and we might have hoped that this and his share in promoting religion among the army in France would have enabled him to take the broader line of religious fellowship which has commended itself to so many men of different sects at the front. But, unfortunately, ecclesiastical theory is still too strong for Christian unity. We wonder when the Bishop and men like him will see that, while they are constantly appealing to their country to resist the Kaiserism that claims divine authority and insists on giving its "Kultur" to nations who have their own, they are really out to promote an ecclesiastical Kaiserism, based on a similar claim and pursuing the same policy in the religious field. We regret this latest manifestation of a narrowness which must tend to alienate the popular mind still more from the Church, and, probably, from all churches.

* * *

In the Hungarian Parliament, Count Apponyi, the Minister for Religion and Education, recently submitted two Bills—one giving complete autonomy to the Roman Catholic Church in regard to education; the other giving State-aid to the Calvinist, Lutheran, and Unitarian denominations, and a considerable grant to the Jews for religious purposes. The Hungarian newspapers report that the Bishop and Consistory of the Unitarian Church has made application to the Government to make reparation for the damage done to the property of Unitarians during the Rumanian occupation of Transylvania.

* * *

"SNOWDROPS, from Hell-fire Corner"—was the inscription on a little note that came to us recently from France; the sender had already assured us that the mud and stench and general hideousness of the local front were beyond all description. Yet, somehow, that pure silvery spray of divineness found a way through the wrecked and reeking earth into the light of day. Is it possible, we wonder, that from this welter of hellish bombing of cities,—London, Paris, Venice, Naples, Stuttgart, Mannheim, Coblenz, and where not?—even through the muddy moods of debased humanity, blended of hate, and fear, and rage, and pain, and poisonous ill-will, there may yet emerge a blossom of sweet sanity, a settled will of average mankind that such practices, as futile as they are horrible, must never disgrace the world's record again?

DEFENCE OF THE PEOPLE OF ENGLAND.

—•••—

NATIONAL Service is not only fighting in the trenches, by sea and air, or work on munitions; it is also that service which maintains the religious and moral efficiency of the nation, without which the greatest military and naval victories prove vain and worthless. John Milton did not participate in the toils or dangers of the Civil War, yet he was engaged in a service not less hazardous to himself, and more beneficial to his countrymen. He was commissioned by the Council of State of the Commonwealth to reply to 'The Defence of King Charles I.,' by Salmasius, and published in 1651 the first part of his 'Defence of the People of England,' the second part, an even more impassioned and powerful vindication, appearing in 1654, when the Commonwealth was in mid career.

There were other circumstances which prove that Milton in the defence of his country by the pen was not less heroic than they who defended it with the sword. His physicians warned him that if he persisted in the work, he would lose the sight of his remaining eye. The exigencies of his country, however, and of an "anxious and listening Europe," were such that he gave his sight, but exalted his country.

What an audience he addressed too—the whole educated world of his day! And what a theme! It was a time when according to the pretty fancy of Salmasius, kings' heads were tossed like balls, and bowls was played with crowns—a time so like to ours! "The subject of which I speak," writes Milton, "was never surpassed in any age in dignity or in interest." He set out "to defend the rights of the English nation, and consequently of liberty itself"; "the dearest interests, not merely of one people, but of the whole human race, against the enemies of human liberty." He proclaimed that dread deed against an enemy of human kind, whose "life was dangerous to religion, and the certain ruin of liberty," as one of the most glorious actions ever performed by a people. He hurled himself at tyrants, not at kings, though he knew well also where the true King was sitting.

If we compare the Revolution in Russia at this hour with that of these Commonwealth times, we find it to be of an altogether different order. During that mighty struggle in England, as Milton declares, no anarchy, no licentiousness was seen. All the actions of the leaders of the people were governed by lofty principles, and inspired by religion. All great matters of State were referred to God. Cromwell chose only such men to serve him "as had the fear of God before them, as made some conscience of what they did." His Ironsides were tested through and through by the sternest religious and ethical demands. "We have not allowed ourselves," he wrote, "the choice of one person in whom we had not this hope, that there was in him faith in Jesus Christ, and love to all His people and saints."

We live in great times to-day, but they are not so great as were those. They lack the contagion of that religious inspiration which made the Ironsides irresistible. Even the noble ethical utterances of President Wilson, restrained and dignified and chaste, read cold in the warm pulsing glow of the impassioned State papers of Milton and of Cromwell. "Rather than want the Settlement of the Kingdom's peace, and their own and their fellow-subjects' liberty—they would lose all," runs an Army Manifesto, dated 1647, in regard to the temper of the men after five years of civil war.

In undertaking his Defence, Milton informs us at the outset that he has recourse to the divine assistance. Religion is the life-breath of his writings. Not religion in any merely ecclesiastical sense—no one has said harder things of bishops than he—but that religion which, unless it be the soul of a nation, that nation perishes. And he warns his countrymen in one of his loftiest passages:—

"When you laboured under more sorts of oppression than one, you betook yourselves to God for refuge, and He was graciously pleased to hear your most earnest prayer and desires. He has gloriously delivered you, the first of nations, from the two greatest mischiefs of this life, and most pernicious to virtue, tyranny and superstition; He has endued you with greatness of mind to be the first of mankind.... You ought to do nothing that is mean and little, not so much to think of, much less to do, anything but what is great and sublime. Which, to attain to, this is your only way: as you have subdued your enemies in the field, so, to make appear, that unarmed, and in the highest peace and tranquillity, you of all mankind are best able to subdue ambition, avarice, the love of riches—to shew as great justice, temperance, and moderation in the maintaining of your liberty as you have shewn courage in freeing yourselves from slavery."

Let us adopt this, and the last few pages of the second Defence, as our Charter for the great days of social reconstruction which are before us, and with "cheerful godliness" take upon ourselves the "lowliest duties" in the temper and in the spirit of John Milton. England has need of us. For, as Milton himself had to acknowledge even at the most confident period of the Commonwealth: "I confess there are but few, and those men of great wisdom and courage, that are either desirous of liberty, or capable of using it."

H. H. JOHNSON.

LEGAL AND SPIRITUAL ETHICS.

It is characteristic of the gospel of Jesus that a great measure of responsibility and initiative is expected of the individual disciple. It was clearly the aim of Jesus to stir into activity the moral and spiritual judgment of his hearers, and not to provide them with a ready made system of precepts to be put into action mechanically. Formal Christianity has regarded this as a defect to be made good, with the result that it has evolved a detailed scheme of salvation and a system of ethics which is supposed to be rigid, unalterable and universal. This, however, has been the real misfortune from which Christendom has never yet recovered. Christians have been taught to look upon the Bible, especially the New Testament, as a literal and exact authority on all matters of faith and conduct. Any reputed utterance of Jesus, in whatever context, has been invested with universal and absolute authority for all time and under all circumstances. The fact that Jesus constantly appealed not to external and literal authorities, but to the mind, heart and conscience of the individual, has never yet been adequately recognised, nor treated as one of the central elements in the gospel. It is probably the way of least resistance to go to the world with a complete and imposing body of doctrines and precepts, and say: Believe these, do these—or be damned. It is certainly a more delicate and difficult task to undertake to stir up moral initiative and to stimulate the capacity for spiritual judgment and imagination. Yet it is certain that only by this method can the seeds of spiritual revolution and growth be sown.

Here is a principle of the utmost importance, which strikes at the roots of human nature. There is an element of intellectual and moral lethargy in all of us, which causes us to ask that our mental and spiritual food should be given to us already half digested. In some moods we are apt to be impatient of the sting of suggestions which cause a ferment in heart and conscience. We ask why life should present so many dark problems: why God could not have made everything quite clear and obvious. It is to men and women in that mood that the Roman Catholic Church appeals with such success. God has made everything clear, it says: only surrender your intellect, submerge your private conscience and personal judgment, and you shall be taught the whole revelation of the Divine will and purpose as it affects you.

The same principle is discernible in the development of art, in its various forms. There are periods when art aims at self-expression without making any demand upon the imagination. But if the phrase may be used without fear of misunderstanding, Jesus was a religious artist, who aimed at stimulating active and constructive imagination: not at providing a finished and self-contained work of art. Every form of Christianity—or religion—therefore, which aims at objective finality, offers a completed scheme of salvation, a rigid system of supposedly universal and absolute moral rules, has departed from the method and intention of Jesus. His methods demands of us moral and spiritual alertness, adaptability, imagination. The method of ecclesiastical Christianity demands acquiescence and obedience.

The whole matter is illustrated in the insistence of Jesus on the Golden Rule. He does not attempt to draw up a complete list of rules concerning our behaviour to our fellows—it was left to casuistry to tread this cul-de-sac. He flings the responsibility upon the awakened, or awakening, conscience of the disciple. "You must exercise your imagination," he says in effect. There is no hard and fast rule: no Baedeker's guide to the moral life. Strive to enter by a penetrating sympathy and an intelligent understanding into the whole situation you are confronted with, and act accordingly.

The demand that Jesus makes is much more exacting than that made by a merely legalistic religion. If we establish specific moral laws regarding what we may or may not do in relation to our neighbour, the result is that moral obligation is given definite limits. "How often shall I forgive the sinner?" asks the legalist: and some sort of an arrangement is reached, and made into part of a legal code. However numerous the legalised forgivenesses may be, the result of this arithmetical morality must be to fix a boundary. To Jesus such a question reveals a failure to apprehend the elements of moral and spiritual duty. It is immeasurable. There is no place either for hedonistic calculus, or arithmetical ratio. Treat the wrongdoer always and consistently as you would wish to be treated if you were in precisely his circumstances, hemmed in by his environment, constrained by his heredity, and were being judged by another: which means, treat him in the best way you can devise to help him to escape from his sin. What that way is you must find out to the best of your ability, in the light of a profound sympathy and under teaching of such experience as you have gained. But to treat him without sympathy, without imaginatively entering into his situation, by some fragment of ecclesiastical or legal ethics, is to be guilty of sin. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

As we try to prepare ourselves to face the vast and unknown problems of the future it is the method and spirit of Jesus that we must adopt, and not that of legalism and convention. Brotherhood will not be realised by establishing specific duties to be fulfilled, and appointing specific penalties for defection. It can only be realised from within when we accept the responsibilities of entering imaginatively into the circumstances, point of view, difficulties and temptations of others. It is easy to judge from the security of a moral immunity which has often been thrust upon us, rather than painfully achieved by us: but it is priggish, futile and hypocritical. In religion and morality we want less judging—whether for praise or blame—and more practice of the golden rule. To do unto him as you would be done by is to aim at restoring the defaulter to the rights and privileges, responsibilities and duties of human life and citizenship: and this will almost surely involve strenuous work in the changing of bad environments, and the counteracting of hereditary tendencies which, if left unchecked, will continue to propagate evil and misery in spite of theories or moral duty and schemes of salvation.

J. CYRIL FLOWER.

"MAISONS TOLÉRÉES."

A PROTEST.

ON Wednesday, March 13, at the monthly meeting of the Committee, it was unanimously resolved, on the motion of Dr. Carpenter, president, seconded by Mrs. R. Bartram, that—"This meeting of the Executive Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association learns with shame and indignation that the British military authorities in France have permitted, or connived at, the opening of tolerated brothels for the use of British troops in a number of French towns, and especially calls attention to the state of affairs in Cayeux-sur-mer, Somme, which has led to protests from townspeople there.

"We call upon the Government and the military authorities to put all tolerated houses of debauchery out of bounds for British troops and to do their utmost to prevent the establishment of such places in or near British camps; and that a copy of the Resolution be sent to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Prime Minister and Lord Derby."

THE Dominion of Canada is to be free from the manufacture of intoxicating liquor, except for mechanical and medicinal purposes, from April 1; and alcoholic drink will be prohibited in Quebec—in line with all the other provinces—from May, 1919.

A PIONEER of the Women's Movement has just passed away in the person of Mrs. Wolstenholme-Elmy at the age of 84. Her father was a Wesleyan minister, and her mother the daughter of a Lancashire cotton spinner. Before her marriage, Mrs. Elmy was a schoolmistress, and did much in that connection to promote educational reforms; her chief aim in life, however, was to work for the advancement of women, and when she gave up teaching in 1872 and came up to London, she was associated with Lydia Becker and Josephine Butler in those strenuous efforts which resulted in the passing of the Married Women's Property Act and the repeal of the C.D. Acts. It must have been a matter of supreme satisfaction to so vigorous a suffragist to know, at the close of her long life, that the vote had been granted to women. Dr. Joseph Wolstenholme, the eminent mathematician of Christ's College, Cambridge, was Mrs. Elmy's brother.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[We submit a further selection from the letters which still flow in upon this subject, and regret that several of much importance are too long for insertion this week. Again we appeal for brevity which present conditions renders imperative.—EDITOR of INQUIRER.]

THE CHURCHES AND THE MINISTRY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—In the discussion which you have invited concerning our churches and colleges I think it would be useful if we would try to clear our minds as to what it is that we really need from them, which is not always the same thing as that which we demand. Certain things we do not really need and ought not to ask. We do not need a mere membership in a successful undertaking from whose prosperity we may draw dividends of self-satisfaction. We do not need a flag or a uniform whose chief purpose is to differentiate us from our fellow-men. We do not need an armoury of critical weapons wherewith to prove ourselves right and others wrong. We do not even need detailed guidance in the practical moral questions of daily life. Generally speaking we know pretty well what we ought to do, but we often need the strength to do it, and here we come close to the something which I think most of us really do need, and the ability to supply which is the chief justification of the existence of a Church. One supreme need which the churches might supply is the conviction of the reality of what we term spiritual things. We need above all things to be convinced of God, of immortality, of the supreme worth of love and goodness. Now this is not merely or principally an intellectual problem. It is one also of feeling, of emotion, and this is an aspect of the matter that has been too much overlooked in our group of churches. This is the great demand which tired and weary men make of the Churches. They will go where that demand is best satisfied, where they will be made to feel God and not merely to think covertly about Him, where they will gain assurance as to meeting their lost again, where they will feel inspired and warmed by love and not merely told how good it is.

Now, these are no mere intellectual processes. Right thinking alone will never bring us to these supreme realities. It can clear the way for them, remove obstacles, answer intellectual doubts, show us that there is no reason why we should not believe, nay, every reason why we should, but it cannot alone kindle the fire whose warmth and light make belief a sustaining reality. And there is no getting away from the fact that this fire is often kindled among men whose thinking, judged from our standard, leaves much to be desired.

I fear this divine fire burns rather low in our churches. The great problem for church and college alike is how to fan it into a fuller life. It is a personal matter largely:—

While thus he spake, his eye, dwelling on mine,
Drew me, with power upon me, till I grew
One with him, to believe as he believed.

There are many who have believed in the past who do believe to-day, in this vital way, both within and outside the pale of the Church or Churches. These men are the true owners of inspiration, the depositories of the sacred fire; and if a minister of religion to-day has not the same constraining power in himself, he can at least lead his people to the feet of those who have.

We need also a philosophy, expressed as simply as possible, which shall convince us that neither experience in general nor any form of science in particular has any right or power to interdict religious feeling; which shall show us God at work in His universe and leave our hearts free to turn to Him, and by teaching us to think sanely preserve us from emotional excess. The Churches which can offer to the people these two things—the inspiration of believing men, and the larger wisdom of thinking men—are the Churches that will retain their hold and best serve the coming time. Liberty alone will not be sufficient, for it may stand for mere emptiness; correct dogma alone will not suffice, for that may leave us cold and uncomfortable; good works alone will not suffice, for men are becoming more and more prone to associate themselves for such purposes outside the limits of church organisations. We have, I fear, dwelt too much on those three important, yet subordinate, points, with the consequence that men and women eager to find and feel God, and so satisfy their deepest need, pass us by as a people in whom something vital is lacking, excellent as we may be in one way and so far as we go.—Yours, &c., JOHN DENDY.

Manchester.

March 5, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—You broad-mindedly expressed the advisability of knowing what the man in the pew, and the man outside all pews, thinks about such matters, and I am tempted to write you as one who has occupied both these positions. Probably no one doubts that the man outside the pews is out through one of these two reasons: either that he has no desire for anything beyond a life of selfish pleasure; or, that he holds the opinion common to his class, that the churches are occupied only by people who are either poor sycophants or truly religious but misguided persons who are so comfortably circumstanced as to be oblivious to the need for Christ's work in this hard, crushing world. They see no advantage to be gained from allegiance to such bodies of worshippers. I am not citing this erroneous opinion as being directed particularly against the Unitarian body. When I occupied the position of outsider they never crossed my mind, and nothing in the ordinary propaganda of Unitarianism was responsible for drawing my attention to what I soon found to be a very possible channel for what I urgently sought: a rational theology combined with a twentieth-century religious life, as Dr. Mellor puts it, "with its centralisation in Jesus, its personality, its social and democratic enthusiasms."

As a pew occupant, I hold the opinion that the colleges are right, the preachers are right, and the congregations are sound though small, but that two points are continually neglected: the intimate association of social service and active fellowship with church membership, and the use of modern methods of invitation and attraction to our services. It makes one's heart bleed to see the regular outpouring of the best of brain and soul of our ministers to almost empty benches. Certainly the ministers are right! It is not the people who say that we do not seek a crowd, but a few devoted adherents, who are leading us astray. The "spread" is there; it is the "get people" idea which is being ignored.

As regards candidates for the ministry, has it ever occurred to any one that possibly the present workings of the Unitarian community do not attract men "in their youth," as is usually desired? Perhaps some who have just left their youth behind may have had experiences (like the earliest leaders of the Church) which show them that the faith has the possibilities which they could not see in their youth. Men in many of the professions have not felt the ability, desire, or opportunity of commencing their best career in their youth. Possibly many of those accomplishments under the title "something of everything" can be, and are, attained when a man postpones the training which, as one of your correspondents says, "unfits him for other ways in which he can make a decent living." It is possible for such adult students to be already equipped with "the culture of the scholar, and alive to life, to art," and also the not less important faculty of business acumen and a first-hand knowledge of men which is always denied a man in minister's garb.

The Churches' first necessity is a Christly enthusiasm for the joys of social communion, fellowship, and progress, and in this the children should have a very full part; they should make it widely known that there really is a Church for those "who hunger and thirst for justice"; and they must take up the second necessity, the question of the inception of interest. The elemental principle in advertising is: "If you have the goods, you can't sell them without advertising. If you advertise largely and have not the goods or the quality, then you waste your advertising." This axiom will be found to be the key to every phase of the problem of dearth in church membership. "Compel them to come in." The Unitarians are as backward in their study of this question of "compelling" as they are advanced in their religious thought.—Yours, &c.,

A. J. HOWARD HULME.

12 Lower Downs,
Wimbledon, S.W.19.
March 4, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—No denomination has had greater men at the head of its colleges than ours, and (not to speak of those who are happily still spared to us) both Dr. Martineau's 'Life' and John James Tayler's 'Letters' reveal a constant solicitude for the spiritual welfare of the churches which were to be served by students preparing for the ministry. There is no need to argue this point, and it would be a thousand pities if the discussion of so fateful a subject were to become a mere tussle of recrimination between colleges and churches. We may not think that Dr. Rattray's particular suggestions advance the question much towards a solution, but we owe him our thanks for drawing attention to it. The remedy for the trouble must surely lie deeper than any rearrangement of a college curriculum. The trouble of decaying churches to-day, as always in the past, is that they cannot discern the signs of the time and address themselves to its need. The history of our group of churches speaks eloquently of the increased strength that has come to us at any particular period when we discovered a message relevant to that period and seized the opportunity of delivering it. One such opportunity arose in the latter part of the eighteenth century, when the clear need of the time was for a courageous breach with a sterile form of theology. Men of such diverse gifts as the former clergyman Lindsey, and the wandering missionary Richard Wright were able, in that pre-Channing period, to arouse an immense enthusiasm by the mere fact that they were "preaching to the times."

Since then there have been many "deluges," but the moral holds good to-day. We are faced with an unspeakably impressive opportunity. There is one clear note that runs through all the religious and all the denominational activities of our time. It is a note which our own traditions and situation eminently fit us to sound forth. It is the note of synthesis, mutual comprehension, the re-interpretation of apparent antagonisms in a higher view. Never was there such a strenuous effort to penetrate down through surface differences to an essential and permeating unity of meaning. Every day almost sees the formation of some new inter-denominational fellowship, union, or alliance. Men are no longer content to accept as permanent the dividing channels into which a few generations ago it was imagined that the religious tendencies of the age must flow, and flow apart. So far has this movement gone that the powerful writer whose death all the Churches have recently mourned, Dr. James Denney, wrote a book with the practical object of abolishing all such tests as those of the Westminster Assembly and of Nicæa ("very few people can tell what Athanasius and the Nicene bishops meant," he says), and proposing a statement of only one simple sentence, in religious rather than theological language. Dr. Forsyth, following in the same direction, wishes to have no "creed" at all for the individual person but only a general statement for the Church at large, and that in one clause. In his recent Oxford address he says: "Let us get rid of the infallible Bible as a millstone about our neck," and he goes on to other remarkable propositions whose radical character would astonish some of our people who do not realise how fast the world moves.

Our churches have been accustomed to imagine that they "stood" for non-subscription. If they did their occupation is well-nigh gone. In preaching that position merely as a negative policy we are pushing an open door, so far as the most intelligent members of the Orthodox Churches are concerned, so that for these we have no advantage to offer which they cannot find in their own communions. But why should we not avail ourselves of the victory which our churches have so largely helped to win? Non-subscription as a mere negative policy of disowning credal statements now means nothing significant; but as a positive platform for synthesising the sundered elements of Christian faith it might mean everything. No community has such favouring circumstances as our own, none has fewer drawbacks in its past history, for drawing together into one splendid new devotion the two tendencies which have mainly divided the field of English religion between them—on the one hand the Evangelical or Free, on the other hand the Sacramental or Catholic. To put our hand to this holy work of healing and reconstruction is to put ourselves into the right line of the most powerful movement of our age.

What is still more important, it is the way by which we may find a stimulus for that revival of earnest religion among ourselves upon which everything really turns. Whatever stimulus was embodied, in the past, in the note of "progress," or of "freedom," or of "modernism," is long ago exhausted. The call of the present age is one that bids the world use its new-won enlightenment to dig down to the perennial sources of faith and courageous living, and to discover the real identity of sources hitherto assumed to have no connection one with another. No doubt it will require a tremendous disturbance of spiritual lethargy even to face the problem. But face it we must or sleep away into coma and death. Religion is as young as ever. And what is there that can so re-vivify both college and Church as "one common wave of thought and joy, lifting mankind again"? Some of the best efforts of our past have been in this direction. I have in my possession a cherished copy of a circular printed in 1853 and signed by John Kenrick, Charles Wellbeloved, William Turner, John Owen, J. H. Ryland, E. Higginson, Charles Wicksteed, J. K. Montgomery, and H. V. Palmer, urging upon our churches certain usages "which would place us in a more favourable relation to other Christian communities." "All these died in faith not having received the promise." Since then, the Free Christian Union, the Leicester Conference, Dr. Martineau's Scheme! What inertia, what failure of response! But now there seems to be promise of a change. The new movement has already maintained its magazine for over two years. A few weeks ago a Conference was held at Birmingham which, for the boldness of its aim and the number and enthusiasm of people from every quarter of the theological compass, was surely the most remarkable gathering that has taken place since the Great Ejection. Is it too much to plead that those (and they are many) in our churches whose hearts are with the movement, should put aside all suspicious aloofness, and, above all, the contemptuous attitude which regards every such enthusiasm as a young man's vagary? Alas! youth is no longer the delightful accusation that can be flung at those responsible for the movement. Some of them have already lived past middle life through years of disappointment and disillusionment as one by one the chances of a revived Church-life have been allowed to slip away. Their one hope is now that this present effort may not fail; and that hope has glowed afresh at the sight of Dr. Mellor bearing a brilliant lance into the field.—Yours, &c.,

W. WHITAKER.

Withington, Manchester.
February 2, 1918.

UNITARIANISM AND THE DIVINITY OF JESUS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Dr. Drummond's letter puzzled me very much; for upon the point of fact which he asserts I should, under any circumstances, accept his word as authoritative; and his quotation from Dr. W. H. Drummond, dated 1830, would also by itself prove his contention. It is clear that there have been, and presumptively there still are, representative Unitarians who believe (in some sense) that God is manifest in humanity, and that His capital manifestation was in one man.

But this conclusion, when interpreted by the supporting citation, raises two distinct difficulties. The first is that Dr. W. H. Drummond's words seem, in the first two clauses, to obliterate the difference between Unitarians and Trinitarians. For if "the Spirit of God," whom no Unitarian (I assume) would shrink from calling "the Father," "was in Christ," and Christ is therefore "properly entitled to the name of Divine," it appears to follow perforce that the Spirit of God, which makes Divine, is God; and that God the Holy Spirit proceeds from God the Father into one who called himself "the Son"; and further, since it is not to be thought of that the Spirit of God should, in any personality, be lost like a river in a subterranean cave, that the Holy Spirit also proceeds from the Son; and this Son, namely Christ, is Divine, and what is Divine except Deity?

The second difficulty is historical. In August, 1807, Coleridge gave De Quincey to understand that he was "profoundly ashamed" of his earlier Unitarianism; and in 'Aids to Reflexion,' after giving a curious philological reason for the view that of all people Unitarians have the least right to call themselves Unitarians, he suggests the term "psilanthropists," derived from the Greek for "a mere man," as their proper designation. The belief that Jesus was a mere man is associated with Theodore Parker; and I well remember a meeting at Essex Hall when the words of my dear friend and father J. C. Street, "we are all Parkerians now," were received with warm applause and no voice of dissent.

A solution of these difficulties is suggested by a later phrase of Dr. W. H. Drummond, "our Lord Jesus Christ, whom He made His Word, or the ambassador and interpreter of His divine will to the children of men." The doctrine of the Fourth Gospel, and of Trinitarian Christendom, is not that God in time conferred upon a man the function of being His Word, but that the eternal and divine Logos "became flesh" in Jesus Christ. Here is a real difference, which throws back an energetic light on the use of the word "manifestation" in Dr. James Drummond's letter, as well as in his father's writing. When I spoke of God's manifestation I meant an event, namely, that God manifests Himself, so that those to whom He becomes manifest see God: see God in Jesus Christ, as they see Him, perhaps, in the starry heaven or the moral law. But this is not, it would seem, what representative Unitarians mean by the word. I cannot be quite sure of their meaning. Is it something conceived as having substantial existence apart from God, as, for instance, some of the Gnostics conceived their æons? Or is it an event, but not that God Himself becomes manifest? Whatever it be, it was not in this technical sense of Unitarian theology that I used the word. I meant that the Broad Churchman who in Jesus Christ sees very God of very God is not a Unitarian. ¶

I could wish that Dr. James Drummond had not written his last clause, beginning "Those who are fond of exalting themselves." I trust it is not relevant to this discussion.—Yours, &c.,

E. W. LUMMIS.

JUBILEE OF SHEFFIELD DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

THE Sheffield and District Unitarian and Free Christian Sunday School Union celebrated its Jubilee on Thursday, 7th inst. at a well-attended meeting of present and past teachers, held at Channing Hall, Sheffield. Mr. H. E. Fishburn, President, occupied the chair. Addresses were given by Mr. J. B. Gardner (the original Secretary of the Union), the Rev. J. Morley Mills (Sunday School Association), the Rev. C. J. Street (who gave an historical sketch of the Union), the Rev. C. Peach (Manchester District Sunday School Association), and Mr. Horace Smith (who has served as Secretary longer than any other person, and who gave further historical particulars). Mr. J. Foster (Rotherham) was elected President.

The Union was formed on October 22, 1867, at a meeting of the Sheffield (Upper Chapel and Uppertorpe), Stannington, and Rotherham teachers. Distance from kindred workers in the West Riding and North Midland districts, and unwillingness on the part of the local Sunday School Union to receive Unitarian teachers as brethren, contributed towards making our little group of Sunday school workers draw together in a Union of their own. The Rev. J. Lettis Short was the first president. Two members of the first committee, Mr. J. B. Gardner and Mr. Alfred Vickers, still survive. Regular meetings for conference have been held for fifty years, the first taking place on January 28, 1868, at Uppertorpe. The Union now consists of the original four schools along with those of Sheffield (Attercliffe), Barnsley, Mexborough, Bolton-on-Deane, and Doncaster.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

MR. G. S. WOOLLEY.

MANY past students of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, as well as Manchester friends generally, will share our regret at the death, which occurred on March 12, at Fairhill, Kersal, of Mr. George Stephen Woolley. He was in his 82nd year, and his record of loyal service to the Unitarian cause goes back to the middle of last century. He cordially supported the church at Strangeways, under the ministry of the Rev. Brooke Herford and his successors, and its decline and ultimate extinction were much regretted by him. His firm, Messrs. James Woolley & Sons, which was of high repute in the city, kindly gave its services as dispensing chemists to the students of the College when required. Mr. Woolley's never failing courtesy rendered him an attractive personality alike in business and private life.

MRS. JOHN BARRON.

THE friends of the Rev. J. Barron will be sorry to learn of the sudden death of Mrs. Barron, on Wednesday, March 6. Her body was found on the sands near the Manse, at Ballyobegan, Barony of Lower Ards, co. Down, about mid-day on the date mentioned. Mrs. Barron, over a year ago, passed through a very critical illness, which involved treatment in a nursing-home under the supervision of a specialist. Her health very much improved, but she never quite recovered. In the districts in the North and South of England, as well as in Ireland, where she was known, the good work she did made a deep and lasting impression. The funeral took place on Saturday, March 9, at the Meeting House, Ballyhemlin. The Rev. W. H. Townley Tilson, M.A., and the Rev. J. J. Magill, B.A., officiated. The Rev. R. Maxwell King was organist. There was a large attendance of local clergy and friends of various denominations.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

162ND LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,136	14	9
X. (38th)	1	0	0
Miss R. Evers (6th)	3	0	0
Miss Wren, Melbourne (5th)	2	0	0
The Rev. and Mrs. T. Bowen Evans (28th)	1	0	0
The Millers of Kent, per Mr. C. W. Chitty	42	8	8
Mrs. Rooke (4th)	1	0	0
Miss E. Thirkell Cox (4th)	0	5	0
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty (45th)	4	0	0
Mr. F. Maddison (35th)	0	10	0
Mr. and Miss Hirst (27th)	2	2	0
Dr. Vanderzypen of the Belgian Army Medical Service	0	15	0
	£20,194	15	5

Parcels have been received from: Chapel Lane Chapel, Bradford Women's League (per Mrs. Paxton); Finchley Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Blake Odgers); Miss Ridge and Miss Vallance; Mrs. Perrot; Mrs. Titterton; The Girls of Shrewsbury High School; Miss Whitfield; Mrs. H. Woodall; Mill Hill Sewing League, Leeds (per Mrs. P. R. Jackson); Stockport Branch of the Women's League (per Miss New); Mrs. Wheatcroft.

Note.—Grey knitting wool, 6s. a lb. (or for quantities over 5 lbs., 5s. 6d.), to be sold for the benefit of the Fund.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Aberdare.—The Annual Business Meeting of Highland Place Unitarian Church, Aberdare, was held last week, Mr. F. W. Hall presiding. The treasurer of the church, Mr. E. Jones, presented the balance sheet for the year, which showed a slight deficit. It was announced that a gift of £100 had been received from Mrs. Brooks, New Jersey, America, to be invested on behalf of the church. Mrs. Brooks, previous to her recent marriage, was the widow of Mr. John Lewis, and both Mr. Lewis and his wife, before they emigrated to America many years ago, were members of the church.

Bolton.—The Annual Meeting of the congregation of Unity Church was held on Wednesday, March 6, 1918, Mrs. Frank Taylor in the chair. The Secretary, Mr. Charles Brady, presented the report of the Committee, which stated that more than 120 men from the Church have served or are serving in His Majesty's Forces. Three of them have, during the year, laid down their lives for their country, a total of thirteen who have made the supreme sacrifice. The Treasurer presented his report, the finances, considering the abnormal times through which we are passing, being in a healthy state. After the conclusion of the business a resolution protesting against the use of food-stuffs for the manufacture of intoxicating drink as a beverage was unanimously passed.

Colne.—The Annual Meeting of members of the Unitarian Church was held on March 9. Councillor J. W. Hird presided, and there was a good attendance. The secretary, Mr. Fred. Lowcock, gave an encouraging report which showed an increased attendance at the morning and evening services. Financially, the church is in a healthy condition, and the special efforts during the year proved very successful. The Secretary and Treasurer paid tribute to the devoted work of the ladies. The newly formed Literary Society and the Ladies' League had had most encouraging sessions. Not quite so satisfactory was the report on Sunday school work; but the attempt to organise the school has already given promise of a better report next year. The minister, the Rev. J. Pipkin, gave an address in which he expressed his appreciation of the loyal service of the officers, and of the spirit of unity and co-operation manifest throughout all the institutions of the church.

Leytonstone.—Under the auspices of the Leytonstone Free Church a series of four Sunday evening musical services have been held at the Whipps Cross Convalescent Hospital for wounded soldiers. These services have proved exceptionally successful owing to the high musical character which has been maintained throughout. Mr. Frank Bonner, A.R.A.M. used his influence among the professors and students of the Metropolitan Academy of Music, of which he is the Director, and their ready response, irrespective of denominational attachments, to an appeal to help cheer the "Tommies" resulted in the services being supported by quite a large number of singers and instrumentalists. The elder members of the Sunday school and guild, too, very gladly joined in the effort to maintain a choir to lead the hymns, which were chosen at each service by the "Tommies" themselves. Last Sunday the concluding service of the first series was conducted by Miss Maud Burt, who with Mr. Frank Bonner, and Miss Dorice Peterken, undertook the arrangements of these services. Though the reverent tone was maintained throughout, the wounded soldiers, many of whom were in bath-chairs and heavily swathed in bandages, could not refrain from a free use of their crutches to applaud the musical items in this concert service. Among the artistes who contributed on this occasion were Miss Winifred Kennard, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (soprano), who the previous day had won the gold medal at the South London Musical Festival; Miss Beatrice Richmond (contralto), who gained a similar honour at the same festival last year; Miss Muriel Thomson (violinist), a gold medallist of the M. A. M.; Mrs. Russell Bonner (cellist and pianist), and Mrs. Frank Bonner, who acted as accompanist for the hymn singing and the orchestral accompaniments. The Rev. Bertram Lister, gave a short and cheery address on the practical religion of the Good Samaritan, which he commended to all who wished to make the world better and happier. Mr. Lister also contributed to the programme a recitation which was evidently much appreciated. The services will probably be resumed next month.

London Sunday School Society.—The Annual Meeting will be held at Essex Hall to-day, March 16, at 3 P.M. Following the usual business meeting a paper will be read by the Rev. John Begg (Pioneer preacher) on 'The Success and Failure of the Sunday School.'

Manchester District Association.—The twenty-seventh Annual Report of the Association, which holds its Annual Meeting in Manchester to-day (March 16), is necessarily a "war-time" report, and emphasises the difficult problems with which it has to deal, and the increasingly hard conditions which the churches have to endure. It takes note, however, of the wonderful amount of work which the few remaining men in the congregations have been able to do, and the splendid way in which the women have risen to the occasion. It is, undoubtedly, in consequence of this increasing earnestness and intensified effort that, speaking generally, the churches of the Association are better circumstanced than when the previous Report was issued. The Association has lost the following ministers owing to resignations: the Rev. A. H. Lewis, who has gone to Birmingham; the Rev. C. Smith, removed to Nelson; the Rev. W. G. Price, who is serving in the R.A.M.C.; and the Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, who holds a teaching appointment in the district. The Revs. E. I. Fripp (Altrincham), G. Randall Jones (Pendleton), J. Wain (Hale), C. H. Horsley (Moss Side), and M. R. Scott (Sale) have come into the Association during the past year, and a cordial welcome is extended to them. The Inter-Association Mission Scheme, organised by the Manchester District Association, the East Cheshire Christian Union, and the North and East Lancashire Mission, as a result of deliberations after receiving the report of the Manchester delegate to a meeting with the British and Foreign Unitarian Association last Whit-week, has been fruitful of good results. In the course of a few conferences a programme of Group Rallies was drawn up, each Rally to take place on a Saturday afternoon, when a service would be conducted, with sermon, and, after tea, an evening meeting would be held with addresses on subjects bearing on 'The Reconstruction of the Religious Life of our Churches.' On the Sunday following there should be special services in the churches of the Group conducted by ministers of a similar group in one of the neighbouring Unions. The British and Foreign Unitarian Association having received the scheme favourably, a grant was made by that body to cover the estimated cost of travelling and printing, and the first Rally was held in December, viz., Monton, Pendleton, and Swinton. Ministers and lay speakers from Tormorden, Rochdale, and Heywood were the visitors, and successful meetings and services were held. Attempts were made to include another Rally in the winter's programme, but there were many difficulties in the way, and the idea had to be abandoned. The Group which contains most of the South Manchester churches is expecting to complete arrangements soon for an exchange with a North and East Lancashire Group, and it is hoped that other developments of the scheme will be carried out later on.

Mansfield.—The services at the Old Meeting House were conducted on February 3 by the Rev. H. S. Perris, whose addresses, in view of his recent visit to America, awakened much interest, and were reported in the local press. During the present month the pulpit will be occupied by students from Manchester College, Oxford. A garden sale of work is being planned for June 26, which will be held, by kind permission of Miss Vallance, at The Ridge. This month (on the 19th, 20th, and 21st) a Mothercraft Exhibition will be held in the Albert Street Schools.—At the recent distribution of prizes to the Sunday scholars Mr. Harrop White took the chair, and the Mayoress (Mrs. W. F. Wharmby) presented the prizes and certificates.

Nelson.—The Annual Sale of Work was held at the Unitarian Church on Saturday last and proved a record event both in attendance and financially. The Sale was opened by Mr. L. H. Clegg of Bury, Mr. J. T. Bibby of Burnley being chairman. Many friends from neighbouring churches were present and also the following ministers: the Revs. A. W. Fox (Tadmorden), T. Munn (Padiham), F. Coleman (Burnley), J. Pipkin (Colne). The gold and silver tree was unveiled by Miss Bess Clegg, and yielded over £49, while the clear total for the day was almost £96. This is higher than the last Sale of Work held just ten months ago.

Pendleton (Manchester).—A cheerful optimism pervaded the Annual Congregational Meeting of the Unitarian Free Church, which was held on Saturday, the 9th inst. Mr. Ernest Robertson presided over a good attendance, and in his opening remarks congratulated the members on the improved and still advancing prospects of the church. He referred to the loss the church had sustained by the death of Councillor Jonathan Milner, who had passed away during the year. Since the arrival of the Rev. G. Randall Jones in October a new and enthusiastic spirit had dominated the church's activities, and progress and bright hopefulness were everywhere apparent. The motion was seconded by Mr. T. Fletcher Robinson (the Vice-Chairman), who spoke in the same hopeful and confident strain. Mr. J. Wigley, J.P., moved the adoption of the reports of the Sunday school and the connected institutions; the motion was seconded by Miss F. Haworth and carried. The Rev. G. Randall Jones, gave a short address, in which he paid a tribute of admiration to the men who were engaged in the great struggle for freedom and righteousness on the battlefields of Flanders, and stated that but for physical reasons he would have been fighting by their side. He recognised with thankfulness the progress that had been made in church attendance since he came amongst them. But he was not satisfied. There was still room for more.

Shrewsbury.—After a suspension of two years, the Literary Society in connection with High Street Church recommenced its activities last autumn, and the interest in the Society displayed by members and friends has justified the Committee in resuming the meetings, although it was thought advisable to hold them fortnightly, instead of weekly as heretofore. Prior to Christmas lectures were delivered by the President, the Rev. A. E. O'Connor ('Serbia and the Serbs'), Mr. A. E. White, B.A., B.Sc. ('The Women of Shakespeare'), the Rev. Canon A. J. Moriarty, D.D. ('The History of English Surnames'), Miss F. Beaumont ('The Children's Play Movement in England and America'), and Mr. H. P. Rogers ('Industrial and Social Reconstruction'). Since Christmas the programme has comprised lectures by Prof. H. J. Fleure, D.Sc. ('The Spirit of France'), Councillor C. S. Woollam ('Bygone Days in Shropshire'), Mr. Fred Maddison ('Democracy and Foreign Affairs'), and the Rev. J. Park Davies ('The Religion of H. G. Wells'), and a Debate on the question 'Is a League of Nations to secure World Peace Practicable?' in which the opposing leaders were Mr. T. H. Ridgway and Mr. A. B. Aris.

Southampton.—It was stated in THE INQUIRER of March 2 that the Rev. Victor Moody will resign his appointment at the end of March. We are informed that this was an error, and that Mr. Moody's resignation does not take effect until the end of June.

Stand.—The Annual Congregational Social meeting in connection with Stand Chapel has been fixed for March 20, so as to give the members an opportunity of welcoming Dr. Thackray, who is expected home from France that week.

Wakefield.—The Westgate Unitarian Chapel Calendar records the fact that the Military Medal has been awarded to Mark Lockwood.

Wandsworth.—The Annual Meeting of the church was held on Tuesday, Mr. Ernest Jones presiding. The reports showed that in spite of abnormal conditions the membership was fully maintained, the treasurer had a balance in hand, and the work of the various institutions had been steadily continued. In replying to a vote of thanks, the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, who began his ministry here nearly thirty-five years ago, earnestly asked all those who desired to see a better state of human society to consider what they themselves were doing, personally, to bring it about. In the course of the evening the minister was requested to send a kindly message of remembrance to Lieut.-Col. John Ward, M.P., C.M.G., who is now with his regiment at Hong Kong.

 THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.*

 Secretaries of churches which publish Calendars are requested to send the Calendars regularly, and as soon as possible after publication, to the Editor.*

MARRIAGE.

LAWRENCE—NETTLEFOLD.—On March 9, at St. Stephen's Church, Gloucester Road, by the Rev. Lord Victor Seymour, Vicar, Capt. George St. Patrick Lawrence, Rifle Brigade, younger son of Brigadier-General R. C. B. Lawrence, C.B., and Mrs. Lawrence, 29 Palace Gate, to Frances Mildred, youngest daughter of the late Edward Nettlefold of Birmingham, and of Mrs. Nettlefold, 12 Queen's Gate Place.

DEATHS.

BARNES.—Missing, now reported killed in action on Nov. 7, 1917, Capt. E. Earle Barnes, R.E., attached R.F.C., son of Alex. Barnes, I.S.O., of 22 Park Hill, Ealing, W.5.

BARRON.—On March 6, Lucy Matilda, the beloved wife of John Barron, Minister of Ballyhemlin, Co. Down, Ireland. Interred at Ballyhemlin Meeting House.

"All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me. Yet the Lord will command his loving kindness in the day-time, and in the night his song shall be with me."

HOLLAND.—On March 12, suddenly, at 115 Wellesley Road, Ilford, Essex, Arthur Mangnall, son of the late Francis Waverley Holland of Manchester, in his 61st year.

MILNES.—On Thursday, March 7, at 195 Oswald Road, Chorlton-cum-Hardy, William Cresswell Milnes, in his 80th year.

WOOLLEY.—On March 12, at Fairhill, Kersal, Manchester, George Stephen Woolley, in his 82nd year.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, March 17.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Mr. J. L. GERRARD.
Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM; 5.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D. of Waltham, Mass.; 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Mr. J. HARVEY LEWIS; 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 Rev. W. C. BOWIE; 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. W. R. MARSHALL.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. H. H. JOHNSON.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. O. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Mr. E. A. SMITH, B.Sc.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.15, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DONALD B. FRASER.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut. Col. BULLOCK.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. HORACE SHORT.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. MASON BASS, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

March

17. Rev. HARROLD H. JOHNSON of Evesham.
24. Rev. W. H. ROSE of the Rhyl Street Domestic Mission.
31. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.
Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY.

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,

Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN
ASSOCIATION.

A Meeting of the Council will be held at ESSEX HALL on WEDNESDAY, MARCH 27, 1918. The President will take the Chair at 4 P.M.

Business.—(1) Report of the Executive Committee. (2) Annual Meeting Arrangements. (3) Nomination of Council and Committee.

Dr. CARPENTER will give an Address on 'Some Thoughts suggested by recent Visits to Congregations and Societies in different parts of the Country.'

By the Rules, Nominations for the Council and the Executive Committee should reach the SECRETARY at Essex Hall before MARCH 31.

SUSTENTATION FUND.

Application forms for the renewal of grants for the year beginning July 1 next will shortly be sent out to all Secretaries and Ministers of grant-aided congregations.

If a congregation which has not hitherto received a grant wishes to apply for one, the necessary form can be obtained from Mr. RONALD P. JONES, Treasurer, Sustentation Fund, Essex Hall, Essex Street, London, W.C.2.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL
MANCHESTER.

Contains 23 Illustrations of this historic Nonconformist building, and those associated with it, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes, and an Introduction by the late Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Chapel. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

Deputy Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL. | H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I. | H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000

Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

BRIGHTON.—TO LET, Furnished, SITTING-ROOM AND BEDROOM. Near Station and trams. Very clean and sunny. 15s. a week. Vacant now.—W. care of INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Miscellaneous.

HARMONIUM FOR SALE, £6. Good condition. Suitable for School use.—JOHN-STONE, Bank Street School, Bury.

IRISH LINEN DAMASK TABLECLOTHS, beautiful floral designs, fine quality, slightly imperfect, size 2 x 2 yards, 11s. 6d., postage 5d. Write for this month's free Bargain List.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) WANTED. Any condition. Now worth up to £15 per set. Strictly genuine. MAXIMUM VALUE PAID by return, or offers made. If not accepted goods returned post free. Call or post to the oldest and most reliable firm; satisfaction assured.—I. RAYBURN & CO., 105 MARKET STREET, MANCHESTER.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT. Cash or offer by return. Before selling make sure of their value by writing for FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any artificial teeth.—E. LEWIS, 29 London Street, Southport, Lancs. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER

* All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS
TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2
INCH IN COLUMN, 8s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate, Saturday, March 16, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3951.
NEW SERIES, No. 1054.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 23, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	89	Rev. T. E. M. Edwards	91	THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE	93
LEST THEY FORGET	90	Mrs. William Rathbone	92	WINIFRED HOUSE	93
COUNCIL FOR PROMOTING AN INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN MEETING	91	BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	92	LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY	94
MEMORIAL NOTICES:—		CORRESPONDENCE:—		MIDLAND CHRISTIAN UNION	94
Rev. Thomas Josef Jenkins	91	John Pounds' House	93	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	94

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

THOSE who agree with Lord Halsbury that women are unfit to be solicitors because they can only see one side of a question will regret that the Bill to enable women to be solicitors passed the House of Lords this week. Similarly, those who agree with Sir F. Banbury that the better educated a lad is the worse worker he will be will regret that the new Education Bill was read a second time without a division in the House of Commons this week. The rest of us note both events with much satisfaction; and by the record of the former we place the fact that a woman (Miss Wallas) has for the first time been made Deputy Chairman of the London County Council, and by that of the latter the estimate that when the contemplated education policy is in fully working order the nation will spend sixty or seventy million pounds on it every year—a sum which half-a-century ago would have practically absorbed the whole revenue.

* * *

THE decision, announced on Tuesday in the House of Commons, that houses of ill-fame are to be placed "out of bounds" for British soldiers in France is a welcome one. The disquieting thing about this matter is that the Government, through its representative, has so clearly exhibited evidence of being under the powerful influence of army authorities that a too long period of evasion, ambiguity, and downright suppression of the truth has had to be followed by a vigorously organised protest by religious bodies and women's societies in order to convince those concerned that this kind of thing will never be tolerated by home opinion. Our satisfaction with the present outcome is, we confess, alloyed by a strong suspicion that the new regulation will, in some cases at least, be enforced by men who do not believe in it; but the public may rest assured that, having been roused to vigilance, those publicists who care for man's decency and for woman's honour will not easily slacken their scrutiny of what goes on.

* * *

OBSERVERS of the international situation consider that any chance of a speedy peace is receding, and Count Hertling roundly accuses the Allies of the guilt of needlessly prolonging war for selfish reasons. Meanwhile one disclosure after another is made—now from the papers of the former German Ambassador to this country, Prince Lichnowsky, again from the story of secret "offers" to France on the eve of the war—revealing the kind of mind that predominates in the Central Powers. Count Hertling's own speech this week, with its absurdly thin excuses for the intrusion of German forces into the provinces of Russia, is evidence more than sufficient that we are far from being able to regard our enemy with that minimum of trust and respect without which there never can be a hopeful settlement between us. Nevertheless, if we are to take long views—and the years of the nations are not as those of a man—we must continue to look far onward; and in the interests of future generations, if not in our own, we dare not slacken our efforts to organise the world's affairs on wiser foundations than hitherto existing. Hence, even in the midst of deepening shades and anxieties, it is well worth while, we believe, to have such educative debates as that initiated by Lord Parmoor on Tuesday on the proposals for a "League of Nations."

* * *

MR. BALFOUR's sympathetic references last week to Russia's vast difficulties and troubles, President Wilson's characteristically clear and explicit declaration that his people will loyally aid the Russian democracy, so far as possible, to work out its salvation, and the formal announcement by the representatives of the Allies that the so called "peace" enforced by Germany on her Eastern neighbour will certainly not be recognised by them may not do much at present to solve the problem presented by the consequences of the Russian collapse, but they should contribute towards the heartening of all who in that complex group of races cherish the vision of true patriotism. We believe they are more numerous than, in the present turmoil, we are able to conceive. Russia will have its resurrection yet, if we have only the grace to hope and work for it without too obviously selfish attention to our own interests.

* * *

To many people anything written by Mr. Bernard Shaw is so violently irritating that they cannot give it any sort of hearing, let alone a patient one. If this is due to his own fault as an extravagant and wilful writer, and we believe it is, he may bear as best he can the penalty, for all that we care. But when it is a question of other men's rights before the law, not to speak of their lives, Mr. Shaw's self-caused unpopularity must certainly not prejudice the verdict of fair-minded persons. Writing in The Manchester Guardian yesterday week he directed attention once more to the unhappy, and admittedly difficult, problem of the "conscientious objectors," pointing out that the result of the present system is that their successive sentences practically amount to perpetual hard labour—in spite of the limit of two years which has hitherto been applied in the case of criminals as the maximum of human endurance. The remarks of The Manchester Guardian may, however, be weighed by some who decline to hear such an advocate as Mr. Shaw in any cause.

* * *

PREFACING our quotation with the statement that our interest in the subject centres in the tradition, long-cherished among Unitarians, of the rights of conscience and the no less cherished ideal of the sanctity of law, and not at all sympathising with the "objector's" judgment against the lawfulness and present duty of war, we can but say in addition that nothing so humiliates us, in a time when the utmost loyalty to principle is called for, as the falling away of so many weak-kneed and timorous minds from a strict adherence to equity, cost what it may. Our contemporary, speaking of the "concessions" which have been recently granted to this class of prisoner, says they are no more than mitigations by the Government of the violence with which it breaks the law of the land. That law entitles any man whose conscientious objection is admitted to "total exemption." Yet hundreds of men whose sincerity is not in doubt are either forced to labour in penal settlements or are imprisoned for refusing so to serve. History will marvel at nothing more than at the reduction of the law on this matter to absurdity. If the law is not sound it should be changed; but so long as it is unrepealed it should not be broken.

* * *

IN Canon Scott Holland a shining example was given of that development among High Churchmen of intense interest in social reform of which we spoke last week. Brilliant as a preacher, scholarly as a writer, living out his days to the full in converse with leaders of thought, he joined vigorously with Dr. Gore (Bishop of Oxford) in promoting the Christian Social Union, made his house at Amen Corner a centre for Socialists, Labour men, and progressives generally, and built up in The Commonwealth, the monthly organ of the Union, a singularly powerful force, pulsing with vitality, and drawing scores and hundreds of the younger clergy and other young Churchmen into the crusade for reform. With it all, he combined a very attractive geniality, a freedom from anything approaching to clerical uppishness, which opened men's hearts to him, whether Churchmen, Dissenters, or "nothing-arians." His passing leaves the world poorer by the loss of a fine personality and lover of men.

* * *

SIGNOR ITALO CONTE, son of the late Unitarian missionary in Italy, sends us an account of Unitarian propaganda at the front. As an officer, in the Arezzo Brigade, he took part in the famous defensive covering the retreat of the other Italian forces, and is now stationed on the Piave. All officers, he says, are expected to talk frequently on serious subjects to their men, and he has come to regard his infantry with deep affection as well as admiration for their fine spirit. There is much professed atheism, more mere superstitious belief; but gradually he has led many "to know God, to love and fear Him, and to shape their lives according to the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth." He gives details of a number of instances in which this simple type of religion has been accepted with gratitude and followed by consistent conduct, and he looks forward to energetic advance when peace times recur,

LEST THEY FORGET.

THERE will be regret, which we confess we share, at the refusal of the French Protestants to meet with religious representatives of belligerent countries and neutrals, at the invitation of three Lutheran prelates—the Archbishop of Upsala, the Bishop of Christiania, and the Bishop of Zealand (Denmark). These Scandinavian brethren, animated, we are sure, by the highest motives and imbued with aims common to all true Christians, issued their invitation on the failure of the "Stockholm" International Socialist Conference project. Their proposals were not for a conference in the ordinary sense of the word, but for the religious fellowship of common worship and prayer; though we may, indeed, must, concede the high probability that intercourse between the parties would not be limited to these public acts.

The suggestion, as our readers will remember, has been received with ready assent on the part of leaders of religious life in this country, who, looking forward doubtless to the postponed date of the meeting—the late summer—may well have hoped that the time would then be ripe for an effort to influence for good the minds of men in all lands. Whether anything of the sort will still be attempted we cannot say, but obviously the abstention of a group so deeply involved as the representatives of France is a serious difficulty. For our brethren across the Channel have, through the Council of Federation which claims to speak in the name of all the Protestant Churches of France, been unanimous in their decision; and the terms in which they announce it possess a weight and intensity rarely to be found in official utterances. Reading them, as we must, with a renewed sense of what their country has endured in the war, regret at the breakdown of the scheme is modified very considerably. In its place, we find ourselves hoping that this refusal to meet the German and Austrian representatives, and the words in which it is given, may open the eyes and sink more deeply into the hearts of these men, and through them, into the hearts of all serious men in their nations, than any solemn expression of Christian fraternity, however wisely, humbly, and devoutly devised.

For all men must be reminded, and especially all who by active share in national iniquity, or by passive acceptance of it, are partners in wrong, that—to use Biblical language, where the speech of everyday is all too inadequate—"sin is exceeding sinful." To the man of this world such language will mean little enough. There are thousands, not all of them in Germany, who will shrug the shoulder at all such pulpit terms. With the imbecilities of Russian rhetoric before them, they will more than ever scoff at mere "idealism," direct their policy by the hope of material advantage, and put their trust in the sword, undeterred by weakly moral scruples. But the man who professes to honour Christ as his Lord, to whom God is not a mere hypothesis and final judgment a curious dream, must surely find something here immensely significant. Let us hear our brethren:—

The spiritual communion, unless it be a mere sham, must eliminate grievances, fix responsibilities, repudiate the injustice committed. The guilty, whoever they be, must be declared guilty. Christianity can only become healthy and strong again by loyally seeking and proclaiming the truth.

It is well, we say, for German wrong-doers, for wrong-doers everywhere, and for those who supinely acquiesce while their governors do the wrong, to realise what lies at the back of such words. It is no merely self-interested desire for reparation of injuries endured, though the cry of the outraged for an avenging justice is itself a significant, even a portentous fact in the life of this world. But there is evident in this refusal a wrath truly terrible, a reaction of the human spirit so intense that all the sweet graces of the gentler Christian type vanish before it like dew in the scorching heat. It is a wrath that tells the Christian, at any rate, of another Wrath, that answers the would-be worshipper by "terrible things in righteousness," a Wrath which may have been often misrepresented in our poor human thought, but which in such times as these seems to many of us to be at least as certain as that "Love" which our poor human thinking is prone to depict in such puerile colours.

In a word, there is a meaning, deep and forever established, in the Cross; let the Church's Passion-tide season bring that meaning home to the minds of men. There cannot be peace without justice, and blunder as we may in our attempts to attain to right dealings between individuals and nations, an irresistible surge rushes up from the depths of this Universe, seeking at all costs and through all woes to be rid of the poison that corrupts the soul of man. It is not, we know too well, the guilty alone who suffer. Christ ascended Calvary; and many an innocent sufferer is maimed or slain to-day. But let not the brazen guilty hug themselves in the hope, fostered long by a feeble, false theology, that someone's innocence will save them from the penalty due. If there must be crucifying, the thieves of this age may remember that two of their number were gibbeted also on that Hill of Doom. Lest they forget, our French brethren show again to the Christians across the Rhine what they have done, or at least condoned. They remind them of the causes of the war and the manner in which it was begun. They point to the violation for State reasons of plighted word and international engagements. Their catalogue might easily be extended; it is, in fact, written large for all ages hereafter to read, to the indelible shame of a race, so gifted, so strong, that has deliberately broken faith, stooped to grossest infamy, heaped up horror and cruelty and baseness beyond the imagining even of the cynical, and in these last days gone freshly forth copiously lying about "peace," while in wolfish earnest about plunder. The hand of Cain is upon it, and till that can be cleansed away, not from the brow alone but from the very heart, the whole world of right-seeking men must protest—and something more. It must act as best it may as the instrument of that Wrath Divine, that Consuming Fire, that Eternal "Just God and Saviour," whose salvation was never of light cost or easy attainment—least of all a matter of slothful dreams and empty sentiments. Only so can these days take on their true redemptive light and, in the mystery of Providence, become prophetic of great and glorious life to be.

COUNCIL FOR PROMOTING AN INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN MEETING.

THERE was a large meeting in the Kingsway Hall on Thursday, the 14th inst., called "to consider the duty of the churches in regard to the present international situation," and presided over by Lord Parmoor. The platform included members of most of the churches, our own group being represented by the Rev. Dr. Carpenter (on the Executive Committee), Rev. F. H. Jones (on the Council), and Mr. Chancellor, M.P. The Chairman urged the importance at the present time of recognising the Spirit of Christian Brotherhood under one Father of all mankind. In these days of international strife, while fully appreciating the higher aspects of patriotism, he felt bound to protest against the worship of the State. Make devotion to the State the supreme test of right, and you would lose the higher spirit of patriotism itself, and substitute for it a cursed spirit of racial animosity ready to justify any crime. But there was the better spirit abroad now in our country. No doubt more might have been done by the Anglican Church, but there was in that Church a devoted body of persons desirous of Christian co-operation among the various countries, and those who regretted that the effort had not been made sooner must put their own shoulders to the wheel. Unless a great effort was made to work with our Christian brethren in every country, there would be danger of the only approach to international problems being made in a spirit that would render any solution of them impossible.

Miss M. E. Ellis, Secretary of the Council, gave a short account of the history and purpose of the movement, stating that its bond of union was to be found in the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man, and that its watchwords were Unity, Repentance, Love, and Righteousness. The Rev. Principal Selbie, of Mansfield College, said, that though the Free Churches generally speaking supported the war as a moral challenge which it would have been un-Christian to refuse, yet they were coming more and more to recognise that war is not a Christian thing. The spiritual healing of the wounds inflicted by war would depend upon the temper and attitude of mind in which we approached the problems arising out of it. This was no time for recrimination and raking up the evils of the past. The war must be fought out to the bitter end; but it was already time for the Christian churches to unite in the determination to establish some better condition of things after it, and to realise that nations like individuals must not live unto themselves alone. We must get into touch with the churches of the allied countries, of the neutral countries, and of the enemy countries.

The Dean of Worcester, referring to Mr. Lloyd George's appeal to the Free Churches to remember the aims with which we entered upon this war, said he hoped we should not forget them; but at the same time we were now met for a higher ideal than British war aims, namely, loyalty to the kingdom of God. It had been said that the churches were helpless because they were divided. But in spite of all divisions there was an ultimate unity of spirit throughout the churches, from the Roman Catholics to the Quakers, and through this must union be restored among the nations.

The most notable feature of the meeting was the fact that Father Nicholas Velimirov, of Serbia, notwithstanding all that his own country has suffered, had no word of vengeance, punishment, or even reparation, but only pleaded earnestly for true peace among the nations when the actual fighting ceases, a universal Christian spirit and not a mere armed truce ever preparing for new outbreaks of war.

Canon Donaldson appealed to the Churches for some clear utterance at the present time, that through them the voice of God might be heard. There could be no true voice of the Church until it was the voice of God. Since 1914 there had been no clear voice but only a confused murmuring. In 1914, when the war was approaching, there was no word from Rome, or the Eastern Church, from Anglicans or Nonconformists. The need for all Europe and for ourselves was penitence in regard to the past, and a recognition of the great fact that we are already members of the supreme international body, the universal Christian Church.

The Rev. Thomas Phillips, Baptist minister of Bloomsbury Chapel urged that whatever the duty of the State might be at the present time, the duty of the Christian churches at all times was to work for peace and goodwill on earth. This meeting was itself an act of faith in God, in the goodwill of the Gospel of Christ, in the power of prayer.

Lord Parmoor in acknowledging a vote of thanks at the close of the meeting finally exhorted those who desire peace on earth not to wait till the end of the war for the spirit of peace to come upon them, but to cherish it even now in their own hearts.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

THE REV. THOMAS JOSEF JENKINS.

WE record with much regret the death, on the 14th inst., of the Rev. T. J. Jenkins, Unitarian minister at Newchurch, Lancashire. Born in South Wales forty-five years ago, he was educated for the ministry at Carmarthen College, and in 1896 was appointed to the charge of Gellionen and Trebanos, there preaching in Welsh. In 1904 he became minister at Hinckley, where in addition to the care of an important congregation he took a considerable share in public affairs, including the town, library, schools, Extension Lectures, and Temperance.

During his ministry here extensive reconstructions were made in the Great Meeting House and adjoining property, but the most conspicuous service rendered by him in this way was in connection with panelling, re-seating, and otherwise beautifying the old chapel as a memorial of the three brothers, John, Thomas, and Hugh Atkins. To this scheme, involving the raising of a large fund, Mr. Jenkins gave much thought and untiring energy, and the result, along with the clubs, classes, and other institutions founded and fostered by him, will long constitute a memorial of his own faithful and diligent labours.

In 1913 he removed to Newchurch and in a very short time won the admiration and affection of all his people. An excellent preacher, an indefatigable worker in the church's institutions, especially among the young, the congregation continually grew. His deep interest in his young men is shown by the fact that, in spite of the weakening effect of a very severe illness which began early last year and never really left him, he wrote at Christmas to each of his seventy-three "men with the Forces." Their regard for him, in turn, is illustrated by the remark of one who in a letter just received at Essex Hall, acknowledging the Bulletin (containing a photograph of friends assembled at the autumn meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association) expresses his delight at finding a picture there of his "beloved minister." During the long and painful illness referred to, the high esteem in which Mr. Jenkins was held by his brother ministers was manifested by their generous supply of his pulpit as well as in many other ways. All who knew him will cherish his memory as that of a lovable, industrious, sincere and tolerant man, whose mind and ability grew steadily from year to year and seemed only now approaching to ripeness.

Among the offices held by Mr. Jenkins successively were those of secretary of the Welsh Sunday School Union and president of the South Wales Unitarian Association, secretary of the North Midland Unitarian Association, and president (this year) of the North East Lancashire Mission. He leaves a widow and a son and a daughter, for whom deep sympathy is felt.

The funeral, which was largely attended, took place on Tuesday; the Revs. A. W. Fox, J. Thomas (Congregational), T. Munn, and J. Evans taking part, a full attendance of ministers being also present from the churches in the North and East Lancashire Mission, and the Manchester, and District Unions.

THE REV. T. E. M. EDWARDS.

MANY members of our congregations in London and in the outer district covered by the Provincial Assembly who remember the ministry of the Rev. T. E. M. Edwards with genuine respect and affection, will learn with regret of his death which took place at his house at Streatham on Mar. 16, at the age of 77.

Mr. Edwards was educated for the Congregational ministry at Plymouth, 1862-66, and he continued in that ministry for twenty-six years. He had gradually moved away in thought and sympathy from orthodoxy; and in 1892 he felt impelled to join the Unitarian denomination. In the following year he was appointed missionary minister of the London and South Eastern Counties Provincial Assembly. For sixteen years he held this position, retiring owing to ill-health in 1909. Mr. Edwards proved himself a diligent and devoted missionary minister. He took an active part in founding congregations at Kilburn, Woolwich, Lewisham, Acton, and Ilford; and he organised lectures and religious services in several places inside and outside the metropolitan area. His quiet, patient, persistent earnestness enabled him to overcome many difficulties and to set aside disappointments; while his conviction of the truth and worth of the gospel he preached never wavered. His own mind had gradually become emancipated from the thralldom of doctrines which he perceived to be erroneous and harmful; and he felt called upon to be a messenger of the truth of religion. He was convinced that sincere and clear thoughts on fundamental religious questions were necessary if religion was to live in a world where knowledge could no longer be disregarded. Mr. Edwards was interested in theology, and he found that other people were more deeply interested than was sometimes represented. But he was above everything else a Christian minister. He was welcomed in town and country as a wise counsellor and a true friend. He was modest, tactful, sincerely religious in mind and heart, with nothing of the priest about him in speech or manner or dress. No one could fail, however, to perceive that his ministry was imbued by a truly Christ-like spirit. He was, indeed, in many ways an ideal missionary. He was keen that men should know all available and ascertained truth concerning religious questions; he was still more keen that their daily thought and life should be permeated and inspired by wisdom and goodness, and by a faith and hope and love which linked men together as brothers and to God as children and fellow-workers with Him in establishing the Kingdom of Heaven upon earth.

Mr. Edwards had lived his life; he had finished his work; and he has left behind him for our encouragement the memory of a man of noble character, genuine worth, and sincere piety. W. C. B.

MRS. WILLIAM RATHBONE.

THE venerable widow of the late Mr. William Rathbone, M.P., died on Tuesday, at Greenbank, Liverpool. She was his second wife, being married to him in 1862. Her father was Mr. Acheson Lyle, of Londonderry, and she was kin to her husband through his mother's family, the Gregs. As is well known, it was the early death of his first wife that led Mr. Rathbone to devote himself especially to the provision of District and other types of Nursing; and in this and all other sides of his immense philanthropic activity, he was zealously aided by the late Mrs. Rathbone. Indeed, he said himself, in 1894, "For the last thirty-two years, we should be substituted for I in speaking of any action or work of my life." Her age was 85; she had been a widow sixteen years.

EARLY in February there were seventeen American Unitarian ministers engaged in war service: three chaplains, two commissioned officers, three in the Canadian service, one in the Ambulance Corps, and eight acting as overseas secretaries of the Y.M.C.A. There are forty-three sons of ministers in the army or navy.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

163RD LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,194	15	5
Miss S. J. Gregg (25th)	..	1	0 0
Northgate End Chapel, Halifax, per Mr. J. Teal (22nd)	..	1	11 2
Northgate End Sunday School (10th)	..	0	8 0
Miss A. Fryer (10th)	..	1	0 0
Highgate Unitarian Church (25th monthly)	..	4	1 0
Mr. John Dendy (15th)	..	5	0 0
Miss Swaine (35th monthly)	..	2	0 0
L. O. M. (24th)	..	1	0 0
Mr. Julius Hess (11th)	..	2	2 0
Mrs. Archibald Kenrick (3rd)	..	10	0 0
Mr. A. W. Harris (12th)	..	1	1 0
Westgate Chapel Literary Society, Lewes, per Mr. H. Broadbent (4th)	..	2	2 0
	£20,226	0	7

Parcels have been received from:—Miss Short; Mrs. Cooke Taylor; Miss Mary B. Lamb; Miss M. T. Worsley; Mrs. Edwin Ellis; Unitarian Church Sewing Circle, Southport, per Mrs. Harris; Mrs. Faulkner Hill; Mrs. and Miss Carter; Mrs. Andrews; Anon. (by hand).

MONTHLY NOTES.

THE following request is from a chaplain attached to the staff of a hospital for disabled Belgian soldiers. He says:—"I am working with the doctor in charge, who is very clever, and who is much interested in our local works of charity. We have now round about the institute many of the disabled men who have married, and who have children. The men cannot earn very much and these poor parents find themselves quite unable to provide the necessary clothing for the babies. We are anxious to provide this clothing for them. If you can help us by sending any of the things needed for babies, you can rely on our distributing them wisely to those who need them." I have been able to send them a few baby garments, but I should be glad of some more.

A military doctor writes: "I want to explain to you the rather special position in which I find myself. I am the medical officer of a regiment which has its units all along the Belgian front. I myself have lived for two years now in a village, mostly ruined, but still partly inhabited by civilians, who are very poor. There is no civil doctor, so I have to look after them all when they are ill, or wounded by shells. So I have a clientèle of a varied nature—old people, women and children. For medicaments I can manage from the stock allowed me by the army, but for instruments for special and difficult cases, I do not know where to turn. I had to leave nearly all mine when I left Belgium, and the few I brought with me are quite worn out and useless. So I am asking your help to enable me to tend the poor people properly, and I think you will excuse my boldness in asking for a few necessary instruments for general practice." I think this is a case where we may well lend a helping hand, and I am having a few instruments put together for his use.

These two letters are samples of wants which occur every day. They are often only small things, but there is no one else to do them if we cannot, and leaving them undone means a lot of suffering which we should be glad to assuage. But these things cost money and everything costs at least double what it did. Besides these constant appeals there is the regular charge on our funds for the upkeep of the Maternity Home at Calais. I expect that this year we shall want about £50 a month for this home and for the children's hospital (the "Rose Allen" Hospital) near Yvetôt.

ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Pyjamas, shirts, socks, handkerchiefs for men.
Clothing of all sorts for babies and children.
Games, writing paper, pictures.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

TOYS FOR BELGIAN CHILDREN.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I enclose a translation of one of the letters of thanks that I have received for the toys sent out by the "Toy Fund for Belgian Children," thinking that it may interest your readers to see how much the toys are appreciated. The letter is written by one of the boys in "the Colonies." The boys at this school are from Liège and only came out of Belgium a few months ago—half-starved and very miserable. They had their first square meal of ham sandwiches and chocolate at the Swiss frontier, and had to stay four days at Evian to recover from the effects of indiscriminate feeding by sympathetic friends all along the Swiss railway!

March 3, 1918.

MADAME, — To-day, Thursday afternoon, there is great excitement in our "Colonies." All the children are jumping for joy. Why is there all this enthusiasm, why are they all in such good spirits? It is because a great surprise is coming. A box has just arrived from England—we have seen it being brought in. What is in it? An important question in which we are all interested. Here comes our good teacher from the end of the courts. At the first sound of the whistle, all the children, big and little, are quiet, draw up into line, and at a given signal go to the playroom. The door is opened. A sigh of joy escapes from every breast. What beautiful toys spread out on the tables! Behind them stand our good chaplain and the Lady Superior. Our dear Sister Margaret reads out the names, for each one in his turn according to the number of his good conduct marks may go and choose a toy. I was one of the first called, and I confess I was greatly puzzled. Everything seemed equally nice, games, motor-cars, carts, soldiers, racquets, paint-boxes. I chose a paint-box, as it was the most useful, and went back to my place, considering what I should paint with it. If the little English children who have so kindly sent us their toys, could see the happiness of the little boys from Liège at La Valière, they would not regret the sacrifice they have made. And we little boys from Liège will take great care of our toys. When we go back to Belgium we will show them to our dear parents and tell them of the kindness of the English to the Belgians, and we will give the toys, still unbroken, to our little brothers and sisters, who have remained in Belgium, and they will be delighted to repeat the name of our dear friend, the kind Mrs. Drummond. Please accept, dear lady, our grateful thanks. RAYMOND STAELENS, (in the name of the little boys from Liège at La Valière).

Yours, &c.

ALICE DRUMMOND.

Hampstead, March 18, 1918.

FURTHER correspondence on the 'Churches and the Ministry,' and other subjects, necessarily held over, will appear in our next issue. As this must go to press on Wednesday may we request contributors to assist by sending their matter as early as possible next week?

CORRESPONDENCE.

JOHN POUNDS' HOUSE: TRAINING HOME FOR DOMESTIC SERVICE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The fact that March 4 was the twentieth anniversary of the opening of John Pounds' House and that, in spite of unforeseen difficulties at that time, which still in a measure affect our work, we have been enabled, through the kindness of our many friends, to keep free of debt until now, has emboldened me to again ask your kind help by inserting this appeal. Our financial year ends on March 31, and if our subscribers who have not yet sent in their subscriptions do so before that date we shall find ourselves in debt to the amount of about £100. We have a less number of girls on account of the demand for them to act as errand girls and in other ways to take a boy's place, we exercise the greatest care and economy in the matter of expenditure, but the greatly increased price of food, clothing (boots especially), coal, gas, and other things makes us unable to continue our work without more help. Our Matron, who is now recovering from a long and serious illness, and whom we should much regret to lose on account of her being an excellent manager and disciplinarian, has offered to stay without salary, undertaking to do, as before, the needlework and general supervision, so that we may retain the services of the working housekeeper and a young assistant who is training for institution life, and who assists with the laundry work and in teaching housework to the girls. Their combined wages will in the future amount to £36 a year instead of, as before, £61. We cannot do with less help, for as all those who have had experience in training young girls know, they need constant and careful supervision.

I hope all who read my letter will not judge of the value of this House from the small number of girls (nine) at present in it, but will remember that many of those already placed in service make it their home, coming to us between situations as they should be able to do to a mother, so that their clothes can be put in order and another place found for them. Girls, also, use it on their evening out and on Sunday, being sure of a cordial welcome and tea.

One girl I will specially mention as a case in point. She was brought to us four years ago by a neighbour; her mother was a drunken, immoral woman who so shamefully neglected her children that she was more than once convicted by the magistrates and imprisoned. For some time this girl gave us much trouble and anxiety, as she was dishonest and untruthful, but with care and patience improved and now is in good service. She was much alarmed when told that the Home may be closed. "What shall I do if it is?" she exclaimed to Matron; "I have nowhere to go and no friends: do please try to keep it open." I quote also the following from the letter of a girl who was with us for some time: "I intend to do you credit and later on reward the Home for its kindness to a lonely orphan." These girls are two of many, and Portsmouth is full of danger for such.

March 4, 1898, was for me a very happy day. I believed when the Home was opened that the girls would all respond readily to our efforts to help and uplift them and that love could accomplish great things. After twenty years of hard work, heartache, and many disappointments, I realised how difficult was the task we had set ourselves to do. Often when looking through the lists of the hundreds of girls who have come to us I feel how almost impossible it seems to raise them to a higher level; but when a young mother shows me with pride her comfortable home and little ones, and tells me how much she owes to the John Pounds House, I know that it has all been worth while. When the war ends I believe we shall be more than ever needed, for there must be a number of girls thrown out of their present employment. For this reason, also, I beg for help to keep the House open, for we have gained the confidence of the poor, and it would be difficult, if not impossible, to start the work again if it were closed. In the constructive work of the future surely one of the first essentials will be the training of the future wives and mothers of our country to understand the better ordering of their common life and the great responsibilities devolving upon them. In our small Home we touch the merest fringe of this great problem, but it is encouraging to look back upon the outcome of John Pounds' first poor efforts, and to remember that every one of these poor girls has learnt something good from being with us, and that the good will be passed on to the next generation.—Yours, &c.,

MARY ROGERS.

2 Nightingale Road, Southsea.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The Rosslyn Hill Chapel Women's Union ask me to support the above appeal in their name. I do so with pleasure, although I feel that it can hardly need such support. We have seen with pleasure the splendid help which readers of THE INQUIRER have given to the Belgian Hospital Fund. This is a smaller work, but it is no less sound and important. Mrs. Rogers' noble and self-sacrificing labours are beyond all praise. Those of us who know something of what she has done for poor girls think of her with deep admiration and gratitude. She needs £100 in order to free her from financial anxieties. Surely there are many readers of THE INQUIRER who will gladly and thankfully answer to her appeal.—Yours, &c.,

HENRY GOW.

Hampstead.

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE.

A MEETING of the Committee was held at the Upper Chapel, Sheffield, on the 15th inst., the president (the Rev. Dr. Hargrove) in the chair: fifteen members were present, and apologies for absence were received from twenty-three others. A resolution was adopted approving of the movement for a League of Nations after the war. It was agreed that in case of a general movement for a National Service of Commemoration the Committee on Religious Worship be requested again to prepare a Liturgical Form for use in our churches. With regard to the Triennial Meetings the Committee was reluctant to decide definitely that they should not be held. But, on the other hand, faced with the great and increasing difficulties of travelling and food, it was unable to say when there would be a reasonable chance of securing a representative attendance of ministers and delegates on even a reduced scale. Ultimately, it was agreed to consider the question further at the next meeting of the Committee to be held in October, unless the officers find reason for meeting sooner.

The Rev. Henry Gow introduced the question of providing means to assist our poorer ministers to educate their children at Willaston and Channing House (or in special cases other) schools. The assistance already available through the Ministers' Pension Fund and other sources was mentioned, and the whole matter was referred to a special committee (consisting of the Revs. H. Gow, C. J. Street, Mr. T. Oliver Lee and the officers) to collect information and make recommendations. A most interesting conversation followed about our Churches and Ministry, dealing with (1) the actual condition; (2) the causes, so far as the condition is unsatisfactory; (3) the remedies, in which the Revs. C. J. Street, Dr. Mellor, Dr. J. E. Carpenter, Alfred Hall, D. Agate, C. Roper, and Mr. T. Fletcher Robinson took part.

The Rev. Dr. Carpenter moved and the Rev. F. Hankinson seconded the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted—"That this meeting of the Committee of the National Conference learns with shame and indignation that the British military authorities in France have permitted, or connived at the opening of tolerated brothels for the use of British troops in a number of French towns, and especially calls attention to the state of affairs in Cayeux-sur-mer, Somme, which has led to protests there. We call upon the Government and the military authorities to put all tolerated houses of debauchery out-of-bounds for British troops and to do their utmost to prevent the establishment of such places in or near British camps." Copies of the resolution to be sent to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Prime Minister, and the Secretary of State for War.

WINIFRED HOUSE.

THE Annual Meeting was held on Wednesday, March 13, Mr. W. H. Trethowan, F.R.C.S., Surgeon at Guy's Hospital, presiding. The report stated that there had been serious increase in the cost of feeding the children, nurses and staff; that the medical officers had been claimed for military service; the lady superintendent, Miss Mary Baker, has felt bound to obey the call to do military-hospital duty; and the finances have given much cause for anxiety. This last was relieved by the generous response to a special appeal, and later by the large legacy from an old friend, the late Miss Sarah Holborn, coming into the treasurer's possession at the end of the year. So far as the general well-being of the Home and its inmates is concerned the year's report is distinctly a good one. There has been trouble from scarlet fever, brought in, which meant closing the Home to new patients and keeping in convalescent ones for a time. Six invalids were sent away to fever hospitals, but have since returned well and none the worse for their ordeal.

The expenditure for the year 1917 amounted to £1,045 8s. 3d., as against £874 4s. 5d. in 1916, a large increase on pre-war times. The receipts, including £463 4s., a part of the late Miss Holborn's legacy, amounted to £1,341 6s. 9d. The four Hospital Funds, the King Edward, the Sunday, the Saturday, and the Alexandra Day Fund have again granted awards, the four together amounting to £139 16s. 8d., which is a welcome addition to the funds. Included in the financial statement is a table showing the three years' receipts and expenditure for 1915, 1916, 1917, and also statistics giving the average of numbers of patients and length of stay, showing the weekly cost of each one. This last works out at 20s. 10d., or about £55 a year, charging the whole outlay for maintenance, establishment, and administration. Serious trouble and anxiety has been caused to the Lady Superintendent and nurses by the many air raids which have taken place during the year. Warnings of the approach of the unwelcome visitors are given by the District Police Office, the children are then brought down to sleep on the ground floor, and the nurses remain up until the welcome "all clear" signals are given. Two special constables come to the Home and remain there while a raid is in progress, and much appreciation is expressed of their kindly help and support.

In his address the Chairman said that treatment after an operation was equal in importance to the operation itself, and for efficiency in this respect Winifred House stood almost alone, so far as his experience went. Mr. Pallister Young, Mr. F. W. Turner, Dr. Lionel Tayler, and other speakers took part in the proceedings.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

THE Annual Meeting of the Society was held at Essex Hall on Saturday afternoon, March 16, and was fairly well attended. The chair was taken by Mr. Harold Titford, the president of 1917. The secretary (Mr. A. S. Noel) in presenting the report of the committee, stated that although the Society had done little new, it had maintained its usual activities, and the Musical Festival and Aggregate Service had been held as in past years. The Home at Southend, in spite of adverse conditions, had accommodated 82 guests and completed the financial year with a balance in hand. One hundred and eighty children had been sent from London to the country, and nearly £100 had been collected and distributed for this purpose. During the year there had been a loss in London schools affiliated to the Society of 421 scholars and 18 teachers, and since the end of 1913, the last pre-war period, a loss of 972 scholars and 96 teachers, and of 233 scholars over 16. Two schools, Brixton and Portland, had closed, and two, Leytonstone and Woolwich, had been welcomed into affiliation.

The President read the financial reports, which were entirely satisfactory. He then moved the adoption of the reports, which was seconded by Mr. A. C. Hammond, of Hackney. The Rev. J. Arthur Pearson moved, and the Rev. J. H. Stephenson seconded a resolution of thanks to the retiring officers and the election of the following for the year 1918: president, the Rev. Bertram Lister; hon. secretary, Mr. A. S. Noel; treasurer, Mr. R. Asquith Wooding (on active service); Acting treasurer, Mr. Harold Titford. Committee, the Misses Francis, Green, Hargrove, Hall, the Rev. W. H. Rose, and Mr. Ion Pritchard. The Rev. Bertram Lister, responding to the resolution, moved a resolution concerning immorality in France, and protesting against the existence of tolerated houses in towns occupied by British troops. The retiring President seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

After the business part of the meeting, a thoughtful and suggestive paper on 'The Success and Failure of the Sunday School' was read by the Rev. John Begg (Pioneer Preacher). The discussion was opened by Mr. Walter Long, and continued by Mr. A. S. Noel, Mrs. Travers Herford, the Rev. J. P. Rosling, Mr. S. P. Barham, and concluded by the President.

MIDLAND CHRISTIAN UNION.

THE Annual Meeting of the Midland Christian Union was held at the Imperial Hotel, Birmingham, on Monday, March 11. The Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas was re-elected president, and the hon. treasurer and hon. secretary were asked to serve for a further period. The following members were elected to form the Executive Committee: The Rev. Lawrence Clare, the Rev. W. G. Topping, the Rev. H. Warnock, the Rev. I. Wrigley, Miss Nettlefold, Miss E. Rosalind Lee, and Messrs. William Cheshire and J. P. P. Duffield. There was a large attendance at the Conference in the afternoon which was held at the Newhall Hill Church, Handsworth, where the Rev. Stanley Mossop has recently been appointed minister, and Miss Cecile Matheson gave an address on 'The Citizenship of the Future.' The sermon, at the public service in the evening, was preached by Dr. Stanley Mellor of Liverpool.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Bournemouth.—The Rev. V. D. Davis gave the concluding address in the series on 'Religion and National Reconstruction' at the Unitarian Church on Sunday evening, March 10, when he dwelt on the importance of the social reforms he had previously spoken of from the religious point of view. Social reform, he said, was religion making itself effectual in the world, a doing of the Father's will, as Jesus understood it, whole-hearted service of the Kingdom of God. Every subject on which he had touched in that course they had found to involve reform, reconstruction, building up again, and building better than before. That was the case with the questions of housing and health, for the safeguarding of home life and of the manhood of their people, and of education, and the better ordering of the nation's work in effective co-operation, and finally with the working out of their ideal of citizenship with a new sense of responsibility on the part of women and men together, with equal rights and common duties. As regards health and housing, it might in the future involve much larger claims upon the means of the community as a whole, in the better ordering of their social state, to secure adequate dwellings, and that other essential of a true home life, a living wage. And that was a point at which they might see very clearly how social reform must mean religion, a willingness for sacrifice, a genuine endeavour after brotherhood in the community as a whole. They rejoiced to think that in the efforts of the coming time men and women would be working together in equal citizenship for the humanising of the social order and the attainment of high ideals. Referring to these addresses The Bournemouth Guardian says: "The pulpit holds an important place in our midst and can carry great weight, and such efforts as those made on this occasion and a previous series by Mr. Davis are most helpful."—At a Social Meeting of the congregation on Wednesday, March 13, a presentation of a silver inkstand and candlesticks was made to Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Thick, to commemorate their silver wedding day (January 28). Mrs. Thick was unfortunately prevented by indisposition from being present, but was well represented by her two daughters. The presentation was made by Mrs. Hood, widow of the Rev. Alfred Hood, who was the first minister of the congregation (1882-86) before the church was built. The Rev. V. D. Davis, who presided, said that for a year more than those twenty-five of their married life Mr. Thick had been Secretary, and they gratefully acknowledged how much they owed both to him and to Mrs. Thick for their loyal services to the church.

Liverpool District Missionary Association.—The Report of the Council for the year 1917, adopted at the Annual Meeting, March 9, refers with profound regret to the great loss sustained in the deaths of the Rev. H. W. Hawkes and the Rev. T. Lloyd Jones. The former, whose services to the District Churches were invaluable, had just been asked to become President of the Association. In addition to troubles consequent on the war, which has robbed the churches of so many workers, some of the congregations will probably have to face a period of extreme difficulty and uncertainty for other reasons, but the Council feel that the sense of corporate life and unity throughout the district has been growing steadily through the influence of combined religious conferences, united services, and other agencies, and that this will be an important asset for the future. The Missionary Sub-Committee's Report is extremely interesting, dealing as it does with the special efforts which have been made to deepen the religious life of the Churches and to strengthen their sense of corporate unity. The series of Religious Conferences which started in December, 1916, has been continued with remarkable success and appreciation. Stress has been laid upon the devotional service with which each conference has been opened, and the attendance at that service has been throughout of a highly satisfactory character. The conferences have taken place at Bootle, Ullet Road Church (Liverpool), St. Helens, Birkenhead, Hamilton Road Domestic Mission (Liverpool), Southport, and Mill Street Mission (Liverpool), although the last two do not, of course, come into this report. Special sermons on selected subjects were delivered in as many churches as possible, simultaneously, during last March and April. Birkenhead, Gateacre, Hope Street (Liverpool), and Southport decided to adopt this course at their morning services; Bootle, Chester, Crewe, St. Helens, Wallasey, Warrington, and West Kirby preferred the evening services. Each minister preached the sermons from his own point of view and in his own church, the general title of the series being 'The Message of a Free Church to a World in Travail.' It is felt that there was distinct profit in making the attempt, and that good seed was sown which, it is hoped, will bear fruit. The Sub-Committee advocate that the missionary work on which they are engaged should be continued on broad and generous, though economical lines, so that existing causes may be strengthened, and new causes, should such be entered upon, prosecuted with energy and enthusiasm for spiritual values in obedience to a common Master.

Manchester District Association.—The Annual Meetings of this Association were held on Saturday, March 16. In the afternoon there was a service in Cross Street Chapel, conducted by Dr. Estlin Carpenter, who preached from the text "We are God's fellow-workers." The Meeting of subscribers and friends of the Association was held in the evening in the Memorial Hall. Prayer was offered by the Rev. W. Whitaker. The President, Mr. Hugh J. Broadbent, moved the adoption of the Governing Body's Report, of which a summary appeared in our last issue. In the course of his remarks he made a sympathetic reference to the loss sustained only a few days previously by the death of Mr. George S. Woolley, a past President and a liberal subscriber to the funds; also to the decease of Mr. E. C. Harding during the week, in his 95th year. He, too, had been a prominent worker in the interests of the churches in the district in the past. Mr. T. Fletcher Robinson briefly seconded the motion, which was duly adopted. In response to a hearty word of welcome Dr. Carpenter, as President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, delivered an address full of encouragement. He pointed out that, notwithstanding the horrors, and demoralising effects in many way of war, and the evidence of much greed in our country and others, there never was such a concentration on high ideals. The trying conditions had not disturbed the fundamentals of our faith. Some chaplains had spoken of the bulk of the men in the army as "pagans." But the comradeship and sacrifice shown by them so freely indicated great reserves of Christian qualities upon which we might call in the future. The demand was for a practical religion, to supply which the churches were to give themselves more earnestly than in the past. The Rev. N. Anderton, in a striking and original speech, pleaded for a Spiritual Authority that would be imperative among us of the Free Churches, and be obeyed. There had been too complete a victory for liberty. Our word had been: Not an authority for Truth, but Truth for authority. But what was the content of Truth to us? We knew what we did not believe, did we know what we believed? He feared that doctrinal emptiness had much to do with the emptiness of churches. Were our beliefs such as commanded us? he asked. Worship was not central among us. We had cut ourselves away too much from the great stream of Christian devotional and emotional worship. We deeply needed a great compelling authority in our religious communion—the authority of the Spirit. The Rev. G. Randall Jones also stressed the need for worship, prayer, and the cultivation of the spiritual life. Mr. G. G. Armstrong, in moving a resolution of appreciation of Dr. Carpenter's visit and services, spoke of the need for watchfulness on the part of the churches in regard to the morals of the nation, and referred in strong terms to the recent action of the War Office relating to houses of prostitution abroad.

Manchester: Fallsworth.—On Sunday evening last the congregation of Dob Lane Chapel had the privilege of hearing Dr. Estlin Carpenter, who preached on "God is a spirit." His timely and prophetic utterance left behind an impression that will be long remembered.

North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission.—The 58th Annual Meeting of the Mission was held on Saturday last, March 16, in the Park Street Chapel, Chorley. The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. C. Flower of Bolton, who took as his text the words: "He taught them as one that had authority"; the supporter being the Rev. H. B. Hannah of Horwich. The Public Meeting was presided over by Mr. Jacob Jackson, the other speakers being Mrs. Haworth of Accrington, Mr. T. W. Waddington of Padiham, and the Rev. J. I. Jones of Hindley. Mrs. Haworth laid stress upon the value of the religious training of the young, and on the necessity for ensuring a proper environment for the adolescent. The second speaker insisted that the study of economics was insufficient for a wholesome and manly life, and that the something more which was needed, the churches and Sunday schools existed to impart. The Rev. Islan Jones pleaded for generous support of the Mission. At the Business Meeting a vote of sympathy was accorded to the widow of the Rev. T. J. Jenkins, who was a member of the Executive at the time of his death.

Pendleton.—The Annual Report of the Unitarian Church gives a list of forty-eight names on the Roll of Honour, including Miss C. G. Wigley (Military Hospital, Manchester). Ten of these have already given their lives for their country: Lieut. Harold F. Robinson,

BIRTH.

SANFORD.—On March 15, at Tunbridge Wells, the wife of Capt. George Christopher Sanford, R.E., of Castle Grove, Lancaster, a son.

MARRIAGE.

BLAKE—EVANS.—On the 21st inst., at Essex Church, Kensington, by the Rev. Priestley Evans, W. Harvey Blake, eldest son of W. F. Blake, of Bridge, South Petherton, to Gweneth Margaret, only daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Priestley Evans, of Bury, Lancs.

COVENTRY—WELLS.—On March 14, at Christ Church, Brondesbury, N.W., by the Rev. B. W. Taylor, M.A., Lieut. Frank Miles Coventry, R.G.A., son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Coventry of Pinecroft, Purley, to Ethel Mary, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Barber Wells of 107 Fordwych Road, West Hampstead, N.W.

DEATHS.

ATKINS.—On March 15, at a nursing home in Scarborough, Ethel Mary Atkins, third daughter of the late John Atkins, Hinckley, Leicestershire.

BAKER.—On March 17, at Parkstone, Lucy, eldest daughter of the late John Baker, Esq., North Street, Ilminster, in her 82nd year.

DALE.—Missing since May 3, 1917, now officially reported killed in action, Sergt. H. F. Dale, Leicesters, aged 21, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Dale, 5 Leamington Street, Leicester.

EDWARDS.—March 16, Rev. T. E. M. Edwards passed peacefully from his home at 1 Valley Road, Streatham, aged 77 years.

HARDING.—On March 14, at Eller Nook, Ambleside, and late of Manchester, Edward Charlton Harding, aged 95.

RATHBONE.—On March 19, at Green Bank, Liverpool, Emily Acheson, wife of the late William Rathbone, aged 85.

Lieut. Nello Barker, Acting Coy. Serjeant-Major Arthur Cotton, Corporal Harold Smith, Lance-Corporal H. Monaghan, Private John Cohoon, Private Albert Parrott, Private Frederick Reilly, Private William Rothwell, Private Robert Whitworth.

The Theistic Church.—The Rev. J. Tyssul Davis's addresses are being issued in leaflet form as "Theistic Sermons," the first of the series being a practical discussion of 'The National Importance of Personal Integrity.' The fact that it is not only what the individual does but what he thinks, aspires, hopes, and wills that is of such vital importance is clearly brought home to the mind of the reader, and we are reminded that the whole emphasis of the teaching of Jesus is upon the inner motive—the desire which is already an inward act before it ripens into the outward deed. The next sermon to be printed will be on the subject 'Can Man help God?'

Wallasey.—The special effort made by the congregation of the Memorial Church during the past few months to raise a sum of £500 has, up to the present, realised about £350, of which over £100 has been subscribed by the congregation. While thanking those friends in other congregations who have so generously responded to the appeal, the opportunity is taken of reminding those who have not yet replied, as well as informing others who have not been approached, that the Fund is still open and will be kept so for a short time longer, in the hope that the desired amount may be more nearly realised; failing which the scheme of much needed improvements will have to be proportionately curtailed. Subscriptions will be gratefully acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Mr. Llewelyn S. Rowlands, Stanley Cottage, Rake Lane, Wallasey, Cheshire.

Warwick.—The Rev. Gardner Preston concluded his ministry at the High Street Chapel on Sunday last. On the previous Thursday a meeting of the congregation was held, at which a testimonial in the form of a cheque was presented to Mr. Preston, accompanied by cordial good wishes towards himself and Mrs. Preston on their future work at Acton, and general expressions of regret at their departure.

* * THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, March 24.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. Dr. CHAS. HARGROVE.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. G. H. VANCE.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

ESSEX HALL, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A. Subject: "Duty of Cheerfulness."

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11 and 5.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. F. MADISON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Mr. JOHN BEGG; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Rev. T. P. SPEEDING.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. WILLIAM HENRY ROSE.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11, Rev. Dr. S. H. MELLONE; 6, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

OLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Mr. E. A. SMITH, B.Sc.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.15, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut. Col. BULLOCK.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. J. HUGHES; 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. EWBANK, B.A., B.D.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. CYRIL FLOWER, M.A.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. G. A. FERGUSON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD D.D. Sunday School, 3.

GOOD FRIDAY.

LONDON.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

March

24. Rev. W. H. ROSE of the Rhyl Street Domestic Mission.
31. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES.

April

7. Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.
14. Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.
Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY.

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,
Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

A Meeting of the Council will be held at ESSEX HALL on WEDNESDAY, MARCH 27, 1918. The President will take the Chair at 4 P.M.

Business.—(1) Report of the Executive Committee. (2) Annual Meeting Arrangements. (3) Nomination of Council and Committee.

Dr. CARPENTER will give an Address on 'Some Thoughts suggested by recent Visits to Congregations and Societies in different parts of the Country.'

By the Rules, Nominations for the Council and the Executive Committee should reach the SECRETARY at Essex Hall before MARCH 31.

SUSTENTATION FUND.

Application forms for the renewal of grants for the year beginning July 1 next will shortly be sent out to all Secretaries and Ministers of grant-aided congregations.

If a congregation which has not hitherto received a grant wishes to apply for one, the necessary form can be obtained from Mr. RONALD P. JONES, Treasurer, Sustentation Fund, Essex Hall, Essex Street, London, W.C.2.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL MANCHESTER.

Contains 23 Illustrations of this historic Nonconformist building, and those associated with it, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes, and an Introduction by the late Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Chapel. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY. No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4. (Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I. H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL. H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000

Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

WANTED, MISSIONARY for DOMESTIC MISSION in connection with the Great Meeting, Leicester, capable of taking Boys' Sunday School. Salary 120% to 150%.—Apply Mr. W. G. GIBBS, 19 Lower Hastings Street, Leicester.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BRIGHTON.—TO LET, Furnished, SITTING-ROOM AND BEDROOM. Near Station and trams. Very clean and sunny. 15s. a week. Vacant now.—W. care of INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Miscellaneous.

IRISH PILLOW LINEN, sufficient quantity for six full-sized Pillow-cases, only 14s. 6d., postage 5d. Good reliable quality. Write for this month's Bargain Catalogue, post free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2% on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) WANTED. Any condition. Now worth up to £15 per set. Strictly genuine. MAXIMUM VALUE PAID by return, or offers made. If not accepted goods returned post free. Call or post to the oldest and most reliable firm; satisfaction assured. Platinum Scrap, 16% per ounce.—I. RAYBURN & CO., 105 MARKET STREET, MANCHESTER.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT. Cash or offer by return. Before selling make sure of their value by writing for FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any artificial teeth.—E. LEWIS, 29 London Street, Southport, Lancs. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines; extra lines 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenaeum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate, Saturday, March 23, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3952.
NEW SERIES, No. 1055.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	97
EASTER'S REVEILLE	98
VERSE: SPRING, 1918	98

CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Church and the Ministry	98
Unitarianism and the Divinity of Jesus	100
BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSO- CIATION	100

NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS	101
BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	102
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	102

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

THE Archbishop's letter on Monday to his brethren in the Church emphasises the importance and worth, at this time of intense national activity, of prayer and steady confident reliance upon Divine aid; and while many devout-minded persons in the land may find other ways than his of access to the Source of inward strength, surely all will realise the wisdom of the instinct that turns us thither. And some of his words seem to us eminently suitable for everyone to ponder. He says: "Our hearts are full. The peril strengthens us in firm-knit purpose and stern resolve that, God helping us, the cause of righteousness and truth, the cause of liberty and future peace, shall not at our hands suffer loss; that the blood of our dearest and most honoured shall not have been spilt in vain, but shall be the seed of fresh life to the peoples of the world." In that mood we shall help one another to sustain with high courage, and even with manly cheer, the worst news that comes; and to wait for better news that will certainly come ere long.

* * *

INTERESTING announcements were made at the Council on Wednesday regarding the Anniversary Meetings of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association in Whit-week. The Rev. Arthur W. Fox, M.A., the appointed preacher, is to be congratulated upon a well-deserved honour. 'The Power of Religion in Upbuilding the Life of the Nation' is the subject which will engage attention at the public meeting, when Dr. Carpenter, the Rev. Bernard J. Snell, M.A., B.Sc., Mr. R. M. Montgomery, K.C., and the Rev. Henry Gow, B.A., will be the speakers. It is usual to invite one of the speakers at the public meeting from outside the denomination, and Mr. Snell will receive a most cordial welcome. The Essex Hall Lecture will be delivered by Mr. G. C. Montefiore, the distinguished Jewish scholar and writer, who will lecture on 'The Place of Judaism among the Religions of the World.' It is gratifying to learn that at the Annual Business Meeting Mr. Richard D. Holt, M.P., will be proposed as President of the Association in succession to Dr. Carpenter. Mr. Holt can claim a long ancestral connection with the office which his great grandfather filled in 1834.

* * *

MR. J. C. WARREN writes to express his hearty concurrence with the refusal of the French Protestants to participate in the proposed international religious conference. He cannot conceive how we can be expected by our Presidents to hold out a friendly hand to German divines who have not sought to stop the cruelties and outrages perpetrated by their Government, while some have actually written in defence of them. He says: "To meet them, with their words of praise for their Government's action still ringing in our ears, to talk with them of Christian union and brotherly love, seems to me in the highest degree discreditable and hypocritical." No doubt our friend is not alone in his attitude; our remarks last week on the decision of the French should, we think, clear us from any supposition of failure to appreciate the feelings of righteous indignation which dictate it.

* * *

WE recently quoted some incisive words in which Dr. Washington Gladden traced the sources of the ill-will amongst men that leads at last to war, in the shocking tenets still taught by orthodoxy. Our readers may be interested to know that Dr. Gladden, who is now in his 82nd year, last November resumed temporary charge of his old pulpit at Columbus, Ohio, and preached twice each Sunday till well into the New Year. An attack of paralysis has greatly impeded his work, but he continues (says Unity, Chicago), in the fighting line, writing valiant verse when he cannot preach, and heartening all the Allied forces in their great effort. "Sons of France, Britons brave and true, Belgian martyrs, Slavs fired with visions, Italian lovers, dark brothers from Japan"—such are his words of greeting in a recent poem; and here is the last stanza:—

Now, hands all round, our troth we plight to rid the world of lies,
To fill all hearts with truth and trust and willing sacrifice;
To free all lands from hate and spite and fear, from strand to strand;
To make all nations neighbours and the world one Fatherland!

* * *

IN an article upon Matthew Henry's Chapel by Mr. W. W. Tasker, which has just appeared in the Chester Archaeological Society's Journal, we find a passage which gives a glimpse of transition to Unitarian theology in the middle of the eighteenth century and the Puritan view in regard to amusements from which Unitarians had not then freed themselves. "Mr. John Chidlaw was co-pastor with Mr. John Gardner for the fourteen years ending in 1765 and on the death of the latter he became sole minister of the [Matthew Henry's] Chapel and held that office until 1798. He preached and published a very remarkable sermon in the chapel on November 8, 1772, entitled 'A Serious Call to regard God's Judgment,' on the ground explosion of gunpowder on November 5, 1772, under a large building in Watergate Street Row, in which was being held a Puppet Show [when 123 persons were killed or injured]. The preacher believed it to be a judgment from God upon the wickedness of the people for attending such entertainments and a reminder for the citizens generally to lead better lives." Mr. Chidlaw was buried in the chapel yard, and beside the tombstone a small tablet was erected ten years ago with the inscription "This stone was restored....Dec. 1908 in memory of the first Socinian minister of this Chapel, co-pastor with Mr. John Gardner, 1751-1765, sole pastor 1765-1798. His Theology caused the Trinitarian Secession, 1768 [of Independents from the Chapel]."

EASTER'S REVEILLE.

WITH every dawn, whether of a new day or of a new season of sunshine and earth's delight, we are called to arise into newness of life. Such is the appeal now made to us, an appeal which is deepened and strengthened for many, if not for all, by the traditions that cluster about these days of Christian commemoration and sacred festival. But even where traditions count for little the touch of great Nature cannot be wholly escaped. The voice of spring, now close at hand, now far withdrawn, yet again and finally irresistible and triumphant, bids the slumbering fields and coppices and lane-sides put on their beautiful garments. The sweet sisterhood of the woods, primroses, anemones, violets, are waking once more; buds innumerable swell to bursting; the winter sown wheat gleams in bright assurance that the worst rigours are past, and that the way opens henceforth straight onward to harvest's joy. No less truly, if as yet but dimly heard by some, Easter's reveille sounds in the chambers of the soul.

"Sleepers, wake!" It is the call of the Truth that sets free the captives of the senses, the prisoners of ignorance, fear and doubt. It is the call of the Spirit, of the Life and Love everlasting. No mortal, indeed, has vision so strong as to bear at all times the full light of the mystery of this existence which we share, the revelation that shines through a world so vast, so ancient, quite beyond our understanding except in little part, yet persuading most the wisest that all is orderly here and ever has been and shall be—so flooded with energy, its seeming-solid materials so elusive, its inner realities so spiritual and persistent. Doubtless, it is for good practical ends that the range of our attention is usually confined to limits far within the circumference of the full Fact supreme. Yet, certainly, our daily practice itself will shrink and shrivel into little worth if we fail to discern, at least now and then, the Infinite that besets us on every hand, and finds an answering image somewhere in our depths, beneath the superficial ripples of ordinary experience.

"Sleepers, wake!" That voice of the Spirit comes now with witching influence to young lives who are but as forest seedlings yet, tender and untried, but who may even at this very season become aware, if they will, of the higher realms of duty, the greater victories, the finer realms of feeling. But it comes also, and with peculiar power, to those who in the buffetings of the years have become (as they know too well) somewhat hard and gnarled in nature, who have confessedly fallen somewhat from their "first love," but who (they would fain believe) are happily not wholly beyond the possibility of putting forth new blossoms of hope and tenderness. And if there be a soul that has become quite deaf to the music of things, heard on every hand by kindlier people, even to such a soul the offer now comes of escape from the fetters of mammon's den and sensual slavery, into the Paradise of creatures truly blest, who walk every day in the liberty of the sons of God.

The voice of the Life and Love eternal, with whose Being, holy and hidden, are for ever bound up that of all our Beloved, seen or unseen, comes in Easter's reveille. Hearing it, we fling open our doors to the sound, our windows to the light of the dawn, and find ourselves wondrously in the presence of a Day that has banished night and Gethsemane. Our eyes that were so holden with grief, are dried by the Hand Divine, and whereas we were blind now at last we see. That Truth supreme, which is beyond all conception greater, shows itself beyond all yearning lovelier and more gracious than we ever dreamed. Our soul wakes in a clasp embrace that was, indeed, long around us; but we knew it not. Arising to new joys, serene and pure, we gird on the armour of a new faith, proof evermore against all that can strike against it. We know that we have "passed from Death to Life," because we—even we, with all our faults, ignorances, failures—do "love the brethren."

SPRING, 1918.

Soon to our English islands will the Spring,

Come with quick footsteps and with eager breath.

Come then, and coming, let us hear thee sing

Of love, and of his triumph over death. Bring back the lilac's loveliness, the grace

Of lilies of the valley and the stream. Laburnum's foaming gladness, and that space

Which bluebells make a heaven where they dream.

For those we loved, the gallant and the young,

For whom our hopes had shaped the coming years,

Are gone. The silver harp-string is unstrung,

The future blank, the past a blur of tears. But Spring, thou comest now to English isles,

Breaking the secret of the earth and sea, And those brave hearts are burning in thy smiles,

And those young souls flash into fire in thee,

R. H. U. B.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[We submit a further selection from the letters which still flow in upon this subject, and regret that several of much importance are too long for insertion this week. Again we appeal for brevity which present conditions render imperative.—EDITOR of INQUIRER.]

THE CHURCHES AND THE MINISTRY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Though the future of our churches rests with the rising generation, it may not be out of place for a veteran in the ministry to press upon the attention of his younger brethren the extreme importance of what is generally known as pastoral work—a subject already referred to in your correspondence. That the most serious labour of thought and feeling should be given to preparation for the public services of religion goes without saying; and it is probable that a man of unusual spiritual power, and with the gift of speech, will draw together an assembly of hearers. But I do not believe that even the most gifted preacher can by preaching alone establish a strong and permanent congregation, or meet all the spiritual wants of those to whom he ministers. This is accomplished chiefly by pastoral work, by which I do not mean public work of a different kind, such as attending meetings and committees, though this too has its place, but work in the homes, or immediately connected with the homes, of the members of his congregation. The simplest form of this work is visiting. It is often objected that visiting is pure waste of time. It is true that occasionally a visit may seem to begin and end in commonplace; but even in such a case the visit is of value in establishing kindly relations and preparing the way for more profitable intercourse at a future time. But quite as frequently a visit happens to be most opportune, and leads to an opening of heart in relation to the deeper things of life. And, on the average, conversation falls naturally and easily into an interchange of thought on important questions affecting belief or conduct. The minister must pay such visits, not as an official, but as a friend; nevertheless, as a friend whose spiritual calling makes it easy for the visited to open their hearts, and seek his sympathy. In such intercourse he may receive more than he gives, gaining a more penetrating insight into the workings of human nature, and suggestions which may be elaborated in pulpit utterance.

Besides this ordinary visiting, the frequency of which must be determined by various local circumstances, there are special occasions of joy or sorrow or sickness when a visit is expected, and deeply valued. I have known of an almost bitter disappointment when a minister has failed to come, and pour some consoling sympathy on bereavement. It is indeed trying, and may seem to him like bordering on presumption, when a young man pays his first visit to a house of mourning. But let him go in faith, nothing doubting. Genuine sympathy, flowing from a devout heart, is always welcome, and is not soon forgotten. So, too, in visiting the sick, one who feels that he is no better than those whom he visits is naturally shy about offering to read and pray with them; but if the visit is that of a loving friend, such offer is often expected, and almost always welcomed; and from the communion of hearts in prayer the minister brings away with him thoughts and feelings that raise him above the ordinary level of his life, and has the happy sense that, through his unworthiness, some benediction has been given.

Another most important duty is connected with children. To one who loves children (and one who does not love them has at best a doubtful call to the Christian ministry) it is easy to gain their affection, and through that affection to acquire some influence in the unfolding of their character. It has been suggested in your columns that there might be a separate children's church. This might have excellent results, though I think something could be said in favour of children's attendance at public worship with their parents. But short of a separate church, there ought to be meetings of children held at a convenient time, in which simple religious instruction should be given by the minister; and these should be concluded with a short prayer suited to the lesson of the day. As intellect and knowledge develop there should be a separate class for those who are passing out of childhood, in which theological instruction suited to their capacity should be given; and in this the chief aim should be to train the spiritual judgment, and enable the learners to give a reasonable form to their intuitive faith. It is well to encourage questions, so as to become acquainted with the thoughts, perplexities, and aspirations of the young folk; and opportunities should be afforded of private conversation, if such be desired. In all this there must be a true and tender sympathy, and even if questions and moods should sometimes appear to be morbid, they must be met with loving care, so that higher and sounder principles may be gradually instilled. In this way the minister is brought into vital contact with the growing mind, and is enabled to say naturally and easily many things on which it would be difficult to touch in an ordinary visit. In all efforts of this kind the cultivation of the religious and moral life should be the supreme aim. The theology which is the reasoned expression of the soul's deepest convictions points to divine ideals, and these should be set forth with a loving appeal to strive for their attainment. Attention should be directed to some of the many works which breathe the deepest spirit of Christian devotion; and it might be well to take one of these works, and read together passages which express the soul's aspirations, and set forth most clearly the solemn issues of life.

This course of instruction should be followed by a service of dedication, answering to confirmation in the Church of England. Such a service at the most susceptible period of life, when new hopes and powers are rapidly developing, may make a deep and lasting impression, and afford some satisfaction to that craving for religious fellowship with which the heart of the young is sometimes full, and the denial of which may have unhappy results. In this service not only should the young people be received, after proper exhortation, into full membership in the Christian Church, but they should themselves make a declaration, not of their acceptance of a creed, but of their hope, and desire to fulfill worthily, with the help of God, the solemn responsibilities of the Christian life. Such a declaration is of high importance, bringing home to the declarant the seriousness of the step which is taken, and making him realise more clearly the obligation which rests upon him of being true to the faith which he professes. I fear I have trespassed too far upon your space, but hope that these suggestions may be found helpful. Our need, more than ever at the present time, is to save the children.

JAMES DRUMMOND.

Oxford.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I have been very much interested in the correspondence in your columns on the subject of 'The Churches and the Ministry.' One fact that emerges from this correspondence is that the machinery for producing the well-equipped minister is in existence, and in good working order. Another fact is that the material for it to work upon is running short. In the circumstances, it seems needless or useless to try to improve the machinery. Until an ample supply of material is forthcoming, all improvements in machinery will be in vain. The best course appears to be for Unitarians to concentrate their energies on supplying the material.

It is worse than useless to indulge in recriminations, or to try to apportion blame for the present unhappy state of affairs. In my opinion, as a convert from orthodoxy, Unitarian ministers have nothing to fear from comparison, in regard to zeal, devotion, and ability, with ministers of other denominations. It is not they who are to blame. Who, then, is to blame? Speaking as a layman, I have no hesitation in saying,

The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves.

We are passing through a period of religious depression, which appears to have overtaken all the churches. The melancholy truth is that, at the present time, people do not care enough about religion to make the sacrifices a religious life entails; and Unitarians have been seized by the general feeling of indifference. There are too many drones, and too few workers, in our hive. We throw too heavy a burden on our ministers, and respond too little to their efforts. If we are to survive as a Church, it is necessary that we should all become workers for the cause we profess to have at heart. There is no reason for despair, for we have the remedy in our own hands; but to apply it calls for high courage and great faith. The intensely spiritual nature of Unitarianism renders it extremely difficult to live up to; but to make up our minds to the resolute endeavour seems to be the only way to remedy the state of affairs brought about by our general slackness.

Is there any future prospect for Unitarianism? I think there is a great future for our faith, if only we work for it. When this nation had once before sunk into a "fen of stagnant waters," it was the spirit of Milton, the great Unitarian, that Wordsworth invoked to "raise us up." Furthermore, after the present revolt against creed and dogma and ritual, Unitarianism bids fair to come into its own.—Yours, &c.

G. WALKER.

Boroughbridge, Yorks.

March 18, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Although I do not recollect the method suggested by Miss Green to fill our churches having ever been tried, I suppose few of us have not from time to time done our best to induce our friends, at least, to come and see what our services are like. They may have adopted our suggestion once or even twice, but must we not in all honesty confess that at the conclusion of our efforts we were painfully reminded of the proverb, "You may lead a horse to the water...."? We may have known for a certainty that these people held the same views as the preacher, whose sermon they enjoyed hearing; yet when we pressed for a reason for their not coming again, we always got the same answer,....yes, the same answer as is given by our school children and our young men or girls for their reluctant attendance at our churches: "Because the services are so dull." And that word "dull" was aptly defined in this regard by the small boy who said, "It is so jolly slow listening to someone else doing all the jawing for you." Was there some such idea in Stopford Brooke's mind when he introduced a beautiful litany into his services at Bedford Chapel? Ask any member of our churches where the Ten Services are used which they like best, and the answer is invariably: the Seventh and the Eighth. In these the congregation take a part.

Speaking generally, I believe our weakness is in our services. In a few weeks' time, many of our ministers will meet in London. Would they not entertain the idea of a discussion on the value of a Liturgical Service? If after the war our young men should ever come to our churches, they will want something different from what we could offer them now. Unless they are Roman Catholics, the great majority of these men when they enter the army are marked "C. of E." They are now getting used to taking a part themselves in the services they attend: they cannot reasonably be expected in the future either to be thrilled by the thought of taking the part of a silent listener, or to find enjoyment in it.—Yours, &c.,

EMILY COBB.

Hampstead.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Perhaps you can find space for one who takes a different point of view from that hitherto uttered. All your correspondents appear to take it for granted that the Church as at present constituted represents the final development of religious organisation. This I venture to doubt. It may be true of those who only seek to interpret a past revelation, but will it be so of those your journal appeals to—the liberal and progressive section?

We now know what our chief college regards as the indispensable equipment of a minister, the primary condition being a more thorough acquaintance of the Bible, and secondly, some knowledge of religious history and philosophy. In other words the chief emphasis appears to be laid upon the interpretation of a past revelation, qualified, of course, by the knowledge of to-day.

By this training the student finds admission into a special profession claiming exclusive rights and duties, to mark which he wears a special garb and owns a distinct title. Furthermore, the profession is backed up by endowments, the emoluments from which would not be possible but for the existing land laws and monopoly system whereby two profits have to be earned—the safe one for the investor, the unsafe and variable one for the worker. From my intercourse with men, it is my conviction, which I ask pardon for uttering, that this state of things is the great stumbling block to progress in religion at the present day. The more men read and think the more they resent it, and they simply absent themselves from organised religion.

What are or have been the chief duties of ministers? The conduct of religious services, education, almsgiving, the visitation of the sick. Education has been taken out of their hands, almsgiving will be more and more unnecessary as social justice prevails, and as the fear of death is passing away, the sick generally prefer the doctor to the minister. There remains, then, the chief primary one of promoting the religious spirit. I put it this way because I think the conception of worship will change as the idea of an anthropomorphic God loses its power. Can the religious spirit be better perpetuated by men who separate themselves from their fellows, or by those who identify themselves in work and life with their brethren? If the object be fellowship and brotherhood, there can be but one answer.

The experiences of this war time have convinced many of the best employers that short hours and large production are compatible. After reconstruction there is likely to be leisure for all workers for the cultivation of their mental and spiritual faculties, if they feel any urge that way. The religious man or woman, therefore, who feels a call to teach or lead his fellows, while taking his share of ordinary labour, will find opportunity for the necessary studies, as will the science or nature lover. In his teaching there need be no reservations on account of financial considerations or the necessity to conform to creeds, while his hearers will know he has no professional interests to serve. Now I do not mean lay preaching (that goes with professionalism). I rather mean expert preaching—the thorough knowledge that comes from the love of the subject and the constant communion with the unseen.

There already exist fellowships and societies that conduct their meetings on these lines; they do not hear the same man at every meeting, but each speaker is thoroughly at home in his special subject. Many of these societies, it is true, lack the religious spirit, but that is owing to the religious spirit still feeling itself bound to the conventional churches. In point of quality and composition the addresses will, however, compare favourably with pulpit utterances, and as a rule have far more educational value.

The theory that Reality is but one substance, and that what we call material and spiritual are but two aspects of the same thing is one that is making way to-day, and it removes many difficulties. If it be true, then the division of human interests into religious and secular is a mistake and full of harm; we want a religion for the whole man, for every day in the week, and not one that can only be created in the special atmosphere of a consecrated building. Religion will not die, but when it is realised that God indwells in man here and now as in the past, then its expression will be adapted to the needs of the time.—Yours, &c.

EDWARD CAPLETON.

16 Highbury New Park, N.5.

UNITARIANISM AND THE DIVINITY OF JESUS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Let me assure Mr. Lummis that the last sentence in my letter was irrelevant, and therefore it ought not to have been written. What seemed to me an extraordinary misrepresentation of Unitarianism brought to my memory some painful experiences, and it was to these that, inappropriately, I referred.

Mr. Lummis says, "The belief that Jesus was a mere man is associated with Theodore Parker," and refers to a statement that "we are all Parkerians now." Of course I cannot decide what Mr. Street meant by this statement; but, in view of old controversies, he probably meant that we now rested our faith on spiritual evidence, and not on the records of miracle, and therefore, by implication, that our belief in the manifestation of God in our humanity was higher and clearer than before. I am not as well acquainted as perhaps I ought to be with the writings of Parker, that great hero of faith and righteousness; but I believe that the doctrine that God was manifest in humanity, and capitally in one man, though not expressed in these words, was the very centre and substance of Parker's teaching, and that his intense faith in this made him so vehement against what he regarded as the unbelief and superstition of the popular theology, and enabled him to acquiesce without disquiet in negations, some of which have since been widely accepted in communities deemed orthodox. Fully to substantiate this interpretation of Parker would demand far too much space; but a few significant phrases may be quoted. "God is immanent in man; yes, in men—most in the greatest, truest, best men." "God is in history, slowly getting incarnated." "The eternal God, ever acting in Man." "The perfection of Man, or oneness with God." Christianity "exhorts men to a divine life." "The Spirit of God in the soul." Christianity "promises... oneness with God, and inspiration from him." The end the highest religion proposes is "to unite man with God, till he thinks God's thought, which is Truth, feels God's feeling, which is Love, wills God's will, which is eternal Right; thus finding God in the sense wherein he is not far from any one of us; becoming one with Him, and so partaking the divine nature." "The divine spirit incarnates itself in man." "The breath of the Father is on him." "The Spirit dwelt in him [Christ] bodily. His was the highest inspiration, his the divinest revelation." "It seems to me, that, if we always obeyed the law God has written on our hearts, the decisions of reason, of conscience, and of faith, would be as infallible in their action as the instinct of the bee and the law of gravitation now are. But no man is in this state. We are not one with God as Christ was: so we are in doubt and fear. The best and wisest now feel this most deeply. Jesus alone felt none of it." "Christianity is the hope of the world, the desire of all nations." He contends indeed that Jesus was deficient in knowledge, and accepted some of the intellectual errors of his time; but he makes him unique in his oneness with God and his manifestation of the divine Spirit and Life. People have been far too fond of dwelling on Parker's negations, which he may sometimes have pressed too far, and have not perceived that these were simply the dropping of temporary forms of thought, which he shook off from his exalted spiritual faith. I need hardly say that for such a doctrine I entirely repudiate Coleridge's nickname.—Yours, &c.,

JAMES DRUMMOND.

Oxford, March 18, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—When the Rev. E. W. Lummis announces that it is clear that "there have been and still are representative Unitarians who believe in some sense that God is manifest in humanity" he is making a very belated discovery, which those who know Unitarians better than he apparently does consider to be an absolutely universal belief among those who hold that faith. Almost all, but probably not quite all, will also agree that "His capital manifestation is in one man." But Mr. Lummis is evidently happiest and most in his element in his second paragraph dealing with philosophical subtleties such as we find in the Athanasian creed, which, whether true or not, seem to most Unitarians negligible, and more suited to the typical mediæval schoolmen who discussed how many angels can dance on the point of a needle.—Yours &c.,

ALFRED WILSON.

THE Unitarian and Free Christian Peace Fellowship have sent the following Memorial to the Prime Minister: "This Fellowship believes that a just and lasting Peace is never likely to be achieved by continued fighting, and having regard to the terrible slaughter, the destruction of the means of subsistence, and the threatened ruin of civilisation entailed in a continuance of the war, and convinced that the belligerent peoples have no sufficient reason for the prolongation of this suicidal strife, respectfully urges upon the Government the desirability of at once opening negotiations for the purpose of bringing about a meeting of the representatives of all the belligerent Governments in order to try and arrange the terms of an honourable peace."—(President) Stanley A. Mellor; (Secretary) Walter M. Long.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE Council met at Essex Hall, on Wednesday, March 27, when the Report of the Executive Committee was presented. The President, Dr. Estlin Carpenter, also gave an address on his recent visits to congregations in different parts of the country, a report of which will be given next week. The following are portions of the Report of the Committee:—

Finance.—On the death of Mr. Howard Chatfield Clarke, Mr. George W. Brown, who for many years has been a valued member of the Finance Committee, very kindly undertook to act as Treasurer of the Association until the annual meeting. The income for the year 1917 was £5,253. Compared with the previous year there was a decrease in the amount received in subscriptions of £313; an increase of £214 from investments (including the repayment of income tax); collections yielded £537, an increase of £41; contributions from Home Camps work, £285, a decrease of £95; sales of publications £401, an increase of £49. The expenditure for the year was £4,702. Compared with 1916, there was an increase of £230 for home missionary work; £161 for colonial and foreign work; £105 for printing and binding books. £354 was expended in Home Camps work; £290 was contributed to the War Bonus Fund for Ministers.

Home Mission Work.—Grants toward necessary expenditure in repairs to chapel buildings have been made in several cases. Towards the salaries of ministers and the payment of pulpit supplies, grants amounting to £877 were voted at the meeting of the Committee, March 13, 1918. The difficulty of securing the services of educated and capable ministers is increasing; and the problem is full of perplexity. There are about thirty vacant pulpits at the present time, and there are only about a dozen ministers available to fill them. Several small congregations might quite well conduct religious services among themselves, with the occasional help of visiting laymen and ministers.

The autumnal meetings of the Association at Padiham were well attended, and they afforded encouragement and inspiration to the group of Unitarian congregations in North Lancashire. The experiment of holding meetings of the Association in smaller towns, where there are several congregations in close proximity, was proved very successful on several occasions.

The Missionary Agent, the Rev. T. P. Spedding, has been occupied in various ways with Home Camps work. In the late autumn he devoted special attention to the Church at Moss Side, Manchester, and by his efforts the congregation were encouraged to make a fresh start with a minister of their own, the Rev. H. C. Horsley being appointed. There were difficulties in connection with the churches at Devonport, Diss, Filby and Yarmouth which have called for visits in recent weeks. The Pioneer Preachers Hostel, of which Mr. Spedding is the active secretary, has also demanded attention.

The Committee are deeply indebted to the President of the Association for the invaluable services he has rendered in preaching and addressing meetings in all parts of the country. Dr. Carpenter's list of engagements has exceeded those of any former occupant of the office, and the Association has had not a few devoted presidents who have given largely of their thought and time to its work.

Scotland.—The services at Perth and Stenhousemuir are conducted on alternate Sundays by the Rev. E. T. Russell; lay preachers take the services when he is absent. Mr.

Russell lectured on week days at Dalkeith, Falkirk, Hawick, Musselburgh and Stonehouse; but owing to the war and the weather the attendances were small. He will resume his open air missionary work in April. At Aberdeen the congregation have appointed the Rev. Henry Dawtrey to succeed the late Rev. Lucking Tavener, but this has left the Free Religious Movement at Dundee without a minister. The Rev. T. S. Pagesmith, after a valiant but fruitless attempt to put new life and hope into the small congregation at Kirkcaldy, has resigned his ministry in Scotland. Grants in aid of the salaries of ministers have been made as follows: Aberdeen £95, Dundee £85, Glasgow (Ross Street) £80. At Aberdeen there is interest to pay on a building debt; at Ross Street, Glasgow, income is derived from an endowment: this accounts for the variations in the grants. The sum of £50 was expended during 1917 in providing a War Bonus for Unitarian ministers in Scotland.

The Scottish Unitarian Association received financial assistance from the McQuaker Fund towards the cost of publishing The Scottish Unitarian, the travelling expenses of lay preachers, the ministers' fraternal meetings, and for a series of lectures at Dunfermline. The Rev. L. Jenkins Jones, who succeeded Mr. Alex. MacLaren as secretary, is endeavouring to organise more effective Unitarian missionary work in Scotland. The religious services and lectures by Dr. Carpenter at Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh, and Glasgow early in April are sure to prove an inspiration to the ministers and congregations in Scotland.

Publications.—The long promised new Chant Book 'Psalms and Canticles for Public Worship,' compiled and edited by the Rev. V. D. Davis, is now at the binders: it will be published at a shilling, and congregations ordering a number of copies will be supplied at ninepence. 'The Way of Life,' a series of New Testament studies in two volumes, by the Rev. Dr. James Drummond, is also at the binders, and delivery is expected in a few days. In the Modern Handbooks of Religion, 'The Ethics and Theology of the Old Testament,' by the Rev. Arthur W. Fox, is all in type, and it is hoped to publish the volume before Whitsuntide. The 'Unitarian Pocket Almanac' and the 'Essex Hall Year Book' were published in 1918 as in former years, but at a very much increased cost to the Association.

During 1917 grants of books and tracts were made to ministers, congregations, postal missions, and individual correspondents as follows: British Isles, 1,789 books and 15,737 tracts; colonial and foreign, 119 books and 1,363 tracts: valued at £169. Many letters are received at Essex Hall speaking in terms of warm appreciation of the literature which has thus freely been circulated by the Association. A number of soldiers at the front and in the Home Camps have applied for books and tracts explanatory of Unitarian Christianity.

Colonial and Foreign.—The missionary work in Italy, formerly under the superintendence of the late Rev. G. Conte, is now carried on by Mrs. Conte, with whom is associated Professor M. Puglisi and the Hon. R. Murri. The American Unitarian Association has in past years made a grant of £160, and the British and Foreign Unitarian Association has added £40. The chief work, while the war continues, is the publication of the Review, La Riforma Italiana. The Unitarian churches in Canada continue to receive generous support from the American Unitarian Association. Towards the salary of the Rev. E. J. Bowden, Victoria, B.C., the committee have made a grant of £50, and to that of the Rev. H. Westwood, Winnipeg, £50. The congregation at Wellington, N.Z., continues to make progress under the ministry of the Rev. G. E. Hale to whom a grant of £90 has been made for the year.

The Khasi Hills Unitarian Mission stations have been placed under the direction and control of the Committee and missionaries of the Sadharan Brahmo Samaj. The grant of £75 in aid of the work will be continued for the present, and will be paid to the treasurer of the Samaj at Calcutta. The Rev. Nilmani Chakrabarti is visiting the Khasi Hills and explaining to the workers the new arrangements. The son of the late Rev. David Edwards, who was educated at Calcutta at the expense of the Association, is now engaged in missionary work. He will receive his instructions from Mr. Chakrabarti: Mr. D. N. Mitra, the Indian student at Manchester College, Oxford, sailed for India, December 19, 1917; the Association paid the expenses of his journey to Calcutta.

Lawrence House.—The statement of income to December 31, 1917, shows that donations were received amounting to £6,968 (including £341 from America). Of this sum, £5,475 was invested and the dividends during 1917 amounted to £259. Omitting shillings and pence, builders' accounts were £826, furnishing the Hostel and rooms at Essex Hall, £380, rent and rates £132, booklets and Bulletins to men in the army or navy £256, household expenses £57. A balance of £99 was carried to 1918. The Lawrence House 'Bulletin' was posted in December to about six thousand men on active service connected with our churches and schools; and this link with home has been greatly appreciated. The next number of the 'Bulletin,' edited by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, will be issued about the end of June. The Hostel has proved a boon to many visitors. In January, 134 beds were used; in February, 119. A larger proportion of men came for one night only. The Committee are greatly indebted to the Matron for her assiduous labours which are often exacting and tiring, and to the ladies who give their afternoons to the Hostel that they may welcome visitors and give the matron a rest.

Lists of men killed in the war were received from a considerable number of ministers and secretaries of churches; and to the nearest relative a letter of appreciation and sympathy signed by Dr. Carpenter, President of the Association, and by Mrs. Sydney Martineau, Chairman of Lawrence House, was forwarded, along with a copy of the booklet, 'For those who Mourn.' Nearly five hundred letters and booklets have been sent out, and the very grateful acknowledgments received from parents, wives, brothers, and sisters of the fallen are evidence that the action of the Committee was wise and gracious.

The Report concluded with these words:

The world-struggle now proceeding in such tragic form overshadows our lives and makes it difficult for us to think of anything else. A sifting process is at work among men and nations, and sooner or later the chaff will be blown away out of churches as well as out of human life. The hour of danger and difficulty is the testing time of our principles and of our constancy in upholding them; and in that hour the brave spirit and the wide vision are most surely needed. In the immediate future, unless the chaplains at the front and all sorts of people are reading the signs of the times aright, a free religious faith will have new opportunities in the world; and increased obligations will be thrust upon those who cherish an unflinching trust in God, and an unconquerable love of righteousness and of goodwill among men.

NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS.

[A short Notice in this column does not preclude a review in a later issue.]

Bosanquet (Bernard), D.C.L. SOME SUGGESTIONS IN ETHICS. Macmillan. 248 pp., index, 6s. n.

Nine short and lucid chapters, in the key of the author's Gifford Lectures, but with distinctly practical aims in the present situation. There is much acuteness and force in his discussion of 'The Growing Repugnance to Punishment,' and of the right attitude to 'Stupidity.' The book may be soon read, but the argument demands long pondering.

Boutroux (Emile), D.Litt. THE RELATION BETWEEN THOUGHT AND ACTION. Clarendon Press. 32 pp., 3s. n.

This is the celebrated French philosopher's 'Herbert Spencer Lecture' delivered last October at Oxford. The subject is considered "from the German and from the Classical point of view." Starting with Kant, he finds an absolute dualism in the German type of teaching on the subject, thought and action being entirely exterior to each other—with disastrous consequences in the practical field. But as Plato and others long ago showed, man lives by feeling also, and feeling at its best rises supreme in regard to thought and action, and forms a natural link between them, a medium in which lie the "common principles of the highest thought and of the most generous action."

Duclaux (Mary). A SHORT HISTORY OF FRANCE FROM CÆSAR'S INVASION TO THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO. London, T. Fisher Unwin. 342 pp., 10s. 6d. n.

An admirable brief narrative, written in the vivid, sympathetic style characteristic of Madame Duclaux's writings, full of literary charm and comprising an astonishing amount of information. "En toute chose, considérez les origines," is her motto, and to its roots in the past she rapidly traces the soul of "La France éternelle." There are four excellent maps.

Fisher (Right Hon. H. A. L.). EDUCATIONAL REFORM. Clarendon Press. 101 pp., 1s.

A handy and timely collection of Mr. Fisher's admirable speeches, with synopsis of the Bill now before Parliament.

Fleure (H. J.). HUMAN GEOGRAPHY IN WESTERN EUROPE. Williams & Norgate. 263 pp., index, 5s. n.

Anthropological studies, mostly outlined before 1914, in class work at Aberystwyth, but new-pointed by the struggle among the competing races in the war. Readers will find the book educative alike in science and world politics; it is eminently readable and clear.

Flood (J. M.). IRELAND: ITS SAINTS AND SCHOLARS. London, T. Fisher Unwin. 118 pp., 2s. 6d. n.

A companion to the author's 'Ireland: its Myths and Legends,' dealing with the Early Christian Period in the same manner as the pagan period had been treated in the previous volume. The book is well illustrated and has a chapter on 'Early Christian Art in Ireland.'

Forsyth (P. T.), M.A., D.D. THIS LIFE AND THE NEXT: the effect on this life of faith in another. Macmillan & Co. 128 pp., 4s. n.

Dr. Forsyth's theme is "the reflex action on us of the idea of immortality, or, in a more Christian way, the power over us of an endless life in Christ, where the gain in dying is but more of our career in Christ. If to live is Christ, to die is more Christ." In pursuance of this idea he discusses such questions as 'The Egoism of Immortality,' 'The Egoism of God,' 'Life as Sacrament,' and 'Eternity and New Birth.' As might be expected the volume is full of arresting phrases steeped in emotional colour.

Fry's London Charities. London, Chatto & Windus. 346 pp., 1s. 6d.

"Fry's Royal Guide" is now in its fifty-fourth edition, and its usefulness may be gauged by the fact that within its red covers will be found the name, office address, and object of every charity which has its headquarters in London, together with a copious appendix. An excellent preface, which takes note of the fact that prevention rather than cure is the characteristic note of our times in all these problems with which the charitable are concerned, is contributed by the editor, Mr. J. Lane.

Glazebrook (M. G.), D.D., Canon of Ely. THE FAITH OF A MODERN CHURCHMAN. Murray. 118 pp. index and bibliography, 2s. 6d.; 1s. 6d. paper.

An admirable first volume in the "Modern Churchman's Library," which takes as motto the saying from Erasmus: "By identifying the new learning with heresy, you make orthodoxy synonymous with ignorance." The author presents the claims of the Church without ignoring those of broader unity between the different sects. His view of scripture is scholarly, of doctrine liberal; and his design is to show how closely the "modern" type of thought follows the impulse of the liberal Greek fathers of the third and fourth centuries.

Gleeson (Arthur). INSIDE THE BRITISH LINES. London, John Lane, 1917. 359 pp., 5s.

The author has tried to show in these pages that the English people are making the same fight as the American people against financial oligarchy and industrial materialism.

Hall (W. Clarke). THE STATE AND THE CHILD. Headley Bros. 195 pp. with appendices giving statistics, 2s. n.

The author, experienced as a magistrate in a "Children's Court" at Old Street Police Court, has written a very informing and sensible book dealing chiefly with the 'Delinquent Child' and its rescue and reform. The more intelligent and humane policy toward young offenders is proved to be amply justified by results, and illustrations are given of "social experiments" which tend to encourage still higher hopes of the nation's naughty children when once they "take a turn." The volume is one of the series of "New Commonwealth Books," edited by C. Delisle Burns and Richard Roberts.

Hall (W. Robert). TOWARDS FREEDOM: poems. Universal Publishing Co., Chorley, Lancs. 28 pp., 8d.

Verses by a lover of freedom and the open life, whose sympathies are with the people, and who interprets the Christ-Self as the true self of humanity.

Holyoake (George Jacob). PUBLIC SPEAKING AND DEBATE.

As a "manual for advocates and agitators" this book, written by the author of 'Sixty Years of an Agitator's Life,' found favour with many eminent public speakers when it was first published, and it will be welcomed now in a new edition by all who wish to influence men by the expression of their ideas and convictions. It is "inscribed" to Dr. Parker, for whom Mr. Holyoake had great admiration, who was his friend in later years, and who rightly praised the 'Rudiments of Public Speaking and Debate,' as it was then called, for its wealth of "wise and practical counsel," apt allusions, and quotations of the best kind.

Hyde (H. E.). THE INTERNATIONAL SOLUTION. London, George Allen & Unwin. 93 pp., 3s. 6d. n.

An urgent plea for a consideration of the principle of International Government and its inclusion in the terms of peace, by the author of 'The Two Roads: International Government or Militarism,' who is himself a naval man, and therefore not open to the accusation of undue pacificism. Mr. Hyde lays special stress on the problems that will face the world if the Asiatic races become militarised, as seems inevitable if a League of Nations is not the outcome of the present war, and reminds us that the end to be obtained is not the crushing of German militarism alone, but of the militarism of all races.

Masterman (E. W. G.). THE DELIVERANCE OF JERUSALEM. Hodder & Stoughton. 1s. n.

A most timely pamphlet, by the Hon. General Secretary in Palestine, of the Palestine Exploration Fund, giving particulars of affairs in that country on the eve of the war, the progress of the campaigns, and the present outlook. Some good photographs are given.

Stopes (Marie Carmichael). GOLD IN THE WOOD: two plays. London, A. C. Fifield. 101 pp., 2s. n.

Two new plays in which Dr. Stopes shows how intense is the love of nature which her scientific training has, apparently, only intensified, and how strong is her sympathy with young, insurgent life striving for self-realisation. The characters seem a little unreal, however, and the language of the heroines strikes us as being distinctly far-fetched.

Tagore (Sir Rabindranath). MASHI; AND OTHER STORIES. London, Macmillan & Co. 223 pp., 5s. n.

Yet another volume of Tagore's writings, translated from the original Bengali by various writers.

Tasker (W. W.). MATTHEW HENRY'S CHAPEL. Chester, G. R. Griffith. 25 pp., 3d.

A reprint from the Chester Archaeological Society's Journal. (See front page note.)

Villiers (Brougham). BRITAIN AFTER THE PEACE. Fisher Unwin. 263 pp., 8s. 6d. n.

The author's previous books on Socialism, Liberalism, and Modern Democracy, guarantee the seriousness and vigour of the present work. Its sub-title, 'Revolution or Reconstruction,' indicates his view of the crisis before the nation; and he takes a hopeful tone, if only immediate and adequate attention be given to the problems of demobilisation, industrial control, taxation, agricultural reform, and small holdings, &c. His closing reflections on the reaction of European politics on British problems are specially worthy of consideration; indeed, the volume as a whole deserves to be studied carefully.

MESSRS. PHILIP & SON have added to their series of strategic maps one of 'Mesopotamia and Asia Minor,' and another of 'Palestine, Syria, and the Sinai Peninsula.' They have abundance of modern place-names, and are reasonably clear. The latter would be a useful additional aid to schools where Biblical subjects are studied. Price 2s. 6d.; cloth, 6s.; with rollers, 8s. 6d.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

164TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,226	0	7
Bootle Free Church; per Mrs. Yates (34th)	1	7	0
Mr. L. N. Williams (17th)	1	1	0
Uxbridge and District Teachers' War Relief Fund, per Mr. E. Cole	17	10	11
P. S. B.	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry (15th)	1	0	0
The Rev. R. Jenkin Jones (8th)	0	10	6
"R." (4th)	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. H. A. BurrIDGE (4th)	3	3	0
Mrs. R. Lawford	0	10	0
Miss Ada Fricker (Trinidad) (18th)	1	0	0
	£20,258	3	0

Parcels have been received from:—Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas; Ullet Road Sewing Circle, Liverpool, per Mrs. Odgers; Miss Freda Skelton; Mrs. William Tangye; J. S. (Plymouth); Rosslyn Hill Sewing Society, Hampstead, per Mrs. Thomas Cobb; Mrs. S. Wilson; Clapham Ladies War Relief Committee; Mrs. Bryan E. Johnson; Mrs. G. Alleman (U.S.A.); High Pavement War Relief Committee, Nottingham, per Miss Guilford; Mrs. Harold Coventry; Maidstone Unitarian Church Work Party, per Mrs. Blackett; Finchley Branch of the Women's League, per Mrs. Blake Odgers.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Acton.—The Rev. Gardner Preston, who enters upon the ministry here on Easter Sunday, has had an interesting and varied career. From 1884 to 1893 a Congregational minister, he became minister of the Unitarian church at Hastings in 1894, and after thirteen years there removed to Hamburg, where he was in charge of a Liberal congregation for four years. In 1912 he returned to England and took up duties at the Warwick Unitarian Church, which he now resigns to come to London. The suburb in which he is to labour is large and populous, and offers a fine field for his energies. The support of all friends within reach of the church in Creffield Road is earnestly desired.

Bermondsey.—A special service of commemoration and dedication of the Portrait Roll of Honour of members of the Unitarian Church on active service will be conducted by Lieut.-Col. C. Seymour Bullock, of the Canadian Forces, on Easter Sunday, March 31, at 6.30 P.M.

Chester.—A Memorial has been placed in Matthew Henry's Chapel by Mr. W. W. Tasker, the Hon. Secretary, and Mrs. Tasker, to their son, 2nd Lieut. F. P. Tasker, 16th Battalion Royal Warwickshire Regiment, who died of wounds received on active service on October 6, 1917, and was buried at Lyssenthock Military Cemetery, Poperinghe. The memorial, which we understand is of a most artistic and appropriate design, has been fixed on the wall as near as possible to the place where Mr. F. P. Tasker used to sit.

Bristol.—The Annual Meeting of the subscribers and friends of Lewin's Mead Domestic Mission was held in the Mission Hall on Monday evening, March 18, when Mr. Chas. Cole presided over a good attendance. The report of the Committee, presented by the Hon. Secretary, Mr. E. Sibree, showed that the work carried on at the Mission was progressing in a satisfactory manner, notwithstanding the depletion of its staff of voluntary workers caused by the demands of the war. The Committee appealed for more voluntary help, and recorded its appreciation of the good work done by the Missionary, Mr. Thos. Gaylard. The statement of accounts, presented by Mr. J. Kenrick Champion, showed a small balance due to the Treasurer. Mr. Thos. Gaylard, in his report of the work done during the past year, alluded to the great national problems of religious indifference, poverty, education, juvenile crime, infantile mortality, lack of thrift, and drunkenness, which had all been accentuated by the war. Most of the Mission institutions were started and carried on with these problems always in view. The Sunday schools, Band of Hope, Boy Scouts, Girl Guides, Wolf Cubs, and Brownies were educational agencies in the best sense of the term, and each was contributing its share to the training of stable and sterling character, to the making of good citizens and religious men and women. The School for Mothers, under the superintendence of Mrs. Kenrick Champion, made great progress during the year, and is in a thoroughly satisfactory state. The Penny Bank collected over £500 during the same period, a record amount. The War Savings Association also distributed over a hundred certificates to its members, bought with their weekly contributions. The Boy Scouts' allotments, the Girls' Sewing Class and other institutions were also reported on. In concluding, the Missionary paid a tribute to the self-denying labours of the voluntary helpers, and appealed for additional labourers in the field. The adoption of the reports and accounts was moved by Mr. F. Tremain, seconded by Mr. W. J. Adams, and carried. Miss M. T. Worsley was unanimously elected President of the Mission, in succession to her father, the late Mr. Philip John Worsley, and the officers and Committee were re-appointed. Votes of thanks were passed to the helpers, auditors, the preachers of the Annual Mission Sermons, Dr. G. F. Beckh, Mr. J. T. Walley, M.A., and Mr. Thos. Gaylard, and to the Chairman.

Halstead.—The Annual Meeting of the Free Christian Church was held on Sunday, March 10, Mr. Fyson (Ilford), who had taken the service, presiding. All the officers were re-elected, and, as usual, the Treasurer had a small balance in hand.

Mottram.—During March, in addition to the usual meetings of the Book Club, Band of Hope, and Sewing Society, in connection with the Unitarian church, there have been four Saturday events—including two Socials, a Children's Operetta, and on the 23rd an excellent entertainment by Miss Layland's Concert Party of Hyde Citizen Crusaders. The Sunday services are well maintained, and the church membership has increased from 46 in 1917 to over 70.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—The congregation of the Church of the Divine Unity at a special meeting has passed a resolution accepting the resignation of the Rev. Alfred Hall with very deep regret, and expressing their great appreciation of his services throughout the whole period of his ministry. Mr. Hall will relinquish the pastorate at the end of July, when he will have completed a ministry of ten and a half years at Newcastle.

Newport, I. of W.—The Rev. W. G. Tarrant, visiting on behalf of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, took part in the services on Sunday; and on Monday, after conference with the Committee, gave an address at a Social Meeting of the congregation. At this meeting Sir Edgar Chatfield Clarke, who presided, expressed the great indebtedness of the members to the Rev. J. Ruddle, their minister during the past nine years, who is now retiring from active service. Mr. Ruddle, in a short but impressive speech, referred to the mingled experiences of attainment and disappointment which had to be faced in every ministry; he had done his best, and he felt assured that nothing but kindness on both sides existed between himself and those whom he had tried to help in these, the closing years of his active career. He trusted the church would enter upon a wholly prosperous stage under a future leader, supported by co-workers old and new. Mr. Tarrant said the church in Newport ought to be a centre to which Unitarians in different parts of the Isle should be attached, and he believed there were many who would warmly help in assisting local work, especially among young people. Never was such work more needed. He specially urged the congregation to look forward to a triumphant celebration of their bicentenary, which would occur not many years distant. Mr. Hawkins, who cordially invited all his fellow-members to assist in the school and other work, expressed the thanks of the meeting to their visitor.

Victoria, B.C.—The Rev. E. J. Bowden, B.D., minister of the Unitarian Church at Victoria, Canada, issues every month a neat and attractive Calendar, in which one page is devoted to 'Themes for Thought.' In a recent page he deals with the prevalent neglect of worship by progressive thinkers, which he regards as a serious drawback to liberal religion. The death of Mr. J. Burt Morgan, President of the congregation, is recorded. He was a man of fine enthusiasms, and possessed a rare personal charm.

Walsall.—The Annual Meeting in connection with the Unitarian Church was held on March 20, the Chairman, Mr. J. Hodgkins, presiding. The Committee's report and balance sheet showed that the ordinary income of the church had been increased considerably during the year. Offerings, collections, and subscriptions were higher than for many years past. The Annual Address of the minister, the Rev. H. Warnock, was a review of his five year's ministry in Walsall. He expressed the opinion that the old suspicion towards their name and faith had almost all passed away. Officers and Committee were re-elected, and a very encouraging and harmonious meeting concluded with a presentation to Mr. and Mrs. V. H. Careless on the occasion of their recent marriage.

* THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—Rev. Delta Evans, from Finchley to 28 BROAD GREEN AVENUE, WEST CROYDON. Editorial and business communications as usual to Christian Life Office, 5 Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.
(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.
Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I. H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL. H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

MARRIAGE.

TAGART—SLOLEY.—On March 20, at Lerike, Basutoland, Edward S. Bourn Tagart of Mumbwa, Rhodesia, grandson of the late Rev. Edward Tagart, to Lilian Edith, youngest daughter of Sir Herbert Sloley.

DEATHS.

COPPOCK.—On the 25th inst., at The Alders, Davenport, Stockport, Bertha, the fourth daughter of the late Henry and Ann Bancroft Coppock.

LEWIN.—On March 16, at 10 Munster Gates, York, Mary Ann Charlotte, wife of E. F. Lewin, aged 76. No cards.

POYNTING.—On the 24th inst., at Lyndhurst, Hants, Maria Adney Poynting, widow of Prof. J. H. Poynting, D.Sc., F.R.S., of Birmingham, and daughter of the late Rev. John Cropper, of Stand, near Manchester.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, March 31.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Lt.-Col. Rev. C. SEYMOUR BULLOCK.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
ESSEX HALL, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.
Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Mr. J. W. PETERKEN; 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.
Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11, Miss L. G. ACKROYD.
Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Mr. F. EDWIN ALLEN.
Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30.
South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. BASIL VINEY.
Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Rev. Dr. HARGROVE, M.A.; 6.30, Mr. HAROLD TITFORD.
Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.
University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.
Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.
WOOLWICH, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH; 6.30, Rev. A. H. DOLPHIN.
ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.
BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.
BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. B. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.
BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.
CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.
CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. J. B. HIGHAM, B.A.
DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. O. A. GINEVER, B.A.
DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.
GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.
HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.
HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.
LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. W. H. THOMAS; 6.30, Mr. W. NEWALL.
LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.
MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.
NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.
NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.
PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.; 6.30, Rev. J. W. LEE.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.
TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.
WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. G. A. FERGUSON.
WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, O.D. Sunday School, 3.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

March

31. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES.

April

7. Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.
14. Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.
21. Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION & STAMFORD STREET CHAPEL.

The ANNUAL MEETING of Subscribers and Friends will be held at Stamford Street Chapel, S.E.1, on TUESDAY, APRIL 9, 1918, at 7.30 P.M.

On the same occasion a welcome will be offered to the Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.

F. W. TURNER, Esq., will preside, supported by the Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A., the Rev. H. Gow, B.A., and others.
Coffee 7 P.M.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING, Memorial Hall, Albert Square, Manchester, SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1918. Business Meeting, 5.30 p.m. Public Meeting, 6.30. Chairman: Retiring President (Mr. A. Slater); Speakers: Mrs. W. Blake Odgers, Rev. D. W. Robson, B.D., and Mr. A. Pilling.

Friends from Churches and Schools are urged to attend. H. BODELL SMITH, Hon. Sec.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS FOR THE NONCONFORMIST MINISTRY.

DR. WILLIAMS'S TRUSTEES offer for open competition, UNDERGRADUATE SCHOLARSHIPS, tenable in the University of Glasgow only; and DIVINITY SCHOLARSHIPS for Graduates, tenable in any approved School of Theology or University. The Scholarships are open to students of all Denominations preparing for the Nonconformist Ministry. Applications must be sent to the Secretary, DR. WILLIAMS'S LIBRARY, Gordon Square, London, W.C.1., before April 30 for Undergraduate Scholarships, and before May 31 for Graduate Scholarships.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Macmillan's List

THE RIGHT HON. H. H. ASQUITH.

Occasional Addresses, 1893-1916.

By the Rt. Hon. H. H. ASQUITH, F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D. 8vo, 6s. net.

FIFTH IMPRESSION.

The Church in the Furnace.

Essays by Seventeen Church of England Chaplains on Active Service in France and Flanders. Edited by F. B. MACNUTT, S.C.F., Canon of Southwark. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

The Church Missionary Review.—"This is a book for every Christian worker to read and digest. It is a most exhilarating and live volume. It is written by padres who have been in close contact with the manhood of our country and know what they are talking about."

Immortality:

An Essay in Discovery, co-ordinating Scientific, Psychical, and Biblical Research. By B. H. STREETER, A. CLUTTON-BROCK, C. W. EMMET, J. A. HADFIELD, and the Author of 'Pro Christo et Ecclesia.' 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

The Methodist Times.—"The most important work published on the subject for many years."

This Life and the Next: the Effect on this Life of Faith in Another.

By P. T. FORSYTH, M.A., D.D. Crown 8vo, 4s. net.

Some Suggestions in Ethics

By BERNARD BOSANQUET, D.C.L., LL.D., Fellow of the British Academy. Extra Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

 Send for Macmillan's New Theological List.

Macmillan & Co., Ltd., London, W.C.2.

APRIL No. 2s. 6d. net. Postage 4d.

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL.

THE MEANING OF LIFE, AND OF THE WORLD, REVEALED BY THE CROSS

Prince Eugène Troubetzkoy

SHELLEY'S INTERPRETATION OF CHRIST AND HIS TEACHING

By the late Stopford A. Brooke

STOPFORD BROOKE G. K. Chesterton

F. S. Marvin

PROSPECTS OF LIBERAL EDUCATION AFTER THE WAR.

President Charles F. Thwing

THE DOCTRINE OF A FINITE GOD IN WAR-TIME THOUGHT

R. H. Dotterer

THE BOOK OF JONAH

Sir Philip Magnus, Bt., M.P.

WHAT SHALL WE CALL BEAUTIFUL?

W. R. Lethaby

PALESTINE AND JEWISH NATIONALITY

Israel Abrahams, D.D.

ERASMUS AT LOUVAIN

Prof. Foster Watson

PRAYERS IN TIME OF WAR.

E. F. Carritt

BIRMINGHAM MYSTICS

Rev. R. H. Coats, B.D.

SUBSCRIPTION:

10s. per Annum, post free.

London: WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.2.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN, LTD.

PROBLEMS OF THE PEACE

By WILLIAM HARBUTT DAWSON, Author of "The Evolution of Modern Germany." Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

"A notable book, possibly the most notable of all the many which have appeared in this country dealing with the terms of settlement."—New Statesman.

A New Volume in "The Library of Philosophy."

THE ELEMENTS OF CONSTRUCTIVE PHILOSOPHY.

By J. S. MACKENZIE, Litt.D., Hon. LL.D., Emeritus Professor of Logic and Philosophy in University College, Cardiff. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

"We compliment Prof. Mackenzie on the production of a book which has in the truest sense what its title indicates, the elements of construction." Glasgow Herald.

JOTTINGS FROM THE FRONT.

By the Rev. KENNETH E. SHAW. Crown 8vo, paper covers, 2s. 6d. net.

Written whilst at the Front, the Author, with touches of humour and pathos, gives to those at home some insight into the ordinary life of the average Tommy beyond the actual fighting.

WARS AND TREATIES, 1815-1914.

By ARTHUR PONSONBY, M.P. Demy 8vo, paper covers, 2s. net.

A useful book of reference, which gives briefly the essential facts as to the origin and result of each of the forty principal wars in the last 100 years, and the main provisions of the more important treaties.

REBELS AND REFORMERS.

By ARTHUR and DOROTHY PONSONBY. Crown 8vo, with 12 Portraits, 6s. net.

"Told with a most enticing simplicity and the happiest taste—it will be a delight to readers."—Nation.

THE MAKING OF WOMEN:

Oxford Essays in Feminism.

By A. MAUDE ROYDEN and others. Edited by VICTOR GOLLANCZ. Second Impression. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

"A brilliant book. It is undoubtedly one of the most serious and responsible contributions to an entrancing subject which has been written." The Common Cause.

MOUNTAIN MEDITATIONS:

And some Subjects of the Day and the War.

By L. LIND-AF-HAGEBY. Cr. 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

Ruskin House, 40 Museum St., London, W.C.1.

Miscellaneous.

LADIES' HANDKERCHIEF BARGAINS. Hemstitched Irish Linen, slightly imperfect, bundle of six, 2s. 7d., postage 2d.; twelve, 5s., postage 4d. Send for monthly Bargain List to-day, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT. Cash or offer by return. Before selling make sure of their value by writing for FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any artificial teeth.—E. LEWIS, 29 London Street, Southport, Lancs. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000

Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenæum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, March 30, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3953.
NEW SERIES, No. 1056.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	105	BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	108	BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSO- CIATION	109
LICHNOWSKY'S EVIDENCE	106	A WORD FROM A HUNGARIAN UNITARIAN	108	MEMORIAL NOTICE:—
THE IDEA OF THE CHURCH	107	SCHOOL FOR MINISTERS	109	Miss Baker	110
CORRESPONDENCE:—		THE SOCIETY OF FREE CATHOLICS	109	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	110
The Churches and the Ministry	108

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

TO-DAY is the anniversary of the declaration of war by the United States against Germany, an event second only in world-wide significance to the outbreak in August, 1914. It is true that nothing of a "spectacular" character has followed thus far, though we know well a good deal of really invaluable service has been rendered to the Allies by the Americans; and, as many of us feel, that service has certainly been all the greater because of the high tone that has characterised the President's statements of policy. We may confidently expect that the material side of their contribution will continuously enlarge, week by week, from this time. Meanwhile, we recognise the great cordiality with which their forces already in France have just been placed at the disposal of the British and French authorities, and the intensifying of effort across the ocean to respond quickly to the urgent call of this critical period. Their Labour societies, it is good to see, have resolved to suspend as far as possible all divisive action, and to converge their whole power towards the one common aim—victory for liberty, right, and civilisation, against tyranny, spoliation, and the barbarism of ruthless power. Acknowledging our Ally's most welcome aid in all ways, we take occasion to greet specially our own brothers in the faith, and to assure them that we were never more attached to them in gratitude and loyal affection.

WHILE for the moment we draw breath a little more freely in the lull of the tremendous conflict begun a fortnight ago, our minds instinctively turn to the thought of the great price paid for this relief. That armies made up of just ordinary men and lads, as they were a little while ago, should have proved alike so dexterous and so staunch, is one of the most wonderful things in modern history. Many, many of them we know, to our unspeakable sorrow, are beyond our poor word of homage and thanks; to them, peace; and to those who are bereaved, consolations higher than man can give. But to those who have come thus far through at least with life, though spent and bruised and wounded, let us at least try to pay a little of the tribute we owe. The workers who gave up their holidays in response to the official appeal doubtless heard a higher; it is one that comes home to us all—"Ye are bought with a price; what return will you give in these days of sacrifice?"

THE speech of General Smuts at the Clothworkers' Company on Wednesday was a worthy addition to the series of remarkably fine-toned utterances by this able man, who from being a sturdy foe has become one of the best friends of the British Empire. His statement of the recent revelations by Lichnowsky, Mühlön, and Von Jagow himself, which we discuss elsewhere, was admirably clear; his analysis of the real German war aims, as manifested in the treatment of Russia—which may prove a blinded Samson yet, fatal to its captors—was equally forcible; and his conclusion that "for us everything is at stake in this war, and therefore we shall bear every sacrifice willingly and cheerfully to the very end" was one that will be accepted whole-heartedly by our people. But what touches us most deeply is the General's tribute to the wonderful spirit of our troops: "It would be poor thanks to praise them. Living and dead, we salute them with a reverence and gratitude which no words can express."

DR. CARPENTER'S remarks on the 'Idea of the Church,' given on another page, may be studied along with the statement of the 'Basis of the Free Catholic Movement,' which we also print this week, and which is expanded by the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas in the April issue of The Catholic Magazine. From Mr. Thomas's article we learn that the new basis has been settled "with complete unanimity." This is the more satisfactory as it clears away misconceptions, which we confess we shared, respecting the weight attaching to some observations included in The Church Times report of the recent conference. Readers will see that no suggestion is made of any "exclusion" of Quakers or any other non-sacramental Christians. They will also observe with satisfaction the emphasis laid on social effort as well as on freedom of thought, and the disavowal of "hasty innovations" in regard to forms and ceremonies. This last point has an acute interest, we imagine, for some of the congregations of Free Churches, who are not seldom subjected to novelties by eager but inconsiderate ministers. Freedom is dear to many worshippers as well as, we suppose, to all preachers.

THE Church of the Messiah, New York, has had a succession of vigorous ministers, including Dr. Minot J. Savage and Robert Collyer. The present minister, the Rev. John Haynes Holmes, a nephew of Oliver Wendell Holmes, has long since proved himself worthy of the best traditions of the pulpit. A man of rapid thought and rapid utterance, he has taken an independent line in regard to public questions, including the war, on which his note may be best described as moderately pacific. That he has the courage of his convictions is clear, for he now invites discussion at the close of his sermons on Sunday morning. We believe a similar experiment has been proposed on this side, and it may have been tried; perhaps some of our readers could tell us, and with what result. Mr. Holmes, by the way, has just published, in two volumes, a life of his former co-pastor, Robert Collyer, which gives a very attractive presentation of him, and especially of his robust prime.

'ROBERT ELSMERE' was published in 1888, and people who are now young have to depend on report as to the immense impression produced by the book; but a good many readers of THE INQUIRER will remember vividly the discussions and the sermons to which it gave rise. The skill of the writer was undoubtedly one element contributory to its wide success—some who cared less for its philosophy and theology than for its human interest and clever descriptions of scenery were among its warmest admirers. But that it was a novel with a purpose was very clear. Mrs. Humphry Ward has acknowledged, it never was a secret, that she specially wished to delineate the mind and influence of T. H. Green as a challenge to a fresh departure in religion. In the second part of her 'Reminiscences,' however, given in the April Cornhill, she adds the information that the book really owed its conception to her feeling of indignation at the first Bampton Lecture delivered at Oxford by the Rev. John Wordsworth, afterwards Bishop of Salisbury, in which he attacked, consciously or not, the Liberal theological group generally, and the Oxford men in particular. She tells us she first protested in a pamphlet which had to be hastily suppressed in consequence of not bearing the printer's name; the novel appeared seven years later.

* * *

WE are told that in affiliation with the National Union of Women Workers, of which Mrs. Ogilvie Gordon, D.Sc., is President, there are now over 150 women's societies, with a membership of two and a half millions. The Union is busily forming Women Citizen Associations, non-sectarian, non-party, and in the main educative. They will aim at quickening mutual sympathy between persons of different social positions and occupations, diffusing exact information and serving as genuine schools for national service in the widest sense of the term. The local Associations are at liberty to include men as members, or as occasional sharers in conference and discussion. The scheme looks like proving a valuable aid in that cultivation of the political sense of the women voters which is now recognised on all sides as urgently needed. The offices of the Union are in Parliament Mansions, Victoria Street, S.W., where information will be gladly given.

* * *

OUR friend the Rev. James Harwood points out that in that very interesting volume 'Some Hawarden Letters,' the late Prof. James Stuart, writing to Miss Gladstone (afterwards Mrs. Drew) in 1883, quotes a poem which he says "was written by Theodore Parker." It consists of four eight-line verses, the first three beginning: "If I should die to-night"; the fourth reads: "Oh, friends, I pray to-night, Keep not your kisses for my dead cold brow," and this indicates the sentiment of the whole. It pleads for timely affection, kindness before it is too late, reconciliation with the living rather than fruitless regrets over the dead; and certainly may be practically suggestive to unmindful people. But, as Mr. Harwood says, with a moderation almost carried to extremity, the poem "hardly seems to bear Parker's stamp," and he asks for light on the matter. The lines, we believe, are widely known. In a thirty-year old collection of popular verse, much of it mere doggerel, we find them attributed to "Robert C. V. Myers"; but who he was and how Prof. Stuart came to father them on Parker we cannot say. Can any reader help our correspondent further?

LICHNOWSKY'S EVIDENCE

A WEEK before the gigantic offensive was launched by Germany in France another, by a strange destiny, was issued against Germany herself. The former, menacing in the extreme to the Allies, has cost them much; the latter will in the end cost Germany more. All great military "pushes," as we have repeatedly seen, against whichever side directed, perforce end in a pause, and this has happened in the case of the latest and most violent "push" in the history of warfare. But the assault upon Germany is one never to be turned aside; it will, more and more pierce to her very heart. Whatever material battle she may win or lose, she is henceforth, on evidence which even she cannot evade, doomed to be branded guilty of the most terrible outrage ever committed against mankind.

Seldom, if ever, have the records of crime presented a more dramatic turn. They who have not lost all faith in an over-ruling Providence may well ponder the event. It does not arise at the present critical juncture through the ingenuity or strategy of man. Eighteen months and more ago the mine was prepared, with apparently no intention of public explosion. Prince Lichnowsky, the German Ambassador to England in the two years before the war, wrote in 1916 a memorandum setting forth the facts relating to Germany's policy as he knew them—and who, on the whole, could know them better? He communicated this fateful document to "quite few political friends," under pledge of absolute secrecy. But who was it said, "There is nothing hidden that shall not be revealed"? One of the friends, without Lichnowsky's knowledge, gave a copy to an officer on the General Staff; he, "failing to understand the importance of what he was doing," sent copies to others. Thus it "leaked out" last summer, after the fall of Bethmann-Hollweg. The author, in a letter to Count Hertling telling all this, declares his regret that his strenuous efforts to stop its diffusion have been in vain. The bulk of it got published at last, about three weeks ago, in the Stockholm Politiken, a Socialist journal; its completion appeared (it would seem after a further attempt at suppression) some ten or twelve days later. The Main Committee of the Reichstag discussed the matter in secret, March 16; three days later a careful report was issued, "frantic efforts" being made, we hear, to stop further disclosures. Men can well understand why.

For this document is an overwhelming witness for the prosecution. German protests and pleas have never, indeed, been able to turn the edge of the previous proofs of guilt, available in plenty from the first days of the war. But here is, not an anonymous writer like the author of 'J'Accuse,' nor an official in a hostile service, but a man of the very highest importance in Germany's own service, the chosen (if sometimes hoodwinked) representative of his country in a position second to none in responsibility. He, at least, cannot be set aside as an interested perverter of the truth. He speaks with authority, as one knowing many, if not all, of the secrets of the German Foreign Office. And what does he say? He says, indeed, so much that only a bare fragment from an intensely interesting revelation can be given here. The whole, it is well to know, is to be translated, reprinted, and circulated broadcast in many lands—not, we imagine, that any significant fraction of British or the Allied peoples still need convincing of Germany's guilt as a deliberate provoker of this war, but in order that the world of neutrals, and, not least, Germans themselves, should have the damning story indelibly pressed home. For it is a story with a moral of the profoundest import to all the nations upon earth.

The two points that should be emphasised especially are these: (1) England's policy, so far from being hostile, as Berlin has lyingly alleged, had been eminently pacific towards Germany during recent years; but the German Government studiously kept back the publication of agreements between the two nations, in order to leave a bad impression on the German people and to assist the war party; (2) Germany in 1914, so far from being in fear of attack, wanted war; "we" (i.e., the German Government) "pressed for war," "we insisted upon war," "we desired war in all circumstances." "Given goodwill, everything could have been settled" by help of the conference of four Ambassadors proposed by Sir Edward Grey. The urgent appeals of the Russian Foreign Minister, "the positively humble telegrams of the Tsar," the repeated proposals of Sir Edward, the warnings of Italy—"it was all of no use.... The more I pressed the less willing they were to alter their course." As to the details of the plot, and of England's consistent efforts to secure a good understanding, the reader may study them for himself; and if he reads on to the Prince's frankly outspoken words on 'The Enemy Point of View' and 'The Outlook' for Germany, he will see that no anti-militarist, no advocate of democracy against the war-lords, not even President Wilson himself, could present the case against the German autocracy more conclusively.

We know that the Prince is not the only German who has told the truth. Dr. Mühlön, for instance, a financier and Krupp's director, now in Switzerland, has just given a glimpse of the Kaiser's personal share in the war-guilt. Herr Krupp von Bohlen, says Mühlön, knew from the Kaiser's own lips that war was decided on, and "this time people would see that he did not turn about." Von Jagow, also, has himself now practically admitted, whatever his excuses, the worst of the charges against his country. But the Prince will inevitably be held hereafter the capital witness. They say he is to be punished, but no pain or penalty can weigh on an honourable man's mind so crushingly as the knowledge of his nation's shame and infamy. Many other Germans, we would hope, will now at last share his horror at the position into which their rulers have led them. Will they not, at last, repudiate the betrayers of their honour and the enemies of humanity at large?

THE IDEA OF THE CHURCH.*

OUR modern theology has been worked out along two main lines: (1) the interpretation of the world around us and within—the former with its manifestations of intelligence, order, beauty, and beneficence, the signs of a pervading Mind and Will, the latter with its processes of thought, laws of mind, the meaning of conscience, and the values of spiritual affection; and (2) the interpretation of history, the critical appreciation of claimants to authority, the inquiry into the origins of Christianity, the growth of the Christian Church and evolution of its creeds, the formation of its chief divisions, the conflict of its sects, the pretensions of its hierarchy, and the examination of its confessions. In both directions the appeal has been to the individual, in reaction against the High Church movement.

Thus we Unitarians have come to possess no doctrine of the Church. Martineau, writing on 'Church Life or Sect Life,' had no difficulty in describing the latter, but was silent as to the constitution of the former; and in Dr. Drummond's 'Studies of Christian Doctrine' only ten pages out of five hundred are devoted to positive teaching on the subject. Contrast this with Gore's 'Manual of Membership,' which sets forth the attractive ideal of a corporate body, possessing privileges and duties, sympathies and obligations, and the joys and fellowship of united devotion and common aims; though of course it has its limitations and exclusions, being founded on sacraments and controlled by a hierarchy. The Report of the Oxford Conference, December, 1899, similarly exhibits the Evangelical idea of the Church, and its significance is heightened by the names of the different groups of religious leaders who took part—Gore, Scott Holland, Fairbairn, Forsyth, Salmond, Lang, Sanday, Wilson, Ryle. And the essay by William Temple in 'Foundations' is equally noteworthy, emphasising as it does the immense part played by the Church and Holy Communion in the life of the believer, his call to loyalty and a share in corporate life, and the personal relation in which the disciple is brought to Christ.

Recently there has been a remarkable movement in this direction among the so-called Free Churches, an endeavour to combine the elements of Catholic tradition with freedom of thought. It exhibits a strong desire for richer devotional life, for aids to reverence and piety in noble architecture, beauties of music and prayer, even in solemnities of movement and proprieties of dress—an express cultivation of the type of feeling which our forefathers discouraged. Such a demand may easily spread further. Dr. Orchard, who has been conspicuous in this new departure, says its task is "to free Catholicism and to Catholicise freedom"; and he exhibits a yearning for a sacramental system, a representative priesthood, and a definition of the faith. And he says: "The governing principle of the Sacrament, and what guarantees its validity, is Christ's desire and promise to meet with his people in this way."

Now of such a "desire and promise" I find no trace in the Gospel story, as given by Mark and Matthew, concerning the simple symbol, at the farewell meal, of the approaching death of Jesus; while Paul's version represents the meal as an act of remembrance. The idea of Christ as Priest is a part of the Christian gnosis set forth in the Epistle to the Hebrews, and has no real meaning except in a view of authority which we have abandoned. The doctrine of the universal priesthood of all Christian believers had once, indeed, a meaning in face of Jewish and Gentile systems of sacrificial cults, but it has lost all application to the circumstances of the present day. The Apostle Paul further connects the Lord's Supper with the expected return of Christ to "show forth the Lord's death till he come." On this reappearance he would judge the world. Such a hope, pervading the whole Church in its early stage, was the sequel of Jesus's own adoption of the message of John the Baptist, "the kingdom of God has come nigh." But the immediateness of the "end of the age" which provides the mould and form of so much of Jesus's teaching proved to be the Great Illusion, and this unquestionable historic fact prevents me from pledging myself to any formula based on the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ. And when I am told that "Christ is the Christian's God," I turn to the letters of Paul, who asserts many things about Jesus which I cannot follow, but whose religious centre is not the Messiah at all, but "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," "God our Father," "One God, of whom, and through whom, and unto whom are all things," who is "over all, and through all, and in all." The entire silence of the apostle concerning the alleged priesthood of Jesus, concerning an order of priests in his churches, or, lastly, concerning any priestly character of the brethren or believers, who were undoubtedly bidden to offer themselves in living sacrifice as saints, dedicated or consecrated in reasonable service—this silence shows how far he was from any sacerdotal interpretation of the new Christian life.

This new Christian life was, however, undoubtedly a corporate life. It was not passed in solitude. It was a life of fellowship, of communion in united endeavour, upheld and guided by thanksgiving and prayer. So vivid was the sense of God's nearness that it controlled all thought and speech and action—"Whether they ate or drank or whatever they did," they were to do all to the glory of God. Their common food, the objects and interests of their daily being, could all become what the Anglican Articles term "sacraments," viz., "effectual signs of grace and God's goodwill towards us by the which He doth work invisibly in us, and doth not only quicken but doth also strengthen and confirm our faith in Him."

It is in this sense that it is sometimes urged upon us, as by Dr. Inge—a similar expression was used recently by Dr. Mellor—that "all life should be felt by us to be sacramental." Truly we are surrounded by such effectual signs of God's goodwill towards us—the primrose and the almond blossom, the springing corn, the daily sunshine and the nightly rest, the love of parent, wife, or child—what need is there of bread and wine, an altar, and a priest, to celebrate a eucharist for us! The bounty and the beauty and the order of the world are one vast and unceasing manifestation of the Father's purpose for the welfare of His sons.

I do not look, therefore, for the development of the Idea of the Church among us to the revival of any ritual of the past. "The kingdom of God," said the apostle, "is not eating and drinking," not even of sacramental bread and wine; it is "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit." Now, we are all learning new applications of the word "righteousness"; it is no longer individual, it is social. We have all a share in the making or the marring of it. "Peace" is no private and particular possession; it is the fruit of victory over wrong. Life is a warfare with evil, and it is one of the functions of the Church to organise the moral forces, to lead the assault upon every kind of selfish privilege, of brutal passion, of cruel neglect, of ruthless assertion of tyrannic power.

The Church has only recently begun to discover the tremendous tasks which devolve upon it as the source of an energy for the regeneration of the social order and its gradual transformation into a juster and more harmonious scene. Now, more than ever, is the lesson forced on us from day to day that no man liveth to himself; a thousand ties knit us each to each; it is the teaching alike of science and experience. We all share a common life; we cannot avoid helping or hindering each other.

Now, on the field of Christian history, the development of Christian ethics, it is much easier to reach the sense of unity, of common purpose, and similar ideals, than along lines of dogmatic concord or ecclesiastical polity. Already the Churches are meeting each other for social ends, on open platforms, though pulpits may be closed by bishops against Nonconformists, and the unbaptised may not share the bread of remembrance with the confirmed. But it is my belief that this appeal for a high standard of Christian performance in the various relations of life, in industry and trade, in civic government, in home and foreign politics, in international aims, will slowly gain more and more power. It will derive its force from the fundamental ideas of Jesus, and in that sense his influence will still draw towards his personality our reverence and love. But it will be exerted not in the letter but in the spirit. It must work through modern ideas, it must clothe itself with modern knowledge. The Churches which are thus drawn together must be willing to face all sorts of drudgeries of study and investigation; they must inspire the faith that God will not set us problems which he will not also give us capacity to solve. And they must be ready themselves to give the example of the sacrifices to which they will summon others. Then they will realise that humanity can only reach its highest in and through and with God; there must be diversities of workings, but it is the same Father who "worketh all things in all."

* From an address given at the Council of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, March 27, by the President, Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[We submit a further selection from the letters which have reached us on this subject, and regret that several others must still be held over. Again we appeal for brevity which present conditions render imperative.—EDITOR OF INQUIRER.]

THE CHURCHES AND THE MINISTRY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—During the last few weeks you have published a series of letters (dealing with our position as a Unitarian Church) which has been most interesting and I hope will prove a real help to our cause. I would like to add a few words. We, like other churches, may learn much from those outside our own communion. Beautiful architecture, good music, a well-ordered service, help in creating a religious atmosphere, and there are many other aids to devotion which we do well to make use of.

But what are our great wants? First, I think, a true realisation of the highest conception of religion, and then more men in the trained ministry, in the lay ministry, and in our churches generally, fired with the enthusiasm of the religion they profess. What is the highest conception of religion? To my mind the full realisation of God as our own loving Father, not our Father alone, not the God of love alone now, but the Great Loving Father of all ages, the Father of the millions and thousands of millions of men and women who have passed away, and of the millions of all races now living on the earth. And then the realisation of our duty to all His children (to all our brothers and sisters), our duty to work for them as our brothers and sisters, to make the church a great moving force of every kind of philanthropic work, the guiding force for attacking every injustice, every sin, and every misery, from which mankind suffers.

We want as ministers men filled with the Holy Ghost, with love to God, filled with the love of God to men, with the enthusiasm of humanity, men who in themselves and in their churches and through their churches will be leaders in the fight for right, whether as between one nation and another nation or against the wrongs in our own land, in the towns, the village even, in which we live. The fight against bad wages, bad housing, dirt, disease (mental, moral and physical) unemployment, pauperism, crime. There have been some such in our own church, there are some still, but if our church is to be successful and to be the great vital force for good that it should be, then I would say it must be men of this type who must fill the pulpits of our churches, and if they do, our pews will soon be filled with men and women who are working now, many of them leaders in the fight, for the opportunity for every man in this England of ours to live (with wife and family) in healthy surroundings, and in such competence as will banish the fear of want that furrows the brow, and makes men and women think of little else than how to find food day by day. We shall find men and women joining with us who have said they were too busy to come to church, who feel (and perhaps with a good deal of reason), that they are doing better work for others, and if so for God, than most of those inside the churches.

Though such a small portion of our people at present are attendants at any church, it is not that they are hostile to religion, but because they do not find in the church generally, of any denomination, the help they are wanting, because the atmosphere of the church seems to them uninspiring, unreal. Let them once feel that a Unitarian Church stands for work for their fellow men, and the seeking of the guidance of the Great Father to help them work aright, and we shall draw them to us. There have been men and women in the past who have done great work because they were filled and fired by the spirit of God, because the love of men burned in their hearts—Bunyan, Wesley, Whitfield, William Penn, John Howard, Elizabeth Fry, Father Matthew, Cardinal Manning, Spurgeon, General Booth—despite the fact that most of them had imperfect and unworthy conceptions of the Great Father and his relation to his children. What would have been their influence, if with all their intense and practical religious fervour they had had truer conceptions of the Great Father? At present the world may almost be said to be longing for a religion which will find its embodiment in the fight for the uplifting of the poor, the weak, the oppressed everywhere. Now is the opportunity for the church that combines a pure faith in the all-loving Great Father with an earnest all embracing effort to make the world the kingdom of righteousness and peace. We cannot all be Wesleys, or Howards, or Frys, but we can all be fired by the same love of God and man that made them blessings to mankind.—Yours, &c.,

EDWARD CHITTY.

Dover, March 25, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—In this discussion Dr. Mellor went at once to the heart of the matter, and in what has followed Mr. John Dendy has, to my mind, said the wisest and most helpful word. There was challenge in Dr. Mellor's letter, and I should like to ask him, if I may, to be a little more explicit.

In contrast to a "bare humanistic Theism," he speaks of a religious life mystic and centralised in Jesus. To gain once more an ideal for our churches that shall command enthusiasm and devotion, he asks us to be ready to revise our theology "at the bidding of the new workings of Christ's spirit in the main body of the Church," and to centralise our whole life and faith "in his faith and gospel." What are those "new workings of Christ's spirit," and will Dr. Mellor be good enough to tell us how, in his view, the faith and gospel of Jesus ought to live again in us and in our churches?

The main body of the Church still insists that if we would be Christians we must confess that Christ is God, and Mr. Lloyd Thomas in the passionate plea of a recent sermon has declared that "Jesus Christ is truly the God of Christians," "the centre of the worshipping heart and mind." But is that the confession to which the Spirit of Truth is calling us to-day?

I believe with all my heart that the true ideal for our churches will be found in complete accord with the spirit of Jesus, and in living fellowship with him, the "Chief of faithful souls," with a response of devoted loyalty to his ideal of the kingdom of God, kindled by his prophetic appeal; and further, that our religious life must be immeasurably quickened by the power of those deep spiritual experiences of the victory of faith and love, which came to his disciples out of the tragedy of the cross. But I am not at all clear that this means that our religious life must be "centralised in Jesus," or that this is what he would ask of his disciples. His appeal was different. "Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." The religion of Jesus, surely, was centralised in God, our Father, and in the service of his kingdom, and I cannot suppose that Dr. Mellor would characterise that religion as "a bare humanistic Theism."

In face of the world's tragic needs to-day and the growing passion for service and the triumph of a better humanity the true watchword, as it appears to me, for universal appeal in our churches and in the world should be, not for the worship of Christ as God, but rather "for the kingdom of God and His righteousness, in Christ's spirit." Our fellowship must be with the Master, in the spirit of his prayer, "Father, not my will, but Thine be done," and with the disciples in that other confession, "Hereby know we love, because he laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." That would set us, I believe, in the line of our manifest duty, and then surely the spirit of a true devotion would not be lacking either in our individual lives or in our churches.

Mr. Whitaker has acclaimed Dr. Mellor as the champion of a new hope. I shall be grateful if he can help us to understand more fully the significance and the scope of his appeal. Yours, &c.,

V. D. DAVIS.

2 Milburn Road.
Bournemouth West.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

165TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,258	3	0
All Saints' School, Islington (4th)	0	2	6
Mr. J. F. Swann (5th) ..	5	0	0
First Presbyterian Church, Holywood, per the Rev. G. L. Phelps (7th)	1	5	0
Miss Colton and the Misses Gillespie (33rd)	0	7	6
Mr. Alfred Frost (2nd) ..	2	2	0
Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Green (18th)	1	0	0
West Grove Women's League, Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox (32nd)	0	9	0
Mrs. Julian Winsor (39th) ..	1	0	0
Miss M. Fretwell (14th) ..	1	0	0
	£20,270	9	0

Parcels have been received from: Hilda Lucas and Miss E. Case; Miss E. A. Eveleigh; Altrincham and District War Hospital Supply Depot; High Street Sewing Guild, Swansea (per Mrs. Simon Jones); Miss E. S. Hollins; Miss E. Higginson; Essex Church Work Parties (per Mrs. Weatherall).

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

A WORD FROM A HUNGARIAN UNITARIAN.

In a letter dated January 12 and recently received by the Rev. C. J. Street, Dr. G. Boros of Kolozsvár, Hungary, says: "It was well known to us that your isle-country is far away from here, but now she seems to be out of reach for us Continental people. For a year no news reached us. The first literary news reached here a few days ago, our dear old INQUIRER, with extracts from my letter. Then followed a second copy, both through Miss Van Eck, our dear mediator. Your dear letter was the third and sweetest. Thanks for your warm sympathy and old friendship." He tells how serious and prolonged the illness of his daughter Roszika was: she is now slowly recovering from typhus fever. Dr. Boros further says: "It will take a long time yet before people will see that the spoiling of so many precious lives and treasures might have been avoided if people trusted each other as behaved good and sincere Christians. At Christmas I delivered a lecture in a country place on 'The Value of Man,' a doctrine which we Unitarians have been preaching ever since our first apostles began to speak. Let us hope that within a short time we shall enjoy the blessings of peace."

SCHOOL FOR MINISTERS.

THERE never was a happier inspiration than the idea of making use of Summer-ville, during the temporary war suspension, for weekly sessions at which ministers might take a short college course and come into contact with some of the best academic influences of the time. Naturally, the seventy-five ministers and lay-workers who attended the School were eager at the closing proceedings on March 11 to express their warm gratitude for the most helpful scheme, so ably planned and carried out by the Warden of the College, the Rev. H. McLachlan, and equally strong was the hope that another School might be held again in the near future.

Every Monday morning from January 7 to March 11 the School began at 10.30, and two lectures were given before and two after lunch, which was provided by the kindness of the College Committee. The list of lecturers and lectures were admirably suited both to meet the needs and questionings of busy ministers who wish to know what is going on in the world of scholarship, and also to stimulate the wish for further studies. The Warden's own lectures gave a most welcome illustration of what scholarly research can do to throw light on the New Testament, and his studies in Luke in the Papyri must have been a revelation to many of the New Testament criticism as a very "live" subject. The same kind of impression was made by the genial and broadly human treatment of the Old Testament by Principal Marshall, of the Baptist College, who lectured on the Code of Hammurabi, and on the Elephantine Papyri. And here may be mentioned the wide catholicity of the School in respect both of lecturers and hearers. The former included Principal Bennett and Professor Mackintosh of the Lancashire Independent College as well as Principal Marshall, Principal Graham of the Society of Friends, Professor Peake of the Primitive Methodists, Professor S. A. Alexander and Professor Weiss of Manchester University, the Rev. T. Nicklin (Warden of Hulme Hall), the Rev. J. Hope Scott (Presbyterian), as well as Principal Jacks of Manchester College, Oxford, and Principal Mellone of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, the Revs. C. Peach, W. L. Schroder, and L. Clare; while Conferences were conducted by the Revs. C. J. Street, J. C. Flower and Dr. Mellor. All the lecturers complied with the obvious necessity of the School, viz., that the lectures had to be framed for a short and clear and at the same time a stimulating treatment of the very important and far-reaching questions they raised. The great subjects, for example, discussed by Principal Mellone, Conscience and the State, were handled in a very brief space with a mastery of grasp and lucidity that made these two lectures a most profitable point of departure for further investigation.

Where everything that was done was so excellent it would be invidious to single out individual lectures, but it may perhaps be permitted to say that the School was fortunate in being able to have the most recent scientific opinion on the subject of Heredity and Evolution lucidly treated by Professor Weiss. This was only one instance of the extension of the curriculum beyond the sphere of theological subjects, for social, pastoral and ethical topics were ably handled by Miss Margaret Ashton, Mr. G. G. Armstrong, Dr. Jessel, Mr. F. Hall and Mr. G. B. Wilson, the Temperance advocate. Moreover, the hearers included two representatives of the Church of England, one Presbyterian, two Congregationalists, one Friend, two Wesleyans, and two United Methodists. The average attendance at the School was 31.7, and seven glorious men never missed a day. Alas, it must be stated that three of these were "orthodox"!

It must be owned that the hearty vote of thanks at the close of the proceedings to the Warden and Matron, and to the ladies who had given their services voluntarily at lunch time, was well earned. All the arrangements had been made with care, and the Warden and Committee are to be congratulated on the entire success and helpfulness of the scheme. When our veteran friend, the Rev. W. G. Cadman, who had not thought himself too old to "come to school" once more, offered the closing prayer and pronounced the Benediction everyone realised that a solid piece of work had been accomplished which could not fail to have the best results.

W. WHITAKER.

THE SOCIETY OF FREE CATHOLICS.

THE following "Basis" has been adopted, and is issued with the April number of The Free Catholic magazine:—

We affirm our absolute moral and spiritual loyalty to our Lord Jesus Christ as the Son of God and our faith in Christ as God's supreme gift for the salvation of the world, and declare our solemn resolution by divine grace to abide in this faith.

As desirous of realising our membership in the One Holy Catholic Church, we would explore and appropriate all that is essential to life, faith, worship, and order in the experience of the whole Church, endeavouring to combine Christian faith with freedom of thought, and emphasising the central realities of that faith along with their generous interpretation and their universal application to all the needs of every soul.

We would foster the mystical development of the soul; we uphold the sacrificial significance of worship; while recognising the worth of the simplest forms of sincere worship, we believe in the grace of sacraments, the necessity of expressing devotion in visible forms, and the value of appeal through the senses to the soul; and all this we shall seek not by imposing our will upon others or by hasty innovations, but by labouring to secure an appreciation of their spiritual right and their adoption by common consent.

We seek a reconciliation of the individual and congregational liberties developed among the Free Churches with the essential order and government of the Catholic system.

We hold that Jesus Christ is rightful Lord of all life, personal, social, national and international, and that Christianity is applicable to all the conditions and necessities of humanity.

We therefore set ourselves to proclaim the Kingdom of God, and call upon men to repent them of their common and personal guilt for the divisions, strifes and animosities which sin against brotherhood and rend the Body of Christ.

We would effect the Christian revaluation of life, and reveal the true meaning of wealth and the divine function of work. We would establish an order of society conformable in all things to the Gospel, wherein every barrier to unity, arising from false views or wrong institutions whether of class, sex, nationality or race is done away, putting our trust in the persuasive example of personal sacrifice and of agreed corporate experiment, being convinced that merely coercive legislation and methods of violence cannot establish the Kingdom of God.

We urge that the Church should lead the way by the re-ordering of its own life, and by the encouraging of advance towards simple and consecrated ways of communal life by those who have a religious vocation thereto.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

COUNCIL MEETING.

As already reported, the Council met at Essex Hall, March 27, the President, Dr. Estlin Carpenter, presiding.

The Secretary (the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie) having read the Committee's Report, the President moved its adoption, and paid a tribute of reverent gratitude to the memory of Mr. Charles Hawksley, Mr. Howard Chatfield Clarke (Treasurer of the Association), and the Rev. William Wooding, each of whom had attended the preceding meeting of the Council. The Rev. A. H. Dolphin seconded the motion, which was carried. Several suggestions as to publications were made by members, and the attention of the Committee was promised. Miss Hill also commended warmly the support of the Italian Unitarian Movement.

The Secretary reported arrangements for Whitweek as follows: Service at Hampstead, Tuesday evening, preacher the Rev. A. W. Fox, M.A.; Annual Business Meeting, Wednesday morning; Public Meeting, Wednesday evening—speakers: the President (Dr. Carpenter), the Rev. Bernard J. Snell (ex-Chairman of the Congregational Union), the Rev. H. Gow, B.A., and Mr. R. M. Montgomery, K.C.; Thursday evening, Essex Hall Lecture, Mr. C. G. Montefiore on 'The Place of Judaism in the Religions of the World.' Other meetings would be arranged as usual by the various allied societies, and special attention was directed to the Postal Mission meeting on Thursday, when Dr. P. H. Wicksteed would give an address on 'Dante's Vision of Peace.'

The President's Visit to Churches.

The President said he had been asked to give some impressions received by him during his two years of office as to the condition of the churches he had visited. He admitted that he had not seen them in their ordinary life and circumstances—it was doubtful, indeed, if any official visitor could at any time judge as to the usual state of affairs. But, allowing for this, as well as for the abnormal features due to war-time, he had been much interested and exercised by what had come under his notice. Without attempting any complete description, he would only remark that, if attendances were small, as was frequently the case, they certainly were composed of people who came together uninfluenced by fashion, and who were singularly attentive and serious in demeanour. In some places he had been struck by the relatively large proportion of men in the congregations. It must be admitted that their churches, in common with most others, gave evidence of a drifting away of many people from public worship; but, remembering the very large withdrawals of their young men from the classes, choirs, and other institutions, it was not surprising that numbers had seriously dropped and the general life of the congregations had suffered. The subject must be viewed in connection with general and special circumstances. Among the former was the suspicion of Labour—once too well founded—that all churches were on the side of wealth and against trades unions; and among the latter was the extraordinary individualism of our congregations in the conduct of services, the choice of hymnals, &c. Their chief lack, he felt, was the absence of any sense of the duty of public worship; and this was due, he believed, to a failure to develop a feeling of corporate life in the Church. Dr. Carpenter enlarged upon this subject in concluding his address, and his remarks are given in full on another page of this issue.

The Rev. Dr. Hargrove having expressed the thanks of the Council to the President for his address, the proceedings terminated

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

MISS BAKER.

THE announcement which appeared in THE INQUIRER of the recent death of Miss Lucy Baker in her 82nd year, will have been received with much sorrow by a circle of attached friends in the West of England. In her native town, her well-known presence will be greatly missed. She and her brother, Mr. Malachi Baker, whose death occurred towards the close of last year, were the eldest children of Mr. and Mrs. John Baker, who, with their large family, were constant supporters of the Old Meeting at Ilminster, and regular attendants at the services. In the congregation, choir, and Sunday school, Miss Baker's life-long services will be gratefully remembered by all who came into contact with her. Her simple sincerity and straightforwardness, together with a neighbourly feeling that never failed, made her a helpful friend to everyone about her. It is always sad when the last representatives of families long identified with our old congregations leave their places vacant, but we are happy to remember that Miss Baker's youngest sister, Mrs. Gonway, carries on elsewhere the tradition of her family.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Belper.—On Sunday, March 24, the Rev. A. Leslie Smith concluded his ministry of nine years at the Field Row Chapel. There was a good congregation at the evening service, after which Mr. W. Jones and Mr. W. Ryde bade a hearty farewell and expressed earnest good wishes on behalf of the members and friends. A wallet containing treasury notes was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Smith, who replied, expressing their thanks and friendly regard.

Bridport.—On Sunday, March 24, the members of the Unitarian Church had the pleasure of a visit from the Rev. Dr. J. P. MacCarthy, of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A., who is in England on important official business. Dr. MacCarthy preached to large congregations, in the morning on 'Immortality,' his subject in the evening being 'The Greek's Request.' Collections were held for the Dorset Guild of Workers, an association which under authority of the British Red Cross Society has sole charge of the Dorset prisoners of war. On Monday evening Dr. MacCarthy lectured at the Literary and Scientific Institute on 'Abraham Lincoln.' The Mayor of Bridport (a Congregationalist) presided over a crowded audience. A sum of six guineas was realised from the sale of tickets and handed over to the Bridport War Hospital Supply Depot. In desiring to express his thanks publicly to Dr. MacCarthy the Rev. W. L. Tucker strongly urges his brother ministers and congregational secretaries to make early application to our American visitor at Essex Hall for the privilege of his assistance.

Chesterfield.—Mr. William Storer, a member of the Elder Yard Chapel congregation, has undertaken to help the friends at Narborough Road Chapel, Leicester, during several Sundays of their interregnum.

The Churches in Scotland.—The Scottish Unitarian section of the Unitarian Monthly for April gives details of activities in various parts of Scotland, and, in particular, announces a list of meetings which Dr. Estlin Carpenter is to address. Next Sunday, April 7, he will preach, morning and evening, at Aberdeen, addressing a public meeting the next day. On Tuesday he will be at Dundee, on Thursday at Edinburgh, on Friday at Glasgow. On Saturday, April 13, there will be a Conference (which will form part of the proceedings of the Annual Meetings of the Scottish Unitarian Association) on 'How to strengthen our Churches, and extend our Work in Scotland,' which will be opened by papers by the Rev. H. Dawtrey and Mrs. Hutchinson. Dr. Carpenter will conclude this long list of engagements by preaching at St. Vincent Street Church, Glasgow, morning and evening, on Sunday, April 14.

Aberdeen.—The Rev. Henry and Mrs. Dawtrey have received a cordial welcome at an informal social, when a message was sent, through Mrs. Webster, to the Rev. A. Webster, the builder of the Church which stands to-day as a grand memorial of his courage, integrity, and ability. Dundee.—At the fifty-second anniversary of the re-starting of the Unitarian cause in Dundee the Rev. H. Williamson, minister of the Unitarian Church, delivered sermons dealing with some of the theological changes which have taken place since the opening of the church. On the following evening the Rev. Dendy Agate conducted a short service, and the anniversary of the opening of the Sunday school was held the next Sunday. Edinburgh.—There have been excellent attendances at the meetings of the Study Circle in connection with St. Mark's Church which are held in the hall after the evening service. The Rev. R. V. Holt has now completed the series of six evening lectures referred to in these columns on March 2, and the members are looking forward to Dr. Carpenter's visit, and to his promised lecture on 'Religion in War-Time and After.' Glasgow.—At a Study Circle meeting in connection with St. Vincent Street Church on March 8 Mrs. Barlow, member of the Town Council of Callander, spoke on the subject of 'Women in Local Government,' describing the work of the Maternity Committees, which had reduced the rate of infant mortality in some of the poorest districts of Glasgow to less than the average rate for the whole city.

Clifton.—Dr. Beckh brought to a close on March 24, a series of popular lectures on 'Some of the Great Books of the World,' which have been given during the past season at the Clifton Arts Club, his final subject being 'The Bacchæ of Euripides.' The lectures have been largely attended and greatly enjoyed, and at the conclusion a cheque was presented to Dr. Beckh as a small token of appreciation on the part of those who had been present at the whole series. A small committee has been appointed to make arrangement for a further series of lectures next autumn, on 'Heroes, Saviours and Teachers,' it being apparent that larger and more suitable accommodation must be found.

Lewes.—The Westgate Chapel Literary Society has, during the past winter, devoted itself chiefly to the arrangement of the weekly entertainments to the wounded men from the local hospitals, and, as in former winters, it has had the kind assistance of many friends in the town, who, with their musical and other talents, have helped to make the evenings so enjoyable. But although the literary character of the Society has had perforce to be somewhat in abeyance, it has been maintained by three excellent lectures that have been given during the latter part of the session. On February 19, the Rev. F. K. Freeston, always a welcome visitor to Lewes, told, with the aid of his beautiful lantern slides, the heroic story of lighthouses and life-boats; on March 5, Dr. W. Blake Odgers, K.C., delighted his audience with his lecture on 'Machiavelli'; and on March 12, the Rev. W. F. Adeney, D.D., who has lately come to reside in the town, dealt in a most interesting manner with the new light that has been thrown on Wordsworth by Harper's recently published biography of the poet. At the close of the latter lecture the vote of thanks to Dr. Adeney was proposed by Mr. F. Frankfort Moore, the well-known novelist. To the deep regret of all the members of the Society, Miss Packwood, who has ably discharged the duties of hon. secretary, is leaving Lewes. She has been the recipient of a gift of books, as a token of the Society's appreciation of her valuable services.

Liverpool.—In the Hope Street Church Calendar Dr. Mellor announces that he purposes to hold over, in view of the present grave crisis, the consideration in a series of discourses of certain large problems of vital importance from the point of view of religion. He deems it right to "concentrate in all our worship and services deliberately and exclusively on the simplicities of Faith, Hope, Sympathy, Consolation, Encouragement, and on the task of keeping our souls alive. There are eternal realities of God and Christ and our souls which endure throughout all shocks and changes of time, and it is certain that only by contact with these can we live as we ought, and be ready for whatever the future may bring."—On Thursday, April 11, under the auspices of the Liverpool District Missionary Association of Free Christian and Unitarian Churches, a United Devotional Service will be held in Hope Street Church, at 8 o'clock. The service will be conducted by Dr. Mellor, and the sermon will be preached by Dr. Jacks, Principal of Manchester College, Oxford.—On Wednesday, May 1, the Rev. Dr. W. E. Orchard, of King's Weigh House, London, President of the Free Catholic Society, will conduct a Public Service, and preach in Hope Street Church, in the cause of Christian unity. The service will commence at 8 o'clock. —Dr. Pollitt proposes to arrange for a series of organ recitals to be held fortnightly in the church on Thursday evenings from May 2 to July 11 inclusive. Promises to take part have been secured already from several of the most prominent organists in the country, including among others the organists of the Manchester and Birmingham Town Halls and the Glasgow Cathedral. The music will be preceded by a brief religious exercise.—The addresses given to the Social Problem Circle in March by His Honour Judge Thomas, and Miss Maude Royden, drew crowded audiences, and Miss Royden has expressed her pleasure in talking to people who were so obviously eager to get at the truth, and so helpful in their questions.

Liverpool.—On Sunday last the Rev. J. Collins Odgers concluded his temporary engagement as minister-in-charge of Ullet Road Church. He resigned the pulpit at midsummer last, but in October acceded to the request of the congregation to resume his duties until his successor, the Rev. Lawrence Redfern, M.A., B.D., of Norwich, should be able to take up his residence in Liverpool in the early spring. Mr. Redfern will commence his pastorate on April 7. His address will be 109 Ullet Road, Sefton Park, Liverpool.

London: Brixton.—Dr. Mellone, Principal of the Home Missionary College, Manchester, will preach at the Effra Road Church to-morrow (April 7), and Dr. Hargrove on the three succeeding Sundays.

London: Hampstead.—'The Need of a New Puritanism' is the subject of a series of three addresses which the Rev. Henry Gow will deliver at Rosslyn Hill Chapel in April. On April 14, the subject will be 'The Old Puritanism'; on April 21, 'The New Puritanism in its relation to Morality'; on April 28, 'The New Puritanism in its relation to Religion.'

London: Islington.—Mr. Joseph Harvey Lewis, whose discourses both in the pulpit and in the lecture room during the last few years have been so much appreciated by the congregation of Unity Church, has been nominated by the Church Committee to fill the place on the Presbyterian Board left vacant by the death of the Rev. W. Wooding.—The Report presented at the annual meeting emphasised the need for more financial aid in order that the work of the church may be adequately carried on. The minister, the Rev. J. Vint Laughland, has himself made a substantial contribution to the Funds out of his earnings at Woolwich, and other friends have generously assisted, but still more strenuous efforts are needed. More workers are also required, especially teachers in the Sunday school.

London: Mansford Street.—The Junior Drill girls of the Mansford Street Church and Mission are to be heartily congratulated on their success at Caxton Hall on March 9, when they again won the Junior Shield, with 62 marks out of 70; Bell Street being second with 58. In the Senior Competition, the Mansford Street team obtained 62 marks also out of 70, and were equal fourth, Portland Institute winning the shield with 65½ marks. At the Display on May 11, musical items will be contributed by the members of the singing classes, conducted by Miss Harris.—It is good news that the Church choir is to be re-formed. New members are heartily invited.—News has been received with great regret of the death in action of Ernie Horan, a member of the Men's Club. During the past year the Men's Club and the Preston Club have lost W. Allen, C. Baker, W. Bartram, J. Cottrell, E. Horan, C. Short, F. Snow, W. Stevens, and J. Thompson. All these have been killed on active service, and the fact is recorded in the Calendar with profound sorrow, mixed with pride. Sergeant Harry Dearman is to be congratulated on winning the D.C.M.

Manchester.—The one-day sale of work in connection with the Moss Side Unitarian Church, which was held on March 23, was a great success. It was opened by Mr. P. M. Oliver, O.B.E., the chairman being Mr. R. G. Lawson. The total amount raised was £127 after all expenses were paid. Sincere thanks are due to all who helped to bring about such a satisfactory result.—The sum of £9 10s. was realised as the result of an entertainment given by the Musical Society at the end of February, half of which has been devoted to the church funds and half for the purpose of sending parcels to old Sunday scholars now at the front.

Montreal.—The Rev. D. H. Ferrell of Brockton, Mass., has been appointed minister of the Unitarian Church at Montreal, Canada, in succession to the Rev. F. R. Griffin, who is now minister at Philadelphia, U.S.A. Mr. Ferrell entered the Unitarian ministry in 1902, and he has been at Brockton since 1906.

Mossley.—A service of Consecration and welcome into church membership was held on Easter Sunday evening when thirty-eight new members were received into fellowship by the Rev. C. E. Reed. The majority of this number were young people, members of the Sunday school, who have met weekly during the past two months for instruction.

Norwich.—The Annual Meeting of the congregation of the Octagon Chapel was held at the Martineau Hall on March 26, Mr. A. M. Stevens presiding. The accounts revealed a satisfactory financial position, there being a balance in hand slightly larger than that of the previous year. The Committee's report stated that all the men of military age were serving their country, and two—Private Harry Wilson, R.A.M.C., and 2nd Lieut. W. L. Gowing—had made the great sacrifice. A sum of £24 3s. 1d. had been raised during the year for Red Cross work. The outstanding feature of the report was again a whole-hearted and sincere recognition of the labours of the Rev. L. Redfern, who had consistently striven to guide and console his people, to sustain their faith and hope and courage, and to hold before them those ideals which represent all that is best and noblest in human life. Tribute was also paid to his valuable Sunday school work, and to that of Mrs. Redfern. Deep regret was expressed at the impending loss which the Octagon Chapel would sustain by the removal of Mr. Redfern to Ullet Road, Liverpool, yet not without gladness that an opportunity had come to him for work in a wider sphere. During the proceedings a presentation was made to the Rev. L. Redfern by the chairman, as indicative of the goodwill and affection of the whole congregation, in the form of a framed picture in oils of a bit of Norfolk river scenery, painted by a noted Norwich artist. Mrs. Redfern received an address, also a gift for their infant son, which were both presented on behalf of the Sunday school by Miss Watling. In his reply Mr. Redfern said that he had aimed at keeping the light of the ideal burning clear and undimmed through all the darkness of the time, and had tried to turn the minds of his people to those eternal things which remained unshaken even by the violence of war. In bidding his friends and supporters an affectionate farewell he asked the congregation to accept from himself and Mrs. Redfern a new cloth for the Communion Table, and the gift was gratefully acknowledged by Mr. A. M. Stevens. Mr. Redfern's farewell sermon was preached on Sunday evening last to a large congregation.

Parkstone.—On Sunday last Mr. S. Clement Ryley completed three years as hon. lay preacher at Emerson Hall, and was unanimously asked by the congregation to continue his services.

Sheffield.—The Rev. Alfred Hall, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, who has accepted the unanimous invitation of the congregation at Upper Chapel to become co-pastor with the Rev. C. J. Street, will begin his new duties at the beginning of August. The pulpit duties will be shared by both ministers, Mr. Hall taking over the pastoral and institutional work, including the superintendency of the Sunday school.

Tavistock.—The Rev. Alfred Lancaster will resign the pulpit here, and retire from the active ministry, in July. An alumnus of the U.H.M.C., his first settlement was at Whitchurch, 1881.

Wareham.—The service on Easter Sunday at South Street Chapel was conducted by Mr. W. E. Stephens (Lay Superintendent) of Poole, the lessons being read by Private Crome, who has given his assistance in this capacity three times previously, and will conduct the service next Sunday. Special music was rendered, and Mr. Stephens in his address dealt with the special call of Easter at this time of stress and trial. Two trees are being planted in front of the chapel which are the gift of Mr. Arnold Pike. Mr. Stephens, whose address is St. Ladoca, Wimborne Road, Poole, will be pleased to hear from any soldier at the Wareham Camp or friends visiting them, and they are assured of a hearty welcome at the Chapel.

MARRIAGE.

CAMPBELL—BIRKMYRE.—On Wednesday, 20th March, at the Old Presbyterian Meeting-house, Templepatrick, by the Rev. A. Turner, Archibald Campbell, Belfast, to Agnes Clara, daughter of Mr. A. Birkmyre, Glengormley, Belfast.

DEATHS.

BAKER.—Killed in action, March 13, Private Leonard Baker, 5th Canadian Batt., aged 26, only son of Felix Baker.

COPPOCK.—On the 25th inst., at the Alders, Davenport, Stockport, Bertha, the fourth daughter of the late Henry and Ann Bancroft Coppock.

NETTLEFOLD.—On March 30, at Westfield House, near Arundel, Sussex, Godfrey Nettlefold, late of South Bank, Edgbaston, Birmingham, aged 43.

WILSON.—At Coldharbour, Sherborne, on March 25, Helen, widow of Robert Elliott Wilson, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and second daughter of the late John Suttill, of Pymore, Bridport, aged 92.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, April 7.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Dr. MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

ESSEX HALL, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND; 6.30, Rev. F. H. JONES.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11, Mr. A. J. HOWARD HULME.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Dr. F. H. HAYWARD; 6.30.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL; 6.30, Rev. Dr. HARGROVE.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

WOOLWICH, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11, Mr. JOHN BEGG; 6.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11, Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. O. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. HAYCOCK.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. R. F. LISTER; 6.30, Rev. C. ROPE, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11, Rev. J. L. HAIGH; 6.30, Rev. J. E. JENKINS.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. S. T. PAGESMITH.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Ferawood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD D.D. Sunday School, 3.

* THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.*

* Secretaries of churches which publish Calendars are requested to send the Calendars regularly, and as soon as possible after publication, to the Editor.*

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

April

7. Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.
 14. Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.
 21. Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION & STAMFORD STREET CHAPEL.

The ANNUAL MEETING of Subscribers and Friends will be held at Stamford Street Chapel, S.E.1, on TUESDAY, APRIL 9, 1918, at 7.30 P.M.

On the same occasion a welcome will be offered to the Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.

F. W. TURNER, Esq., will preside, supported by the Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A., the Rev. H. Gow, B.A., and others.
 Coffee 7 P.M.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL ON MODERN LINES
WITH PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

The aim of the Religious Teaching is to instil a simple Christian Faith and personal religion. There is full Morning Service in the School on Sunday. In the evening boys may, if their parents desire it, attend a place of worship in Nantwich.

Full Prospectus, apply to the Head Master :
 H. LANG JONES, M.A. (Oxon.).

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
 C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000
 Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

THE BASIS OF
THE FREE CATHOLIC MOVEMENT

appears in the April Number of

THE FREE CATHOLIC.

Together with an Editorial Article by the Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS on

THE BASIS OF THE FREE CATHOLIC MOVEMENT.

Other Articles are:—

THE TECHNIQUE OF THE MINISTRY.

By the Rev. LEWIS JOHNSON (Congregationalist).

THE PRIESTHOOD OF DEMOCRACY.

By the Rev. CONRAD NOEL, Vicar of Thaxted.

PRIESTHOOD: A LAY VIEW.

By Miss LYDIA E. BOWLER.

Orders with remittances to Mr. E. ELLIS TOWNLEY, 65 Temple Row, Birmingham.

Price 1d. ; 2d. post free. 2s. per annum.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY.

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,

Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
 F.S.I. H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
 Miss CECIL GRADWELL. H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

TAVISTOCK.—ABBEY CHAPEL. Change of Secretary. Mr. THOS. SLX, 13 West Street, to whom all correspondence must be addressed.

Miscellaneous.

IRISH LINEN TABLECLOTHS, superior double damask, very slightly imperfect, 2 x 2½ yards, 17s. 10d., postage 5d. Amazing value. Write now for Monthly Bargain List, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street,
 MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT. Cash or offer by return. Before selling make sure of their value by writing for FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any artificial teeth.—E. LEWIS, 29 London Street, Southport, Lancs. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER

THAT OLD CHAIN

You do not wear and all disused Jewellery, Trinkets, Watches, &c. can now be sold at MAXIMUM PRICES.

In fact, many articles are worth more than you paid for them. ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) ANY CONDITION NOW WORTH UP TO £15 PER SET strictly genuine. Highest possible offers made by return for all goods sent to us. If not accepted, goods returned at once, post free.

SATISFACTION ASSURED.

I. RAYBURN & CO.,
 105 Market Street, Manchester.

* All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS
TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
 PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2;
 INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenæum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate, Saturday, April 6, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3954.
NEW SERIES, No. 1057.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	113	MEMORIAL NOTICES :—		Camps and Hospitals	117
A CHRISTIAN SOCIAL CRUSADE	114	Mr. T. Kingston	116	THE HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE, MAN-
BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	115	Kristofer Janson	116	CHESTER	117
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—		CORRESPONDENCE :—		NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	118
Alcohol : its Action on the Human Organism	115	The Churches and the Ministry	116

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

THE new Army Bill, as introduced, presents some very ominous features; if we do not discuss them here it is not because we are insensible to the extreme gravity of the issues raised. The position of Ministers of Religion, however, concerns us specially. Clause I. conscripts every male British subject between the ages of 18 and 51, subject to personal appeal; subsection (2) includes Ministers, but unless they so wish, they will not be required to perform combatant service. In applying this regulation, Mr. Bonar Law says, discrimination will be used, but experience shows that such promises have a dubious value. Congregations and Ministers, therefore, will do well to arrange as wisely and as promptly as they can for the future. We have never disguised our opinion that fit men, being Ministers, may properly share in fighting; but if they do, their ministerial work must be done by others. Unless the religious life of our people is maintained, the very thing we fight for—liberty, justice, goodwill—will tend to fade out of the national vision.

* * *

ALL our readers who are concerned in this subject should note that at the monthly meeting of the Executive Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, held at Essex Hall on Wednesday, April 10th, a special sub-committee was appointed to take into consideration the effect of the new Bill upon Unitarian Ministers and Congregations; to confer with the National Service Department regarding the operation of the clause relating to the enlistment of ministers of religion; and to offer such counsel and assistance as may seem wise and useful.

MR. BALFOUR'S speech at the Mansion House last Saturday, on the anniversary of the entry of the United States of America into the war, was worthy of a great occasion. He justly emphasised the high principles promulgated in the President's statements of policy, and no less justly stigmatised the base hypocrisy of the Central Powers in professing adherence to these principles while grossly violating them in practice. The Powers themselves, one would think, must see that, as Mr. Balfour pointed out, such a system as they are trying to set up in the East cannot be stable, involving as it does a sense of oppression and over-reaching intolerable to the subjected and pillaged states. With his cordial expressions to our American allies we are all in agreement, and not less so with his judgment on the "illusions" of those Russians who found out too late that "you cannot make war by rhetoric, and you cannot secure peace by fine phrases." It was America's wisdom to see that great ideals must be greatly supported, and her part in this fateful struggle, already enormously important, would assuredly accord with this conviction.

* * *

THE American Ambassador, Mr. Page, made a special point of recording the unparalleled unanimity of the people of the States in support of their President in his war policy. By coincidence, the President himself, speaking at Baltimore on the same day, referred to the flagrant conduct of the German officials in their "peace" negotiations in Eastern Europe, and expressed his deep disappointment that his own explicit declarations had been met by such a discreditable response, though "even in this moment of utter disillusionment" he wished not to judge harshly Germany herself. The actions of the German leaders, however, were unmistakable; they were a challenge from might against right. "Germany has once more said that force, and force alone, shall decide whether justice and peace shall reign in the affairs of men, whether right, as America conceives it, or dominion as she conceives it, shall determine the destinies of mankind. There is, therefore, but one response possible from us: force, force to the utmost, force without stint or limit, the righteous and triumphant force which shall make right the law of the world, and cast every selfish dominion down in the dust." We believe the Americans will fulfil their pledge.

* * *

THE testimony of a number of clergy and ministers in the district of Manchester and Salford, in response to inquiries set on foot by The Manchester Guardian, seems to correspond, at least in the main, to the evidence, given in other parts of the country, in regard to the effect of the war on religious life and culture. At first, the witnesses say, there were undoubtedly many new attendants at worship and a manifest deepening of feeling; but as the months grew to years the impression seemed to wane, and the continued withdrawal of the younger men, along with the intenser toil of many people who have remained at home, has seriously diminished the numbers both of attendants and workers. Now, however, there is a widespread conviction that, both among people at home and the men in the field, there is more real and earnest thought and more truly "Christian" regard for one another than ever before.

* * *

STUDENTS of Jewish history will remember that when an opportunity occurred for the return of the captives from Babylonia, under the enlightened policy of Cyrus the Persian, it was embraced by only a small part of the people, many of whom were of a younger generation, born in the land of exile and not unnaturally feeling at home in it. Those who re-built Jerusalem and founded the new Judaism proved more important in the history of mankind; but those who stayed behind left their own mark on religion and literature. The incident is recalled by an interesting, if in some quarters a rather painful, controversy to which the British victory in Palestine has given rise. Our Government has indicated a favourable policy toward those Jewish politicians who desire to see a revival of their nation in its old home, and warm hopes are cherished of this development. On the other hand, a large and influential body of Jews evidently believe that their wisest course will be still to espouse the national life amidst which they have been reared, while retaining community of religious fellowship with all their race throughout the world. Those who are interested in this question will find articles in the current Round Table and Hibbert Journal, the former in support of the idea of a Jewish Palestine, the latter in favour of the wider outlook on the fortunes and influence of Judaism.

* * *

WE venture on behalf of a wide circle of friends and admirers, to offer our congratulations to the Rev. Dr. Philip H. Wicksteed and Mrs. Wicksteed on their golden wedding anniversary, which occurred last Sunday. Such an achievement is rare in the case of one who has worked so hard as Dr. Wicksteed and who is still in harness. He has no longer, indeed, a pastoral charge in the ordinary sense of the term; but by his lectures, literary, economic, and philosophic, during many years, in many different places, he has become all the more widely known, and his personal influence has proved as deep as it is wide. We trust he will retain his fruitful vigour for many years to come, yielding for the benefit of others still more of that full harvest of scholarship and thought which he has acquired.

* * *

KRISTOFER JANSON, the celebrated Swedish author and lecturer, a memorial notice of whom is given on another page, sent a paper on 'The Unitarian Movement in Scandinavia' to the International Council of Unitarians and others which met in London, May, 1901. In the commemorative volume, 'Liberal Religious Thought at the Beginning of the Twentieth Century,' this paper is accompanied by a good portrait of its writer, a handsome bearded man, with large expressive eyes. Among other details, Mr. Janson referred to a difficulty in securing legal toleration for his congregation in Christianity, which was composed chiefly of workmen and sometimes numbered 800. The law recognises Dissenters from the State Church "who profess the Christian religion"; but the authorities ruled Unitarians out from this group, as non-believers in the deity of Christ. A proposal to amend the statute by adding to the words quoted a clause—"herein also included Unitarians"—was rejected; and an alternative amendment suggested by themselves was adopted, adding the words in italics to the following clause: "This law includes members of the Mosaic faith, as well as Unitarians"! Mr. Janson, while pointing out the ridiculousness of denying the Christian name to those who distinctly declare in their constitution: "We would try to preach the principles of Jesus and live up to them," said cheerily: "But the place alongside the countrymen of Jesus is also a good place."

A CHRISTIAN SOCIAL CRUSADE.

ONE of the most significant phenomena for those who read the signs of the times is the remarkable co-operation in social reform of all the Christian Churches of this country. In this field, if in no other, we appear to be approximating to a Catholic Church of Christ. I wish to adduce some striking facts which point unmistakably in this direction.

Of these the first and, in certain ways, the most remarkable is that the Roman Catholic Church is leading the way. Some of us have been familiar for years with the excellent publications on social questions of the Catholic Social Guild, invariably the work of social experts and documented from the most reliable sources. These works have naturally a bias of their own, but for those who can allow for the bias, as Robin Hood bade Hubert allow for the wind, they are among the most adequate, of a popular kind, not only in their presentation of the main social facts, but also in their exposition of those fundamental Christian principles which must be the life-breath of all social reform if it is to prove effective and abiding. Cardinal Bourne's recent Lenten Pastoral is a case in point,—"The Nation's Crisis."* You will query in certain paragraphs its reading of history and its claims for the Roman Church, but you will find yourself in substantial agreement with the major portion, even if you do not, with the Anglican Bishop of Birmingham, accept "nine-tenths" of it. You will be still more astonished to learn that the evident inspiration of this Pastoral was a little pamphlet of twelve pages, issued in July last with a preface by the Bishop of Oxford—"A Scheme of Christian Social Reconstruction," drawn up by the Inter-Denominational Conference of Social Service Unions. This Conference consists of three delegates from each of the ten denominational Social Service Unions. Miss Catherine Gittins, the Rev. F. H. Jones, and the present writer represent our Union upon it, and had a considerable hand in the drawing up of the "Scheme." Cardinal Bourne is evidently referring to this wonderful co-operation when he writes:—

"We should co-operate cordially with the efforts which are being made by various religious bodies to remedy our un-Christian social conditions. Without any sacrifice of religious principles, we may welcome the support of all men of goodwill in this great and patriotic task. Already, certain important Christian organisations have been occupied in the endeavour to build up a common platform of social reform. Such efforts certainly deserve all the help, guidance, and co-operation that we can afford them."

But this interdenominational 'Scheme of Christian Social Reconstruction'† has not only inspired a Cardinal, it has just been issued in full, together with explanatory detail and illustrative data and statistics, by the Catholic Social Guild in a booklet of some 100 pages—"A Christian Social Crusade."* In the 'Introduction' it is stated that it is "submitted" as "entirely sound from the point of view of Catholic theology."

* 3d. Catholic Social Guild, 1 Victoria Street, S.W.1.

† Price 1d., from Miss Lucy Gardner, 92 St. George's Square, London, S.W.1.

Now, if this be the case, as there is every reason to believe it is, it means that three more or less representative members of each of the following denominations: Baptist, Church of England, Congregationalist, Friends', Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, Primitive Methodist, United Methodist, Wesleyan Methodist, and our own—are agreed as to what the fundamental principles of Christian social reconstruction are, for it is these principles the 'Scheme' lays down. What are these principles? If I may be permitted to state them concisely in my own words, they are three: (1) The sacredness and inestimable worth of every human being—what we call frequently in our churches the divinity of man; (2) the right of each member of society to equal opportunities of physical, intellectual, moral, and spiritual development; and (3) the eternal worth of every soul. These are principles which a pure theism will accept no less than Christianity, but they have received their fullest and richest exemplification and embodiment in the Christian life and experience. Can we not all accept these three principles and co-operate together as one united force in the coming Christian Social Crusade?

Signs scarcely, if at all, less significant are the local Inter-Denominational Social Service Unions which are springing up all over the country. These, I believe, would speedily become almost universal if the right kind of social missionary could be sent to every town and village in the country. They are already at work in Birmingham, Evesham, Liverpool, Newark, Oxford, and Worcester, and steps are at the moment being taken to found others. Some of these Unions have already effected important reforms in their own localities, and those who have shared in their practical work are conscious of the momentous social results united Christian aspiration and endeavour can achieve for the social welfare. Every one of our ministers should set his hand to this plough, and the moment was never more opportune than the present. He would thus not only discover high opportunity of rendering service to the community in which he dwells, but would also be lifted out of the narrowing isolation to which prejudice has so often banished him, and feel himself once more an organic member of the social whole.

May I, in conclusion, repeat here a passage in Dr. Carpenter's address as reported in last week's INQUIRER? It is a most valuable re-inforcement of the views I have tried to express:—

"It is one of the functions of the Church to organise the moral forces, to lead the assault upon every kind of selfish privilege, of brutal passion, of cruel neglect, of ruthless assertion of tyrannic power. The Church has only recently begun to discover the tremendous tasks which devolve upon it as the source of an energy for the regeneration of the social order....Already the churches are meeting each other for social ends on open platforms....This appeal for a high standard of Christian performance in the various relations of life, in industry and trade, in civic government, in home and foreign politics, in international aims, will slowly gain more and more power. It will derive its force from the fundamental ideas of Jesus, and in that sense his influence will still draw towards his personality our reverence and love. But it will be exerted not in the letter but in the spirit. It must work through modern ideas, it must clothe itself with modern knowledge. The Churches which are thus drawn together must be willing to face all sorts of drudgeries of study and investigation; they must inspire the faith that God will not set us problems which he will not also give us capacity to solve. And they must be ready themselves to give the example of the sacrifices to which they will summon others."

* P. S. King, Orchard Street, Westminster, 6d. net.

H. H. JOHNSON.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

166TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,270	9	0
Anonymous (9th) ..	20	0	0
The Rev. and Mrs. T. Bowen Evans (29th) ..	1	0	0
Mrs. Wm. Tangye (24th) ..	10	0	0
Miss Short (21st) ..	5	0	0
Mrs. G. W. Hyslop, Australia (3rd) ..	0	10	0
Miss Anne Garrett (14th) ..	0	10	0
Mr. H. Woolcott Thompson (21st)	25	0	0
Mrs. Fellows Pearson (13th) ..	5	0	0
Master Henry Thew (8th) ..	0	1	6
Mrs. Woolley (3rd) ..	2	0	0
Mr. T. H. Terry (7th) ..	2	2	0
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty (46th)	4	0	0
Miss Partridge (9th) ..	5	0	0
K. L. (12th) ..	5	0	0
Miss M. T. Worsley (9th) ..	3	3	0
M. l'Abbé Nizet, Belgian Military Chaplain (2nd) ..	0	9	0
	£20,359	4	6

Parcels have been received from:—Miss M. T. Worsley; Highgate Unitarian Christian Church (per Mrs. Fitzsimmons); Miss Martineau; Great Meeting, Leicester (per Mrs. E. Lewis Lilley); Miss K. Worsley; Miss Lucy Coe; Miss Partridge; Rosslyn Hill Sewing Society (per Mrs. Thomas Cobb); Belgian Soldiers' Comfort Fund; Mrs. T. C. Abbott.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THE first Massachusetts boy to fall in the fight in France since America entered the war was Irving Adams, of Roslindale, near Boston. He was an earnest worker in the Young People's Religious Union.

THE problem of prostitution, especially in relation to the Forces, is far too complicated to be dealt with in a paragraph, but the newly published regulation under D.O.R.A. will be strenuously criticised by all who believe in the absolute necessity of the State showing an example of justice to women.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

'ALCOHOL: ITS ACTION ON THE HUMAN ORGANISM.'

THIS little book of 133 pages, published at 2s. 6d. by H.M. Stationery Office, and obtainable from any bookshop, is one that should be read and re-read by every person, whatever his attitude on the question of Temperance Reform, who really wants to know the facts. It is a report issued after the most careful investigation by a Committee appointed by the Central Control Board (Liquor Traffic) in November, 1916, "to consider the conditions affecting the physiological action of alcohol." This Committee consisted of nine members, every one of whom, except the chairman, Lord D'Abernon, holds a medical degree and fills an important medical post, and five of whom are Fellows of the Royal Society. None is known to be a practising abstainer or to have taken part in Temperance or Total Abstinence propaganda.

They deliberately excluded from their consideration all the subjects usually prominent in discussions of temperance, and say "The present statement is not concerned with the social evils arising from the excessive consumption of alcohol as a beverage; nor is it concerned with ethics, administration or national economy. We are dealing solely with the physiological facts so far as it is possible to ascertain them in the present position of knowledge." This report, therefore, is not a temperance tract, but a calm, dispassionate, unprejudiced statement of scientifically established knowledge, collected after racking the experience of investigators the world over—German, American, Scandinavian, French, &c., as well as British. It comes, therefore, with an authority that liquor seller and temperance advocate alike must acknowledge, and being written in language that is clear and interesting without being technical, it can be understood by the general reader and should have a wide circulation and do much to educate the public mind. In the space at our disposal only the briefest sketch of its contents is possible. The book deals with alcohol in three departments—as a food, a drug, and a poison, and ends with a chapter (ix.) discussing its relation to longevity, and one (x.) summing up the conclusions arrived at from the whole enquiry. The Committee begin by a careful definition of terms. Of these the most important is food, which they define as "not merely something which is useful for the normal life of the body; it is a fuel which the body can use as a source of energy." Food is of three kinds: (1) substances that serve as fuel, to supply energy and also material "for the repair of the living structure," e.g., starch, sugar, &c.; (2) substances that serve as fuel directly, and also replenish "the fuel reserve of the body," fats and proteins; and (3) substances that serve as fuel only for immediate use, but do not repair or form a reserve. In the last named sense only is alcohol a food. It passes without change direct into the blood and there gradually oxidises. In so doing it produces heat and energy, and because of that may be classed as a food. But "no one has the right to quote us as making the statement that alcohol is a food unless he defines, as we do, the exact sense in which the word is used, and the limits within which the statement is true."

But unlike other foods alcohol is both a drug and a poison, and "a final estimate of the value of alcohol as a food must involve consideration of the extent to which its use is limited by the fact of its drug action." After defining "drug" and "poison," and explaining that drug action is not necessarily harmful, the Committee go on to describe how alcohol affects the nervous system and especially the higher nerve centres. "Alcohol successively weakens and suspends the hierarchy of functions of the brain, and therefore of the mind, in the order from above downwards." In work of a rough unskilled character small quantities make little difference. But in work requiring great skill and accuracy it blunts the "faculty of self criticism," and the "mechanism of self control." The old idea that alcohol is a stimulant has been exploded. "The direct effect of alcohol upon the nervous system is, in all stages and upon all parts of the system, to depress or suspend its functions; it is, in short, from first to last a narcotic drug." It is this action that gives the drinker who takes alcohol as a stimulant the idea that it makes him less tired. When a person is tired he should feel tired, and rest is the proper cure. Narcotic action blunts this feeling by paralysing the nerve centres in which the feeling resides. But instead of stimulating the body it simply depresses these centres and deludes the consumer with a feeling which he ought not to have, except as a result of rest and restoration.

Alcohol does not aid digestion, but "in the presence of from 5-10 per cent digestion is slightly retarded, while a concentration of more than 10 per cent very definitely diminishes the rate of digestion." As a drug, its effects "are always manifested in a lowering of functional activity." As a food, "it undoubtedly has a food value, when regarded exclusively from the point of view of its capacity to act as a fuel in the body," and "may therefore be useful as a constituent of the diet in conditions of emergency, as in acute diseases, when the assimilation of ordinary foods is more or less interfered with." But alcoholic drinks, whether spirits or beer, "cannot be used as a large element in the working diet without danger of inducing such bodily disorders as may be incurred through the constant exposure of the tissues to the action of alcohol." To use it in diet is "physiologically unsound," and in the final chapter the Committee "can only say that the moderate use of alcoholic beverages is physiologically permissible only so long as it conforms to the special conditions which we have seen to be necessary in order to avoid the poison action of the drug." "On the other hand, it is certainly true that alcoholic beverages are in no way necessary for healthy life." The wise man will seek food that does not involve such risks, and abstain from consuming articles whose doubtful food properties are neutralised and destroyed by its injurious and poisonous action on the bodily tissues and on the digestive and nervous system.

The foregoing are only a few points in a book that is crammed full of information. All quotations are from the book itself.

H. G. CHANCELLOR.

THE President of the National Sunday School Union has been authoritatively informed that America has decided to be our Ally not only in the world-struggle for honour and freedom, but in the efforts which are being made here to promote the welfare of the coming generation. "Children's Year" started throughout the United States of America on April 6, the anniversary of the Declaration of War; and, among other schemes for the physical, intellectual, and spiritual betterment of the young, it will be signalised by a highly scientific endeavour to reduce infantile mortality. It is estimated that at least 100,000 infant lives will be saved in the U.S.A. alone during "Children's Year."

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

MR. T. KINGSTON.

WE regret to record the death, on the 6th inst., of Mr. Thomas Kingston, of Putney. Born in London sixty-four years ago he began work in the Excise department, but in early manhood took up business on his own account, and after strenuous efforts reached a very prosperous position in the laundry industry. His adhesion to Unitarianism resulted from the practice, for the purpose of self-culture, of shorthand reporting, eminent preachers in Church and Dissent thus leading him to independent thought. He joined Little Portland Street Chapel, then in the charge of the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed; subsequently he was attached to the congregation at Bath, later assisted in the formation of a new movement at Ealing, and ultimately joined the church at Wandsworth, where, with the break of a short period at Farnham, he resided during the last twenty years. Energetic and shrewd in all his undertakings, a considerate employer, a hospitable friend, a sincere supporter of progressive efforts in politics as in religion, his was a truly remarkable career. He leaves a widow, a numerous family, and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. The interment took place at Wandsworth Cemetery on Wednesday; the Rev. W. G. Tarrant conducted the service.

KRISTOFER JANSON.

THE war and the interruption to correspondence are responsible for our not having learned earlier that the famous Scandinavian poet and Unitarian preacher, Kristofer Janson, died on November 17, 1917. In a recent issue of The Christian Register, Dr. Wendte contributes the following memorial notice:—

Kristopher Janson, the Scandinavian poet; author, lecturer, and preacher, died in Denmark. Janson was born in Bergen, Norway, seventy-six years ago. His family was prominent in the city. He was extraordinarily gifted in mind and person, and highly educated. With his friends Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson and Kristofer Brun he started a People's High School in Gausdal, devoting himself to popular education, the restoration of "Maalet," the folk-tongue of Norway. Janson formed with Bjørnson and Ibsen a literary triad whose writings in all departments, song, legend, romance, drama, raised Norway to a high level of literary creation, and gave it distinction in the eyes of the world.

His imaginative powers and his industry and productiveness made him widely influential in Scandinavian circles. In his younger days he was a Pan-Scandinavian, seeking for a closer union between Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. He revolted from the orthodox faith in which he was reared, and sought a new field of labour in America in 1887. He settled in Minnesota.

Finding the faith congenial, he began under Unitarian auspices a ministry of freedom and progress, preaching, lecturing, editing, producing with indefatigable zeal poems, tales, and sermons. He acquired a large influence and may be considered the founder of the Norwegian Unitarian Church life of the United States. After twelve years of missionary activity in America, Janson returned to his own country. For the remainder of his career he did literary work, and gave lectures in the principal cities of the three Scandinavian kingdoms. They were among the most notable agencies for popular enlightenment and reform.

The Protestantisk Tidende, organ of the Liberal Christian movement in Copenhagen, edited by Miss Mary B. Westenholz, devotes a number to his memory. The Hanska

Herald, of Brown County, Minnesota, contains an appreciative notice of his work for Norway and its people, at home and abroad. The President of the Norwegian Parliament called the attention of its members to the death of Janson. "In him," he said, "the last of the poets who during the past century made their valuable contribution to the spiritual life of Norway, and whom the nation honoured by the bestowal of the first poet-pensions, has passed away."

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CHURCHES AND THE MINISTRY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I have no experience of the conduct of the Home Missionary College, and in introducing the following suggestion I have in mind Manchester College. It appears to some of us that between the old students of the College and the acting staff and committee, there is something of a gulf; that in dealing with such subjects as those raised on one side of this discussion, it is strange that we cannot come closer to the mother we love than by breaking down barriers of very natural reserve, and expressing ourselves in the columns of a newspaper. We look back on our college days with rainbow memories; they were very precious days; the college was our home. But sometimes it seems, in retrospect, as though the "Hail and Farewell!" of the Valedictory had been in effect very definitely a farewell. The reply may be that we ought to avail ourselves of the annual opportunity of revisiting the college in the summer. But may we not have something more intimate than that? and something made more generally possible? Just to be welcomed home now and then, and made to feel at home, and encouraged to talk about what the ministry looks like and what its needs appear to be, now that we are out in its open field? We should respond gladly to that.

I make no suggestions now about college curriculum and so forth. I question whether the best suggestions could ever be made in public columns, however generously open; rather will they arise when all the available past students are gathered together in brotherly intimacy. It seems fairly obvious that the old students of the college are equipped in more ways than one with experience which makes them alive to some, at least, of the needs of the college: to them the significance and relative importance of the various branches of college work are constantly under the searching test of the practical and daily demands of the ministry.

May I then suggest that the Manchester College committee should at an early date summon a conference, at the College, of all its old students who are at present engaged in the active work of the ministry, and, to secure as large a gathering as possible, that some assistance should be offered by the committee towards the necessary expenses of those who attend. If our alma mater were thus to gather in her council chamber her own sons who are bound to her by ties of loyalty and affection, suggestions of considerable value might be forthcoming. Nor would I stop there, but put forward a strong plea that the committee should give grave consideration to the advisability of inviting the formation of an "Old Students' Association" which would meet yearly for consultation and deliberation upon themes intimately concerned with the selection, training and placing of ministers, and with the life of our churches in so far as that can be influenced by our colleges. Incidentally, if this gathering took place during the week of the Annual Valedictory Service, &c., the usual meetings would be attended by a much larger number of those peculiarly interested in the College, the need for new and suitable applicants for the ministry would be regularly and forcefully brought before the ministers themselves, and the outgoing students would receive a brotherly welcome from a considerable number of their fellow-workers. I would disclaim, on behalf of the old students, any desire for office or for a share in executive power; we of the rank and file have no aspirations of that kind; but I would hold that both College and Ministry would benefit by the inauguration of such an association as that proposed, which might be invited to report regularly upon its deliberations to the College committee.

As to the problem of how to bring the best men into the ranks of the ministry, would it not be well at the outset to realise that this is not peculiarly a college problem, nor a question for ministers only, but our problem, whose solution is to be found chiefly in all our homes and our private lives? Young men may grow up in homes where there is evident loyalty to our churches, and even a readiness to support them, and yet not witness for themselves the power of religion to "direct, sanctify and govern" life. If they grow up in homes, or find their way by chance into churches, where religion is a vital factor, the dynamic at the back of life, not an emergency ration but necessary daily bread—they will know, from first-hand experience, its kindling and sustaining power; and many will burn to spread abroad this liberating and so precious gift. Is the first necessity an ecclesiastical polity? or better advertising? or a new college curriculum? Is it not rather that we should all frankly set out to deepen the life of the Spirit amongst us,—increase the practice of the presence of the Living God? First things first. We must throw all the accent on the essential thing. "Enter into thine own inner chamber" is the first command; later will come the call "I shall make you fishers of men." Dr. Orchard says, "Before the Church can teach, she must learn; before she can learn, she must listen."

Without this, what does anything else matter? With it, who can tell what harvest we might reap? It may seem to involve a very long wait for the ministers who are to "raise and quench the sacred thirst." But the longest way round is the shortest way home.—Yours, &c.,

JOHN C. BALLANTYNE.

Nottingham.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The interesting letters under this heading have travelled a long way from the points raised by Dr. Jacks, and perhaps the practical value of the discussion may be enhanced if we return to some of these. He considers that in order to study the Old and the New Testaments we must learn Hebrew and Greek. My own experience does not favour this view. I do not think that the Hebrew and Greek I learned at college have been any help to me in my ministry, at any rate in the study of the Bible, though they may have aided in general culture. I have studied both the Old and the New Testaments, and done something to help others study them, and especially to realise the results of modern scholarship. But I have done this through the medium of the English language with a little help from German, and the fact that I could look up texts in the original has seldom or never materially aided the work. Would not 99 per cent of our college students say the same? The case was different two centuries ago, and even later than that, but now with the wealth of material available in the English language, surely the time would be better spent in studying that material than in a futile endeavour to reach the end by a more circuitous route.—Yours, &c.,

H. SHAEN SOLLY.

Parkstone.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—As you have invited the man in the pew to express his opinion, allow me to suggest that what seems to be lacking in the Unitarian body is what used to be called "unction." In the preaching there is too much attempt to prove what cannot be proven, and on the other hand to valorously slay the slain. The Cult of Conscience is not put sufficiently in the foreground. A man should go home from church with his conscience pricked. A literary address or clever essay will not have this effect on him, while a pointed, hortatory, personal appeal from man to man may often do so. Every thinking man feels himself surrounded by difficulties, doubts, and problems of duty, and would welcome any help that might come from the sympathy of others placed in like plight.

The experiment, I believe, has been tried to form in a congregation a meeting for religious fellowship of congenial souls, something on the lines of the Wesleyan class meeting, but strictly limited to groups of half-a-dozen at most under the leadership alternatively of the minister and some trustworthy spiritually minded church member. A simple ritual of prayer and hymn with half-an-hour's serious conversation on things that matter would be found to bind the members to one another and to the church. To a minister such group or groups in his congregation would be welcome and encouraging to him in his uphill work.—Yours, &c.,

J. M. KELLEY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Your correspondents from the pew have not, so far, touched upon the reason which keeps me from attending church. I therefore venture to explain why I no longer do so.

Before the war it was assumed by the nation that if a man had money he could do as he pleased with it. Against such an assumption the Church made no real protest. Men and women might over-eat themselves, or surfeit themselves with liquor, they might spend all their leisure in amusement, they might ruin their constitutions and then command medical and surgical aid. They might use their wealth in speculations which brought ruin to thousands, and they might increase their wealth without limit (often by very doubtfully honest methods). Therefore, the aim of every man and woman was to get money. Over against this assumption the Church placed no alternative conception of living. It might condemn certain acts, but the assumption was not disputed.

Now an assumption of this kind is termed a philosophy of life. All religion is a mockery unless it stands for a different philosophy of life from the mercenary assumption prevalent everywhere before the war. A theological instruction, which deals with a God of justice and mercy, is a method of conveying to the ordinary mind a different attitude towards life from that held by the self-seeking man. Christianity represents a changed outlook on life. It stands for the larger and fuller life which is enjoyed by the man who can forego the petty desire of the moment.

The people who wish to go to church are those who have some instinctive perception that there is another such philosophy of life. They may not always agree with the preacher and they may not be able to carry out his teaching, but they want to hear the position stated. They want to know the reasons that exist for the support of this other conception of life.

The military authorities have shown themselves better able to stimulate people to self-forgetfulness and self-restraint. They have arranged a more equitable distribution of necessities, and provided rules of conduct. Why should churchgoers return to sit at the feet of those teachers who were evidently powerless to influence the minds of the nation in such a way as to prevent the rapid growth of selfish and vicious habits?—Yours, &c.

ANNIE J. LAWRENCE.

The Cloisters, Letchworth.

[After next week, when further selections from letters received will be published, we hope to give a reply by the Rev. W. Rattray, whose remarks started this discussion.—EDITOR OF INQUIRER.]

CAMPS AND HOSPITALS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—At the beginning of next week I am starting on a journey which will enable me to visit East Coast camps between Thames and Humber. Many of these camps lie miles away from the main roads and railways, and the difficulty of reaching them is—well, say considerable. It is a combination of route marching, dispatch riding and postman's round. To add to the difficulty there have been vast and swift changes in the dispositions of many troops within the last short week or two; and in view of that fact particularly I wish to ask for the latest information from our people as to the whereabouts of our friends in the district that I am to visit. I should be obliged for a line even to confirm an address that has not been changed recently, so as to make assurance doubly sure. I meet an increasing number of the boys of eighteen nowadays, and it would be a pity if I should miss any of these in the district indicated simply for lack of a postcard. Our churches are not numerous in the neighbourhoods, and my visit will be the only point of contact with our church life for some of our friends in the whole season. The counties of Essex, Suffolk, Norfolk and Lincoln, and a belt of land within twenty miles of the coast at any point, will show the limits within which I shall work. I shall be obliged for a postcard giving name, regimental number, company, battalion, billet, if any, and the usual postal particulars of any of our men. The information should be sent to me at Essex Hall as soon as possible, especially for the southern area which will receive attention first.—Yours, &c.

THOS. P. SPEDDING.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, London, W.C.2.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I believe that a large number of wounded soldiers whose homes are in other parts of the country are now in London hospitals, and I am sure that our London ministers would like the opportunity of visiting any who are connected with our churches or are known to our ministers in the Provinces. If our ministers in the Provinces will be good enough to send the names of any such men to me, and if the London ministers will kindly let me know what hospitals they are able to visit, I will make the necessary arrangements.—Yours, &c. BASIL MARTIN,

Secretary of the London Unitarian Ministers' Meeting.

23, Chislehurst Avenue, North Finchley, London, N.12.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I shall be grateful if you will give me space to say that in the course of the next two months I shall (all being well) be taking the services on three Sundays at Newgate Street, Barnard Castle. My first Sunday is April 21. If any young men from our churches and Sunday schools are in camp there I should be very glad to have their names, &c., so that I may make acquaintance with them.—Yours, &c.,

DENDY AGATE.

Greenbank, Borwick, Carnforth.

THE HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

THE Committee of the Home Missionary College remind us in their annual report that the College was founded in a year of war (1854), under its original title of the Unitarian Home Missionary Board, and that, after a peaceful prosecution of its important work during sixty-two years, it is now "disturbed by problems which this world-wide war has brought about, and which have affected tutors and students alike." The session 1916-17 opened at Summerville on October 4, 1916, with eleven students. Theological students were, for a time, exempt from military service, but early in 1916 this exemption was revoked. In view of this, and, also, of the establishment of National Service, the committee gave full consideration to the new situation. Four students having expressed their intention to take up immediately Y.M.C.A. work or whole time National Service were, on this understanding, granted their certificates at the end of the second term. Of these two were sent to undertake Y.M.C.A. work in France, one (after six months in a home camp) was refused foreign service on the ground of health, the fourth failed to obtain either Y.M.C.A. work or to be taken for National Service. Three of these men are now in charge of congregations. Another student who was unable to obtain work of "national importance" is settled as a minister, while a fifth was allowed to withdraw from the College having made an arrangement by which he was able to give full-time service for farm-work during week-days, fulfilling ministerial duties on Sundays. Certificates were given to two outgoing students who finished their college course in June, and who have since been appointed to congregations.

The annual examinations were held on June 25 and 26. The Rev. Ph. Moore advised the committee of his inability this year to act as one of the Visitors, owing to previous engagements, and the Rev. W. G. Tarrant kindly undertook the whole of the duties to the great satisfaction of the committee. In his report he said the students' answers to questions both written and oral "exhibited real interest and grasp; good evidence of original study and independent judgment."

Owing to the exigencies of the war, and to the fact that the Principal (Dr. Mellone), in consequence of the cancelling of the exemption of theological students from military service, had been able to accept an offer of special work from the Admiralty War Staff Intelligence Division, the committee decided to suspend the Academic Course for the regular students for the duration of the war. A new scheme of work was, however, launched with the object of making the College and its resources of practical use and benefit to the churches and Sunday schools in three Northern Counties, the headings being: Pulpit Supplies, Lectures to Sunday School Unions, the College Library and its use, and a School for Ministers. The warden, the Rev. H. McLachlan, was appointed secretary of this branch of work, which, as readers of THE INQUIRER know, has been organised with marked success. The School for Ministers, of which an account was given in our columns on April 6, proved a particularly happy inspiration.

The committee are earnestly considering questions relating to the future welfare of the College after the war. It is recognised that, in view of the changes brought about by the European conflict, many things will have to be altered, and there is a possibility of the present curriculum of the College being revised after serious discussion, "and brought more into harmony with the new conditions likely to obtain when peace is restored."

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Aberdeen.—The Rev. H. Dawtrey was formally inducted to his new charge at the Unitarian Church on April 7 at the morning service, which was conducted by Dr. Carpenter. At the close of his sermon Dr. Carpenter said Mr. Dawtrey had already met the difficulties of these times with courage and ability, and now he was to take up duty in a new church in the midst of the most poignant tragedy in the world's history. He exhorted the minister and congregation to go forward united in faith, hope, and love. At the evening service Dr. Carpenter preached on 'Fellow-Workers with God.' A public meeting to welcome Mr. Dawtrey was held on the following evening, Mr. John McIntyre, chairman of the congregation, presiding. Letters expressing regret at inability to be present had been received from Professor Fulton, the Revs. Dr. Wright, Dr. Calder, Dr. Thomson, Charles Mackie, and Alexander Webster, Mr. Thomas Hector, and many others. The Chairman offered a hearty welcome on behalf of the congregation, and the Rev. L. Jenkins Jones, Glasgow, on behalf of the Scottish Unitarian Association. Lord Provost Taggart said, as representing the public of Aberdeen, it gave him very great pleasure to welcome their new minister to the Granite City. In the Town Council they had been associated with the Unitarian Church for the last eighty-five years. It was that time since George Taylor, a hosier in Aberdeen, endeavoured to start a congregation of Unitarians in the city. Twice a year the name of George Taylor came before the Town Council in connection with his Mortification of £12 to assist old tradesmen of the city. There was plenty of work in Aberdeen for Mr. and Mrs. Dawtrey. Mr. Dawtrey responded in suitable terms, and an address on 'Religion during the War and After' was given by Dr. Carpenter.

Bermondsey.—On Easter Sunday evening the portrait Roll of Honour of members on active service was unveiled by Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P. Lieut.-Col. C. S. Bullock addressed the large congregation on 'Things that Count,' and referred in sympathetic terms to the sacrifice on behalf of right and justice made by the men who had gone. Of the names upon the Roll of Honour five have given their lives for their country. One of the old scholars and members, Mr. Harry Favell, has been the recipient of the Military Medal.

Birmingham: Hurst Street Domestic Mission.—The Annual Meeting of the Mission was held in the large hall on Monday, March 25, Ald. H. J. Sayer presiding in the absence of the Lord Mayor, who, in accordance with a long-standing tradition of his office had consented to be re-elected to the presidency of the Mission. The committee's report called attention to the fact that there was a steadily accumulating deficit, and that an effort must be made to add £100 to the subscription list if the good work of the Mission was to be maintained at its old standard of efficiency. The Missionary's report, read by the Rev. J. Morgan Whiteman, showed that most of the Mission agencies had been kept going, and were in a healthy state, despite the adverse conditions affecting all such institutions, and that several new agencies had sprung into existence. Chief amongst these was the Soldiers' Gift Fund, whose scope was wider than its name indicated, as it had been the means, in many cases, of starting a regular correspondence between the Missionary and absent members. The evening congregation had held its own during the year, and the proportion of very poor persons attending the services gave them the right to claim that the Mission was in some measure fulfilling its true function, and satisfying the test by which Jesus wished his own ministry to be judged. The report concluded with a detailed description of the philanthropic activities of the Mission, which have been well maintained in spite of the great difficulties of the present time. Addresses were given by the Chairman, and by the Revs. Lawrence Clare, Thos. Graham, A. H. Lewis, E. W. Martin and Stanley Mossop.

Brighton.—At the Annual Meeting of the congregation of the Free Christian Church on April 8 Mr. Hugo Talbot, Chairman of Committee, who presided over a large attendance, presented an interesting report which showed that a deficit of £33 had been transformed into a balance on the right side of £7. The most cordial appreciation of the services rendered by the Rev. R. H. U. Bloor during the comparatively short period in which he had been the minister was expressed, and it is felt that under his charge "a period of renewed life and vigour on the part of the church and its institutions is to be expected." Mr. Bloor received a particularly hearty welcome when he rose to acknowledge a vote of thanks proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Webster. A feature of the proceedings was a presentation to the Hon. Secretary, Mrs. S. T. Johnson, on the occasion of her marriage, warm acknowledgment being made of her valuable work for the church. She is a daughter of Alderman F. Wilson, and both her father and grandfather have had happy associations with the church.

Bury.—On April 7 a Memorial Service was held at Chesham Unitarian Church for Private Nathan Leak, 2nd/5th Lancashire Fusiliers, who has been missing for several months, and, it is now known, died, a prisoner of war, at Ligny, and is buried in the cemetery at Selviagny. It is recorded in the Bank Street Chapel Calendar that Frederick Ashworth, Lancashire Fusiliers, who has been "missing" since May 3, 1917, is now regarded as having been killed in action on that date. Robert Fitton, 15th Lancashire Fusiliers (formerly of the 9th) was killed in action in France on February 16.—The numbers on the Sunday school register show a net increase of 22, but the average attendances have inevitably decreased owing to the circumstances of the time. Forty-four scholars and four teachers are serving in the Forces.

Chowbent.—In accepting from the pulpit on Sunday last a two months' leave of absence, which, in view of the state of his health at the end of the winter's work his congregation had kindly offered him, the Rev. J. J. Wright said he was deeply grateful yet not at all glad, for in this time when all "man-power" seemed needed to do what it could, and with thirty of our pulpits vacant and the colleges closed, he felt what difficult duties the chapel authorities were undertaking in thus so unselfishly relieving him. He could only accept their great kindness on two conditions—that if anything unforeseen happened wherein he might be of special use, they would call him back—or that if by good chance he should recover before his time was up, he might be allowed to return to duty. He appealed to the congregation to make the work as easy as possible for the chapel officials, and warmly thanked such ministers and lay preachers as had so far offered or consented to occupy the pulpit.

Dewsbury.—During the month of March the Rev. John W. Maw preached the following course of Sunday evening sermons at Unity Church:—'Social Principles of Christianity'; 'Religion and Educational Reform'; 'Religion and Industrial Reform'; 'Religion and the State.' A most successful concert was given by the scholars and teachers of the Sunday school on Easter Tuesday, April 2, and great credit is due to Miss Ledgard for their efficient training.

Fairsworth.—The 220th Anniversary of the Dob Lane Chapel will be celebrated on April 28. There will be three services, and the preacher will be Lieut.-Col. C. Seymour Bullock. At the afternoon service the Rev. H. Barnes, of Miles Platting, will assist.

Leeds.—The members of Mill Hill Chapel gave a reception to meet Lieut.-Col. Bullock at the Philosophical Hall on March 16 when the three Leeds Unitarian Churches were well represented. Mr. Talbot thanked Col. Bullock most heartily for his services during the minister's absence, and in a delightful address the latter expressed his pleasure at being able to meet the congregation socially and become better acquainted with them.—The Hunslet Unitarian Church Committee reports that at the beginning of the year there were 77 members, as against 74 last year. The names on the Roll of Honour now number 36, but it is with sorrow that the deaths are recorded on active service of Joseph Duxbury, Ernest Atkinson and Harry Pringle—all faithful members of the school and supporters of the work of the church. The Sunday school is in a healthy condition, and there is a good staff of teachers. In October the jubilee of the opening of the Church will be celebrated.

Leicester.—Realising the special responsibility of the Church to the young in these days when so many fathers of families are serving their country away from home, the Free Christian Church, Narborough Road, opened an institute for their young people over 14 years of age. During the session now completed an average attendance of forty has been recorded, mostly boys and girls employed in the boot and shoe and other industries of the town. The originators are more than satisfied with the result of this war-time effort, and the young people have shown their appreciation in a very marked manner.

Liverpool: Ullet Road.—Mrs. Odgers resigned in February the office of President of the Ladies Sewing Circle, which she had held since it started fourteen years ago, and on March 20 was the recipient of gifts from the members which were presented by Miss Alderson in token of the affection and appreciation of the members.

London: Stamford Street.—On Tuesday evening the annual meeting of Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel was held, and a welcome given to the Rev. H. W. Stephenson, B.A., the recently appointed minister. Mr. F. W. Turner, of Stoke Newington, presided. After hymn and prayer, Mr. Athelstan A. Tayler, secretary, read the committee's report, which recorded a marked improvement in attendance at the Sunday services since the new minister took charge. Mr. Wilfred Tayler, treasurer, presented the accounts; a balance due to him had been reduced from £104 to £15. The chairman moved and Mr. R. P. Jones seconded the adoption of the reports. The latter in the course of his encouraging remarks deprecated the action of some people who in recent times had given up mission work to get busy in other and, probably, less useful ways. The Revs. T. P. Spedding and J. A. Pearson moved and seconded the appointment of the committee and officers. Mr. C. Fellows Pearson cordially moved a resolution of welcome to the Rev. H. W. Stephenson, which was seconded by Mr. A. A. Tayler, and supported by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, who expressed his great satisfaction in the fact that young and able ministers around them, like Mr. Stephenson, were taking up the work. Other friendly addresses were given by the Revs. W. J. Piggott (former minister), B. Lister, and W. Copeland Bowie. The Rev. H. W. Stephenson, in reply, said he had been much cheered by the genial words used by the various speakers toward himself and his wife. He looked forward with hope and resolution, and especially desired, with the help of their friends, to make the Sunday services a means of helpful life to all. Thanks to the chairman, on the motion of Miss Tayler, brought the business to a close.

Manchester.—The fifty-first annual report of the Cross Street Chapel Committee, which has just come to hand, refers with profound sorrow to the death of the minister, the Rev. E. L. H. Thomas, last summer, and mentions also with sincere regret the deaths of Miss Tayler and Colonel Jesse Pilcher, both long and valued friends of the congregation, and the latter chairman of committee for the years 1907 and 1908. The trustees, being of opinion that the question of the exercise of the powers of sale of the Chapel and site obtained by them a few years ago should be carefully considered prior to the appointment of another minister, appointed the following new trustees: John Dendy, H. P. Greg, George H. Leigh, Percy H. Leigh, Philip M. Oliver, A. E. Steinthal, and Hermann Woolley. The enlarged body, at a meeting held on October 25, passed resolutions defining their policy for the next four or five years.

Manchester District Sunday School Association.—Owing to the continuance of the war the Association had again been compelled to forego its usual Good Friday arrangements, and the annual meeting was held on Saturday, (April 6), as last year, in the Memorial Hall. At the business meeting at 5.30, the President (Mr. Albert Slater) was in the chair. The annual report and statement of accounts were adopted on the motion of the President, seconded by the Rev. H. E. Perry. The President referred to the recent affiliation of the Liverpool Sunday School Society, and in supporting the adoption of the report, the Rev. C. Prestwich Scott, of Liverpool, reciprocated the cordial sentiments of the Association for the Liverpool Society. The Rev. H. E. Perry becomes the new President, and the Treasurer, Mr. J. W. Barlow, and the General Secretary, the Rev. H. Bodell Smith, were re-elected. A warm welcome was extended by the President to representatives of kindred associations, which was responded to by Mrs. W. Blake Odgers, President of the Sunday School Association. A resolution of deep regret on the recent death of Mr. John Chadwick, expressing grateful appreciation of his many valuable services to the Association and sympathy with the bereaved relatives, was moved by the President, seconded by Mr. J. Wigley, J.P., and passed in silence, all standing. The Public Meeting was at 6.30, when Mr. A. Slater again presided, and in the course of his address expressed admiration for the great amount of voluntary work which has been done by the officers. The Association included more than one fourth of all our Sunday schools, over one third of all our teachers, more than half our Sunday scholars, and much more than half of those over 16 years of age. The work being done in conjunction with the Unitarian Home Missionary College through the courses of lectures to Sunday school teachers by the College Warden, the Rev. H. McLachlan, was highly appreciated. Mr. Slater referred to the scheme for the "Florence Nightingale Convalescent Home for Men" in aid of which, as was announced later, Lord Doverdale of Glossop has subscribed £500. Mrs. W. Blake Odgers conveyed the greetings of the Sunday School Association, and urged the importance of a more intimate connection between the Sunday School and the Church as a means of retaining elder scholars, and the great necessity of giving them a clear understanding of the Unitarian faith. She described the special religious services for young women which had been organised in London by the women of the churches, and urged all to work together to promote the religious life of our young people. The Rev. D. W. Robson, of Oldham, also addressed the meeting.

Manchester: Pendleton.—The Manchester Council of Christian Congregations has refused the application of our congregation to be included. The Rev. Frank Y. Leggatt, M.A., the well-known minister of the Chorlton Road Congregational Church, has written as follows to our minister, the Rev. G. Randall Jones: "I wish to assure you that there were those present who sympathised with your application, and who spoke and voted in its favour, I myself among the number. My heart is heavy and my soul is sore when I think of it. I thought the time had come to bury the hatchet of old theological controversies, but apparently not. Some think otherwise still. The world moves but oh—so slowly....God's blessing be upon your work."

Mansfield.—With the exception of Easter Sunday, the services in March were conducted by students from Manchester College, Oxford; viz., on the 3rd and 10th by Mr. E. A. Smith, on the 17th by Mr. Salmon, and on the 24th by Mr. Long. On Good Friday a short service, more particularly in commemoration of the fourteen connected with the congregation who have lost their lives in the war, was conducted by Mr. Harrop White. On Easter Sunday the Rev. V. Auguste Demant, of Newbury, preached.

Stand.—At a social meeting very warm welcome was given by the members of the Stand Chapel and Sunday school to Dr. Thackray on his return after four months' absence in France, engaged on Y.M.C.A. work. The Chairman, Mr. J. Taylor Jones, gave Dr. Thackray a hearty welcome, and mentioned how loyally and vigorously the work of the various institutions had been carried on during his absence. He also gave special thanks to the Rev. D. Walmsley for his pastoral work, which had been most acceptable. Dr. Thackray in response touched mainly (in the spirit of the meeting) on the lighter side of soldier life; his love of fun and jokes, and his good humour under great disabilities. He also mentioned how deep was the soldiers' love of home and country which showed itself continually.

Stourbridge.—The Rev. Isaac Wrigley, minister of the Presbyterian Chapel, has just been elected Chairman of the Managers of the grouped Council Schools of Lye and Wollescote. The urban district contains a population of about 12,000, and one of its Council Schools is the only upper standard school in Worcester-shire.

Wakefield.—From April 21 to May 12 (inclusive) the morning services at Westgate Unitarian Chapel by the Rev. J. M. Bass will form a series on 'Education'; the evening sermons, during April and up to May 12, will form a series on 'Is Christianity Practicable?'

Wellington, N.Z.—It is announced in the Calendar of the Unitarian Free Church that "the long-expected Unitarian magazine for the Dominion is now in print," and that if sufficient encouragement is forthcoming this periodical will be brought out quarterly. It is pointed out that this is an entirely new venture for New Zealand Unitarians, and we hope the Rev. G. E. Hale will receive all the subscriptions and donations that are required to make it a success. We shall look forward to receiving a copy of our new contemporary.

* * THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.

GOLDEN WEDDING.

WICKSTEED—SOLLY.—April 7, 1868.—Rev. Philip H. Wicksteed, second son of the Rev. Charles Wicksteed, to Emily Rebecca, elder daughter of the Rev. Henry Solly, at Rossllyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, by the father of the bride, assisted by the Rev. Thomas Sadler.

MARRIAGES.

BARTLEY—COOK.—April 10, at Hope Street Church, Liverpool, by the Rev. Stanley A. Mellor, B.A., Ph.D., Richard Thorpe, son of Henry E. Bartley, of Harrow, Middlesex, to Phyllis, daughter of Frederick and Ada I. Cook, of Liverpool.

DUMARESQU—VANCE.—On April 4, at Rossllyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, by the father of the bride, assisted by the Rev. Henry Gow, B.A., Sophie, youngest daughter of the Rev. G. H. Vance, B.D., of 12 North Hill, Highgate, late of Dublin, to Onfrey William Dumaresq, M.A. (Cantab.) of 24 Hornsey Lane, Highgate.

JOHNSON—BEDFORD.—On April 2, at St. Peter's, Belsize Park, Hampstead, by the Rev. Claud Parker, Captain Cuthbert Johnson, Cheshire Regt., youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Arthur Johnson, West House, Hartford, Cheshire, to Mamie, eldest daughter of J. P. Bedford, Esq., Indian Civil Service, and Mrs. Bedford, Hampstead.

DEATHS.

BROWN.—March 23, killed in action, Major Harold Brown, D.S.O., M.C., Yorkshire Regt., of Linkfield, Filey, elder son of Geo. W. Brown, Lindsay Grange, Bournemouth, aged 39.

DUNCAN.—Killed in action, in France, on March 25, Lieut. Alexander Duncan, M.G.C., aged 31 years, younger son of John Weddell and Margaret Duncan, of 53 Duffield Road, Pendleton, and 5 Bridge Street, Manchester.

KINGSTON.—On April 6, at 8 Northumberland Avenue, Putney, S.W.15, Thomas Kingston in his 65th year.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, April 14.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. Dr. HARGROVE.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
ESSEX HALL, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.
Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. HAROLD RYLETT.
Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
Hampstead, Rossllyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Mr. HORACE A. MUMMERY; 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.
Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 6.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.
Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11, Mr. J. W. PETERKEN.
Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. J. W. GALE.
Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.
University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D.
Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D.
West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

WOOLWICH, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING; 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11, Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. J. ISLAN JONES, M.A.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ROBERT A. DICKSON.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Lt.-Col. Rev. C. SEYMOUR BULLOCK.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. W. H. BURGESS, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. T. PAGESMITH.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

April

14. Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.

21. Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation. Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL
MANCHESTER.

Contains 23 Illustrations of this historic Nonconformist building, and those associated with it, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes, and an Introduction by the late Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Chapel. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000

Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

A SINGING COMPETITION among eight Senior Choirs from London Schools for the possession of the Society's banner will take place at Essex Hall on SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1918, at 3 P.M. Adjudicator—Mr. G. DAY WINTER.

Admission (including Entertainment Tax), 8d., by programme, to be purchased in advance from the Hon. Sec., A. STEPHEN NOEL, 42, Woodcote Road, Wanstead, E.11.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION
OF VIVISECTION,

22 Northumberland Avenue, London.

Founded by the late Mr. G. R. Jesse in 1875.

The Society offers to send a LECTURER free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c.

3s. net, postage 3d.

OUT OF THE HEART OF THE STORM.

Twelve Sermons preached at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, and Manchester College, Oxford.

BY

Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

The sermons are written by one who believes with President Wilson that "right is more precious than peace," and that no personal sorrow or loss should discourage us and turn us from our firm resolve to overthrow the Prussian autocracy. They are written too in the growing confidence that faith in God and in the supremacy of Love has become more and not less possible and real through the conflict and agony of recent times.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY.

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,

Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE,	L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I.	H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL.	H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

Miscellaneous.

WHITE ART LINEN for drawn-thread Traycloths, Afternoon Teacloths, and Sideboard Covers. Pieces measure ¾ yard to 1½ yards, 8s. 6d. bundle. Postage 5d. Bargain List, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT. Cash or offer by return. Before selling make sure of their value by writing for FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any artificial teeth.—E. LEWIS, 29 London Street, Southport, Lancs. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER

THAT OLD CHAIN

You do not wear and all disused Jewellery, Trinkets, Watches, &c. can now be sold at MAXIMUM PRICES.

In fact, many articles are worth more than you paid for them. ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) ANY CONDITION NOW WORTH UP TO £15 PER SET strictly genuine. Highest possible offers made by return for all goods sent to us. If not accepted, goods returned at once, post free.

SATISFACTION ASSURED.

I. RAYBURN & CO.,
105 Market Street, Manchester.

* * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2;
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word.
Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s.
Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d.
Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenæum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, April 13, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3955.
NEW SERIES, No. 1058.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	121	YOUR STRENGTH	123	BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	126
WHAT WILL THE EXEMPTED DO?	122	CORRESPONDENCE:—
THE AMERICAN RED CROSS	122	The Churches and the Ministry	124	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	126
THE HURRICANE	122	Rhodesian Land Rights	125

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

MR. Gow's timely words given on another page will be welcome to many readers. Four weeks of deepest stress and anxiety have passed since the Germans flung their full force against the British line, and at the time of writing the position of affairs is grave in the extreme. The only certainty, we fear, is that the "critical period" will be continued many days yet. The Premier referred on Tuesday to "fluctuations of hope and despondency." More eloquent than anything spoken or written in expression of the gloomier of these alternations has been, we venture to say, the action of the Government itself. Seldom, if ever, have men of different parties been so bewildered by the policy indicated in the Army Bill. What this or that clause really meant was doubtful; more doubtful still the ultimate intention of the Bill itself, which a good many people judged to be deliberately devised to lead to the resignation of the Cabinet. Others, less suspicious, have dubbed it "legislation in a panic," and it does seem to have too much of that character. After all, even a War Cabinet is human. So much the more need of a steadying influence among the people at large. An antique Roman was lauded for not despairing of the republic; it is his temper we all need. Those who have most of it will deserve well of the State if they now spread it abroad.

* * *

THE very important issues raised in the case of the Rhodesian Lands now being tried by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council will not, we trust, escape the attention of our readers, even in these anxious days. Perhaps even more in such days as these we need, as Dr. Wicksteed indicates in his letter on the subject, to attend to such issues. The question involved cover the whole problem of British imperial expansion. The Company lays claim to the commercial ownership of all "unalienated land," which includes the native reserves; against this claim the Crown asserts its "rights," whatever they are, the white settlers assert an "administrative" right of ownership, and the natives assert their ownership from time immemorial, and protest against an expropriation, which, if effected, would be colossal and complete, without precedent in British Colonial history. We very cordially commend Dr. Wicksteed's appeal on their behalf—and not on their's only, for all upright citizens of the Empire have a great moral stake in this matter.

* * *

ON Tuesday the sentence of six months' imprisonment in the second division, passed upon Mr. Arnold Lupton for having in his possession leaflets held to be injurious to recruiting for the army, was confirmed. His counsel urged that such a prosecution was entirely contrary to the spirit of British law on the subject of freedom of speech, and pleaded that the documents were confined to statements of fact and fair comment upon them. The judge, Sir Robert Wallace, however, spoke in the severest terms of Mr. Lupton's position in the matter, and refused to interfere with the magistrate's decision. There are, we believe, a good many people who, without at all sharing the views of any particular person thus proceeded against—and in Mr. Lupton's case, as in others of the kind, the public has only the vaguely general terms of the law reports to go upon—are profoundly disturbed by the severe repression now exerted upon writers and speakers, and who would rather risk much in the interests of liberty than be "safe" under arbitrary censors.

* * *

THE exemption of clergy and ministers from the operation of the new Army Bill has undoubtedly relieved a great many minds, and the people who were responsible for the original proposal to bring such men under compulsory service are probably finding comfort in the reflection that the number of soldiers, or non-combatant recruits, obtainable in this direction would at the best be small. The prompt conference of denominational leaders, also, in view of the very serious interference with religious work all over the country no doubt impressed the Government, and there was the likelihood to be added of a considerable amount of "conscientious objection" in an accentuated form. On the whole, most observers, seeing that all fit men who are willing and free to serve may volunteer, and that the appeal is now made to men who ought to be readier than the average man to respond where the higher duty, once seen, calls them, are content with the new turn of events.

* * *

BUT ministers and clergy will hardly be content themselves, we trust, simply to go on "as they were." Some of them, though probably not at all the majority, are already fully engrossed in their ministerial and parochial duties. The rest will surely look round for added work and see that they get it. There should be no mistake about this business, and if men are in earnest they ought to be able to assist substantially. We know—who does not?—that bungling officials too often muddle things, and we also know that some bungling volunteers would be better out of the way; but the shabbiest thing just now would be to allow oneself easily to be turned back from the way of service. Men out yonder are dying in it; cannot men at home at least live in it?

* * *

MAY we venture to advise willing ministers not to write to a Government department if they can avoid it. The probability is that this would only lead to delay, and it would certainly multiply correspondence. Here are some types of work already being done by ministers in their respective localities—and it is just there that work should be sought: assistance in public libraries; elementary school teaching; municipal council work; Labour Exchanges; War Saving Associations; hospital visitation and assistance; clerical help in offices and places of business; farm work. Where there's a will there's a way; if not in these particular lines, then in some other. We should like to see a leaflet issued giving guidance to all would-be workers of the kind.

* * *

THERE are many curious persons who would like to know just why the Government withdrew the clause applying conscription to ministers of religion. The Archbishop of Canterbury on Wednesday appeared anxious to clear himself of any responsibility; it was not at the request of the Church of England, he said, that exemption had been continued. We shall see if the clergy will now be rendered as free to join the fighting forces as the ministers of other religious bodies. It is understood that the Wesleyans were innocent of bringing pressure to bear in favour of the withdrawal; and other denominations, with one exception, are not credited with much political influence just now. The exception, of course, is that of the Roman Catholics, from whom, indeed, some pretty vigorous protests arose as soon as the proposed conscription of priests was mentioned. It is true that priests serve in the French Army, but the status of churches in France is not at all comparable to that which obtains in this country, and the Roman Catholics have a way of fighting hard for their own interests where "religious liberty" allows them. In the lobby of the House of Commons, where many interesting rumours fly about, it has been freely hinted that the Prime Minister's Nonconformist countrymen pleaded hard with him to show mercy as well as judgment.

* * *

ON Wednesday next the Union of Social Service connected with our churches will hold its twelfth Annual Meeting at the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham. Particulars are announced in our advertising columns, but we may specially mention the religious service to be held in the evening which takes the place of the usual public meeting, and will, no doubt, be considered more appropriate to the present time. The Union has passed through its infancy and is well on its way to adolescence, as a vigorous addition to our working forces. The Quarterly, copies of which may be had on application to the Secretary, the Rev. H. H. Johnson (The Orchards, Croft Road, Evesham), shows the really active spirit that pervades it, in spite of the present difficulties. As Mr. Johnson showed last week, other religious bodies are making valiant efforts of the kind; and Unitarians, who have a name for practical citizenship, ought at least to be well abreast of the rest—and this not for reputation's sake, but because the need of Social Service is now great, and will be greater as the days go by.

* * *

PRINCE LICHNOWSKY'S account of his mission as ambassador to this country in the two years before the war has now been printed for extensive circulation, Messrs. Smith & Son having been directed by the Government to prepare an edition of three millions. Employers and others, we understand, will be supplied with copies on application for gratuitous distribution. Messrs. Cassell have issued a sixpenny edition which contains rather more than has been given in the translations published recently in the newspapers.

WHAT WILL THE EXEMPTED DO?

THREE courses are open to people who by reason of age, sex, occupation, infirmity, or other circumstances, are exempt from military service. One of these courses is so ignoble, so utterly mean, especially in contrast with the heroism of the men who are flinging their lives between us and immeasurable disaster, that we name it only to dismiss it. Surely no one worthy of the name of man or woman will skulk behind that mortal shield of their country's honour and life, secretly pleased with a lucky escape and dexterously picking up all the plums of profit and enjoyment that fall in their path. "Speak not of them"—leave them to their shame.

Infinitely higher, belonging indeed to a wholly different world, will be the decision of those who, being legally free, voluntarily take on the yoke. When the vessel is all but on the rocks all distinctions of ordinary service fuse into one—the good ship must be saved. Every one who can pull on a rope or work a pump is bound to this paramount call. Only a most clear necessity of other duties can absolve him. We confidently assume that among those ministers of military age and otherwise fit who have hitherto felt that it was their special business to continue in church work there will be some, and, perhaps many, who will now realise that they ought to join up. There need be no inconsistency in this. All practical decisions rest on proportionate values. Where can a man best serve? That is the question. Sacrifice is asked for, either way. The man who is in all sincerity devoted to his ministerial vocation will have to surrender much if he obeys the impulse to step into line with the lads he has so heartily praised and encouraged. On the other hand, if a man is passionately zealous for the cause of righteousness and freedom on the earth, he cannot at the same time fight for it and still discharge the work of a pastor. Let the exempted minister be wary in his choice, but choose he must, and abide by his decision.

For those, however, whose exemption is made absolute by any such reason as we have mentioned, for those who—God knows—would with all their hearts share, if they only could, with sons and brothers, living still or consecrated by death, the most terribly beautiful task that has come to mankind in our time, the one course is quite obvious. A very lowly place is theirs to occupy, a humble piece of work is theirs to do, compared with the splendour of the service denied them; but at least they can help, and they are in simple loyalty to all they hold dear bound to help to the very utmost of their power. The older men, the women, and all of the younger people, too, who know what duty is, are bound to strive now as never before to "strengthen the things that remain."

If the emphasis is here laid upon the service of religious and moral culture, and on those social efforts by which the daily civic life is saved from degenerating into a scramble for mere material ends, it is not because of any forgetfulness of that daily life and the need of its energetic pursuit. But while multitudes are engaged in trades and industries, but few comparatively are active in the support of public worship, the diffusion of spiritual ideas and instruction, the safeguarding of virtue, the succour of the weak and sorrowing, the inspiring of the laggard. So much the more ardently, unwearyingly, hopefully, vigorously, and tenderly must we who are in the obscure line of the exempted "give ourselves to our ministry"—be it that of the leader or the followers, the officers or privates in the army of God. Is this not the least that we can do?

THE AMERICAN RED CROSS.

A SPLENDID record is given in The Christian Register of the work which is being done in France, Belgium, Italy, and on a lesser scale in Russia, by the American Red Cross. Unlike our own and the French Red Cross Societies, the American Red Cross has always considered it a part of its duty to render assistance on a large scale after such disasters as the Dayton floods, the San Francisco earthquake, or the Messina earthquake in Italy, and the present war has given unlimited opportunities for extending their beneficent activities. In France alone the Department of Civil Affairs is at work in ninety-four cities and villages, and, in conjunction with other organisations such as the Society of Friends, is running hospitals and dispensaries, caring for the tuberculous, the old and infirm, saving the babies, helping in the vast work of repatriation, distributing food, furniture and clothing, giving lectures and exhibiting "movies," providing school canteens and re-educating the war cripples. The work, the extent of which is here scarcely more than hinted at, is being carried on with the greatest energy and enthusiasm, and we cannot doubt that its influence will extend far and wide long after the war is over. It is, in fact, nothing less than a great scheme of international reconstruction, and has won the warm sympathy and gratitude of the French people themselves, who are cordially co-operating with it at every step.

THE HURRICANE.

WHEN the hurricane is passing
Who would write upon the sand?
When God's Word upon the tempest
Rides in wrath from land to land?
When the hurricane is passing,
Write no word but understand.

When the hurricane was passing
This the Word God wrote for me:
Fear not, child, yea, though I slay thee,
Trust and hope eternally:
I am Lord—I rule the tempest!
I am Love—I still the sea!

When the hurricane had passed
Came a calm so full and deep
As when upon tired eyelids
Falls the gentleness of sleep,
Everlasting rest and sweetest:
Hush! His own our God will keep.

H. H. JOHNSON.

YOUR STRENGTH.

By the Rev. H. Gow, B.A.

"In quietness and confidence shall be your strength." These words were spoken by the prophet Isaiah to his people at a time of great national danger and confusion. They were not spoken to a people living in serenity amongst peaceful, happy conditions. It was not merely that life was stern and difficult and that the duties laid upon them by God were felt to be hard and painful. There is something in the moral challenge of circumstances which is bracing and inspiring. But the nation to whom Isaiah spoke were in danger of completely breaking down under the strain of defeat and trouble. They were in danger of losing all faith in themselves and in righteousness and in God. It was under such conditions of ruinous failure, when no refuge, no strength seemed to be left to them, that these great, simple, peaceful words were spoken. "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength." They come to us to-day as a still, small voice, breathing divine peace into the heart.

It is certainly not true that Religion is only for times of stress and sorrow and failure. That is a false and partial conception of Religion which thinks of it as only a refuge for the distressed in desperate circumstances. It would seem to suggest that when we are happy and at peace we don't need God, and that in some way He is like a physician whom we only need to call in to our aid when we are ill. When we are well we do not require His help. That is entirely opposed to the deepest, truest thought of God. If it were true, then the angels living in eternal joy and safety and love would have no need of God at all, and human beings the more nearly they approached to that condition of the angels would be less conscious of God and less dependent upon Him. If Religion is only a refuge for sorrow and sin and suffering, then we should have the strange and absurd paradox that the stronger and wiser and nobler men become, the happier and more beautiful our life, so much the more independent we should grow of God.

It is assuredly not true that Religion is only for the sorrowful and lonely and distressed, and that the happier and more secure we are, the less we are aware of God. The more purely happy we are, the more loving, the more filled with the beauty and glory of life, so much the more are we conscious of an Eternal Love and Goodness who is the Source and Giver of these things.

But on the other hand there is no question that Religion finds its greatest opportunity and makes its greatest claims in times of uttermost trial and grief and failure. It is good and right to see God in the clear shining of the sea, in the blue sky flecked with fleecy clouds, in the mystery of beauty felt in little flowers, in the merry laughter of children, in happy mutual love and trust, but our hold on Religion is very insecure if we lose God in the storm and cold, when the sea roars and the whirlwind blows, when pain is our daily companion, and sorrow fills the heart. The test of a man's religion is seen when beauty and happiness and peace are taken from him, when outward circumstances are hard and painful, when we are threatened with sorrow and when failure and loss come upon us. How do we act? What do we feel? How do we bear ourselves when the power of evil seems to reign triumphantly and to ruin our joy and bring chaos into the world? Are we inclined to say "now I know there is no God"? Do we feel there is nothing left of all that we revered and to which we trusted? or can we still say "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength?" What remains to us when death takes away from us one whom we loved more than our life? Is it a little thing that our love remains deepened, consecrated, purified? Love remains not as a mere memory of something that once was beautiful and good and infinitely precious to us. True love is not a mere memory, it is an intense, almost fierce assertion that what we loved and love is of eternal worth: it is the feeling that it is something nobler and higher than any outward circumstance: it is the recognition of its infinite value. The object of our love is no more destroyed than a star is destroyed when the clouds hide it for a little time from our sight. When death has done all that death can do, we are not left with nothing but a mere memory and a hopeless grief. We are left with a deepened sense of the wonder and glory of love, of its supreme value, of its divine strength. The reality of the spirit life is made more certain to us, through our sorrow and our loss.

And it is the same experience which comes to us in the outward failure of right, when justice seems to be of less power than injustice, when evil seems to triumph over good. It is no new thing that this should happen; it has been happening all through the ages. The world is not made on the comfortable plan that righteousness easily and quickly triumphs over unrighteousness, and that its sufferings are few and slight. Our Master died helpless on a cross. His new life and power came only through the apparent triumph of evil and his own defeat. What is left when we are sorely tried; when we are pressed upon, wearied, hard-bested? What remains amid confusion and loss and failures? Is it a little thing that with all our heart and mind and strength we can still say we know that we are right; that we are striving for peace and justice on the earth; that it was our plain and sacred duty to do what we did? If we can say that we can say everything that matters.

Real faith in God means not merely striving for a right which must win because God is God, but striving for a right which is worth failing for and which can never be destroyed even by defeat. This war can never be a triumph for us even if we were to win to-morrow. We cannot speak of triumph when we think of all the suffering and pain and death of myriads of noble lives—it is a crucifixion, not a triumph, it is a resurrection, not an escape from death. And on the other hand this war could never be an utter defeat if we were utterly defeated to-morrow: it could never be a real defeat so long as we know we are on the side of right. In the conviction that we are right we become, in Paul's great phrase "more than conquerors." We revere a supreme law and duty which cannot be overwhelmed. We feel that right is not shown to be folly or weakness or a mistake, although hindered and persecuted and trodden-down and crucified. We feel it has a divine and eternal life and that it rises from the dead.

We are to-day filled with anxiety and pain; we recognise the peril of the time, but assuredly we are not left alone in the strife: "we are perplexed yet not unto despair: smitten down but not destroyed." That which is of infinite and supreme importance remains with us always. We are striving for a nobler and higher ideal for all the world, we are fighting against a Power which seeks to destroy all that we reverence and love the most, all that is most important for the peace and future happiness of the world.

It is a great and glorious privilege when men or nations are called on to strive and suffer and agonise for an ideal right. Amidst the pain and sorrow and anxiety of the time let us never lose hold of that source of peace and joy. It is not the glory of war that we are emphasising; God forbid! It is the glory of standing for the right and suffering for the right. We stand to-day, as we stood in the days of Napoleon, against the threatening of a world-wide domination, and insatiable ambition. Dark as are these days, grievous as are our failures, they are not so dark and grievous as our ancestors knew when Napoleon seemed to have conquered Europe and we stood almost alone against him. The peril to freedom, great as it is, is not so great as it was then. We must not shrink from the contest or be depressed or frightened by failures. And I do not for a moment believe that there is any danger of this, which would be the greatest danger of all. Our nation is and always has been at its best when things outside were at the worst. The unseen Power of God will support and strengthen us. We are not alone. Amidst turmoil and distress and violence we know that right remains with us and that this is the all-important thing. The end is not yet. "The eternal God is our refuge, and underneath us are the Everlasting Arms." "Trust in Him at all times, ye people: ye people pour out your hearts before Him. God is a refuge to us."

THE Humanitarian League, with the assistance of the Penal Reform League and the State Children's Association, and the support of certain influential papers like the Lancet, has been able to defeat an attempt on the part of certain magistrates to raise the age at which boys may be flogged from 14 to 16. In connection with this and other matters the League has achieved some valuable work during the past year, though it is necessarily hampered still by war conditions. A notable event in its annals was the celebration of the Thoreau Centenary, when Sir John L. Otter, who presided, gave an interesting address. Mr. Salt also spoke, and his delightful appreciation of Thoreau was printed in THE INQUIRER of December 22.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CHURCHES AND THE MINISTRY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER,

SIR,—THE INQUIRER for February 9 has just reached me and perhaps in a small way I may give you a few reflections on this absorbing topic of the future work of our Churches and our ministry. May I at the outset say that I am deeply interested in the question of the future guidance and leadership of the many thousands who have at the call of stern duty left wife, child, father, mother, to defend the cause of Righteousness and Justice, for which the Allies stand; further, as an army surgeon, I have come into very intimate contact with men—perhaps a doctor, after all, is the true confessor—and in virtue of this fact it may be that my remarks may be of interest to some of your readers. Dr. Rattray has to be congratulated on the courage he has exhibited in taking up the pen. I heartily endorse all he says. From my experience of men and from my talks with men on the absorbing topic of the future of religion in England, I honestly believe that our ministers will have a great chance given them of attracting the army when demobilisation comes. Out here at Church parades, a manly virile padre, who has undergone the same difficulties and experienced the same temptations always gets a hearing. I myself conducted weekly evening services on a large transport (alas, torpedoed!) and found the men most receptive to whatever one had to say on religion—a man gets religious, Sir, when he has to face constant danger—I am sure the men who return will be receptive—but I wonder whether those whose business it is to influence men from pulpit and platform have it in them to “get people.”

Sir, our younger men will be our future leaders, we in the army are their future congregations. Will they be able to attract us? We want to be sure that they are “alive to life.” We want to find in their words that ring of voice, that eagle look of the eye which immediately tells us they have been through our experiences. I honestly pity the theological student or young minister who has not had the experience that every young man should be experiencing to-day. Youth to-day can alone be said to be “living the time” if it is experiencing what our young manhood is living in France, Mesopotamia, Egypt or East Africa. Dr. Rattray is right when he says “it is a critical question, the getting ministers who could ‘get people.’” The people to be got are in the army and navy to-day. Our army to-day is the democracy of the next generation. On demobilisation England will have a manhood which has seen death all around, which has experienced pain, endured hardship, smiled at difficulty, learnt to overcome personal fads and likes and dislikes, above all, England will have a manhood which has felt the Power of the Unseen at times. But this England of to-morrow will have no room for veneer, nor artificiality. It can be led by the right type of men, but only by those who can give an intelligent explanation to the experiences of to-day.

The other Sunday night I went to a Wesleyan service in a building near Cairo, when before a congregation of five hundred men who had come voluntarily, two privates of the R.A.M.C. (who had been students at one of the Wesleyan colleges in England when war broke out and had then joined the Forces) were officially ordained to chaplaincies by the Chief Wesleyan Chaplain to the Forces with the E.E.F. These men had learned to hold their own amidst much that is unpleasant in barrack-room life; they had had all the experiences which are common to men out here. They had “lived,” and now I know they can “get men” who admired their willingness to leave college and become a private in the ranks. Here men speak of the things they have lived through.

Sir, these words of mine are written in all earnestness. Our leaders of the future must have lived the young man's life, and where better, I ask you, can our young ministers and theological students learn to live that life than amidst the real atmosphere of camp, or barrack-room, wet trench or hot desert?

Perhaps at some future date I may give you a few more reflections culled from the wide field of an army surgeon.—Yours, &c.,

HARMAN TAYLOR, M.R.C.S. (Eng.)
L.R.C.P. (Lond.), Lieut. R.A.M.C.
71st General Military Hospital, Egypt,
E.E.F., March, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—One fact emerges from the correspondence on the above subject, viz., that the personality which combines all the requirements of a good minister is that of a super-being. (I say “being” advisedly, for we need badly a ministry of both sexes.) We should frankly recognise that it is impossible to combine in one man or woman all the qualities of a religious minister, and adjust our church organisation, and the training for the ministry accordingly. Allowing for a variety of workings of the missionary spirit, there are, broadly speaking, two types of minister needed, the pastor or family friend, and the preacher and lecturer. Every church needs a pastor, who may be very helpful, too, in the pulpit, or if there must be a sermon at every service, or the pastor has nothing to say, there is latent preaching power in every flock which a true pastor will utilise suitably. Every church needs from time to time the further inspiration of a great preacher, some chosen spokesman or spokeswoman of the gospel, some one to speak with the experience of age, or special gifts of spiritual insight and of eloquence. A church needs, too, the expert preacher-lecturer on themes of higher culture or problems of civilisation. Ministers of this “great preacher” type should be shared by their whole denomination, and, better still, by all denominations. They could be attached to one church, but on the understanding that their main work was peripatetic ministry, arranged by the central organisation for all the churches within the denomination, and beyond its bounds. Then, if the salaries of our ministers were pooled, and none had less than a living wage, if competitive candidature were abolished, and the system of ministerial appointments socialised without entirely destroying the individual choice of each church, there would be more chance of real Christianity in pulpit and pew, and of the unfettered working of God's Holy Spirit in our midst.

As for the training for the ministry there will have to be great innovations in our present methods. The foundation, doubtless, we all agree should be a good general education, including the development of a sound and comely physique. Further equipment depends on the man or woman, and various circumstances. But among the essentials of a minister's training should be at least one year of University life (no segregation even for board-residence in a theological college), some travel at home and abroad, some experience of earning a living as a layman or laywoman, and experience of some such influences as are making in our present Y.M. and Y.W.C.A. work men and women out of both those who minister, and those to whom the ministry is given. In short, those who are preparing to be ministers, whether chiefly of the pastor or preacher type, should be brought into that environment and experience which yields insight into the human and divine problems of every-day life, and intimate touch, mentally and spiritually, with everyday people.

What is going to shake us out of our dull and short-sighted conservatism in the organisation and training of our ministers? It is a conservatism that is stifling the summons to the religious ministry in the hearts of our young men and women, and weakening the obedience of more and more of those who have already answered the call to this highest form of service of God and man.—Yours, &c.,

EMILY H. SMITH.

Manchester.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I regret that great pressure of work prevented my answering immediately the courteous, and, as it seems to me, helpful letter from the Rev. V. D. Davis in your issue of April 6. Discussion carried on in the spirit so finely animating Mr. Davis's letter might lead to fruitful results, and I am glad to be allowed to take part in it.

I must at once and completely refuse every attempt to thrust upon me the position of a “champion of a new hope.” My friend Mr. Whitaker was altogether too kindly rhetorical in the remark which apparently prompted Mr. Davis to write the last paragraph of his letter. I am only a seeker and learner, anxious for fellowship and understanding all round. I believe in certain things with some intensity: I believe in the value to Christianity of the principle of freedom for which our group of churches stands, and I believe in the work which our churches have to do in communicating this value of freedom to the main body of the Christian Church; I believe in the absolute and paramount need for Christian unity at this moment, and I believe that the way to unity is the way of reconciliation, mutual offering and receiving of the good that is severally possessed; and I believe, also, that Christianity is a religion capable of redeeming the world, and that Christianity has its centre in Jesus Christ.

Now, I am sure that Mr. Davis will forgive me and will understand when I say that, to answer fully all the points in his letter, would require much more space than THE INQUIRER could reasonably be expected to give. I must confine myself to one or two points.

First, then, a word about my phrase “a bare humanistic theism.” I am not satisfied with it; and when I wrote it first I had in mind something considerably different from the point of view outlined in the fourth and fifth paragraphs of Mr. Davis's letter. There is a kind of theism, not unknown in our churches, which is either indistinguishable from earlier deism, being unaffected by the concepts of incarnation and immanence, or fades away into a vague, cosmic pantheism in which all vivid realisation of the Divine as concretely personal is lost. Theism of this kind I had in mind, and, as touching Christ and Christianity, quite notoriously it allows nothing, but would repudiate everything, that suggested any sort of pre-eminence, even ethical, for Jesus. It is probably an accompaniment of extreme individualism in religion, and certainly our churches have been at various times considerably smitten by it. In all its varying forms it seems to me religiously, devotionally, ethically, and ontologically unsatisfying; especially does it seem to me to fail in just those points where a full-hearted Christian Theism is strong, namely, the question of the character of Divine Personality and its relation with human life and a temporal world, the question of the existence of evil and sin and redemption from these, and, above all perhaps, the question of a definite centre and un-failing guide and control for the ethical life.

Now, in the central paragraphs of Mr. Davis's letter, to which I have referred, I find something much more definite and, as it seems to me, vital than this vague theism. I do find here, if Mr. Davis will let me say so, a decided centralising in Jesus. Let me interpret these paragraphs a little. Our faith is to be in and with the spirit of Jesus: we are to centre our ethical life in the Kingdom which Christ preached: we are to quicken our devotional and worshipful life by the "experiences" of the Cross and the Resurrection: most definitely are we to find in the gospel of Jesus the standard, rule, and guide of moral life and conduct. I hope I am not misinterpreting the thoughts behind Mr. Davis's words. The great point here, I believe, is an ethical concentration in Jesus, in the morality revealed and lived by him: this, by implication, is absolute. Mr. Davis could say, and I fancy would say, with Dr. Drummond and others, that, ethically, Jesus is "the Way, the Truth, and the Life"; he is Lord of the moral life for mankind; he presents us with an absolute moral guidance. There is some kind of centralising in Jesus here; and I should say myself that this ethical centralising in Jesus, though it may not consciously be carried any further, is fundamentally constitutive of Christianity and is the test by which, in the end, allegiance to Christianity must be tried.

But—and here it is quite possible I might find Mr. Davis disagreeing with me—I am more and more driven to the conclusion that any genuine ethical concentration in Jesus has its far-reaching theological, or metaphysical, implications, which, being followed out, lead surprisingly near, if not to final acceptance, at any rate to much more intimate understanding and appreciation of certain large Christian doctrines about the significance of Christ, and, let us carefully note, about the character of Divine and human personality, and the relation of one to the other, which a theism having no sort of centralisation in Jesus can neither understand nor approach. Especially does this become the case when we are prepared to allow full weight and value to (1) the philosophical doctrines of incarnation and immanence; (2) the concept of a Divine Love suffering with us, as solution of the problem of evil and sin (for a remarkable and illuminating treatment of which one might look again to the concluding chapter of 'The Idea of God,' by Prof. Pringle Pattison), and (3) Christian mystical experience. In connection with this third point I would ask Mr. Davis to look again deeply into his own experience and inquire fully what "living fellowship" with Jesus, "with the Master," with the spirit of Jesus, such as Mr. Davis himself speaks of, carries within it. "Living fellowship" with Jesus is a very significant expression.

It seems to me not unreasonable to hold that Christian Theism, whatever else it may involve, does involve at least an ethical centralisation in Jesus Christ. Dare we say that this centralisation is not inadequately expressed by the statement that a Christian Theist believes that Jesus Christ is God's supreme gift to mankind for the salvation of the world, and at least an absolute moral commitment of the individual soul to Christ is implied and demanded. There is centralisation, surely.

I agree that, beyond this, there is a region of interpretation, in which we have to face the questions why this ethical centralisation should be implied and demanded, what it involves for the experience of the soul, for one's view of God and man, for one's view of the Person of Christ, and his place in the life of worship and devotion, which inspires the moral life, and so forth; but in this region of interpretation what I plead for is intellectual freedom, the very contribution which our churches can make. Can we show to the world what Christianity, with its clear ethical centralisation in Jesus Christ, and its essential ethical loyalty to and fellowship with him, can be and become in thought, conduct, worship, service, and churchly fellowship, under the double standard of a complete moral and spiritual commitment (the Pauline "bondage") to our Lord and a real freedom of inquiry into the theological interpretation of that commitment and all that it means? If we can do this, we can live and become great.—Yours, &c.,

STANLEY A. MELLOR.

Liverpool.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I notice in your current issue that the stimulating correspondence initiated by Dr. Rattray is drawing to a close. Bearing in mind your exhortations to brevity, may I, as a somewhat detached Unitarian, but none the less a Unitarian on that account, contribute a few thoughts on the subject.

The problems appear to me to be two: (1) Why are our chapels generally badly attended; (2) How are we to remedy this in the future of peace and reconstruction?

1. I see two chief reasons for half-empty chapels: (a) owing to excessive intermarriages and other causes we are not as a whole a very prolific body, hence even if we abandoned that freedom of individual choice in spiritual matters which we value so highly, we could not probably fill up our chapels from the ranks of our own children alone; (b) the nature of our services generally and our outlook on religious matters is not such as to appeal at first sight to the average person, whether of orthodox upbringing or of no religious training at all. The orthodox doubter is apt to be shocked by a certain want of reverence which never strikes us, but is very painful to him; while the unreligious person, finding that we teach the love of God rather than the fear of Him, hardly thinks it worth bothering about on the whole as there is no cause of fear if he neglects religion. Hence we do not fill our chapels from outside sources except spasmodically.

2. I have no hope of finding completely satisfying remedies, and would only like to suggest, if I dare, that our ministers try to become more "reverend" and our congregations more "reverent"; that we insist less and less on the clever brainy discourse as an attraction, and more and more on the beautiful simple forms of some devotional service in which all can join, with intervals, probably, for silent prayer. In a word may I commend the motto chosen by the Society of Friends for their Hall of Residence at Manchester University: "Let Knowledge grow from more to more, but more of Reverence in us dwell." I forget the rest of the quotation, and its author, too, I fear, but that was the "Hall" motto and is enough for my purpose.—Yours, &c.,

ANDREWS CROMPTON.

The Oaks, Chester.
April 15, 1918.

POINTS FROM OTHER LETTERS RECEIVED.

The REV. A. THORNHILL pleading for caution in these reactionary times holds that we must know the origins and development of Christianity in order to evangelise men, and he agrees in substance with Dr. Jacks's curriculum, which is based on 130 years of the College's experience. "A wide culture, a knowledge of current movements, a sympathetic understanding of men and women of all classes are doubtless desirable in our Ministers. But the function of our colleges is to teach Divinity, and my own experience suggests that it cannot be done in the time allotted, if the wits of the students are encouraged to go wool-gathering over a wide terrain."

MR. KENNETH LUPTON says: In order to save many of our churches and to extend their influence everyone should lend a hand. The country should be divided into districts with a good minister at the head of each. These should be assisted by lay preachers, who should go through a short training at Oxford and receive diplomas after passing an examination. The minister should give lessons in Bible teaching to the Sunday school teachers so as to fit them better for their work. Besides the ordinary sermons there should be special ones for the younger members to encourage them to sacrifice something for our cause; and also theological sermons for strangers who wish to learn the foundations of Unitarian belief.

The REV. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON is of opinion that our churches need "organisation"; true, Dr. Martineau's scheme failed, but a new attempt might succeed in these days of closer co-operation.

The REV. J. VINT LAUGHLAND calls for greater publicity in the press, open-air meetings in summer for dealing with social problems in a religious spirit, and a "really democratic fellowship" for the winter.

A number of anonymous letters have been sent, but our rule excludes these.—EDITOR OF INQUIRER.

RHODESIAN LAND RIGHTS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May I beg you to call the special attention of your readers to the great case now being tried before the Privy Council, at which I venture to think not the fortunes, but what matters more, the soul of the British Empire is being tried in the balance. The value of any victory we may win in war depends on the value of our ideals and traditions and our faithfulness to them. What our young men are dying for is just what we at home are expressing by our lives and actions.

In "the greatest land case in British history" the "Company" has abundant funds to draw upon, the "Crown" has the nation to draw on, the "Settlers" have voted a sum of money from taxation, some 30 or more per cent of which is paid by natives. The natives have nothing but the generosity or justice of individual Englishmen to rest upon for a presentation of their case.

A guarantee of £4,500 quietly organised, without public appeal, by the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society is exhausted. Another £1,000 is needed. Even in these times of urgent and unceasing appeals I feel confident that if your readers could realise the significance of the crisis many of them would give an extra turn to the screw even if it draws blood.

Guarantees may be sent to the Secretary of the Society at 51 Denison House, Vauxhall Bridge Road, London, S.W.1, or through me.—Yours, &c.,

PHILIP H. WICKSTEED.

Childrey, Wantage.
April 16, 1918.

DAYLIGHT saving has now been approved of in America by Congress, and came into effect, we understand, on March 21. The extra hour will be available until October 31, and there seems little reason to doubt that full use will be made of it, in spite of the opposition of certain people, like Representative Thomas of Kentucky, who did not believe people could be got to start work earlier in the morning.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

167TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,359	4	6
X. (39th)	1	0	0
West Grove Women's League,
Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox (33rd)...	0	11	0
Nurse Copeman (16th)	0	10	0
Mr. J. E. Mace (8th)	1	1	0
Lady Durning-Lawrence (9th)	25	0	0
Miss Durning-Lawrence (6th)	20	0	0
Highgate Unitarian Church (26th)	8	1	0
All Souls' Church, Belfast, per the Rev. E. H. Pickering
(20th)	1	7	6
	£20,416	15	0

*Parcels have been received from:—*Ringwood Sewing Circle, per Mrs. Cogan Conway; Mrs. and Miss Helsby; Liverpool Women's War Service Bureau; Mr. W. Burton; West Grove Women's League, Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox; Mrs. Swann; The Children of Gardenfields School, St. Albans, per Miss C. Wells; Miss H. Partridge; Mrs. Keating; Miss Martineau.

MONTHLY NOTES.

MISS HOLMES writes that the Calais Hut has been extraordinarily busy lately. "Last week over 1,000 dinners in one day. Last week also we had another examination (for the army), nearly 400 candidates this time. It was really very awkward as it did not end till 11.30, and the orderlies had a great rush to get all the dinners over and the hall in order again for the exam. at 2. We were all glad when it was transferred to the Annexe for the last day. The Good Friday dinner was extra work, too—the cooks find the usual tons of meat easier than boiling 1,800 eggs in one morning. Each man had three halves, with potatoes and cauliflower with white sauce—and herrings for supper....Our bakery is burnt up, so no bread to-day! We live a day at a time now!"

The Maternity Home has had several cases in it up till now, so the question of moving it is in abeyance. It is impossible to tell what a day may bring forth in the way of changes. The Directrice has full authority to move at once if it is thought desirable, but up to the date of writing she does not wish to do so, but to remain at work as long as needed. The house has escaped bombs and shells at present, and we can only hope it may continue to do so as long as there are any patients in it. ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Pyjamas, shirts, socks, handkerchiefs.
Games and pictures.
Clothing for babies and children.
Calico bags, 2 ft. by 3 ft., and any small size.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Bridgwater.—A meeting was held in the Unitarian schoolroom on Friday afternoon, April 5, to consider the subject of 'University Extension and the Fisher Bill.' Beside the Bridgwater Oxford University Extension Centre, the following centres in West Somerset sent delegates: Burnham-on-Sea, Weston-super-Mare, Wellington, Winscombe, Street, and Glastonbury. Members of the Bridgwater Borough Education Committees, and others interested in education, including teachers, were also present. The minister of the Unitarian Church, the Rev. C. E. Pike, presided, and after a few words of welcome to visitors from a distance called on Mr. J. A. R. Marriott, M.P., Secretary to the Oxford Delegation, to deliver his address. This was a masterly exposition of the Fisher Bill, especially dealing with its relation to University Extension. The various centres were urged to bring their claims for recognition and support before the County and Borough Educational Authorities, with reports of the work they had done. A deeply interesting and forcible address enlivened by flashes of humour was followed by a discussion and questions. A conference of the delegates of the different centres present with Mr. Marriott, about the arrangement of lectures for the ensuing session then took place, and after a rather hurried interchange of experiences over the tea-cups, the visitors left for their trains.

Halifax.—The Sewing Society connected with the Northgate End Chapel has done a useful piece of work in organising the fund for sailors and soldiers belonging to the congregation. As a result of their efforts, and a generous grant from their own funds, a gift of 10s. has been sent to every one of the fifty on the list.

Leicester.—We regret to record the death of Mr. John W. Burton of Cuthbert Leys, Oadby Hill, one of the oldest members of the Free Christian Church, who passed away on April 10, aged 72. Mr. Burton was connected with the church for nearly fifty years, having attended the services for some time before becoming an annual subscriber in 1877, and remaining a constant supporter throughout. He was Treasurer of the church for twenty-five years. In 1899 he was elected to the Leicester Town Council, of which body he remained a member until 1905, and he devoted much energy and enthusiasm to the work of the Education and Library Committees, being always a staunch supporter of any movement having as its object the elevation and enlightenment of the people.

Leytonstone.—The services at the Leytonstone Free Church, Haydn House, are now being held at 6.30, and among the preachers for the spring quarter are the Revs. Bertram Lister, A. H. Biggs, and J. A. Pearson; Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P., Mr. Fred Maddison, Mr. J. W. Peterken, and Miss Maud Burt (hon. secretary). The Young People's Service is held at 11 A.M. on Sundays, and the Young People's Guild on Thursdays at 6.45. April 21 will be the Sunday School Anniversary, and will be celebrated with a Flower Service.

Liverpool District Missionary Association.—The Religious Conferences again held last winter at the local centres within the Liverpool District have been of great interest and value, and have maintained the high standard set by similar conferences held in the preceding winter. Representatives have come together from all the district churches on these occasions, and the social intercourse, as well as the devotional service and the conference, has had its distinct value. Subjects of vital importance to Liberal Religion have been ably presented and discussed, and in this matter we have been considerably helped by the presence of visiting ministers and lay friends. Amongst them have been the Revs. Dr. Carpenter, Henry Gow, Cyril Flower, C. J. Street, and Mr. Richard Robinson. All but one of these friends were able to kindly stay over the Sunday and conduct services, both morning and evening, in the district churches. The conferences were held at Birkenhead, Hamilton Road, Southport, and Mill Street. We cannot adequately thank these friendly visitors for the inspiration they brought to us, and for their extremely helpful treatment of the various subjects with which they dealt. With a view to fittingly end the winter's work in which the Association has been vigorously engaged, in spite of adverse war conditions, a United Religious Service was held in Hope Street Church on Thursday evening, April 11, when the Rev. Dr. S. A. Mellor conducted the devotions, and the Rev. Dr. L. P. Jacks was the preacher. A worshipful congregation of close upon five hundred persons assembled, and the whole service was a remarkable and profoundly impressive religious experience. The traditions and the beauty of the church created an atmosphere, while the singing and organ music, with Dr. Pollitt himself at the organ, were uplifting and inspiring. The devotional service throughout was marked by a deep reverence, and all present must have felt a real stirring of souls. Dr. Jacks, at the beginning of his sermon, said there was no subject he could possibly deal with on that memorable occasion and in this period of national affliction save that of the human soul, and from beginning to end his utterance was marked by a prophetic intensity. We had often heard Dr. Jacks before; but never with more effect. All reserve vanished, and he opened his soul to us with a power and persuasiveness which even for him were remarkable. There was only one thing that could save the chaotic world, and that was the religious faith revealed in the essential gospel of Jesus. A solemn awe held the large congregation spellbound, and we were all lifted to heights of spiritual experience. All our own churches were numerously represented, while a number of Anglican clergymen and Nonconformist ministers were also present. The occasion was a test of our local denominational vitality, influence, and prestige, and we came through that test more than well. The arrangements were carried through quietly and unostentatiously; we resorted to no elaborate advertising, no street placards, and no trumpetings; and the service was what it was intended to be—a service of religious worship and uplift, and not just a public meeting or a mere exercise in preaching. A truly worshipful congregation assembled together, and during that hour and a half's service it was helped to feel itself in the presence of a God of truth and justice and love. The occasion is not likely to be ever forgotten by those who were privileged to be present. It is good for Liverpool that such a service should have been held, and it has conferred an incalculable benefit upon our own group of churches, affording, as it has, encouragement and incentive to the District Association in the work to which it has put its hand.

Liverpool: Hope Street.—It is good to know that men and women in the busy city of Liverpool can be induced to attend weekly lectures on 'Philosophy.' Dr. Mellor of Hope Street Church is the lecturer. The lectures are given freely to all who will attend, irrespective of membership of any Church. The average attendance is about fifty. Dr. Mellor has a singularly attractive manner, and that, allied to carefully prepared matter, always ensures an intellectual treat. Though the longer hours of daylight are here, the class still meets regularly.

London: Stamford Street.—In our report last week it was stated that a balance of £104 due to the treasurer had been reduced to £15. We are asked to explain, however, that had it not been for a sale of stock the debit would have increased from £104 to £156. The generous help of subscribers, old and new, is therefore urgently desired.

London: Women's League.—The younger women and girls connected with our churches in the northern districts of London were invited to attend a united service conducted by the Rev. Margaret Crook, B.A., which was held at the Free Christian Church, Clarence Road, Kentish Town, on Monday evening last. In spite of darkness, cold, and heavy rain, seventy were present, and felt it was good to be there. They met first by invitation in the schoolroom, where members of the Fellowship Committee and of the Kentish Town League Branch welcomed, and, as far as possible, made them known to each other and to Miss Crook, whose presence amongst them was greatly appreciated. Service followed in the church; all joined heartily in the hymns chosen, and the beautiful prayer for divine help in the consecration of life to the service of God and man will not soon be forgotten. The address was on 'Remembering,' and on the wonderful ways in which memory helps to build up character and refresh and strengthen the soul. Miss Crook dwelt on St. Augustine's reverence for the power of memory, and told how in his 'Confessions' the passages on memory are remarkable because its vast range, its immensity, are always before him. It is not only a picture gallery recalling things seen; but it recalls feelings, impressions, sounds. Memory lives and thinks and sees: "Memory is Mind. I am Memory." Our own remembrance of events changes as we change with experience. We cannot choose what in our past we will forget; but we can choose what we will remember. We should set ourselves always to remember the best, the happiest, the most useful things in our experience, so that we may always have them to turn to for refreshment and help when we are worn out in body or mind and ready to give way. The thought of them will help to restore our lowered powers and give us fresh hope and courage. The world is now giving us, women and girls, wonderful memories and experiences in these times of effort and sacrifice. And we have to go on living bravely and cheerfully through them, making ourselves ready to do our part in the services demanded from us in the time to come. What does the world need from us? We must think of all the many who have no store of happy, wholesome memories to help them upward. We must give them these, by sharing with them all the brightness we ourselves possess; we must live for others. This is the thing for which we will live, to bring light and happiness wherever we go.

Manchester: Women's League.—The Annual Meeting of the Manchester District Associate Branch of the Women's League was held in the Memorial Hall on April 6, about ninety members representing the following branches being present: Accrington, Ashton-under-Lyne, Blackley, Blackpool (South Shore), Bury (Bank Street), Chesham, Chowbent, Gee Cross, Manchester (Oldham Road), Monton, Mossley, Oldham, Pendleton, Stalybridge, Stand, Stockport, and Todmorden. Miss Johnstone presided, and Mrs. Blake Odgers, President of the League, made a short speech. Mrs. Howarth of Accrington represented the newly-formed Accrington Neighbourhood League, and gave a good account of the progress made there. The Annual Report and Balance Sheet were passed and the retiring officers were re-elected. Reference was made to the loss the League has sustained by the death of Mrs. Laycock of Sheffield. A resolution was passed admitting individual members to the Manchester Associate Branch. The individual Branch Reports revealed the good practical work done during the past year by members of the League.

Scarborough.—The Rev. Thomas Paxton of Chapel Lane Chapel, Bradford, has received and accepted an invitation to the ministry of the Westborough Unitarian Church.

Scottish Unitarian Association.—The visit of Dr. Carpenter to Scotland and his presence at the Annual Meeting of the Scottish Unitarian Association have been a source of great inspiration to our scattered churches there. On Sunday, April 7, Dr. Carpenter preached both morning and evening in Skene Street Unitarian Church, Aberdeen, when the services were well attended and greatly appreciated. On the following Monday evening, after the public welcome to the Rev. H. Dawtrey referred to in 'News of the Churches' in THE INQUIRER last week, Dr. Carpenter addressed a large and responsive audience, taking for his subject 'Religion in War-Time and After.' On Tuesday evening, April 9, he preached at Dundee, and again addressed a large audience at a public meeting at Edinburgh on Thursday evening, April 11. On Friday he visited Glasgow in order to be present at the Annual Meeting of the Scottish Unitarian Association, speaking in the evening at a public meeting. He was also present at the Annual Business Meeting and the Conference on Saturday. These meetings were held at St. Vincent Street Unitarian Church. On the following Sunday, April 14, Dr. Carpenter occupied the pulpit of that church, both morning and evening. Apart from the help rendered to the churches by this visit to Scotland an encouraging feature of it has been the cordial response of Scottish Unitarians to the sympathy both of Dr. Carpenter and the Association. The difficulties in Scotland are many, and the call upon their resources, both physical and spiritual, may be great; but the interest thus shown in their welfare and the desire to understand their needs can only increase the determination of the congregations to keep on in spite of all obstacles, and to continue to scatter good seed which will ripen to a rich harvest in the future. A full report of the proceedings at the Annual Meeting of the Association will appear in the next issue of The Scottish Unitarian.

Sheffield.—The General Committee of the District Association of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches, on Thursday, April 11, promptly consulted on the question of Ministers and the Army Bill, and passed a resolution emphasising, as reasons for modifying the Bill, the difficulty of maintaining many of the Churches already under adverse circumstances which are likely to grow worse, the vital necessity of cherishing the religious life of the people in these times of trial, and the importance of keeping alive centres of spiritual influence in anticipation of the return of our citizen soldiers after the war. A resolution was also unanimously passed approving of the principle of a League of Nations after the war to secure the world's peace.

Sunday School Association.—The Lantern Lecture on 'The Fall of Jerusalem, and the Campaign in Palestine' prepared for the Association by the Rev. T. P. Spedding has been delivered, and had a cordial reception at the following schools: Swansea, Poole, Macclesfield, Norwich, Chester, Bradford (Manchester); and London: Newington Green, Mansford Street, Lewisham, Hackney, Stratford. For next season the lecture will be brought up to date, and new slides included, and it should be booked early to save disappointment from clash of dates.

York.—The Rev. M. B. Skelland, who after lay-work at Ross Street, Glasgow, since 1914, was appointed minister there this year, has accepted an invitation to succeed the Rev. J. Tyssul Davis as the minister of St. Saviourgate Chapel.

 * THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week

DEATHS.

BURTON.—On the 10th inst., John William Burton, of Cuthbert Leys, Oadby Hill, Leicester, aged 72.

NOBLE.—On the 14th inst., at Earlesmere, Heaton, Bolton, Emma, the dearly loved wife of William Noble, aged 72 years. Friends please accept this, the only intimation.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, April 21.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 Berrymondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. Dr. HARGROVE.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15, —; 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND; 6.30, Mr. W. R. MARSHALL.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
 South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. BASIL VINEY.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. JOHN BEGG; 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.
 Woolwich, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11, Mr. JOSEPH P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKHILL.

DEAN ROW, 10.45.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GNEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. A. LESLIE SMITH.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. FISHER SHORT.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. MARGARET B. CROOK, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. PERCY W. JONES.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. RATTRAY.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. A. FERGUSON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood, Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNEPEG, CANADA.

All Souls' Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

Notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week should be sent to The Publisher, 13 BREAM'S BUILDINGS, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

The name of the Minister of the Church is inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C. (Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

April

21. Rev. JOSEPH P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.
28. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

May

5. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation. Lacrosse,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street,
E.C.2.—LECTURES on 'PATRIOTISM'
by Professor FOSTER WATSON, D.Lit.

Tuesday, April 23. Literature and Patriotism.

Wednesday, April 24. False Patriotism.

Thursday, April 25. True Patriotism.

Friday, April 26. The Teaching of Patriotism.

Lectures free and begin at 6 P.M.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—REV. F.
SUMMERS, Arnside Villa, Chestnut Street, Southport.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.
(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE,	L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I.	H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL.	H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive
4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free
of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges
low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

MANSFORD STREET CHURCH AND MISSION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The ANNUAL MEETING of the Subscribers and other Friends of the Mission will be held on MONDAY, APRIL 29, at 6.30 P.M., at

LINDSEY HALL, NOTTING HILL GATE, W.,

when the chair will be taken by

The Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

NOTE.—Subscribers are requested to accept this notice as the formal notification of the Meeting, as it is not proposed on this occasion to notify them individually. They are urged to make a point of attending the Meeting, and other friends of the Mission will also be cordially welcomed.

RONALD P. JONES, Hon. Sec.

UNION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE

of Members of Unitarian, Free
Christian and Kindred Churches.

TWELFTH ANNUAL MEETING

(under the auspices of the Midland Christian Union)
OF MEMBERS AND FRIENDS

TO BE HELD AT THE Church of the Messiah, Birmingham,

BROAD STREET,

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24, at 4.30 p.m.

All Sympathisers with Social Service Union Work cordially invited.

Tea will be provided at 4 p.m. for those attending the Business Meeting at 4.30, by friends of the Church of the Messiah.

At 8 p.m.

A PUBLIC RELIGIOUS SERVICE

CONDUCTED BY THE

REV. LAWRENCE CLARE,

WITH SHORT ADDRESSES ON SOCIAL QUESTIONS BY THE REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

(London, President of the Union,) and the REV. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

(Manchester).

MINISTERS AND MILITARY SERVICE.

The Meeting of Ministers called for Monday,
April 22, in Manchester, by The Ministerial Fellowship, WILL NOT BE HELD, as the Government has continued the Exemption of Ministers.

C. J. STREET, Hon. Sec.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

A SINGING COMPETITION among eight
Senior Choirs from London Schools for the possession of the Society's banner will take place at Essex Hall on SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1918, at 3 P.M. Adjudicator—Mr. G. DAY WINTER.

Admission (including Entertainment Tax), 8d., by programme, to be purchased in advance from the Hon. Sec., A. STEPHEN NOEL, 42, Woodcote Road, Wanstead, E.11.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION,

22 Northumberland Avenue, London.

Founded by the late Mr. G. R. Jesse in 1875.

The Society offers to send a LECTURER free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000

Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

Situations, Vacant and Wanted.

CARETAKERS (MAN AND WIFE) required at Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel. Wages £1 per week and rooms. Man's whole-time not required. Apply by post to A. A. TAYLER, 110 Norfolk House Road, S.W.16.

Board and Residence, &c.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.—
Board - residence. Meat ration supplemented by vegetarian dishes and country produce. Enquiries, which must be accompanied by stamped envelope, from Miss SMITH.

Miscellaneous.

PILLOW CASES, plain cotton, superior quality, 20 x 30, four for 4s. 3d. Plain linen buttoned, 20 x 30, four for 13s. 9d. Write for free Bargain List.—HUTTON'S, 159 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—
Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite;
12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum.
Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver
JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street,
MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT. Cash or offer by return. Before selling make sure of their value by writing for FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any artificial teeth.—E. LEWIS, 29 London Street, Southport,
Lancs. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER

THAT OLD CHAIN

You do not wear and all disused Jewellery,
Trinkets, Watches, &c. can now be sold at MAXIMUM PRICES.

In fact, many articles are worth more than you paid for them. ARTIFICIAL TEETH
(OLD) ANY CONDITION NOW WORTH
UP TO £15 PER SET strictly genuine.
Highest possible offers made by return for all goods sent to us. If not accepted, goods returned at once, post free.

SATISFACTION ASSURED.

I. RAYBURN & CO.,
105 Market Street, Manchester.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2;
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines
extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word.
Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s.
Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d.
Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenæum Press,
11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and
Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company,
Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.
Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HRYWOOD, Deansgate,— Saturday, April 20, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3956.
NEW SERIES, No. 1059.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	129
COSTLY EXPERIENCE	130
BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	130
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Churches and the Ministry	131

Unitarianism and the Divinity of Jesus	131
Ministers and the Service Act	132
MEMORIAL NOTICES:—
Rev. Jeffrey Worthington	132
Mr. James Samuelson	133

Mr. W. J. Scopes	133
Lieut. J. E. Hamblin	133
Mrs. William Noble	133
NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS	133
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	134

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

"To go or not to go," the Rev. C. M. Wright of Liverpool reminds us, is not simply a matter for the individual conscience of the minister, who is engaged definitely to serve a congregation. A serious and material part of the question as he sees it is, what do the laity wish? The younger ministers, of whom he is one, have not asked (he says) for exemption from service; the problems he indicates have arisen from no action of theirs. Let but the authoritative voice of representative ministers and laymen, assembled for the purpose, declare in favour of the enlistment of ministers of military age, and at the same time announce arrangements for reorganising and sustaining the work of the churches in their absence, and he believes many would accept such a decision with relief; and this relief would be all the greater in view of much exasperating experience in trying to find employment under the "National Service" scheme. Although we see little likelihood, and less desirability, of such an official pronouncement, we entirely sympathise with all our brethren who are faced by so distracting a dilemma—we know many of them are—and we certainly think the laity should share the responsibility of deciding. In the case of ministers who are imperatively needed where they are, we would hope that efforts now being made in several directions may assist in finding the openings for "National" work hitherto sought fruitlessly.

THE new President of the Baptist Union, the Rev. J. E. Roberts, who occupies the late Dr. Maclaren's pulpit at Manchester, gave a very outspoken address at the annual meeting at Bloomsbury Chapel on Tuesday. Beginning by deprecating ill-considered attacks on the Churches for failing to "stop the war," he proceeded to denounce in no measured terms the narrow views of religion they had too long fostered. He said: "I am not claiming that all our soldiers are saints or Christians, but it is perfectly clear that any definition of religion is inadequate and misleading which claims people as religious because they go to church and repeat creeds and sing hymns, though they are selfish and proud and grasping, but which denies religion to men who are brave and kind and self-sacrificing because they swear and drink, or because they spend Sunday in a different way from ours." We observe there was a protest, by a very small minority, against the Declaration of Faith proposed as a basis for the new Federation of Free Churches; even Unitarians, it was alleged, might agree to it! If so, said Dr. Brown, then he was a Unitarian, but he thought Unitarians could not agree to the statements as to the unique lordship and authority of Christ. Well, but it is good to note that Baptists are true to their best traditions of broad-minded freedom. They voted for the new basis by an overwhelming majority.

PRINCE EUGENE TROUBETZKOY, who in physique as in religious force is to-day one of the most impressive figures in Russia, and who still has faith in the triumph of the spiritual element in his people over the anarchic and sceptical moods at present in the ascendant, is the author of an article, divided between the current issue of The Hibbert Journal and its predecessor, on the 'Meaning of Life.' His view is that human existence, apart from "the doctrine of the Cross," has no reason in it; and taking the Cross as a symbol regards it as the meeting place of the horizontal line resting on the earth, and the vertical which rises to the heavens. A careful study of his suggestive pages will well repay the reader, and perhaps reassure those who have begun to despair of the value of Russia's contribution to modern thought and aspiration. We may also call attention to an article by the late Stopford Brooke on a remarkable 'Interpretation of Christ' by Shelley; it certainly helps to rectify exaggerated conceptions of Shelley's hostility to Christianity. Mr. Chesterton's review of the 'Life' of Brooke, which follows, is in that writer's better style, free from the extravagances which have discounted much of his work. We understand a second edition of Dr. Jacks's volumes is already demanded.

SOME of us, a few years ago, had the great pleasure and profit of hearing the celebrated scientist, J. C. Bose of Calcutta, lecture on 'The Response of Inorganic Matter to Stimulus' and other allied topics. Seldom, indeed, has a more fascinating demonstration come under our observation than was afforded by his experiments at the Imperial Institute, when it almost appeared proved that "dead matter" (as it is ignorantly called) is as vitally sensitive as physiological structures. Sir J. C. Bose, as he now is, who has founded a fine Research Institute for India, recently lectured in the Royal Opera House, Bombay, before a crowded and enthusiastic audience. In addition to a brilliant exposition by experiment, giving striking illustrations of visualising growth, methods of instantaneous inhibitions or accelerations, and indications of far-reaching possibilities in scientific agriculture and medicine, he emphasised the great intellectual and moral awakening now taking place in India. His own Institute, he added, would always be at the service of humanity, and no patents would ever be taken. As an influential supporter of the Brahmo Samaj, his career is doubly interesting to Unitarians.

IF we might persuade all ministers and serious minded people generally in our churches to read a certain shilling pamphlet we believe they would share a feeling which we have, and which is a very deep one. And out of such a feeling, we also believe confidently, there would arise new effort in all our religious work. The pamphlet, which is issued by the S.P.C.K., contains the report of the third Committee (out of five) appointed by the Archbishops to inquire on "the facts and lessons...of the National Mission" recently conducted by the Church of England; and the special subject is 'The Evangelistic Work of the Church.' A more searching, grave, and candid report we have never met; and we can assure the non-Anglican reader that, if indeed he has any care for the uplifting of our people, there is much written here which will come home to him also with poignant force.

No brief summary would do justice to the Report itself, still less to its subject. All we can do here is to indicate the temper of the Committee responsible for this memorable document, a Committee including four bishops, six canons, and numerous other experienced men, clergy and laity, two ladies being added. With a frankness rarely witnessed the writers confess the slackness of the Church, the "lamentably unworthy and unconvincing" witness it has borne, the cause it has too obviously given to Labour to look upon it as "the hereditary enemy of the ideals of the working classes," the inconsistency of the lives of Churchmen with their creed, the absence of real brotherliness, the really absurd attitude taken up by many would-be "evangelists" who are themselves ignorant and unreasoning dogmatists, and much also that mutatis mutandis might be profitably pondered by all, especially at this time.

* * *

FOR, of course, the object of such a Report, and the study of it which we urgently recommend, is that religious workers should bring forth fruit meet for repentance; and it is just there that we feel most the importance of these pages. If any narrow-minded critic of the Churches, and particularly of "the Church," thinks it worth while, he may find copious matter in the Report to shape into censures—as profitless to God and man as they are easy. But if, as we feel sure, there are more among our readers who are profoundly troubled about the state of affairs in our own circles, and who have followed the correspondence on 'The Churches and the Ministry' with a sincere desire to discover light and leading in it, we confidently point to this noteworthy supplement to these letters. The attitude taken up by its writers towards other denominations is broad and sympathetic—though we hardly suppose our group of churches came at all into their view—and a spirit of reciprocal charity will enable the least "churchy" of us to pass by things of little use to him and to seize on the weightier matters, which are many.

* * *

OUR Boston friends have prepared a series of pamphlets for war-time for men in the American contingent and the public generally. One of the most useful is a collection of passages from President Wilson's 'Messages' and 'Addresses,' answering the question "What are we fighting for?" Another is a series of readings "For Freedom and Humanity," in prose and verse, Biblical and modern, with prayers fitted to the soldier's need. A beautifully printed card, suitable for placing in daily view of hut and home alike bears the words (by Edward W. Frentz):—

Our fathers first raised the altar of thanksgiving in a wilderness beset with innumerable unknown dangers. We now raise it in the face of a stupendous and inexorable duty. As they gave thanks for their simple and obvious blessings, let us offer ours for that incomparably greater blessing, the guidance that has kept their spirit alive in us, and has made us, like them, willing to die that men may remain free.

COSTLY EXPERIENCE.

MANKIND attends a dear school. May we hope that the costliness of the present lesson will effectually stamp it upon the mind of the nations? By an invaluable rule of our own national life we are called upon at least once a year to "consider the bill." We fight because we ought, because we must; but we are not yet mere fighting animals. The presentation of an annual budget is an opportunity for reckoning with ourselves. In so far as we have a share in the national, and especially in international, policy the question comes up to everyone of us—Is our policy worth the cost? We refer now to mere cash; but cash stands for much that is not tabulable, and the full cost of the lesson of war-time includes infinitely more than can be stated by any Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Confining our attention, however, to the money problem, who of us is not weighed down by it. These hundreds, even thousands of millions, relating to expenditure, taxation, and debt, are really beyond the real grasp of any mind. All we can do with them is to regard them in proportion to our daily business. We are expending vastly more than we are raising by present taxation, high as that is; and even when taxation is drastically raised, as it must be, the revenue will fall very far short of the total out-goings. Such a position is not good for an individual; it is bad for a kingdom. There is little comfort in the assurance that other nations are as badly off, that our enemies are worse off. Only a very ignorant mind will long entertain the notion that our neighbours can be impoverished and we not suffer from their poverty. The bankruptcy of any considerable commercial unit in the modern world is fraught with loss to all the market. The cost of the world's present experience-lesson includes the indirect, as well as the direct, items; and the total, which we shrink even from contemplating, has a fearful significance for all civilised races.

Men are being told that in future they must live "simply." To many of us, most of us, the exhortation is needless; we shall perforce live "simply" enough when our income, having lost a fifth, a fourth, a third, a half, on its way to us, proves when at last in our hand to retain but a fraction of its former purchasing power. That state of things, however, may be faced by the few with fortitude. Superfluities are not necessities, and men will learn—it is part of to-day's lesson—how many superfluous things there are. But who of us cannot discern a little way ahead the grim spectacle of vast multitudes who will be soon, if they are not already, stinted of the barest necessities of life? The present abnormal conditions of the labour world cannot (we should suppose) be indefinitely prolonged even in war-time; afterwards their disappearance must entail enormous shrinkage in certain forms of employment, and the whole field will thus be very seriously affected. At the same time, the high prices of food, clothing, fuel, and other indispensables will—we are assured—persist long. What will the poor do, the nation's poor—the great majority, that is, of humankind?

Yes, the lesson is costly; on the financial, as on all other sides, the most costly that the world has ever seen. Will the nations—all the nations, for all share the burden, and all must learn the lesson if it is to be put into practice—will all learn it so thoroughly that they will give commensurate thought and energy to the task of preventing such experiences in the future? The "mere cash" appeal is not a very exalted one, but as in the early teetotal days some men were reached by the revelation of what they were wasting and what they might save, so there are probably men who may incline more seriously to pursue reason and peace, instead of helplessly acquiescing in unreason and war, by being thus sternly compelled to consider the cash account. If mankind is, indeed, mostly composed of "fools," even such should be accessible to this argument. Let the wise, with whatever added consideration they must give in their own minds to all the higher values—life, love, order, justice, beauty—not disdain to proceed at times upon the lowlier levels. Chancellors of the Exchequer may thus preach wisdom, and budgets take a useful place alongside of the Gospel.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

168TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,416	15	0
Miss C. Wells (4th)	0	10	0
Ilford Branch of the Women's League, per Mrs. Fyson (2nd)	2	0	0
Northgate End Chapel, Halifax, per Mr. J. Teal (23rd)	1	13	7
The Misses E. and G. Coe (18th)	2	0	0
Mrs. Helsby (12th)	1	0	0
Bootle Free Church, per Mrs. Yates (35th)	1	4	0
	£20,425	2	7

*Parcels have been received from:—*Mrs. E. Hecht; Miss A. R. Wicksteed; Mrs. de Zouche; Mrs. A. J. Gimson; Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas; Miss Hervey; Mrs. Hanna; Miss Lee; Miss Betteredge; Mrs. Walker (U.S.A.); Finchley Branch of the Women's League, per Mrs. Blake Odgers; Miss E.M. Greg; First Stratford Company B.P. Girl Guides, per Miss W. M. Murton (1st Lieutenant); Miss Short; Miss Hall.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

MR. D. N. MITRA, after an adventurous journey, reached Calcutta in the middle of February. He was two months on the way. He is now assisting the Rev. H. C. Sarkar in his work.

WE have received an interesting pamphlet entitled "Wide Roads and their Influence upon Housing," by Mr. F. M. Lupton, M.A., ex-Alderman of the City of Leeds, and for eight years Chairman of the Improvements Committee of that city. The pamphlet is illustrated, and contains much useful information.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CHURCHES AND THE MINISTRY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—With your kind permission, I reply to the discussion on my article. In response to your appeals for brevity, I feel I cannot reply to so many important letters in such detail as would alone do justice to them, to the views I advocate, and to myself.

First of all, perhaps you will allow me to put myself right with your readers by saying that when I wrote my article, I did not do so with the intention of initiating a correspondence. I, of course, took the risk, which all contributors take, of so doing, and did so with a full sense of responsibility. I only want to let your readers know that your remarks inviting correspondence were made without any pre-arrangement with me, and that there was no pre-arranged plan of any sort.

I did not think it necessary to say that spiritual power is wanted. I was only dealing with the providing of channels.

Dr. Mellor's cure for the present state of matters is Free Catholicism. My reply is that others have preached it and their churches have gone down. But this would open up the question of Free Catholicism. I only mildly protest against Dr. Mellor's literalising my allusion to one of Æsop's fables into an expression of my conception of life.

I would refer next to your editorial paragraph in the issue of February 23. While, with you, I would have sincerely deprecated "attacks" on our colleges, I venture to point out that Dr. Jacks, Dr. Mellor and others agree with me that the life of our colleges and the life of our churches are closely knit together, and that our colleges cannot be successful unless the churches take a living interest in them. This living interest our colleges welcome. It is most regrettable that even the trustees of Manchester College do not, except for one or two, attend the annual meeting, in spite of efforts made by the College to induce them to come. This places the committee in the invidious position of electing itself year after year. I feel it to be my duty to say (1) that our colleges welcome criticism in the most magnanimous manner, and (2) that criticism of our colleges was warned off in this correspondence.

As criticism of our colleges was warned off, I cannot allow to pass unchallenged such statements as that "the colleges are in no way to blame," that "the professors gain the gratitude and reverence and affection of the men which is life-long," and that it may "easily be left to the colleges concerned." I yield to no one in gratitude to Manchester College and in appreciation of teachers. Some of us think, however, that it is a pretty good proof of gratitude if one exposes oneself to misunderstanding in trying to help to make one's college better. The times necessitate speaking out. This impels me to say that the quoted statements are all too absolute and general. Hear the opinions of almost any alumnus in private. I have evidence in my possession (which I have placed at the disposal of Manchester College) which proves that these statements are dangerously absolute and general.

I eagerly respond to Dr. Jacks's call for suggestions that are practically possible. First, as to time. (1) Is it practically impossible to have a longer college year than twenty-four weeks? (2) A good deal of lecturing time is taken up with dictation and repetition. If copies of notes were issued to the students, this time could be saved for more vital tuition. It will not do to sacrifice the superior student to the inferior one. (3) I must, with the greatest possible respect, join issue with Dr. Jacks when he holds that it is not possible to get a short, scholarly and accurate knowledge of a subject—when he holds that for a minister to-day, dealing with men home from the front, it is necessary to know Hebrew.* (4) Dr. Jacks's mention of science and modern history, if I may say so, again with the greatest possible respect, was hardly pertinent to my contentions. A minister can produce sermons without a special knowledge of those subjects, but he has to conduct services.

With reference to my claiming Manchester College as "denominational," I was not speaking of Unitarian dogmatic teaching: I expressly referred to the denomination of the free basis. The difference between orthodoxy and freedom, like the difference between scholasticism and humanism, is not merely that we do not say we believe the same things, while we study the same subjects in the same ways as if we did. The same subjects ought to be studied in different ways, and other subjects in the same way. Surely the Bible ought to be studied more as religious literature and less as if it were verbally inspired. The poets, the artists, the musicians, the prophets of the modern time—surely these are subjects most likely, with guidance, to make a man a living minister. All the subjects I mentioned in my article could be taught by one man of the right kind—by a man like Mr. Clutton-Brock, say, who, by the way, would be an invaluable member of the staff of Manchester College. If Professor Kirsopp Lake were added, would such a staff have no effect?

The attitude I combat is that Manchester College has no more call to adapt itself to the crying needs of the churches of the free basis than it has to the orthodox churches, because students are to go forth from Manchester College into all the churches. If Manchester College could provide both for orthodox students and for free students, well and good. But as it sacrifices the latter to the former, the existence of the churches of the free basis is seriously threatened—and the existence of Manchester College is seriously threatened too.

I very humbly submit—and the correspondence has confirmed my impression—that our people are not awake to the actuality of our position. We must either go forward or go back. Forgive me for having to point out the sordid but unescapable fact that churches, to exist, must have money. If the people who alone can and will give the money die or fall away, or are not attracted, the churches will cease to exist. The problem, in its immediacy, is the problem of our larger churches, for it is the adherents of our larger churches who, through our various organisations, support our smaller churches.

You, Sir, invited the opinion of the man in the pew. But the man in the pew has spoken unmistakably. Our larger churches are now ministered to a remarkable extent by young men and by men who have not specialised in the Old Testament or New Testament as taught in our theological colleges. One of these ministers has never been at a theological college at all; another was only one year at a theological college; two others were only two years; and the others, almost without exception, are critical of our colleges. The man in the pew has plainly said that he will not have the minister who has been misled by the subjects studied, and by the methods of study at his theological college, into thinking that these are the subjects and methods to use for his sermons. The man in the pew goes so far, that rather than have such a minister, he will take a minister of inferior culture and education. But such ministers could not hold or win the people who alone can or will give the money necessary for the support of a church. Even now we have not enough competent men for our larger churches. How are these churches to be saved? Suppose that the "children's church" were the solution of the problem—by the time it had become effective, the churches would have ceased to exist. Hence the condition of our churches and colleges is of the utmost urgency.

* This is clearly implied in Dr. Jacks's letter, but it may have been inadvertence, as the opposite is implied in the prospectus of Manchester College.

With the growth of freedom, people have ceased, in increasing numbers, to attend chapel, unless drawn by an exceptional leader. I wish to say, with all the weight I can possibly carry, that we shall make a fatal mistake if we do not at once see that the ministry of the churches of the free basis and the colleges which prepare men for it are made as attractive and helpful as ever they can be to men who are called of the spirit.—Yours, &c.,

R. F. RATTRAY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—This is the experience of one "man in the pew." 1. (a) I have never yet met Dr. Mellor's Right Wing "religious life, with its centralisation in Jesus," &c., as an effective aggressive force; but have seen evidence of the advancing might of Rationalism everywhere around. This movement has the future with it, but may be influenced by a Theism (not deism) sternly aloof from superstition. (b) Let us be clear. Is not Unitarianism entirely in the right in its difference from orthodoxy; and are not the orthodox being forced, gradually and reluctantly, towards the Unitarian position—see a review in the January Hibbert? Why, then, any compromise with untruth—visibly declining untruth? (c) Non-Christocentric Unitarianism can satisfy "the deepest religious needs and aspirations of our time." As its chief exponent in this city teaches, we require a faith independent of the historicity of Jesus. See also Mill on Christian morality, 'Liberty,' ch. ii.

2. True, we chiefly need from the Church "strength to do what we know we ought": true also about the appalling lack of advertising: Unitarianism should become a movement. Clearly there must be myriads of intellectual and quasi-intellectual folk in the cities whom sustained, many-channelled propaganda, electrified, energetic, could reach with good results. "Nothing venture, nothing have."

3. A word as to social reform; not Socialism. In principle and practice, private property in land necessitates slavery. Some Christians in past ages denounced formal slavery. What will be the attitude of Unitarianism to the struggle for equal rights to land to-morrow? I have tried my best to condense.—Yours, &c.

ARCHIBALD J. ROSS.

Birmingham.

April 22nd, 1918.

UNITARIANISM AND THE DIVINITY OF JESUS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I have pleasure in acknowledging that Dr. Drummond once more establishes his thesis. "We are all Parkerians now" need not mean what I took it to mean, and Coleridge must have been mistaken in applying the term "psilanthropists" to the whole body of Unitarians. But my main difficulty is not solved: it is rather increased.

I wrote in reply to my friend "H. G.'s" suggestion that a Liberal Churchman is an unvarnished Unitarian. The sentence which Dr. Drummond quoted was intended to show that (veracity apart) a Liberal Churchman, since he recognises Deity as well as humanity in Christ, is not a Unitarian. I knew that a synonym for "Unitarian," often officially used, was "anti-Trinitarian." I knew that Channing denied the doctrine of God's tri-unity, and also denied "that Jesus of Nazareth was God." Since no orthodox Trinitarian denies the full humanity of Jesus, Channing's words seem to be directed against the teaching that in Jesus Christ we see not man only, but also God. And without laying stress on any single expression of any one person we must surely suppose that an "anti-Trinitarian" denies some part, at least, of the doctrine of the Trinity, which is that One God becomes manifest to us under three hypostases—in Nature, in human lives and capitally in that of Jesus, and immediately in the depths of our own consciousness. Yet the words cited from Dr. W. H. Drummond, and again those cited from Theodore Parker, seem to affirm every article of that doctrine. And it is also established that such words are representative of (at least an important strain or movement in) Unitarianism.

Nevertheless, ever since I resumed my ministry in the Church of England, I have been subjected, by certain life-long Unitarians, to a continual stream of remonstrances against my profession of Trinitarian belief. I have been told, for instance, that I worship a creature instead of his Creator; that I set up an unnecessary, obtrusive Christ between myself and God; that my creed is so involved and absurd that to escape a conviction of mental deficiency I must be regarded as insincere. And all this does not support the notion that Trinitarian and Unitarian belief are essentially one.

My only resource, at present, is that which I indicated in a former letter, namely, that Unitarians use certain expressions in a technical, non-natural sense. "The Spirit of God in the soul"—does this mean God, the Holy Spirit, in the soul? "God's capital manifestation in Christ"—does this mean that in Christ very God becomes manifest? If so, any worshipper of God the Father, of God manifest in Nature, who uses these phrases is really a believer in the tri-unity of God. But if "the Spirit of God" is used as the name of some entity which is not God, and "God's manifestation" refers to some event, or some spectacle, or some substance, such as is not meant by "God is manifest," then indeed, it may be natural enough that the Christians who so employ those phrases should maintain a protest against the doctrine of the Trinity. But it will also follow that one who sees very God in Jesus Christ is not of their company.

Doubtless there is some difference between us, and perhaps it ought not to surprise us that words break down when we try to express distinctions in our deepest thought. Thought itself toils in vain to translate worthily the more ethereal language of faith. Even in the message of faith there must be differences, too, for no single human soul or system is capable of the whole revelation of God: He still speaks to us in many fragments, in many modes. But if we bring our faith, our thought, our attempts at expression, as our several gifts to the common fund of wisdom in the things that concern our peace, we shall not only be learners and teachers of one another, but shall gain a nobler quality, a grander volume of faith in God, and also (if it be not the same thing) a warmer and more vivacious sympathy, of rich promise for humanity of the future.—Yours, &c.,

E. W. LUMMIS.

MINISTERS AND THE SERVICE ACT.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—On the introduction of the New Military Service Bill we were requested to act as a General Committee in making arrangements that might be necessary between our ministers and the authorities, as it is understood that the latter can only deal with representative bodies, and not with individuals.

Since then the clause dealing with ministers of religion has been withdrawn. But we are persuaded that our ministers will not be less anxious to play their part in this grave crisis than are the ministers of other churches, of whose eager readiness we have been assured by their representatives in Parliament and the Press.

Each minister will decide for himself, or in consultation with his congregation, where the path of duty lies. But he may, perhaps, be assisted in any new decision he may be led to make if he knows that there is a Committee in being to give information as to the several kinds of National Service open; and also to help in making arrangements for congregations which are deprived of their ministers through the call of what, in this emergency, they may deem a more urgent service.—Yours, &c.

J. ESTLIN CARPENTER.
CHARLES HARGROVE.
JAMES HARWOOD.
C. J. STREET.
W. G. TARRANT.
J. H. WEATHERALL.

All communications should be addressed to the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.2.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—As the meeting of the Ministerial Fellowship called for April 22 has been abandoned it has been felt that you might insert particulars of a meeting of the ministers of military age of the Bolton district held on April 16 in anticipation of the Manchester meeting. The feeling of those present was that the decision of the Government to remove the clause rendering military service compulsory upon the clergy and ministers from the Man Power Bill did not relieve them from the necessity of making a decision as to their duty in the face of the present crisis. It was the unanimous feeling that if the ministers merely acquiesced in the new situation created by their release from compulsory service without clearly defining their position as regards the war and performing their duty as they saw it, not only as ministers but as citizens, they would disappoint many who hold them in respect, and do great dis-service to the cause they serve.

It was decided that a chosen representative make the following recommendations to the meeting in Manchester.

(1) That every minister of military age be invited to state whether his attitude towards the war rendered it possible to accept military service.

(2) If so, presuming that he be fit for service, that his name be included in a list of those willing to serve; and from this list there be chosen by lot the number which should be decided upon as the adequate proportion of our ministers who might, with due regard to the urgent requirements of our churches, be released for military service.

By this means it was felt that the ministry would be freed from the charge of evading an imperative duty which every other citizen had recognised; that no minister of military age would be at home unless he was either obeying the equally imperative call of conscience, or that he was considered by others as well as himself as being engaged upon work of recognised national importance; and that both churches and ministers would be relieved from the necessity of themselves deciding as to their duty in the present time of stress, seeing that once the minister had submitted to a voluntary conscription, the choice as to whether he should serve or not would be taken out of the hands of either.—Yours, &c.,

EDWARD MORGAN.
J. CYRIL FLOWER.

Bolton.

April 20, 1918.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—In reference to your observations in last week's INQUIRER on National Service for ministers and others, some of your readers may be interested to know the Ministry of National Service has recently published a 'Directory of Government Departments and National Organisations requiring Voluntary Workers,' in which a considerable amount of useful information is contained. It may be obtained free from the Ministry of National Service, Westminster, S.W.1, or from any Government Information Bureau.

May I add—in entire agreement with recent Editorials in this journal—that the first duty we owe to those who are bearing so much for us is three-fold: not to "grouse"; to pay no heed to rumours and opinions based on nothing but ignorance; and to put our backs into the work that lies before us, even though it be only—what is indeed a supreme national interest at the present time—"the cultivation of our gardens."—Yours, &c.,

S. H. MELLONE.

Ministry of Munitions,
1 Caxton Street, S.W.1.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

THE REV.

JEFFREY WORTHINGTON, B.A.

WE regret to announce the death on April 18, in his 84th year, of the Rev. Jeffrey Worthington of Cullompton, Devon. Coming of a North country family—he was baptised at Cross Street Chapel by the Rev. W. Gaskell, husband of the novelist, and received part of his education at Knutsford, the "Cranford" of the classic sketches—he was one of the earliest alumni of Owen's College, Manchester. After seven years of journalistic work on the editorial staff of The Manchester Guardian, he studied at Manchester New College, 1861-64, and from 1864 to 1873 was minister at Bank Street, Bolton. He spent a short time on the Continent, and then became minister at Effra Road, Brixton (1874-83); while here he received the degree of B.A. from the new Victoria University on its first degree day (1882). His subsequent charges were at Taunton (1883-1900), and Cullompton, from 1901 till his death. This period of seventeen years was a happy one both for himself and the congregation to whom he ministered in the little Devonshire town. A friend to all, he was specially attracted to the young people, and a beautiful and understanding sympathy existed between them and himself. He took a warm interest in local matters, and was a member of numerous educational and other committees. No movement for social betterment ever lacked his sympathy and support.

Mr. Worthington, who was unmarried, had a peculiarly genial disposition. In London he made a point of gathering around him the students of Manchester New, and in the west he became a father and bishop to the younger men. In some respects his last stage of service outshone all before it. Age, that brought on blindness, increased his personal influence; and his addresses given perforce without book, went home to the hearts of his hearers. A tenderer note came into his prayers, a simpler appeal characterised all his speech. When the old Chapel suddenly fell, the very serious task of rebuilding that came upon him was manfully and successfully borne. It was on Sunday evening, March 24, just six years to the day after the fall of the ancient structure, that the aged minister broke down in the sermon, for some time repeating a favourite phrase of his—"The Good, the True, the Beautiful," till he collapsed entirely. He lingered, increasingly weak, a few weeks, then peacefully "fell on sleep."

A memorial service, at which there was a large congregation, was held on Sunday evening, April 21, conducted by the Rev. Rudolf Davis, who also officiated at the funeral on the following day which was attended by all the congregation, and by many townsmen and ministers and members of the congregations of neighbouring churches.

MR. JAMES SAMUELSON.

WE regret to announce the death of Mr. James Samuelson which occurred on April 14, at Bath House, Sidmouth, where he had been living in retirement for a number of years. Mr. Samuelson was a member of the Old Meeting, and attended services regularly when his health permitted. Although in his 89th year, he retained his activities up to about a fortnight ago, and last year gave a lecture at the local Cinema in aid of a war charity. He was a vigorous and able writer, and was connected with the Manchester and Liverpool press. Mrs. Samuelson, who took part in the services at the Old Meeting up to the time of her death, died two years ago. An interesting reference to Mr. Samuelson appeared in The Manchester Guardian on April 17. The "London Correspondent" speaking of the fact that Mr. Samuelson was one of Mr. John Redmond's opponents when the latter stood for an English constituency, the Kirkdale division of Liverpool, quotes the following passage written by one who took part in the contest: I knew Mr. Samuelson very well. He was very highly thought of by Liverpool Irishmen, for he had been a staunch Home Ruler and democrat long before Mr. Gladstone adopted the Home Rule policy. That fact made it particularly hard for us to have to be in opposition to him in the 1885 election, more particularly as we knew there was not the slightest chance of Mr. Redmond winning. It is an evidence of the perfect discipline and loyalty of Liverpool Irishmen that under the circumstances we threw all our energies into the fight as if we really hoped to win. Mr. Samuelson was a cultured, advanced Radical. Although an employer and a wealthy manufacturer he was nominated by the trade unionists. He was a forcible speaker, and in appearance not unlike the late Mr. Labouchere, with whom, indeed, he shared the gift of a certain half-cynical humour. He was a barrister, at one time edited the Quarterly Journal of Science, and always took a keen interest in social reform.

MR. W. J. SCOPES.

THE death of Mr. W. J. Scopes, of Ipswich, at the age of 82 has brought to a close the life of a prominent citizen and a well-known member of the Unitarian body in the town to which he belonged. He had been for more than fifty years a member of the Friars' Street Church, and during the greater part of the time was first junior, then senior, warden. His family had been connected with the Church for one hundred and fifty years. Up to 1903 Mr. Scopes was in trade as a bookseller and bookbinder, and was specially active as a member of the committee of the Ipswich and Suffolk Freehold Land Society, which, started in 1849, has been one of the most successful enterprises of the kind in the Kingdom. He was a well-read man, though he had received no considerable advantages in the way of education, and was greatly indebted to the Unitarian Sunday School of his day for much of the knowledge that he acquired in his youth. At one time he had a good deal to do with promoting social culture in connection with the Friars Street Church, and the leading share which he subsequently took in the conduct and management of its business matters were of great practical value. The funeral took place at Ipswich Cemetery on Tuesday afternoon, the service being conducted by the Rev. J. W. Saunders.

LIEUT. J. E. HAMBLIN.

FURTHER sad news from Ipswich comes in the announcement that Lieut. J. E. Hamblin, fourth son of Mr. Robert Hamblin, Warden and Treasurer of the Friars' Gate Church, has been killed in action at the age of 32. Before entering the army he was Secretary to the church, and he will be greatly missed by all who knew him and came under the influence of his amiable and spirited disposition. He joined the Royal Fusiliers, Public Schools' Battalion, in April, 1915, and after about a year's service qualified as an officer. At the time of his death he had just obtained his full lieutenantancy. He died fighting, with the enemy only a few yards distant, and has been described by the Major commanding his battalion as a splendid officer, beloved by the men of the battalion, of a most cheery disposition, and always willing to undertake any duty. Mr. Hamblin was a widower and leaves two young children.

MRS. WILLIAM NOBLE.

ON 14th inst. Mrs. Emma Noble, the wife of Mr. William Noble of Earlsmere, Bolton, passed away at the age of 72. The funeral service at the house was conducted by the Rev. C. J. Street, and at the graveside by the Rev. J. Cyril Flower. In her younger days she, with other members of her family, gave unstinted help to the cause at Pudsey, where she was a Sunday school teacher and took an active interest in the erection of the present chapel. After her marriage and settlement at Accrington, she rendered constant and energetic service to the school and church, taking a large part in gathering the necessary funds for the building of the chapel. When in 1873 the family left, a presentation was made to them by the teachers, scholars, and friends. Subsequently, at Bury, Oldham, and Mottram, she took a prominent part in the work of congregation and school. Mrs. Noble took a keen interest in the political rights of her sex. The Bury Women's Liberal Association owed its institution to her, and for many years she was its Secretary, receiving an illuminated address from the Association when she left the town. For many years the family have been resident in Bolton, where they took an active part in the life of the Bank Street congregation and won many friends. Her home life was sweet and gracious, and her loss will be keenly felt by her husband and family of four daughters and two sons. Her sister was the wife of the Rev. William Mitchell.

THE chief series of William Blake's original designs for the 'Divine Comedy,' 104 in number, which were offered for sale at Christie's recently, have happily been acquired "for the Empire." A pooling arrangement was made in which the National Gallery, the Melbourne Gallery, and several country galleries—not to mention certain private individuals, who are said to have supported it—took part, and the price realised was 7,300 guineas.

NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS.

[A short Notice in this column does not preclude a review in a later issue.]

Browne (E. G.), Prof. MATERIALS FOR THE STUDY OF THE BABI RELIGION. Cambridge, University Press, 1918. 380 pp. index, 12s. 6d.

This is another of the valuable contributions by Prof. Browne of Cambridge to the study of the growth of Bábism, a modern illustration with very direct bearings on the story of early Christianity. The volume contains an epitome of Bábí and Bahá'í history to 1898, translated from the original Arabic, accounts of persecutions of Bábís, a number of hitherto unpublished documents relating to the examination of the Báb at Tabriz, 1848, an account of the recent Bahá'í propaganda in America, and, not least noteworthy, a list of 'Thirty Heretical Doctrines ascribed to the Bábís by Muslims.' Photographs and facsimiles of MSS. add to the interest of the book.

Eversley (Lord). THE TURKISH EMPIRE: its Growth and Decay; second impression. London, T. Fisher Unwin. 384 pp. appendix, 12s. 6d. n.

This valuable book is not meant to be regarded as a complete history of the Turkish Empire, but it is, in fact, a very admirable and concise description of the process by which that Empire "was aggregated by its first ten great Sultans, and has since been, in great part, dismembered under their twenty-five degenerate successors," assigning causes for these two historic movements. Lord Eversley deals with his subject in a spirit of fairness and moderation, and, with the wisdom born of wide experience and a realisation of the immense problems which will have to be solved after the war, refrains from expressing an opinion as to the future of Turkey. Everything depends on the issue of the conflict in which we are now engaged. Three excellent maps are included in the volume.

Cooke (G. A.), D.D. JOSHUA (Cambridge Bible for Schools). Cambridge, University Press, 232 pp. index and map (revised edition, 1917). 2s. 3d.

Something like a score of editions of 'Joshua' have been issued in this series before the present, which institutes a notable new departure, being based on the Revised Version and brought thoroughly up to date in literary and archaeological references. If the new generation does not grow up with a better understanding of the Biblical literature and history than older ones it will not be the fault of such admirable workers as Dr. Cooke; we strongly commend the volume to parents, teachers, ministers, and clergy.

Drummond (James), LL.D., Litt.D., D.D. THE WAY OF LIFE: vol. 1, THE PARABLES OF JESUS; vol. 2, THE LORD'S PRAYER AND THE TEACHING OF JESUS. London, The Lindsay Press. 2 vols. 259 and 192 pp., 8s. n.

No words are needed to commend to our readers anything written by Dr. Drummond, and as we hope to give an adequate review of these two volumes—the latest fruits of his fine scholarship and devout spirit—very shortly, it is only necessary to draw attention to the fact that they are published, and that, apart from their value as an interpretation of New Testament teaching, their message is one of unquenchable hope and serene trust in God, for which, in these critical days, we shall all be grateful.

Holmes (John Haynes). THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF ROBERT COLLYER. New York, Dodd Mead & Co. 2 vols. vol. 1, 312 pp. vol. 2, 381 pp. illus., $5 n.

This very interesting and attractively presented 'Life,' to which we referred recently in our 'Notes' is just to hand; a review will appear in an early issue.

"New Townsmen." NEW TOWNS AFTER THE WAR. London, J. M. Dent & Sons. 84 pp., 1s. n.

A well-reasoned plea for the consideration of the housing question on large and liberal lines, in view of the fact that, after the war, building operations must be started again and carried on at a rapid rate. It is estimated that a million new houses will be required to meet the growing needs of the population—a staggering figure! "New Townsmen" give many cogent reasons why this problem should be boldly met by planning a series of garden cities, each surrounded by its belt of agricultural country, instead of extending the fringes of our already overgrown and too densely populated towns. The practical issue is one of immense importance, and no serious scheme should be dismissed, in these days, because it sounds, at first hearing, Utopian. The alternative to Utopia may well be chaos!

Swete (H. B.), D.D. ESSAYS ON THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE CHURCH AND MINISTRY; by various writers. Macmillan. 446 pp. indices 12s. n.

A highly important volume. The writers rank among the most scholarly in the Church, and their aim has been to furnish historical data rather than present an argument. The temper of the whole may be called moderately conservative. In his introduction, the editor, the late Dr. Swete, explains the origin of the book. It was undertaken at the suggestion of the Primate in reply to a somewhat challenging sermon on episcopal orders delivered by Canon Wilson at Cambridge, in 1910, and the essays have taken six years to prepare.

Tagore (Sir Rabindranath). LOVER'S GIFT AND CROSSING. London, Macmillan & Co. 117 pp. 5s. n.

These poems are full of the fragrance and tenderness which are inseparable from everything that Tagore writes. His mind seems to be saturated with beauty, and sometimes the note of femininity seems over stressed, but allowance must always be made by his readers in the West for that luxuriance of emotion which finds more fluent expression in the East than with us, and seems more closely attuned to the rustling of leaves, the ripple of water, and the perfume of flowers in the drowsy noontide of summer.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Ballyclare.—The Rev. P. Godding, who holds a commission in the Royal Irish Rifles, left for the front last week, and passed through London on Saturday in very good health and spirits.

Belfast and District.—The Non-Subscribing Presbyterian for April reports an address given by Miss Dora Mellone, Hon. Organiser of the Women's Political League, to the Unity Guild, Belfast, on the question of provision for necessitous mothers. The Rev. J. A. Kelly presided. A discussion followed, and Miss Mellone urged all present to help to create a public opinion on the subject. Holywood.—Second Lieut. Thomas Henderson, Royal Irish Rifles, who was reported "missing" a few months ago, is now officially stated to have been killed in action. Born in 1886, he was the son of the late George G. Henderson and Mrs. Henderson, of Craiglara, Holywood, and three of his brothers are at present serving in the armies of the Allies—Capt. J. M. Henderson, in Salonica, George Henderson, still in Ireland, with the Royal Irish Rifles, and Charles Henderson, in the United States Army. In October, 1916, Mr. Thomas Henderson married Miss Lucia Smellie, of Glasgow, where he was residing at the outbreak of war. From his earliest years he was closely associated with the Sunday school and church at Holywood, and at Glasgow later on became a member of the St. Vincent Street Church. He was an efficient officer and a brave soldier, and had endeared himself to a wide circle of friends by his genial and enthusiastic nature. Ballee.—In addition to contributing to the Syria and Palestine Relief Fund, the congregation of the Presbyterian Meeting House raised £12 for St. Dunstan's Hostel on March 22 as the result of an illustrated lecture entitled, 'A Night with Burns,' by the Rev. R. Philipson, of Downpatrick. At an entertainment on March 8 a sum of over £22 was realised which is to be devoted to school equipment. Clough.—The Non-Subscribing Presbyterian, referring to the discussion which is being carried on by ministers and laymen in THE INQUIRER, points to the success which has so far attended the efforts of the Rev. J. D. Davies, and members of his congregation at Clough, in connection with the services at Ballykilbeg Orange Hall. Evening services were started there at the beginning of February, and so well have they been attended up to the present that there seems a distinct likelihood of their becoming firmly established.

Comber.—At the Annual Meeting in connection with the Unitarian Church on March 6 it was stated that the average attendance at morning service during 1917 was 115, and at evening service 77. The number of scholars on the roll of the Sunday school is 101. Reference was made to the fact that out of 30 men serving in the Forces, 6 have been wounded, and 8 have paid the supreme sacrifice. At the conclusion of the business proceedings, the minister presented 22 medals and 6 certificates to young people of the congregation for good attendance at church worship. Templepatrick.—At the Annual Meeting of the Old Presbyterian Church on March 8, Miss Getty, who has worked for many years in the Sunday school, and as organist in the Church, was presented with a silver salver and a case of Treasury notes "in recognition of her valuable services." Speeches were made by Dr. Campbell, the Rev. G. V. Crook, and Messrs. A. Birkmyre, J. Moore, and R. Thompson.

Bournemouth.—A memorial to the late Lieut.-Colonel Smith has been placed in the Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, and special services of dedication were held on Sunday, April 21, morning and evening, conducted by the Rev. V. D. Davis. The memorial, which is a plain brass tablet, bears the following inscription: "In remembrance of Lieut.-Colonel Sydney George Smith, T.D., for twenty years a warden of this church; born April 3rd, 1866; died October 8, 1917. A man of proved capacity, and honourable, generous nature, the whole of his business life was spent in Bournemouth. For 28 years he also rendered devoted service to his country as a Volunteer, and latterly in the Territorial Force. On the outbreak of the war, having volunteered for service abroad, he sailed in October, 1914, for India, where he received his final promotion to the command of a battalion of his Hampshire Regiment ordered to Mesopotamia on active service. There, far up the Tigris, beyond Basra, but not yet on the field of battle, death found him, faithful in strenuous labours to the last. He was not unready, and he gave his life for his country's cause."

East Cheshire Christian Union.—The Annual Meeting of the Union was held at Denton on Saturday, April 13. Service was held in the Unitarian Church at 3 o'clock, conducted by the Rev. John Ellis of Stalybridge, who made a strong appeal in his sermon for the cultivation of 'Vital Religion.' Mr. Ellis said our deepest needs, in the solemn times through which we are passing, were the experience of the supporting presence of God, and the consecration of life to high and noble ends in a spirit of self-giving service. He contrasted the fervour of devotion and response to the claims of religion which he had recently observed in men at the battle-front with the apathy, restraint, and indifference with which we are too familiar in normal church life at home. The call to every one of us, at this hour, was to more earnestly "practise the presence of God." At the business meeting which followed, the Annual Report and Balance Sheet were presented and adopted, and the officers elected. Special mention was made of the services of the Rev. H. E. Perry, who undertook the duties of secretary during Mr. Ellis's absence in France. The Rev. H. E. Dowson is the President for the ensuing year; Vice-Presidents, Sir John T. Brunner, Messrs. H. P. Greg, M.A., R. T. Heys, J. Hall Brooks, A. Slater, Rev. B. C. Constable, and Captain W. H. J. Winstanley. A Public Meeting was held in the church at 6 o'clock, the Rev. J. Shaw Brown presiding. The Chairman said the distinctive characteristic of our order was freedom. He desired to lay stress on freedom, lest we became again entangled. Concession might be made of point after point until we lost our identity, and that would be a fatal thing. They must be loyal to the order to which they belonged even if they had to deny themselves the advantages of the ritual or beauty of other churches. Mr. R. M. Montgomery, K.C., speaking as representative of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, said he sympathised with the point of view of the Chairman. One of our traditions was freedom. But there was some danger lest we should be ever looking backward. They could not live by freedom. It was by the beliefs that freedom allowed them to have that they were to live. He defined a church as a band of soldiers all pledged to work together to obtain an advance in religious feeling, religious work, and service to God. They belonged, as a branch, to the great Church of Christ. Warmth, enthusiasm, could not be kept alive except by belonging to a larger Body. They wanted to avoid the disadvantage of always being against, and to cultivate the feeling of being with: to have an eye to the present and the future, and to forget the difficulties their forefathers had had; to let the light shine, and make the good thing known. Dr. George Jessel, who brought greetings from Southport, emphasised the value of freedom as an atmosphere, an open door for faith. Having got faith we must teach it to our children. In regard to Internationalism we could not go much farther at present. We had to improve humanity. Unless a man was a good father, citizen, neighbour, man, he could not be a good internationalist. The Rev. John S. Burgess spoke on 'Reconstruction,' and asked what was the society of the future going to be? Materialism had been weighed and found wanting. It could multiply products, but did not know what to do with them. The only power which could successfully oppose materialism was the power that could attune itself to the mind of Christ.

Hinckley.—We regret to announce the death in action of Thomas Hydon, a member of the Great Meeting Chapel Committee, a sidesman, and a loyal worshipper. With his quiet, unassuming manner, Mr. Hydon had endeared himself to all, and by his death the Church has suffered a very real loss. He leaves a widow and two children with whom the deepest sympathy is felt. On Sunday, April 21st, a Memorial Service was held in the Chapel, the minister, the Rev. H. N. C. Jones, officiating. No fewer than seventeen have lost their lives, while two are missing, out of over a hundred men connected with the Great Meeting who have joined the Forces.

Hull.—Home Fires, the Park Street Church magazine, gives a list of ninety-four names on the Roll of Honour, of whom the following have been killed in action: Pte. W. J. Jackson (East Yorks), November 22, 1916; Pte. H. N. Lawson (Bedfords), October 23, 1917; Serjeant Harold Prince, R.M.A., killed on H.M.S. Vanguard July, 1917; Pte. F. H. Robb, killed in France in 1914; Lance-Corporal A. E. Rymer (R.E.), August 4, 1917; and Pte. A. Taylor (Northants), November, 1917. Twelve of those mentioned in the list are attached to the Auxiliary Services. Home Fires maintains its bright and cheery tone, and, judging from the extracts from letters 'From the Ranks' which are given in its pages from time to time, is a welcome friend to the lads at the front who have been participators in the church's work.

Liverpool: The Ancient Chapel.—The ter-centenary of the founding of the Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, which occurs this year, will be commemorated some-time in the autumn.—During the present month the Rev. C. M. Wright has been giving Sunday evening lectures on great personalities which are specially appropriate at the present time. Abraham Lincoln, Florence Nightingale, and Joan of Arc have already been dealt with, and next Sunday, April 28, he will speak on Mazzini.

London District Unitarian Society.—On the invitation of the President, Dr. C. Herbert-Smith, and the Committee, a conference on 'The Importance of the Religious Education of our Young People,' was held at Essex Hall last Saturday. Mr. Athelstane A. Taylor introduced the subject, and emphasised the fact that the end of the war would provide our churches with great difficulties and opportunities. It would be far from well with the churches if they neglected the work which the young men whom they had lost would have done: the reserves must be brought up, namely, the young people who were prepared to put their energies into the religious life of the country. He hoped to see the British and Foreign Unitarian Association and the Sunday School Association produce handbooks from that point of view. Mr. Taylor also dealt with the importance of young people being educated in regard to the Unitarian movement. He thought the "Historical Society" might take the matter up. The discussion was opened by the Rev. H. Gow who agreed that a full knowledge of the history of Unitarianism was essential, that there must be a clear idea as to where we were going. Religious education was a sacred duty now. There would be such a responsibility on the new generation for moral and intellectual life as never had been before, and a church must impress upon parents that nothing could take the place of home influence in religion and morality. He believed in Ministers' Classes, and would like Confirmation Services. The Revs. A. H. Dolphin, A. A. Charlesworth, B. Lister, J. A. Pearson, F. Hankinson and Mrs. Herbert Smith, Messrs. Gibberd, Begg, and J. W. Gale, took part in the discussion.

London: Islington.—A special musical service will be held at Unity Church on Sunday evening, April 28, at 6.30, when an augmented choir will render Mendelssohn's 'Hear my Prayer,' Sir John Goss's 'Wilderness' and 'Sound an Alarm' ('Judas Maccabeus'). The Rev. J. Vint Laughland will be the preacher.

London: Mansford Street Mission.—On April 13 a dramatic performance was given by some of the children of the Sunday school, under the direction of Miss Keen, in aid of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Parcels Fund, when £3 6s. was realised after paying all expenses. The Fund was started by the friends and members of the Church and Sunday school last August, and the total amount collected since that date is £27 2s. 6d. Prizes will be awarded for the best grown daffodils at the Summer Flower Show in July. Fifty-six pots have been sent in.—Two successful and well-attended Guild meetings have been held recently, addresses being given by Miss Punnett and Mr. J. L. Gerrard. On May 5 the Sunday school Anniversary Services will be held, and will be conducted in the afternoon and evening by Dr. J. P. MacCarthy, of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.

North Cheshire Unitarian Sunday School Union.—The annual Conversation was held at Gorton on Saturday, April 20. In spite of the severe weather, including a midday snowstorm, about 80 teachers and friends were present. A meeting of the committee was held in the afternoon at which, and at the evening meeting, the President, Mr. Wm. Thompson, presided. At the evening meeting, after a wartime tea, a cordial welcome was given by the Chairman to the Rev. H. Bodell Smith, who was the appointed representative of the Manchester District Sunday School Association. In reply Mr. Smith gave a short address dealing with present-day Sunday school problems and the aims of the Association. An enjoyable musical programme was given by a number of the elder girls, who have given concerts on several occasions in Manchester hospitals. The usual votes of thanks were heartily accorded.

Northampton.—The spring conference of members of Kettering Road Church was held on Thursday, April 11. The Rev. W. C. Hall, who presided, in reviewing the work of the winter said it was most gratifying to find that, in spite of the further withdrawal of young men for military service, the attendances at public worship had been higher than those of the previous winter. The work of the Sunday School was still restricted by possible military demands upon their rooms, but the infant classes had been restarted, with kindergarten equipment. The Literary Society had held fortnightly meetings, at which lectures had been delivered by prominent outside friends who recognised in the society one of the chief literary institutions of the town. The Ladies' Social Working Party had met regularly and had organised special work from which the funds of the church had largely benefited. Institutional work of various kinds had been done on four nights of every week. A general discussion on church affairs followed, and several recommendations were made for the consideration of the Committee. It is found that these periodical conferences tend to increase the interest of our members in the activities of the different societies. Mr. Hall is preaching a series of morning sermons on 'Back to the Gospel.'

Oldham.—The Literary and Social Institute in connection with the Unitarian Church has just finished its first winter session. It was started principally with a view to providing a meeting place for members who are serving with the forces when they return home, and has been a success in spite of the trying conditions under which the work is carried out. Seven lectures have been delivered, and the rooms are open during the week for games and reading, smoking being allowed for those over the age of 18. At the Annual Meeting held recently the minister (the Rev. D. W. Robson) was re-elected President, and the hope was expressed that the church would have a real living Institution ready to welcome the boys when they come back.

Reading.—Special addresses on subjects of present-day interest are being given at the Sunday evening services (6.30) at the Unitarian Free Church. Mr. O. A. Shrubsole will be the speaker on several Sundays during the next three months, and among others who have promised lectures are Mr. Walter Hogg, LL.B., Miss Janet Weakley, A.R.C.M., Mr. J. A. Fallows, and Mr. Jakaab Prelooker. The latter will deal with 'Pioneers of the Russian Revolution,' and also with the 'Religio-political Sects in Russia.'

Rochdale.—At the Annual Meeting of the congregation of the Unitarian Church reference was made to the generosity of Mr. Richard Heape, J.P., in consequence of which the Trustees have been able to maintain their grant to the Church Funds, the expenses incurred by the appointment of new Trustees have been met, and a third volume of The Monthly Messenger, comprising ten years, has been bound and added to the other two volumes already deposited in the safe at the church.

Social Service Union.—The annual meeting of the Union for Social Service was held at the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, on Wednesday. The Rev. W. G. Tarrant, president, in moving the adoption of the report, which was of an encouraging character and showed considerable activity in spite of present difficulties, said there was evidence on many sides that the call to Social Service was both urgent and welcome, especially among the young. The Rev. Dr. S. H. Mellone, Principal of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, was elected president for the ensuing year. In the evening a service took place, conducted by the Rev. Lawrence Clare, addresses being given by the Revs. W. Whitaker and W. G. Tarrant. A fuller report will be given in our next issue.

 * THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week*

BIRTH.

JELLIE.—On the 17th inst., at 7 Bickerton Road, Southport, to Rev. W. and Mrs. Jellie, a daughter.

DEATHS.

SAMUELSON.—On April 14, at Bath House, Sidmouth, in his 89th year, James Samuelson.

VARIAN.—Walter Osborne, Second Lieutenant, 2nd Royal Munster Fusiliers, killed in action March 30, 1918, youngest son of Isaac Stephen and the late Mary Varian, Stillorgan, co. Dublin.

WORTHINGTON.—On the 18th inst., at Chudleigh Cottage, Cullompton, Devon, the Rev. Jeffery Worthington, B.A., in his 84th year.

IN MEMORIAM.

DAWSON.—In ever loving memory of Hubert Dawson, of the 16th Manchester Regiment ("Pals."), killed in action in France on April 23, 1917. Second son of Adam and Esther Dawson, of "Larkhill," Bury, Lancs.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, April 28.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. Dr. HARGROVE.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL: 6.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND; 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.; 6.30, Miss M. B. BURT.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH: 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Mr. J. BEGG: 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. BASIL VINEY.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

Woolwich, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH; 6.30, Mr. JOHN BEGG.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Room, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DONALD B. FRASER.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. RATTRAY.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. H. NEWALL: 6.30, Rev. J. C. HIRST.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. W. L. SCHROEDER, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. R. SCOTT.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. A. FERGUSON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNEPEG, CANADA.

All Souls' Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C. (Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

April

28. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

May

5. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.
Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation. Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY. No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4. (Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE,	L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I.	H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss OECIL GRADWELL.	H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

PEARL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000
Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

MANSFORD STREET CHURCH AND MISSION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The ANNUAL MEETING of the Subscribers and other Friends of the Mission will be held on MONDAY, APRIL 29, at 6.30 P.M., at

LINDSEY HALL, NOTTING HILL GATE, W.,

when the chair will be taken by

The Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

NOTE.—Subscribers are requested to accept this notice as the formal notification of the Meeting, as it is not proposed on this occasion to notify them individually. They are urged to make a point of attending the Meeting, and other friends of the Mission will also be cordially welcomed.

RONALD P. JONES, Hon. Sec.

MANSFORD STREET, BETHNAL GREEN. SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY SERVICES

Will be held on SUNDAY, MAY 5.

The services at 3.15 and 6.30 will be conducted by the Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.

UNITY CHURCH, DEWSBURY.

ANNUAL SALE OF WORK.

SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1918.

TO BE OPENED AT 3 P.M. BY

ARTHUR W. FIRTH, Esq., of Dewsbury.

The object of the Sale is to raise at least £200 for the following purposes:—

- (1) Augmentation of the Church Funds.
- (2) The repair and renovation of the Church fabric, both exterior and interior.
- (3) The establishment this year of an Independence Fund.

YOUR HELP IS SOLICITED.

Gifts can be sent to the Minister—
Rev. JOHN W. MAW, M.A.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.

The EIGHTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING
will be held at the

RHYL STREET MISSION, KENTISH TOWN, N.W.,

On TUESDAY, MAY 7, at 5.0. P.M.

Mr. Charles Martineau will preside.

Mrs. SYDNEY MARTINEAU, Mrs. EVELEGH, the Revs. H. GOW, A. GOLLAND, and W. H. ROSE, will also speak.

A Presentation will be made to the Rev. and Mrs. F. SUMMERS.

Tea at 4.30. The Hampstead and Pimlico Omnibus (24), and the Hampstead and Moorgate Trams pass Rhyll Street. The nearest station is Chalk Farm, on the Hampstead Tube.

FRANK K. FREESTON, Hon. Sec.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION,

22 Northumberland Avenue, London.

Founded by the late Mr. G. R. Jesse in 1875.

The Society offers to send a LECTURER free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c.

GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN, LTD.

PROBLEMS OF THE PEACE

By WILLIAM HARBUTT DAWSON, Author of "The Evolution of Modern Germany." Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

"A notable book, possibly the most notable of all the many which have appeared in this country dealing with the terms of settlement."—New Statesman.

A New Volume in "The Library of Philosophy."

THE ELEMENTS OF CONSTRUCTIVE PHILOSOPHY.

By J. S. MACKENZIE, Litt.D., Hon. LL.D., Emeritus Professor of Logic and Philosophy in University College, Cardiff. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

"We compliment Prof. Mackenzie on the production of a book which has in the truest sense what its title indicates, the elements of construction." Glasgow Herald.

JOTTINGS FROM THE FRONT.

By the Rev. KENNETH E. SHAW. Crown 8vo, paper covers, 2s. 6d. net.

Written whilst at the Front, the Author, with touches of humour and pathos, gives to those at home some insight into the ordinary life of the average Tommy beyond the actual fighting.

WARS AND TREATIES, 1815-1914.

By ARTHUR PONSONBY, M.P. Demy 8vo, paper covers, 2s. net.

A useful book of reference, which gives briefly the essential facts as to the origin and result of each of the forty principal wars in the last 100 years, and the main provisions of the more important treaties.

REBELS AND REFORMERS.

By ARTHUR and DOROTHY PONSONBY. Crown 8vo, with 12 Portraits, 6s. net.

"Told with a most enticing simplicity and the happiest taste—it will be a delight to readers."—Nation.

THE MAKING OF WOMEN:

Oxford Essays in Feminism.

By A. MAUDE ROYDEN and others. Edited by VICTOR GOLLANCZ. Second Impression. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

"A brilliant book. It is undoubtedly one of the most serious and responsible contributions to an entrancing subject which has been written." The Common Cause.

Ruskin House, 40 Museum St., London, W.C.1.

Board and Residence, &c.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.—Board - residence. Meat ration supplemented by vegetarian dishes and country produce. Enquiries, which must be accompanied by stamped envelope, from Miss SMITH.

Miscellaneous.

IRISH LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, with shamrock, damask, hemstitched ends, 22 x 40 inches, good reliable quality, four for 11s., postage 6d. Send for Bargain List, free. —HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

THAT OLD CHAIN

You do not wear and all disused Jewellery, Trinkets, Watches, &c. can now be sold at MAXIMUM PRICES.

In fact, many articles are worth more than you paid for them. ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) ANY CONDITION NOW WORTH UP TO £15 PER SET strictly genuine. Highest possible offers made by return for all goods sent to us. If not accepted, goods returned at once, post free.

SATISFACTION ASSURED.

I. RAYBURN & CO.,
105 Market Street, Manchester.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenæum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C., Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, April 27, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3957.
NEW SERIES, No. 1060.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	137
SOLDIERS AND HOME-FOLK	138
A MESSAGE FROM M. PAUL SABATIER	138
BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—
The Way of Life	139
The Faith of a Modern Churchman	139

CORRESPONDENCE:—
Where is the Religious Centre?	140
Hospitality in Whit-Week	140
MEMORIAL NOTICES:—
Commander Bernard H. Ellis, D.S.O.	140
Mr. John Sale, Sen.	140

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	141
INTERDENOMINATIONAL WORK AT CAMP
DEVENS, MASS	141
UNION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE	141
NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS	141
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	142

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

IN former years people hoped much or feared, according to their point of view, when May brought round the occasion for Labour demonstrations, especially on the Continent. Experience has sadly belied the hopes of those who, at the outbreak of the war, conceived the pacific power of the Socialist and allied parties in Central Europe to be greater than it appears to have been. Even after nearly four years of tragic suffering they show little or no signs of immediate revolt against the military autocracy; but how far this apparent quiescence is real, and how far imposed, we have not much evidence to show. That the authorities rigorously suppress the signs of discontent as far as possible, and assiduously prevent the diffusion of matter likely to rouse popular movements, is obvious. For example, the very carefully prepared and weighty memorandum issued a month or two ago by the Inter-Allied Labour and Socialist Conference, setting forth the real war aims of people on our side, has not been allowed to appear in Germany. But it is something that a covering letter, addressed to Socialist "comrades" in enemy countries, and not hitherto published in England, has (according to The Times) at last achieved publication in Vorwärts.

THIS letter, which was signed by MM. Vandervelde and Huysmans, gives an account of the origin and preparation of the memorandum referred to, and invites the Socialists of Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Bulgaria to issue a similar public declaration of their views in regard to the foundation of a stable peace. The writer says: "The sum of the matter is that the Socialists of the Entente countries request you in this grave hour, in which it is necessary to know whether the world is to be freed by democracy or to be handed over to Imperialism, to ask your consciences whether a real sincere and effective agreement of the wills of the proletariats is possible in order to put an end to the law of violence, in order to lay the foundations not of a peace, but of the peace, and in order to help the peoples to liberate themselves from the endless chain of military war which leads to economic wars, and of economic wars which will again produce military wars." The letter concludes with a reference to the "shameful violation" of democratic principles in dealing with Russia, which is indeed a grave menace to the workers of all countries.

* * *

IN Mrs. Humphry Ward's 'Recollections,' which are continued in the May Cornhill, there is a curiously debateable story told to her by a friend of hers and of Robert Browning. The latter, we are informed, was in a "literary house" where the divinity of Christ was discussed—apropos of 'Robert Elsmere,' then recently published, and not liked by Browning. "After listening a while, Browning said with some passion—'Was he no more than Man? You think so? Ask yourselves what you would do if any of the great men of the world were to come into the room at this moment—Shakespeare?—Dante?—Plato? You would rise. But if Christ came into the room? You would kneel.'" Now it is quite possible that Browning might recall for his own use this form of testimony to the unique position of Jesus, for it occurs in one of his letters. But, as Mrs. Ward's informant tells the story, no one of the literary persons in the company remembered (as Browning did in the letter), and Mrs. Ward herself seems to forget, that the original testifier was so well-known a writer—and Unitarian—as Charles Lamb.

* * *

WILLIAM HAZLITT relates that he, Hunt, Godwin, and Lamb were talking on "Persons one would wish to have seen." Lamb at last suggested, on the one hand, Guy Fawkes, sitting "pale and emaciated" amid the matches and powder-barrels; and next, Judas Iscariot. "I would fain see the face of him who, having dipped his hand in the same dish with the Son of Man, could afterwards betray him. I have no conception of such a thing, nor have I ever seen any picture (not even Leonardo's very fine one) that gave me the least idea of it." Lamb added: "There is only one other Person I can ever think of after this. If Shakespeare was to come into the room, we should all rise up to meet him; but if that Person was to come into it, we should all fall down, and try to kiss the hem of his garment." Apparently the idea of deepest reverence for Jesus did not seem incongruous with Lamb's notions as a Monotheist—his own word when smiling at good George Dyer's propagandist zeal was "One-God-ite."

* * *

THE Rev. E. C. Davis, Unitarian Camp Chaplain at Devens, U.S.A., an account of which appears on another page, reports that among the Unitarians at the Camp there are seven or eight higher officers, thirteen captains, forty-three lieutenants, and about two hundred non-commissioned officers. Mr. Davis says that the Unitarian men have a quality about them that is very gratifying. He adds that he believes the time is coming, predicted by Thomas Jefferson, when every young man in America will be a Unitarian: "I see such evidences of it here every day as almost to overwhelm me."

* * *

WE have been favoured with sight of a letter by the Rev. W. G. Price, who enlisted in 1916, and who wrote recently (from the Princess Street Military Hospital, Manchester) intending to reach the Ministerial Fellowship meeting called for April 22, but cancelled on the withdrawal of ministers' conscription. Mr. Price, as a soldier in the ranks, has, we feel, a right to urge others to enlist which certainly no elderly civilian possesses; we quote some passages from his letter believing that they will command the very earnest consideration of all his brethren. He says: "I sincerely hope that having escaped coercion many of our younger ministers will not hesitate to make the more graceful entry into military service, or at least that they will undertake work in those places where it will have the effect of releasing men for the army, and helping those who have more to do than they can well compass."

* * *

"I SPEAK," says Mr. Price, "from experience. Here in connection with the hospital there are men helping us inside and out, on ward duty and station duty, night after night, while still having to go about their ordinary duties of the day—men whose health has set them in a low category and who are often unequal to the strain imposed upon them, men of almost every class, trade, and profession—except the ministerial. I want to see the ministry represented. The work they are doing in their pulpits and among their people is, I know, unusually onerous in these days, and at least as important as ever; but the crisis calls urgently for activity in other directions, and, apart from this, I believe that we can best prepare for the success of the Church in the future by standing in these days shoulder to shoulder with the laymen who are doing the hard, drudging, sacrificing work that is so vitally necessary. Here is a golden opportunity for making the Church real to the laity."

* * *

HE continues: "I know what soldiers are saying and thinking about the Churches. As a rule it is not flattering, and I am convinced that the voluntary enlistment of a thousand young ministers and clergy would do far more for the ultimate welfare of the Churches than can possibly be done if they stay quietly in their pulpits during this terribly abnormal time. As for the sacrifices they would have to make in case of enlistment, these are obvious; but I trust that if any of our younger men take the step their congregations will be loyal to them and not make the sacrifices unnecessarily hard. Believe me," concludes our good friend, "I am speaking in all affection for the brethren, and with nothing but anxiety for the future power and influence of the pulpit." Such words may be safely left to speak for themselves.

* * *

ESSEX HALL has been visited recently by the Revs. J. H. Metcalf (Winchester, Mass.) and H. R. Williams (Concord, N.H.), Unitarian ministers on their way from the United States to France; also the Rev. G. Kent (New Orleans), who is engaged on American Y.M.C.A. work in London. He will remain in England until towards the end of August, and has still several vacant dates for Sunday services in June and July; his address is Essex Hall. The Rev. Dr. MacCarthy has been lecturing and conducting services at various Home Camps and Y.M.C.A. Huts.

SOLDIERS AND HOME FOLK.

WHEN the soldier, in his brief intervals of worry and toil, thinks of the people at home he doubtless sees them in a light that brightens all their charms and virtues. For him they now more than ever fill the centre of life's picture. Speak as he may of the "Nation" to which he belongs, sing as he may of his "Country," he focusses all such large and vague ideas into facts, local, familiar, and dear. He gets comfort in that proved worth of kith and kin and choice friends which can be set against the known or suspected worthlessness of some who "dwell in the land" but who disgrace it by their presence. There are in the land, the soldier is aware, too many selfish strategists who move heaven and earth in manœuvring for a safe job, whether in the army or out. There are greedy profiteers. There are incompetents in high places, for whose mistakes he and his comrades pay bitterly in privation, suffering, and risk to life. There are mischief makers in Parliament and the press. There are autocrats who are clever at multiplying vexatious regulations which they will never have to obey. These and their like he knows all too well; but he knows also their betters—the good Home Folk.

That they were good Folk he knew, in a way, before. But war, that has taught him many other things by no means so agreeable, has at least brought out their very best for him, as his for them. Look at their letters; look at his. If he had not been out, separated by a gulf wider than miles can measure, he could never have known or even imagined all this affectionate thought for him. And as for "the parcels," so amazingly frequent and so undisguisably welcome whenever they arrive, his only fear is that the Home Folk are pinching themselves in these hard times, and sending him things which they think he wants, or likes, at a cost far too great. Similarly, their words of cheery humour and reassurance, he strongly suspects, are sometimes more needed in home circles than by himself. He writes accordingly, and he would not like to think he writes in vain.

Well, it is by no means in vain that Soldiers and Home Folk are thus linking up closer than ever in all this million-multiplied correspondence, in all this intercourse of soul, whether expressed or not. The spirit that burns away all sordid selfishness has touched both sides. If our young soldier's magnificent pluck and staunchness astonishes some of us who knew him as the quite ordinary boy, ready indeed to speak up and hold his own in emergency, but just as little prophetic of rugged martial courage as an acorn is of a two-hundred-year oak, our Home Folks' steady confidence and quenchless energy is no less a revelation to him. Who would have thought the Old People, the Girls, the "Kiddies," would have come out so strong, and, best of all, carried on so bravely all this while!

These, and such thoughts, are abundant down in the heart's secret places, in countless homes, in countless posts of duty far away. It is in that stratum of true human affection, chastened, purified, simple, honest, unpretentious, ennobled beyond all expectation, that the national life finds salvation in this hour of stress. This deadliest war-thrust ever made—upon the Home Folk as well as upon the Soldiers—will be defeated. There is no possible doubt. Assurance springs afresh as often as they remember each other, and for each other's sake resolve to maintain honour, courage, duty, love, right on—let come what will, let flinch who may. This is the temper that makes for health and victory.

A MESSAGE

FROM M. PAUL SABATIER.

THE following is a translation of a letter originally addressed to Sir Frederick Pollock, who sent it to the Times Literary Supplement, as he considered it too good to keep to himself, and regarded it as being "addressed to our people rather than to any individual." The letter appeared in the Supplement on April 18:—

In these days of grief and glory when our two peoples, intermingled, fertilise the foundations of a new city with their blood, may I address to you a word of respectful remembrance?

The grave news of these last days cannot increase our admiration of your heroic army; for that feeling long ago reached a stage that is incapable of further development. Before this entirety of self-sacrifice, this immolation of all the human instincts at the call of duty and of God, one can only be silent; words are so weak as to be merely profanation.

I could wish much to show you the homes of our people of the Cevennes, in whom, stricken as they are, there seems to be emerging a new humanity. The grave news from the front has only strengthened and stiffened the will in them still more. I find nowhere the smallest indication of wavering. They go to the travail of the war with the same calm determination as they take to the toil of the fields. The optimism of the press offends our sturdy highlanders. "It is not a question of knowing when we shall conquer or if we shall conquer," said a poilu the other day who was setting off again for the front, "it is just a question of doing one's duty; God will do the rest."

With convictions such as these we are already conquerors.

—

WE understand that the Rev. Walter Short, minister of the Bootle Church, now captain and adjutant, makes a practice of sending to his people "pictures from France" each month. In the course of a recent letter, he says: "We are five—a lieutenant-colonel, two captains and two lieutenants. Four are graduates and the fifth a public schoolman. The average age is 31 so that we may be said to have reached the time of discretion with just sufficient youth to retain enthusiasm. In age I lead, but in the leadership that counts, our C.O. like Saul is 'higher than any of the people from his shoulders and upwards.'" Captain Short mentions a lieutenant of the American Medical Corps. "His 'twang' and scout hat betray his place of origin. He is small and not very old." There is also an Oxford honours man in history. "Reverence and knowledge are beautifully blended in his peculiarly charming personality." At the conclusion of the letter Captain Short says: "Such are my mess-mates. What a wonderful thing this New Army is."

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

THE WAY OF LIFE.

THE WAY OF LIFE. By James Drummond, LL.D., Litt.D., 2 vols. London: The Lindsay Press, 8s. net.

It is impossible to do justice to these two volumes in a short review. They are an interpretation of the teaching of Jesus by a mind and heart akin to his own. We feel a strength of scholarship behind all that is said, but we feel yet more the sympathetic insight and understanding of a man whose life is hidden with Christ in God.

Dr. Drummond holds a unique place amongst us and these volumes will add to our gratitude and reverence towards him. They are very simple in style and thought. There is nothing sensational or startling in them. They are quiet musings on the deep thoughts of Jesus. The first volume is an interpretation of the Parables of Jesus and the second volume deals with the Lord's Prayer and the Beatitudes. It is a mistake, as some do, to belittle the teaching of Jesus in comparison with his life. His teaching was part of his life, it flowed out of his life, it was an expression of his life. In many cases a man's teaching and his life are separate things. He teaches what he would like for himself or what he thinks advisable for others. He speaks of hopes and dreams and ideals which he has not realised, which he has hardly tried to realise. He bids us perform duties which he himself has not performed and stand tests by which he himself has not been tested. He points us to an ideal world with which he is as unacquainted as ourselves. The power of the teaching of Jesus is that it was his life. He tells us of that which he knows. We feel that he lived the life to which he calls us. To understand the teaching of Jesus is to understand something of his life and to realise his love. The Parables of Jesus must always be regarded with the deepest interest, partly because of their intrinsic beauty and worth, and partly because such stories would be by their nature the most easily remembered and, therefore, the most authentic of all the records of Jesus.

In reviewing this book we have only space for a few references to Dr. Drummond's treatment. In the Parable of the Prodigal Son he contrasts the words of the father in the Parable, "This thy brother was dead and is alive again," with the words which the elder brother had used in speaking of the Prodigal, "This thy son." His jealous anger does not remember that it is of his own brother he is speaking. There is wonderful beauty in the gentle rebuke of the father conveyed in the words "This thy brother." The subtle insight into the value of one word may remind readers of Prof. Bradley's 'Tragedies of Shakespeare' of his remark on Cassio's address to Othello at the end of the play: "Dear General, I never gave you cause"; "One is sure he had never used that adjective before." It was too familiar. "The love in it makes it beautiful but there is something also in it unknown to Cassio which goes to the heart. It tells us that his love is no longer unapproachably above him."

Dr. Drummond's interpretation of the Parable of the Good Samaritan is interesting and original. The point of the Parable for him is not that the Samaritan was neighbour to him that fell among the thieves, but that the Samaritan is to be regarded as the neighbour. "A man's title to be received as a neighbour is to be determined not by his country or his Church but by his goodness. He appears before us with no recognised title to respect, with nothing but the simple majesty of his unpretending goodness. Yet even in so extreme a case goodness is triumphant and is so presented as to penetrate the hard crust of prejudice and open a new world of thought in the lawyer's mind." The meaning of the Parable for Dr. Drummond is not a mere exhortation to do good to anybody, even our enemy. We may do good to others without respecting them or loving them. It is the exhibition of the loveableness and greatness of a man belonging to a race whom all good Jews despised and thought it right to hate.

There is an important and very suggestive chapter in the second volume on how and in what way can God forgive sin. We are inclined to say that God ought not to forgive sin if forgiveness means the remitting of just punishment; and on the other hand, if it means the passing away of resentment, that cannot be, because God never possessed it. He is unchangeable love. If forgiveness means the absence of resentment then "forgiveness becomes less in proportion to our readiness to forgive and if only we forgave instantaneously we should not forgive at all."

Dr. Drummond suggests, in answer to these difficulties, in the first place, that it is not inconsistent with the divine justice to remit on certain conditions a portion of the outward penalty merited by sin. "This is the assumption"—that sin must be completely punished—"on which the Calvinistic doctrine of the Atonement rests and it is curious to find it reappearing in a school which probably considers itself at the other pole of the religious world. I can discover no tendency in pain to compensate for sin. How many hours or days of toothache would restore the moral order outraged by an unkind look, or how many weeks of starvation would cover up an act of hypocrisy? These things are absolutely incommensurable and there is no ground for assuming that each sin is entitled to a certain irremovable amount of penal suffering. We feel that the justification of the punishment vanishes in proportion to the depth of penitential regret and the reality of improvement."

With regard to the second difficulty, that of the impossibility of resentment in God, it must suffice to quote only a few words to show the direction of Dr. Drummond's thought: "God is always just, always kind, always patient, always true in His moral judgment: but for that very reason His relation to us must change with the varying conditions of our life, and now we are warmed with the sun of His approval and now the cloud of His disapproval hangs darkly over our heads. While we remain impenitent we feel bitter and defiant." "What then is it to be forgiven? Is it not to regain the tender approval of God, to feel ever more in our hearts His breath of life and to walk in the light of His countenance?" Here, as in so many passages throughout these two volumes, we feel the power and beauty of a living faith in God. The author does not ignore difficulties, but he sees them transfigured and transcended in that thought of God who was in Christ and is in him.

Matthew Arnold said once, in lecturing on Emerson, that he was "the friend of those who want to live in the Spirit." Those words are a true description of this book by Dr. Drummond. It will be found by many to be a friend of those who want to live in the spirit and will give them a deeper peace and confidence in God amidst the fierce troubles of our time.

H. Gow.

THE United Kingdom Alliance is moving its headquarters from Manchester, where they have been situated for sixty-five years, to London. Since it was founded in 1853, largely owing to the efforts of Nathaniel Card, a member of the Society of Friends, the Alliance has had only three presidents—Sir Walter Trevelyan, the eminent naturalist; Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and Mr. Lief Jones, M.P., who holds the office at present.

THE FAITH OF A MODERN CHURCHMAN. By Canon M. G. Glazebrook. (John Murray, 2s. 6d. net).

THIS is the book, we believe, that thoughtful religious people have long wanted, in particular those thoughtful communicants who have continued to identify themselves with the Established Church in the hope of some such statement being published during their lifetime. It puts into print much that we have deduced from conversation to be the belief of individual priests but which has failed to secure such publicity as would warrant it being regarded as anything but the view-point of a small majority. Put forward in the first volume of 'The Modern Churchman's Library,' it ought now either to receive recognition or be denied it altogether. If it is recognised, it means that affirmations which have hitherto been regarded as necessary to Church membership will no longer be required; further, that the justification for the publication of such books as 'The Question of Assent,' by the Bishop of Gloucester, will cease to exist. If it is authoritatively denied recognition, then surely the position of such men as Dr. Glazebrook and Bishop Henson is impossible. We see no utility in pursuing further here what concerns particularly the Church of England, but we do see the extreme importance of advising others to examine the book on its own intrinsic merits, as these affect religious people in all denominations.

For the scope of the book is far wider than what concerns denominational difficulties. It should help those to come together who most earnestly desire a social religious life, a life which has seemed impossible of attainment because of the constant reiteration everywhere of what was foreign to their religious belief. To take the first chapter—Dr. Glazebrook almost apologises for having to begin at the beginning, the necessity of considering first what is the signification of the word "God." We believe by his treatment of the matter he has removed a stumbling block in the way of many who have been sorely troubled to definitely formulate for themselves a reasonable basis for belief.

In dealing with the attribution of personality to God Dr. Glazebrook says: "Personality means something which is negative, limited by conditions of space and time and power and even memory; it is singularly inappropriate as a description of the infinite and the eternal.... The word comes to us from the Latin. It was most unwillingly that theologians used it to translate a Greek word which had no such limiting sense, because the Latin language so poor in philosophical terms, had nothing better to offer."

The next chapter on the 'Atonement' emphasises the fact of that "at-onement" which Christ's life and death establishes between all who find peace and joy in the giving of life to the uttermost to the purpose of helping others to reach the same inspiration.

In the chapter on 'Resurrection' Dr. Glazebrook traces the evolution through the ages from the material idea of bodily resuscitation to that held now, that Christ's "appearances" after his death and burial were not the presentments of flesh and blood to the bodily eye, but the manifestation of a spiritual body to spiritual perception.

We trust that these three examples—all that our present restricted space permits—will be sufficient indication of the contents to send readers to the book itself.

F.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WHERE IS THE RELIGIOUS CENTRE?

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May I offer the sincerest thanks to Dr. Mellor for his letter in response to mine of April 6, by expressing my complete accord with him in the desire for fellowship and understanding all round. I am grateful to him for recognising that there was nothing even approaching antagonism in my reference to his first letter.

What we are aiming at is a clear understanding as to where our life and faith must be centralised; and my conviction is that it must be absolutely in God, our Father, and in Him alone, and that this is what Jesus declares to us and helps us most fully to realise: "Father, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done." That is the true prayer, and in its aspiration and surrender is the way of life for us. This Jesus makes very clear to all who enter into the spirit of his life.

Dr. Mellor asks me to reconsider some of the expressions of my letter. I spoke of our living fellowship with Jesus, "the Chief of faithful souls," and of the response of "devoted loyalty to his ideal of the kingdom of God, kindled by his prophetic appeal." That means, Dr. Mellor says, "that we must centre our ethical life in the kingdom which Christ preached," and there must be therefore "an ethical concentration in Jesus"; and because the morality revealed and lived by him is by implication absolute, Jesus is "Lord of the moral life for mankind." The first of these statements I accept, but cannot admit that the inference which follows is rightly drawn.

Our ethical life is to be centred in the kingdom which Christ preached, that is, in the kingdom of God, our Father. In the simplest terms, the kingdom of God is the rule of Goodness, on earth as in heaven. That is the true ideal, to the service of which we must be given with absolute devotion. It is the one aim which sets our whole life in the right direction, and this we recognise as the secret of the life of Jesus—trust in the Eternal goodness and the doing of our Father's will. For us, as for him, that must be the centre of our rest, and there also is the right concentration of the whole purpose of our life.

In my understanding of the moral life of man there is no absolute but God alone, the Eternal Righteousness, and his claim upon us in the simple obligation of duty, in response to the inward appeal of right. So man is lifted above the brute and brought into touch with the deeper things of the spirit, and begins to understand what it means to be a child of God. And what the gospel of Jesus brings to us, in its fulness of grace and truth, is not another than God, to be set as Lord over the conscience of man, but that fuller measure of insight, in the growing experience of our race, which makes it clear that righteousness is made perfect in love, and that God, the eternal goodness, the one source and sustainer of life, is indeed our Father. In him Jesus bids us trust absolutely; to him, and to him alone, we are to pray, who is the one eternal ever-present Spirit, the Home of souls, both the centre and the enfolding presence of perfect Love in the communion of our deeper life.

I find it truer to speak of Jesus as Master than as "Lord," because he is, in the order of our human life, the supreme Teacher, our great interpreter of the things of God, enlightener and, by the grace of God, inspirer of the best manhood in those who enter into the secret of his life. In him and in the fellowship of his disciples we realise most clearly the good purpose of God, the Love which calls us to life as his children, and for ourselves the true spirit of sonship, and the ideal of the kingdom of God, in the service of which our life must be lived, and in which it is to be perfected. I do not think we can rightly say that in Jesus we have "an absolute moral guidance," except in the sense of his call to an absolute loyalty to the right, and surrender to our Father's will. "New occasions teach new duties," and in the ever-widening experience of life each new generation must face its own problems and in the light of the ideal find the way of faithfulness. Is not this the conclusion also of Dr. Drummond, to whom Dr. Mellor refers me? It is what I find in the exposition of his Hibbert Lectures, "Via, Veritas, Vita" (see especially pp. 316-17). No final and absolute code of morals imposed by the authority of the Master is there set forth, but rather the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, as an effectual redeeming and quickening power in the world.

As friend and brother, prophet and martyr of the kingdom of God, Jesus is given to us, and it is the gift of God. We have living fellowship with him, because his life is an actual part of the experience of our race. He did a great work, shall we not say the greatest work of all, for our humanity, as a true man, and truly son of God. For us, as for his immediate friends and his own people, he kindled a great light of faith and hope and love, and for the understanding heart of love neither time nor death can separate. "God's breath, the living soul, spells not the name of death." So through the records of the New Testament and the inward witness of the Spirit, we have our share in those "deep spiritual experiences of the victory of faith and love, which came to his disciples out of the tragedy of the Cross." In fellowship with the Chief of faithful souls we are kindled to new vision and called to our true obedience, in the same spirit of loyalty and love and willing sacrifice, learning to give "the utmost for the Highest." This we find to be the universal truth of the deeper life, as it has been proved in these days of awful conflict by how many thousands of our brothers, in their absolute surrender and loyalty to the cause of right, and the sacrifice of love, as surely now, as of old, stronger than death.

I can only repeat that I find in this service of the kingdom of God and his righteousness, in Christ's spirit, the true way of life for us all, and so for our churches. In faithfulness to that ideal we shall, I believe, be making our best contribution towards the reconciliation of all Christian people, and bearing the testimony required of us to the power of a living faith in the world. Whether in that service we can "become great" I do not know. We are not to be anxious for the morrow. We are to answer to the call of God, and commit our way to him.—Yours, &c., V. D. DAVIS.

2 Milburn Road, Bournemouth West.

[The Rev. ALFRED HALL has also sent a letter on this point, which we hope to give in our next issue.—ED. INQUIRER.]

HOSPITALITY IN WHIT-WEEK.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—In response to inquiries respecting hospitality in Whit-week, may I say that while the Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association hope that offers may reach ministers and delegates from personal friends in London, they regret that they cannot themselves this year undertake the responsibility of making arrangements for private hospitality.

There will be no Luncheon, Teas, or Conversazione this year. Tickets will not be required for any of the meetings, except for reserved seats for the Essex Hall

Lecture. The President and the Committee extend a cordial welcome to all who can conveniently attend the Anniversary Meetings.—Yours, &c.,

W. COPELAND BOWIE, Secretary.

Essex Hall.

May 1, 1918.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

COMMANDER BERNARD H. ELLIS, D.S.O.

WE deeply regret to announce the death of Commander Ellis, who died in hospital in France on April 20, from wounds received in action on March 25, in his 33rd year. His elder brother Edward, Lieutenant in the same division, was killed a year ago. He was the younger and only surviving son of Henry Ellis of Potter's Bar and Margaret, daughter of Prof. Henry Morley. He was educated at University College School, after which he studied for a year in Germany, and was then articled to E. K. Blyth. When war broke out he was partner with J. L. Peters in a firm of solicitors. He had long been a keen member of the R.N.V.R., and he at once joined the Royal Naval Division. He was present at the siege of Antwerp and was mentioned in dispatches for his skill and coolness in the retreat, and received the D.S.M. In 1915 he went to Gallipoli and remained until the evacuation. In May, 1916, he went with the Anson Battalion to France, and was on active service until his death. He was then in command of the Hawke Battalion R.N.D. In 1916 he received the D.S.O. for service at the battle of the Ancre, where he was acting C.O. of the Anson Battalion after his Colonel had been killed. In February, 1915, he married Marjorie, elder daughter of Lieut.-Col. Blumfeld commanding the 9th Middlesex.

The rapid promotion of Commander Ellis to the command of a battalion, and the distinctions awarded him, show in what estimation he was held. He was a great soldier, fearless and just and kind. No C.O. was more trusted and beloved by his officers and men. They would have gladly died for him. He was calm and full of resource and encouragement in times of greatest peril. He was not only brave, but very tender and sympathetic, with a noble imagination, a deep appreciation for the beauty and joy of life, and a passionate, devoted love for those who were nearest to him. His death is an irreparable loss to his country and a sorrow beyond words for all who loved him. His memory will be a constant inspiration and cause for thankfulness to those who knew him.

MR. JOHN SALE, SENIOR.

By the death of Mr. John Sale on April 26, in his 86th year, Kettering Road Church, Northampton, has lost one of its oldest members. Mr. Sale came to Northampton from Silsoe in his 17th year. He joined the Wesleyan Church, but a change in his theological views a few years later led him to the Unitarians then worshipping in the old chapel in King Street. He served on the committee and maintained for over sixty years a close interest in all the affairs of the congregation. He was most regular at public worship, and was in his seat a week before his death. He retired from business thirty years ago. He was greatly respected in the town. He leaves a daughter, Miss Ada Sale, who has been for many years secretary, also president, of the Northampton and District Band of Hope Union, and four sons—Mr. John Sale, secretary of the Church, Mr. Fred Sale, secretary of the Sunday school, and Messrs. Henry and Arthur Sale. The funeral service was conducted in the Church on Tuesday, April 30, by the Rev. W. C. Hall.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

169TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,425	2	7
W. M. H. (6th)	5	0	0
Miss Emmeline Rawson (16th) ..	2	2	0
Mr. Harold Baily (8th) ..	2	2	0
Mr. F. Maddison (36th) ..	0	10	0
Miss Ada Fricker, Trinidad (19th)	1	0	0
Miss L. Jones (5th)	5	0	0
Miss F. Jones (5th)	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hall (monthly)	2	0	0
Miss M. B. Lamb (14th)	2	0	0
L. O. M. (25th)	1	0	0
	£20,450	16	7

Parcels have been received from:—Mrs. Edward L. Cox; Miss M. B. Lamb; Miss Margaret L. Green; Girls of the Adult Class, Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, per Miss Abbott; Unity Church, Islington, per Mrs. Waters; Mrs. Manning Prentice; Monton Church Women's Congregational Union, per Miss E. Leigh; The Misses New; The Misses L. and F. Jones; Staley-bridge Branch of the Women's League, per Miss Storrs; Miss N. Bord; Mrs. Prewett; Clapham Ladies War Relief Committee; Great Meeting, Leicester, per Mrs. E. Lewis Lilley.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

INTERDENOMINATIONAL WORK AT CAMP DEVENS, MASS.

MRS. S. S. GILSON has given in The Christian Register an account of the Federation House erected by the co-operation of six denominations (Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and Unitarians) for the benefit of the soldiers in training at Camp Devens. The Unitarians, whose representatives at the week of dedication services, beginning December 30, were the Revs. E. S. Forbes and Dr. Crothers, have contributed nearly £2000 towards the cost. Coal shortage, and spiritual common sense, have led to this notable union of forces. The three-story building includes a hall seating over 500, and a well devised suite of rooms for the comfort, refreshment, and recreation of the men, and the housing of the staff. Wives of the privates, and other women engaged in the many new business ventures around the Camp are also cared for. The Federation House, we are further told, is providing an office and headquarters for the public safety committee, the group of secret service men, who by quietly and efficiently working for the soldiers' physical and social welfare have done great things to make Camp Devens and the twelve surrounding towns a model camp and zone for our fighting men. On the front of the Federation House is a shield bearing these words: "The gift of the Churches to the soldiers." In that statement lies the explanation of this work of personal ministry. We may quote from a number of illustrations in detail one paragraph which, we think, shows enterprise beyond anything done by our Y.M.C.A. or other huts:—

"A young soldier arrives, eyes round and somewhat scared, and says: 'I'm a baker by trade. I thought I was going home to-morrow to get married, but I can't get leave; my girl is coming out here to-morrow, and I don't know how to fix it.' We take on the traditional duties of the best man, engage the minister, plan a wedding treat, find lodgings for the bride, and tactfully take his mother-in-law off his hands."

UNION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE.

THE Annual Meeting was held at Birmingham (Church of the Messiah) on Wednesday, April 24. This year, in accordance with our constitution, we should have met in connection with the Triennial Meetings of the National Conference, but these being for the moment suspended, we acted for once unconstitutionally and were duly exonerated. Of our Executive Committee eleven out of a possible thirteen were present: Birmingham (2), Leicester (2), Liverpool (2), London (2), Evesham (1), Manchester (1), Oxford (1). The attendance of members at the six meetings held during the year has also been most encouraging, an average of nine out of a possible twelve. Thirty members and friends (mostly members) attended the Business Meeting, this having been preceded by an Executive Meeting. The Rev. W. G. Tarrant (President) was in the chair. The Twelfth Annual Report was read by the Secretary, and this, together with the Hon. Treasurer's financial statement, was adopted.

The Report recorded considerable activity throughout the year and some significant developments. Of these the formation of a number of local Inter-denominational Social Service Unions is the most noteworthy. Evesham led the way some eighteen months ago, and was followed by Oxford, Newark, Worcester, and Bolton. Steps in the same direction are being taken at Gainsborough, Glossop, Hyde, Leigh, Monmouth, Redditch, and Southport, on the initiative, or with the help, of our own ministers, save at Monmouth and Redditch. The Secretary assisted in forming the Evesham, Newark, and Worcester Unions. He is Hon. Secretary of the Evesham Union, while our ministers, the Rev. J. W. Cock and the Rev. J. C. Flower, are Hon. Secretary and member of the Executive respectively of the Newark and Bolton Unions. The Secretary of our Union addressed the inaugural meeting of the Worcester Union on the 22nd ult., when Bishop Mylne presided, all the clergy and ministers of Worcester, with a few exceptions being present, and all denominations being represented. A leaflet in regard to the formation of such Unions was issued by our Union during the year and has greatly aided in this direction. It should be noted that the recently formed Bolton Christian Council has a definite article in its constitution for religious, as well as moral and social, co-operation, but, in this case, the Roman Catholics are not included.

It was further reported that important developments are probable on the Inter-denominational Conference of Social Service Unions, of which the Bishop of Oxford is Chairman. This consists of three delegates from each denominational Union, our three delegates being Miss C. Gittins, the Rev. F. H. Jones, and the Secretary. At the last meeting of the Conference on March 16 last it was resolved to make an effort to raise the sum of £500 a year for three years in order to secure the services of Miss Lucy Gardner as Secretary and to equip and maintain an office. Our Secretary is on the Finance Committee appointed for this purpose. A circular letter of appeal has just been issued. It may be stated that before the circular was issued the sum of £200 a year for three years had already been promised. There is strong hope and confidence that even at an hour like the present the amount needed will be forthcoming. A strongly organised and energetic Conference will do much to stimulate the activities of the constituent Unions. In July last the Conference published 'A Scheme of Christian Social Reconstruction,' with a preface by the Bishop of Oxford, laying down certain fundamental principles, exposing grave social evils and advocating specific remedies. The remarkable feature of the "Scheme" was the fact that it was drawn up and approved by members of all the leading Christian denominations. A handbook, based on the Scheme, is now being compiled, and will supply statistical and other data for the use of Study Circles, &c. Twenty thousand copies of the Scheme have already been circulated. Our Secretary is on the Propagandist Committee of the Conference. The Union has circulated during the year some 1,500 copies of its 'Course on Social Questions.' This has been largely used in our churches throughout the year in classes and study circles and in addresses and series of addresses by ministers.

The Executive is endeavouring wherever possible to work through the various District Associations. The President has addressed during the year the Northumberland and Durham and the Southern Unitarian Associations. Our last two Annual Meetings have been held under the auspices of the Liverpool District Missionary Association and the Midland Christian Union respectively. The Western Union and the Southern Unitarian Association have been active on our behalf. The work of three Social Problem Societies is singled out for special mention. The Liverpool Social Problem Circle (Hope Street Church) has very large audiences and commands important speakers. Bank Street Chapel, Bolton, held from January to March a series of interesting conferences on 'The Practice of Religion.' The Evesham Social Problem Circle is interdenominational, meets in the Town Hall, and has had an average attendance of fifty to sixty.

The Rev. W. G. Tarrant felt compelled, owing to other added claims upon him, to relinquish the Presidency, which he had held for a year. His resignation was received with great regret. The Rev. Dr. S. H. Mellone was unanimously elected President in his stead. Mr. Tarrant was appointed one of the Vice-Presidents. The Rev. F. H. Jones was unanimously re-elected Hon. Treasurer. The following were appointed an Executive Committee, together with the officers: Miss Lucy Brooks (Wilmslow), the Rev. Lawrence Clare (Birmingham), Miss Clephan (Leicester), the Rev. J. C. Flower, M.A. (Bolton), Miss Catherine Gittins (Leicester), Miss Harriet M. Johnson (Liverpool), the Rev. Dr. S. A. Mellor (Liverpool), the Rev. Dr. Rattray (Leicester), Mr. E. A. Smith, B.Sc. (Oxford).

A Religious Service was held in the evening, conducted by the Rev. Lawrence Clare, when addresses were delivered by the Rev. W. Whitaker and the Rev. W. G. Tarrant. Reference to these admirable addresses will be made in the Union's next Quarterly. The Union is in need of further financial assistance. Particulars in regard to it can be obtained on application to the Secretary, the Rev. H. H. Johnson, The Orchards, Croft Road, Evesham. The Hon. Treasurer is the Rev. F. H. Jones, 51 Howitt Road, Hampstead, N.W.3.

NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS.

[A short Notice in this column does not preclude a review in a later issue.]

Burdett (Leonard). REWARD, AND OTHER POEMS OF WAR. Chorley, The Universal Publishing Co. 27 pp., 8d.

A little tribute to his comrades by one who has been for two years on active service in Flanders. We wish that Mr. Burdett had not chosen the medium of verse, but we honour the feelings which prompted him to write something that might console the lonely hearts at home.

Carus (Paul). THE GOSPEL OF BUDDHA; twenty-second edition; illustrated by O. Kropetzky; with table of reference, glossary, &c. London, The Open Court Co. 311 pp., 4s. n.

The fact that this well-known book has gone through so many editions is sufficient proof of its attractiveness for students of religion. It has been carefully revised, and a valuable table of reference has been added indicating the main sources of the various chapters and pointing out the extremely interesting parallelisms with Western thought, and the Christian gospels, which will commend themselves to those who realise that all religion is one. The book is pleasant to handle and decoratively illustrated.

Gould (F. J.). HOW MUCH DO YOU CARE FOR YOUR CHILDREN? London, Watts & Co. 16 pp., 3d.

An appeal to working men and women on the vital subject of education.

Great Britain, Palestine, and the Jews: a survey of Christian opinion: THE ZIONIST ORGANISATION. 66 pp., 1d.

A collection of comments on the Government's now famous declaration of sympathy with Jewish Zionist aspirations.

Ireland, France, and Prussia: a selection from the speeches and writings of John Mitchell. London, T. Fisher Unwin. 48 pp., 8d. n.

These extracts from the writings of an Irishman who was an enthusiastic lover of France, and who hailed her as the foremost champion of human right as against a pretended "Divine right," are as appropriate now as when they were first penned. The references to Prussia at the time of the Franco-Prussian war are very striking and singularly prophetic.

Klingzett (C. T.). CHEMISTRY FOR BEGINNERS AND SCHOOLBOYS. London, Ballière, Tindall & Cox, 1918. 2nd edn. 150 pp., 2s. 6d.

In addition to admirably clear sections dealing with the elements, forces, and principal compounds, inorganic and organic, there is a 'Dictionary and Index' occupying nearly a third of the book, and adding greatly to its value. The practical aspect of modern teaching is well shown in this small but highly meritorious manual, which has achieved a re-issue very quickly.

Lewin (Evans). GERMAN RULE IN AFRICA. London, T. Fisher Unwin. 48 pp., 3d. n.

This is a severe indictment of German rule, or oppression, in the German colonies, chapter and verse being so carefully given for every statement made that we must believe what would otherwise seem incredible. We should not recommend it to those whose hearts are heavily weighed down with horrors, but it is necessary that all whose business it is to make a study of administrative proceedings and native rights should carefully weigh the facts here given.

Paterson (William Romaine). THE CREDENTIALS OF FAITH. London, Watts & Co. 30 pp., 4d. n.

A "conversation on religion" between a clergyman and a sceptic which is as artificial and unconvincing as such made-up "conversations" usually are.

Peake (Arthur S.), M.A., D.D. PRISONERS OF HOPE: the problem of the Conscientious Objector. London, George Allen & Unwin. 127 pp. appendix, 1s. 6d. n.

A reprint, with some revision, of a series of articles which appeared in The Primitive Methodist Leader last year. Dr. Peake does not himself share the views of the conscientious objector, but he is not afraid to express his keen sympathy with them, and his strong desire that his own church "should be loyal to its ancient convictions, in spite of all temptation to surrender them for the duration of the war." Those who, while opposed to the extreme pacifist point of view are equally opposed to any form of religious persecution, no less than the actual Tolstoyan, will be grateful to the author of this book for the concise and lucid way in which he has dealt with a very difficult subject.

Psalms and Canticles for Public Worship; compiled by the Rev. V. D. Davis. London, The Lindsey Press. 104 pp., 1s. n.

In this little book we have over a hundred psalms and canticles, selected from both ancient and modern sources by the Rev. V. D. Davis, who has done his work in the true spirit of devotion and catholicity.

Stead (Robert J. C.). WHY DON'T THEY CHEER? and other Canadian poems. London, T. Fisher Unwin. 167 pp., 3s. 6d. n.

Mr. Stead has written some good, wholesome, virile verse, in which the feeling uppermost in the minds of the Overseas settler who is most conscious of his kinship with the Motherland finds rhythmic expression. Perhaps the following words from the Introduction, by Dr. Allison, Professor of English at Wesley College, Winnipeg, will indicate with sufficient clearness the scope—and the limitations—of these poems from Calgary: "He has been inspired not so much by Phœbus Apollo and the Muses nine as by Britannia, who in these days of innumerable war-poems ought to be designated a tenth Muse." Patriotism, we would urge, has nothing to fear from the inspiration of Phœbus Apollo, but Britannia will create no poets if the gods are slighted.

MESSRS. PHILIP & SON have issued a useful little book of reference maps, with the title 'The World's Battle Fronts at a Glance' (44 pp., price 1s. 3d.).

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Astley.—The annual School sermons were preached to large congregations last Sunday by the Rev. J. Horace Short of St. Helens. The choir, assisted by members of the Chownett Choir, rendered special anthems, Miss Evelyn Holt presiding at the organ. The collections and donations amounted to over £32, an increase on previous years.

Liverpool District Sunday School Society.—The Annual United Service will be held at Hope Street Church on Whit-Sunday, May 19, when the Rev. C. M. Wright, will give the address.

London: Islington.—Apropos of the loosening of the ties between church and people, the Rev. A. A. Charlesworth concluded his morning address at Unity Church last Sunday with the words: "God is not in danger; our Cause may be; if so, it is because it is not God's. We still hesitate between selfishness and true service."—In the evening the Rev. J. Vint Laughland presided over the first monthly Musical Service of the season. In addition to the instrumental selections given by the Alva Quartette, Mr. Wood and his choir had prepared a feast of song. The service will be remembered with gratitude by many for Miss Ethel Kelly's beautiful rendering of the solo in Mendelssohn's 'Hear my Prayer,' which was surely conceived by the composer in a mood of prophetic inspiration, so aptly does it reflect the tragedy of to-day and the bitter cry of our hearts for peace. Sir John Goss's 'Wilderness' and the solo, 'If with all your hearts' from 'Elijah,' were also given, the soloists being Miss Wynifred Meurice, Mr. Sidney Foster and Mr. F. Leyden Sargent. A crowded congregation joined heartily in the singing of the hymns and the National Anthem at the close of the service.

London: Rosslyn Hill Chapel.—The death is announced in the Calendar of 2nd Lieutenant John Hamer, aged 20, who was killed in action in France on March 22, also of 2nd Lieutenant Lawrence Bertrand Johnson, aged 20, who has died of wounds received in action in France on Mar. 15. Both were most regular attendants at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, whose lives were full of high promise. John Hamer was one of the most brilliant scholars ever trained at University College School, and had taken every prize and distinction which it was possible to take. He had won an open Scholarship at Christ's College, Cambridge. He hated war and everything connected with it, but he accepted the duty of defending his country with firm resolve. Twice recently he was offered a safer post at the rear, where his intellectual powers would have had more scope, but he declined. He was a child to the last in his simplicity and purity of heart and his tender clinging affection for his home. Laurence Johnson, too, was a brilliant scholar of the City of London School, where his character and quiet strength, even more than his intellectual ability, had exerted a far-reaching influence. He had won a scholarship at Queen's College, Oxford. He found in the Army new opportunities for influence and leadership and gained the deep respect and confidence of all with whom he had to do. He was brave and modest and pure and true. The country has lost much in the death of these two brave boys.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Several members of the Church of the Divine Unity who are serving in France have been wounded during the recent terrible fighting, amongst them a former organist, Second Lieut. F. T. Walker, son-in-law of Sir Joseph Ellis; and Capt. C. Norton Levin, who was recently awarded the Military Cross, also Second Lieut. Lionel Robinson, are reported missing.—The church has sustained a loss in the death of Mr. T. W. Robinson, a member of the committee, at the age of 62. His genial presence, kind disposition and love of good literature will always be remembered.

Newport, I.W.—The Rev. James Ruddle closed his nine years' pastorate here, and his active ministry of thirty-seven years, on Sunday last. In the morning, speaking on 'The Life that Now Is,' he said he had always tried to make his sermons apply to the real world of daily experience; in this he believed he was true to the example of Jesus in his ministry long ago. The real world, as Jesus himself found, was one in which great evils were to be met, and failure seems often to await those who strive for the right. The Cross bore witness to that fact; and yet it also testified to the victory that finally awaited the cause of good. In the evening Mr. Ruddle's subject was 'The Life that is to Come,' concerning which he said the New Testament was very reticent, and all who spoke about it might wisely copy that example. Many of the best things in the present world had long remained "unseen," some were only now being dimly perceived—the worth of common blessings, for example, and the rightful place of woman; how much more reasonable, therefore, that the conditions of a future life, however blessed and certain, should be unknown. Led by suggestion, rather than compelled, mankind had steadily grown in knowledge and conscience; and even the present war must prove a powerful means of educating the human soul. "The Kingdom of God is yet within us; in time it shall become more manifest in the world without, and we shall confess the everlasting goodness and patience of God." With that message he would close his ministry, and gratefully and humbly commit himself and them to the mercy of God.—We understand that Mr. Ruddle, after a short holiday, during which the church will reorganise its work, hopes to resume personal touch with the congregation.

Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Christian Association.—On Sunday last, April 28, the Rev. W. T. Bushrod, of Chorley, paid a visit to the Tyneside in connection with the Missionary Conference, preaching in the morning at the Church of the Divine Unity, Newcastle. In the afternoon he visited the Sunday school at Unity Church, South Shields, preaching there also in the evening. It is hoped that it will be possible to arrange for occasional ministerial assistance at the various churches in the district which are at present without settled ministers. The Rev. Alfred Hall preached at Gateshead on the Sunday morning.

Oxford: Manchester College.—The following will be the preachers at Manchester College during Easter and Trinity terms: May 5, Dr. G. Dawes Hicks; May 12, The Principal (Dr. Jacks); May 19, The Principal; May 26, Dr. Carpenter; June 2, The Principal; June 9, Dr. Carpenter, and June 16, The Principal. The service is held at 11.30 A.M.

Peckham.—A Sale of Work (in aid of the funds of Avondale Road Unitarian Church) will be held in the Infants' Hall, L.C.C. School, Bellen-den Road, on Saturday, May 11, and will be opened by Mrs. Athelstan Tayler at 3.30 P.M.

Pendleton.—The Anniversary Services were held on Sunday, April 28, the minister, the Rev. G. Randall Jones, being the preacher. The choir, assisted by Miss Eva Schofield as soloist, rendered special anthems. The collection realised £18 6s. 9d.

Sheffield.—The funeral of Mr. Walter Swift Jessop, who died on Monday, April 22, took place at Burngreave Cemetery, on April 25. The service at Upper Chapel was attended by a large congregation, and included many musical friends, who attended to pay a last personal tribute to one who was held in high esteem. The officiating ministers were the Rev. C. J. Street and the Rev. J. W. Lee. Mr. Jessop was, for nearly a quarter of a century, associated with the secretarial department of Messrs. Vickers, Ltd., and a large and representative body of his late colleagues attended. He had been deputy-organist at Upper Chapel. Messrs. H. Hunt, J. R. Wigfull, J. K. Lister, F. Peters and J. Figorski represented Upper Chapel trustees and committee, and Messrs. F. Eberlin and J. B. Taylor the choir committee. Mr. J. C. V. Stacey presided at the organ. The death of Mr. Jessop is a sad loss to the congregation of Upper Chapel, "who have greatly appreciated his sympathetic rendering of devotional music" (says The Record), "and his skilful handling of the organ, which to him was a delight."—It is announced in The Record that Lieut. J. Oliver Vessey, M.C. (1st Leicesters) is reported as wounded and missing, and 2nd Lieut. Alex. Williamson (14th North Fusiliers) as missing, whilst several others have been wounded or gassed. Pte. P. T. Brookes (Tanks Corps) has been killed in action.

Taunton.—The Rev. G. S. Woods has been adopted as Labour candidate for the new Division of Taunton.

Todmorden.—The Rev. C. Biggins, assistant minister at the Unitarian Church, has written to the secretary of the Church committee asking for leave of absence, which he strongly desires in order that he may enlist in the R.A.M.C. "Valuable and vital as the work of the Christian ministry is in these awful times," he says, "the days are so critical, and the call for men so urgent, that I feel constrained to surrender my exemption, and offer my services on behalf of our sick and wounded brave men."—There are now 164 members on the roll of the Women's League. Six lectures have been given during the year, at which the usual attendance has been about fifty. Donations have been sent to the Belgian Hospital Fund, the Red Cross, Prisoners of War Fund, John Pounds Home, and other institutions, and an Apron Sale on March 30 realised £34 11s. for the school funds.

Torquay.—The Spring Meeting of the Devon Ministers Conference was held on Monday, April 15, at Torquay, when, by the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lupton, the members partook of lunch at Courtlands, Chelston. The Rev. Joseph Worthington presided at the afternoon meeting in Unity Church, and after the transaction of business, the Rev. Donald B. Fraser was welcomed on his appointment to George's Meeting, Exeter. The Military Service Act as it applied to ministers of religion was then discussed and the following resolution passed: "That this meeting of the D.M.C. desires to express its willingness to assist the country by every means in its power; it feels that the maintenance of the religious ministrations of the country is essential and would suggest, therefore, that ministers of religion might be permitted to undertake service in their own districts to enable them to keep in touch with the work on which they are at present engaged." At tea a cordial welcome was given to the members of the Conference by Mrs. Woodhouse, on behalf of the congregation. It was much regretted that several of the members of the Conference were not able to be present in consequence of railway restrictions.

Wellington, N.Z.—A copy of the first number of The New Zealand Unitarian, published in January, is just to hand. It bears on the cover a portrait group of the New Zealand Unitarian Conference which was held at Auckland in November, and is, indeed, to be regarded mainly as a souvenir of the Conference "to be used for missionary purposes." The editor (the Rev. G. E. Hale) announces that if sufficient financial encouragement is forthcoming the magazine will be continued as a quarterly. It is to be controlled on democratic lines, and suggestions and criticisms will be welcomed. Naturally some definition of Unitarianism is given in this promising first number, which also contains the Conference sermon on 'The Universal Faith,' information about Unitarian literature, and a letter to the "Young People."

* THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week

* Secretaries of churches which publish Calendars are requested to send the Calendars regularly, and as soon as possible after publication, to the Editor.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.
(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE,	L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I.	H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL.	H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

PEARL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000

Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

BIRTHS.

COOK.—April 29, at 45 Parkfield Road, Liverpool, to Lieut. Frank L. Cook, R.N.V.R., and Mrs. Cook, a son.

WINSER.—At 7, Arboretum Street, Nottingham, on April 24 to Capt. Eric and Mrs. Winsor, a son.

DEATHS.

ELLIS.—On April 21, in hospital abroad, of wounds received in action on March 25, Commander Bernard Henry Ellis, D.S.O., Royal Naval Division, beloved husband of Marjorie Ellis, and younger son of Henry Ellis, Esq., Potters Bar.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, May 5.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11—: 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Roslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER; 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. WM. SEE, B.A.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 3.15 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. J. P. MAC-CARTHY, of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A. (Sunday School Anniversary).

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15—: 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. F. G. FINCHAM; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

Woolwich, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11, Mr. JOSEPH P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. H. S. SOLLY.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Room, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., D.Litt.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. J. HINKINS.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DONALD B. FRASER.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. GWILYM EVANS.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. RATTRAY.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. J. M. HEANEY; 6.30, Rev. J. E. JENKINS.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. M. McLACHLAN, M.A., B.D.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. R. SCOTT.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church High Street, 11 and 6.30.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Professor G. DAWES HICKS, Litt.D.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. SYDNEY SPENCER, B.A.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. A. FERGUSON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNEPEG, CANADA.

All Souls' Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

May

- 5. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
- 12. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.
- 19. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.
- 26. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL ON MODERN LINES
WITH PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

The aim of the Religious Teaching is to instil a simple Christian Faith and personal religion. There is full Morning Service in the School on Sunday. In the evening boys may, if their parents desire it, attend a place of worship in Nantwich.

Full Prospectus, apply to the Head Master :
H. LANG JONES, M.A. (Oxon.).

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress : MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation. Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION,

22 Northumberland Avenue, London.

Founded by the late Mr. G. R. Jesse in 1875.

The Society offers to send a LECTURER free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c.

SAMUEL JONES' FUND.

The Managers meet annually in October for the purpose of making grants.

APPLICATIONS must, however, be in hand NOT LATER THAN MONDAY, JUNE 3rd, and must be on a form to be obtained from the Secretary, CHAS. E. MARSHALL, 38 Barton Arcade, Manchester.

NATIONAL UNITARIAN LAY PREACHERS' UNION.

THE SIXTH ANNUAL MEETING

WILL BE HELD AT

ESSEX HALL,

ON MONDAY, MAY 20TH, 1918.

- 6 p.m. Devotional Service conducted by Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A. Sermon: Mr. J. W. PETERKEN.

- 7 p.m. ANNUAL MEETING.
General Secretary's Report.
Treasurer's Statement.
Local Secretaries' Reports.
Election of Officers.]

M. FRANCIS, Hon. Sec.

British & Foreign Unitarian Association.

WHIT-WEEK MEETINGS.

Tuesday Evening, 21 May, 7.30 p.m.

RELIGIOUS SERVICE

ROSSLYN HILL CHAPEL, HAMPSTEAD.
Preacher: Rev. ARTHUR W. FOX, M.A.

Wednesday Morning, 22 May, 10.30 a.m.

ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING.

ESSEX HALL. Report; Election of Officers and Committee; Resolutions and other business.
The President, Dr. CARPENTER, in the Chair.

Wednesday Evening, 22 May, 7 p.m.

PUBLIC MEETING, ESSEX HALL.

Addresses on
'The Power of Religion in Upbuilding the Life of the Nation.'

Speakers: Rev. Dr. CARPENTER, R. M. MONTGOMERY, Esq., K.C., Rev. BERNARD J. SNELL, M.A., B.Sc., and Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Thursday Evening, 23 May, 7.30 p.m.

ESSEX HALL LECTURE.

CLAUDE G. MONTEFIORE, Esq., M.A.
'The Place of Judaism among the Religions of the World.'

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.

The EIGHTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING
will be held at the

RHYL STREET MISSION, KENTISH TOWN, N.W.,

On TUESDAY, MAY 7, at 5.0. P.M.

Mr. Charles Martineau will preside.

Mrs. SYDNEY MARTINEAU, Mrs. EVELEGH, the Revs. H. GOW, A. GOLLAND, and W. H. ROSE, will also speak.

A Presentation will be made to the Rev. and Mrs. F. SUMMERS.

Tea at 4.30. The Hampstead and Pimlico Omnibus (24), and the Hampstead and Moorgate Trams pass Rhyll Street. The nearest station is Chalk Farm, on the Hampstead Tube.

FRANK K. FREESTON, Hon. Sec.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

ANNUAL MEETING,

ESSEX HALL,

THURSDAY, MAY 16, 1918.

The Report, Balance Sheet, and the Report of the District Minister will be submitted.

The President, C. HERBERT-SMITH, Esq., LL.D., will take the Chair at 7 P.M.

Subscribers and friends are invited.

Tea at 6.30.

ALAN FORBES, Acting Secretary.

OLD CHAPEL, DUKINFIELD.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY, SUNDAY, 5th MAY, 1918.

PREACHERS:

Morning, 10.45. Evening, 6.30.
REV. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A., of Manchester.
Afternoon, 2.45.
REV. JOHN ELLIS, of Stalybridge.
Special Singing by the Children and Choir.
Collections for School Funds.

MANSFORD STREET, FENAL GREEN.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY SERVICES

Will be held on SUNDAY, MAY 5.

The services at 3.15 and 6.30 will be conducted by the Rev. J. P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A.

ALL PROFITS on SALES will be handed over by the Publishers to The Friend's War Victims' Relief Committee.

The Track of the Storm:

Tales of the Marne, the Meuse, and the Aube.

BY

MARGARET B. CROOK.

1s. 6d. net.

"A capital little book."—Manchester Guardian
"The writer has a keen sense of humour."—The Friend.

"The book is, indeed, full of human interest, and throws into relief certain aspects of the war which it is well to have sympathetically focussed in a woman's way, lest our hearts, quite against our will, should grow a little hard with the prolongation of the struggle."—The Inquirer.

HEADLEY BROS., LTD., Publishers,
72 Oxford Street, London :: W.1.

LAWRENCE HOUSE.

Mrs. SYDNEY MARTINEAU would be glad to hear from any lady who would be willing to TAKE CHARGE OF THE HOSTEL during the whole or part of June whilst the Matron is on her holidays. Write to Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

GREAT HUCKLOW HOLIDAY AND CONVALESCENT HOMES. — MAIDS WANTED for coming season. Apply to Rev. CHARLES PEACH, Great Hucklow, Buxton.

Board and Residence, &c.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.— Board-residence. Meat ration supplemented by vegetarian dishes and country produce. Enquiries, which must be accompanied by stamped envelope, from Miss SMITH.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—REV. CHARLES PEACH, GREAT HUCKLOW, BUXTON.

Miscellaneous.

BLEACHED PLAIN COTTON SHEETS, ready hemmed, good reliable quality 70 x 100 inches, two pairs 29s. 9d.; 2 x 3 yards' two pairs 31s. 9d. Bargain List free.—HUTTON'S 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.— Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

THAT OLD SET OF TEETH

You do not wear may now be worth up to £15 for the precious metals they contain. Send them to us. We will give you the highest possible value. Also buyers of gold and surplus jewellery. Offers made by return for goods sent by post. If offer not accepted, goods returned post free. Platinum Scrap £16 per ounce.

SATISFACTION ASSURED.

I. RAYBURN & CO.,
105 Market Street, Manchester.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenæum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.— Saturday, May 4, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3958.
NEW SERIES, No. 1061.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 11, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	145	BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	147	MANSFORD STREET CHURCH AND MISSION	148
THE PURCHASE POLICY	146	THE ROYAL ACADEMY	147	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	149
CORRESPONDENCE:—		LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY .	147	AN INTERESTING TEN DAYS	150
A Hard Case	146	LIVERPOOL DOMESTIC MISSION	148	PROGRAMME OF WHIT-WEEK MEETINGS .	150
The Whitsuntide Meetings	147

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

JUST because we heartily believe that our nation and the world are passing through a baptism of regeneration the vast significance of which is quite beyond our power to estimate, we can but grieve that, from day to day almost, new sources of discouragement seem to confront the observer of public life. With regard to many of these, indeed, the wiser course is to be mostly silent, and go on with our special duty. But when a journal so much in the habit of supporting the present Government as The Times speaks of "the growing public distrust of all official statements" the ordinary citizen may be excused if he adds his voice to those who call for reformation in this matter. We remember that when Mr. Austen Chamberlain was recently recalled to office it was said in his praise that he was "an honest man." Really, has it come to this, then, among British statesmen, that to be "honest" is an exceptional virtue? The suppression of truth and suggestion of untruth that goes on in Parliament and the press at present is most abominable; and if victory has anything to do with character it is high time some very plain speaking were heard, for, while verbal juggleries are going on, men are dying, homes are shattered, and the world's hideous sores are spreading. Can we not possibly get back into the higher moods and standards that once prevailed among us?

* * *

Not all German ministers are of the "Hurrah and Hallelujah" type, though we naturally hear most of the latter. Some months ago Dr. Wendte, in The Boston Herald, drew attention to a public declaration, addressed by five prominent Protestant clergymen of Berlin to Christians in all countries, against war as a method of settling international differences. We hear it has since received hundreds of signatures of men in all parts of Germany. More recently a group of ministers in Hanover have issued a similar declaration which has been published in the local press. It embodies six points: (1) love and fidelity to the "endangered Fatherland"; (2) the supremacy of the Kingdom of God, which embraces all countries; (3) self-mastery, as against the passions and "chauvinism" which would turn the messengers of peace into "war theologians"; (4) a justifiable "patriotic wrath" does not obscure the fact "that at the bottom of this war there also lies a general deficiency of the sense of justice, an excess of the love of mammon and of the bliss of Kultur, in short, of sin"; (5) undaunted service "on behalf of righteousness, love and spiritual values"; (6) recognition of similar Christian ethical aims in neutral and enemy countries. Seventeen Hanover ministers signed this document.

* * *

THE officers of the Ministerial Fellowship have issued a letter to the "Ministers of the Unitarian and Free Christian Churches" in regard to military or other national service. Referring to those who cannot leave home, "extra tasks" are suggested; in order to take them up, the writers say, "some of our customary duties may have to be relinquished or relegated to others, and in this matter we can surely rely on the goodwill of our congregations. If pastoral visitation be diminished, if one service in place of two services be held on Sunday, if the minister can no longer attend the usual number of week-night meetings, if some of his discourses are recognised as not quite fresh, surely the laity will understand the situation, and will readily acquiesce in the changes necessitated by national stress." Attention is directed to the Committee at Essex Hall which has been formed for the purpose of advising and assisting ministers and congregations in these matters, and to our "Note" of April 20, indicating some of the kinds of work open to the former. To the list there given we may add the duties of Special Constable; though regulations vary, we believe, in different localities, and may present difficulties here and there.

DR. SAMUEL A. ELIOT, the President of the American Unitarian Association, writes in The Christian Register concerning the new soldiers and the sort of religious appeal made to them in the camps. He says: "It is not hard to understand why the officers as a rule look with such distrust and suspicion upon the camp pastors, good, bad, and indifferent. They have discovered by experience the harm done in a time like this by the self-centred religious teaching that is characteristic of so much of Evangelical Protestantism. Prayers for personal safety; hymns that shout that 'Jesus loves me,' or 'There will be glory, glory for me'; sermons that commercialise religion by making it a mean bargain for one's own salvation, are all anti-social and subversive of the spirit of comradeship which means so much in an army.... An army is strong only when men stop thinking about themselves and agree to think and work and live for the common cause.... The young men are so readily moved at this time by real religious impulses, by the spirit of sacrifice, by the loyalties of fellowship, that the betrayal of their better natures by false guides is all the more deplorable." Dr. Eliot promises to write again concerning his own mistakes in dealing with the soldiers, and this should be an interesting addendum.

* * *

THE presentation to the Rev. F. Summers which was reported at the Annual Meeting of the London Domestic Mission this week emphatically testifies alike to the widespread esteem in which the recipient is held, and to the high value set upon this class of work. If there lurks here and there the notion that less opportunity is presented by the ministry to the poor, or that the demand for real ability is less, than in other religious spheres, it should be sent to limbo promptly. Such an idea is about as absurd as that which has too often prevailed in educational work. Formerly any poor failure was good enough to "teach a class," if not to "keep a school"; now we know better. To help home life just where home conditions are most lacking, to hearten the out-of-work and fortify the discouraged, to care for street children and weary old people, and to keep faith and hope alive in face of slums and sweating, is a work worth a wilderness of brilliant discourses and graceful courtesies. While taking occasion to honour the veteran, and to express a tender sympathy with him in his illness, we should like his younger brethren in the work to believe themselves and it to be honoured in this interesting event.

* * *

It is well-known that the Y.M.C.A., here and in America, was founded on "Evangelical" lines, but in practice—especially in these war years—the limitation implied has been largely forgotten. Prof. F. G. Peabody, writing to The New York Times recently, had occasion to refer to the case of the rejection of a Unitarian lady by the Y.W.C.A., which in the States, as here, is a parallel institution. He says the Y.M.C.A. huts "are, for the most part, administered with admirable liberality, marred only by the occasional zeal of indiscreet evangelists. Unitarian ministers and laymen have been accepted as secretaries for foreign service, though with the qualifying title of "associates." The limiting clause is carried like an anchor hanging on the ship's bow, not conspicuous to passengers, and not to be used when under full sail, but convenient to have on a lee shore of conservative criticism. The Y.W.C.A., on the other hand, has been inclined to take seriously what the Y.M.C.A. has in a large degree ignored"; but, as he points out, "non-evangelical money" has not only been accepted but even solicited. Hoping that the chastening experiences of war may promote a more catholic definition of Christian service, Prof. Peabody says: "It would be one of the most reassuring signs of a Christianity fit for the future if the creed of these Associations could be conformed to their practice, and their administration freed from the risk either of an obscurantist liberality or of a disingenuous orthodoxy." May we venture to urge a like advance on our side of the ocean?

* * *

AMONG the war correspondents honoured last week by the decoration of the Legion of Honour was Mr. G. H. Perris, who some twenty years ago had a share in editing our journal. He is the eldest son of the Rev. H. Woods Perris, who after his lengthened ministry at Warrington, Norwich, Hull, and Forest Gate, is now, in his 80th year, living in retirement in South London. Another son is Mr. H. S. Perris, formerly minister at Liverpool, Mansfield, and Little Portland Street, London, successively, but now engaged in other work. Our old-time collaborator, whom we congratulate on a well-merited distinction, has been Paris correspondent of The Daily Chronicle since the outbreak of war. He has travelled in many lands, has taken considerable part in international conferences, and was formerly Foreign Editor of The Tribunal, and, we believe, of The Daily News. Several volumes from his pen attest his vigorous interest in democracy and world-peace. We suppose his wildest dreams never pointed to the military experiences which he now relates so vividly.

THE PURCHASE POLICY.

ALL good citizens, whether active supporters of temperance reform or not, are deeply interested in the proposal to nationalise the trade in alcoholic drink. The various questions involved are of great importance. Can a trade of this kind be organised and conducted as a State institution? If it can, ought the State to engage in it? If, theoretically, there appears no insuperable difficulty in organising such a business and no overruling moral objection, what financial basis would be proper to go upon? Difficult as the subject is, it is one to be earnestly grappled with, despite its extremely thorny character. Successive generations of reformers have cried aloud against the evils of waste and depravity arising from the alcohol habit. Again and again the menace of a monopoly interest so powerful has been exposed by politicians. One legislator after another has attempted to reduce the evils of intemperance, not indeed wholly in vain; yet these evils have persisted on a scale so portentous that the present Prime Minister (it is remembered) pronounced the drink to be a worse enemy than Germany or Austria! And yet here it is still unconquered.

Only recently has the policy of Purchase been adopted by any large section of temperance reformers in this country. The financial operations of these war years have been so huge that figures which would have frightened most of us a little while ago are now contemplated with comparative coolness, and we are disposed to accept the assurance of experts that the money aspect of the matter need not deter us from the project. The reports presented last week by the three Committees appointed to inquire upon what terms and arrangements State ownership could be established and maintained, furnish details which should be carefully studied. Dealing chiefly with finance, there are differences of estimate as to the cash required, but accepting the rough total of four hundred millions the Committees agree in thinking it does not render the scheme impracticable. By other authorities the amount required is calculated as considerably less. In any case we need not be frightened, though, of course, when any scheme is actually before Parliament there will be keen discussion by interested parties, the one naturally claiming, the other dutifully economising, as much as possible.

As to management of the business in its many forms, again the experience of these war years gives reassurance. Lord D'Abernon has this week made some very confident statements as to the beneficial results of State control in certain parts of the country. Demur may be taken that when the present abnormal conditions cease and the nation resumes its usual habits the problems of administration, production, and vending will assume very different aspects. That seems pretty clear; but does any one suppose that after these experiences we are all going back to the usages of the pre-war period? In regard to many other things the national life, we may be sure, will be found to have undergone an evolution quite beyond reversal; and that a tighter hand will in future be laid on the public-house, whoever owns it, an individual or the State, is as certain as that super-taxes will continue to be levied and great industries to be nationally organised.

There remains, what indeed will be the paramount question with many of us, the point of the propriety of nationalising the public-house. Vehement opposition to such a proposal has already arisen, and it is not likely soon to cease. We shall not attempt to meet, in the few sentences at our disposal, the forceful arguments of those who would consider the State provision and sale of alcoholic drinks an immoral act. It must suffice here to note the fact that temperance reformers as passionately earnest as any one can be to suppress this trade have deliberately concluded that the best way to attain this, or anything like it, is by the line of Purchase. After many years of appeal for total Prohibition, or, short of that, for Local Option, for Sunday Closing, and other legislative restrictions, they have been forced to accept a confessedly unwelcome policy in the belief that it presents, after all, the surest promise of permanent reformation in the nation's habits. As men with their eyes open to facts they cannot fail to perceive that a very large section of our people, in all classes, are not yet willing to give up the use of alcohol; and as social observers they realise that recreation of some sort, bad if good is not supplied, will inevitably be sought by the workers generally. Merely to restrict will not effect that widespread improvement in personal ideals and standards which is necessary if we are to become an intelligently self-regulating and sober people. If by adopting Purchase we should find ourselves saddled with a system the chief merits of which lay in diverting huge profits from private pockets into the public treasury the gain—as we estimate it—would be small compared with that which we most desire. And the greater gain, to national health, virtue, and efficiency, can only be won by the assiduous zeal of men who add to the wisest legislation they can devise the best personal service they can render.

WE very deeply regret to hear, as we go to press, of the death of Mr. Arnold Wood, of Edgbaston, eldest son of the Rev. Joseph Wood, the chairman of directors of The Inquirer Publishing Company. Our readers, we are sure, will share our feelings of respectful sympathy in this great loss.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A HARD CASE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Some years ago you were kind enough to insert a letter from me calling attention to an invaluable Charity named the "Fisher Institution," the object of which is to provide small annuities to widows or single ladies in reduced circumstances. By a curious conjunction of facts, quite explicable and natural, these annuities are confined to Unitarians and Roman Catholics. The Charity is a comparatively small one, and every time an election is held there is a great number of very suitable applicants who have to be disappointed. On such occasions I have appealed, and not in vain, for private benefactions, so that one or two more than would otherwise be possible may receive the little annual sum which makes all the difference between dire poverty and comparative comfort.

On the last occasion one such beneficiary made himself responsible for £10 a year to benefit a particular case, viz., a Unitarian widow who is now 72 years of age. Unfortunately he now finds it impossible to continue his subscription. It would be a grievous thing if this lady, especially at a critical time like this and at such an age, should have to lose her annual subsidy. May I invite one of your readers to take the vacant place and supply the needed £10 per annum? If it should fortunately happen that more than one lady or gentleman is willing to make such a contribution, the Governors of the Institution will have no difficulty in finding a suitable recipient.—Yours, &c. C. J. STREET.

Upper Chapel, Sheffield.
May 1, 1918.

THE WHITSUNTIDE MEETINGS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—As I understand that no programmes of the Whitsuntide Meetings are to be issued this year, may I beg the hospitality of your paper to announce that the Annual Meeting of Ministers will be held at Essex Hall on Thursday, May 23, at 10.30 A.M., when an address will be given by Dr. Mellone on 'The Outlook of the Ministry after the War.' All ministers who will be in London are cordially invited.—Yours, &c. BASIL MARTIN
(Secretary, London Ministers' Meeting)

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

170TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,450	16	7
Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Green (19th)	1	0	0
Miss Swaine (36th)	2	0	0
Mr. W. N. Martin (18th)	1	1	0
X. (40th)	1	0	0
Mr. J. G. Chattaway (6th)	5	0	0
The Rev. and Mrs. T. Bowen Evans (30th)	1	0	0
Miss A. Williamson (4th)	0	10	0
Miss E. C. Harvey (14th)	3	0	0
Miss Anne Garrett (15th)	0	10	0
Mrs. Wm. Tangye (25th)	10	0	0
Mrs. Julian Winsor (40th)	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty (47th)	4	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry (monthly)	1	0	0
Miss Colten and the Misses Gillespie (34th)	0	7	6
Miss Katherine A. Finer (10th)	0	5	0
Northgate End Chapel, Halifax, per Mr. J. Teal (24th)	1	4	9
	£20,483	14	10

Parcels have been received from:—Ilford Branch of the Women's League, (per Mrs. Fyson); Mill Hill Sewing League, Leeds (per Mrs. P. Jackson); The Misses S. and A. J. Partridge; Mrs. Keating; Mrs. de Zouche; Miss Warren; Miss Anne Garrett; Miss Gertrude Martineau.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

THE pre-war atmosphere still seems to permeate the galleries of Burlington House, though many Academicians and Associates who used to exhibit there annually are no longer represented on the familiar walls. Several pictures, of course, have been "inspired"—if the word is not a misnomer—by the European struggle, but they fail as completely to thrill the imagination as a third-rate melodrama fails to stir the profound emotions only to be awakened by an Æschylus or Dante. An eminent preacher told a spell-bound congregation last Sunday that we are now acting the prelude to the great Judgment Day of the world—a Judgment Day which will probably end with the utter destruction of civilisation as we know it in the West. Our artists, however, give no hint of anything of the kind. Save, indeed, for Walter Bayes's 'The Underworld,'—a powerful but hideous attempt to portray the curious effect upon all sorts and conditions of people of being herded together on a Tube platform during an air-raid—there is scarcely anything to suggest that we are even at war. For neither khaki portraits, pictures representing actual fighting, the King in a gallant attitude surveying the battlefield, surrounded by a group of carefully posed officers, nor even 'Big guns going up to the front' (by Lucy Kemp-Welch), convey any definite impression of the awful events which are deluging the soil of France and Belgium with blood. They are nicely painted, and have a beautifully clean and fresh appearance, like the numerous "interiors" in which Chippendale furniture, sun-flecked walls, bric-à-brac and rose-bowls predominate; but they simply are not—Flanders.

If you can forget the war, however, all is well, and some of us have found a little heart's ease as we wandered from room to room, and remembered how, years ago, we used to look on this wall or that for a Leighton, an Alfred East, a Sargent, a Solomon, an Alma Tadema. We are not, as a nation, used to terrific emotions; apocalyptic visions are disquieting and unfamiliar; and a painter who could lift for a moment the veil of illusion and sentiment which mercifully hides from our eyes the horrors of Armageddon would surely drive us mad. So, with Arnesby Brown, or Priestman, or Sydney Lee (whose 'Limestone Crag' is very noble), Sir Ernest Waterlow, Clausen, Hughes-Stanton (with his stormy sky over Cader Idris—a large, arresting picture), or delightful Charles Sims, who has a magical velvety touch which gives a dreamlike quality to all his landscapes, we can ramble in Wordsworth's country, wander in Wensleydale, enter enchanted woods in France, and tread the crisp snow of Alpine valleys. All these are happy experiences, and they will remain for us in the future as they have existed in the past; for Nature still weaves her web of beauty springtime after springtime, and daffodils will be daffodils when the glory of Rheims and Amiens are dust.

As to the portraits, there is, perhaps, nothing of special distinction this year, though Sir John Lavery's 'Rt. Hon. H. H. Asquith' (who looks like a learned professor), Arthur Hacker's 'Mrs. Ramsay,' Shannon's 'Lady Broughton,' and one or two others are sufficiently interesting. Cadogan Cowper's wonderful experiments in the painting of textures of a very pure colour have their vivid charm, and there is a sun-bright picture of Venice which makes you catch your breath—so incredible does it seem that all that rose-tinted beauty should be menaced by hideous destruction. Other things we have not space to mention, though there are, as usual, a number of dainty and charming things in our favourite Room IX.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.

A GOODLY number of friends and supporters of the London Domestic Mission were present at the Annual Meeting, which was held at the Rhyl Street Mission, Kentish Town, on Tuesday, May 8, at 5 o'clock. Mr. Charles Martineau presided. The Rev. F. K. Freeston, Hon. Secretary, presented the report, which was of a distinctly encouraging character, breathing the spirit of the founder of the Domestic Mission, Dr. Tuckerman of Boston, whose object was to realise the ideal of the Good Samaritan, and emphasising the vital importance of Mission work in view of the situation created by the war. The Committee recognise that "in the reconstruction which is to come there will be a keener social conscience concerning the causes of poverty," and they are anxious to keep clear the vision of a better future, "that vision without which our best efforts fail us, and the people perish." Very deep regret is expressed at the retirement of the Rev. F. Summers, necessitated by a complete breakdown in health, and the splendid record of work which he and Mrs. Summers leave behind them is one which the Society will always recall with pride and gratitude. Mr. Summers, who is in his 76th year, has given thirty-eight years of devoted labour to the London poor, and Mrs. Summers, herself a missionary's daughter, has been his most efficient helper. They have removed to Southport, where it is earnestly hoped that a measure of health may return to Mr. Summers. The reports given at the meeting of his condition were, however, not very hopeful, and it was greatly regretted that Mrs. Summers had been unable to leave him in order to receive the substantial memorial which it had been arranged should be presented on this occasion.

The Rev. W. H. Rose has now completed ten years of service, and, as he said later on, he was in favour of staying in one place as long as possible, for only by so doing could a missionary hope to become intimate with the people whom it is his privilege and happiness to serve. Many people become friendly at once; with others the process of becoming intimate is a lengthy one, and sometimes it is only after years of intercourse that the missionary is really accepted as a friend and admitted to the inner sanctuary of home life. The Rev. A. Golland is carrying on the work at Bell Street, in spite of the fact that, having enrolled under the National Service scheme, he has been given a post as foreign correspondent in the Ottoman Bank. He explained that, with the exception of some house-to-house collecting and attendances at a meeting which takes place in his office hours, he is superintending the work of the Mission just the same as before, though this necessarily involves longer hours of work than he would be able to put in for any considerable period of time. At both these Missions there is an efficient and enthusiastic band of workers, although, at Bell Street, more helpers are very much needed.

Over £130 has been received in new subscriptions and donations to the Society, and the response to a circular issued to old subscribers in December has been very encouraging, and has resulted in a further considerable increase of the funds. The fact that the yearly expenditure still exceeds the income by something like £400 has still to be faced, but Miss Holland, Hon. Treasurer, was hopeful that the money would be found. It is gratifying to know that, although the Society has sustained the loss by death of twelve subscribers since the last report was issued, and three others have ceased to subscribe, eighty new subscribers and donors have been added to the list.

The adoption of the Reports, including the Missionaries' Reports, which were taken as read, was moved by the Chairman, who reminded those present that after the war there would be a great change and advance in social conditions which would make it more than ever necessary that the Committee should be in close touch with their supporters and the people attending the Missions. The fact that there were so many present on that occasion encouraged them in the hope that their annual meetings in the future would be truly representative. In seconding the resolution the Rev. H. Gow touched in a very happy way on the work of the Society, the gratitude with which they reviewed Mr. Summers' long years of service, and the ideals which animated all their activities. It was not, he pointed out, in the least likely that the close of the war would bring about such a change of heart among people that inevitably they would all be better, and that everything they undertook would be better done than in the past; but it was absolutely necessary that they should keep the highest ideals before them, and that they should give their whole strength to building a new heaven and a new earth. One of the results of the war, he thought, was that they would see many old things in a new light, and value more than they had done things which had begun to get a little stale. These times of trial and sorrow were teaching our young people something of what our ancestors went through and the sacrifices they made. The Domestic Missions were among the best things that we owed to the men of the past, and they were founded in no spirit of self-advertisement, nor for the propagation of any special doctrines, but for love of God, service to Christ, and the life of humanity.

The resolution of confidence in the principles of the Society, and appreciation of the work of the missionaries and their wives, was proposed by Mrs. Sydney Martineau in an earnest and sympathetic speech, seconded by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant. The Revs. W. Rose and A. Golland (Missionaries) responded. Mrs. Eveleigh then produced the embossed leather album containing an address to the Rev. F. Summers and Mrs. Summers, and the signatures of 200 subscribers, which, accompanied by the sum of £1,500, the Committee had hoped to present to the recipients in person. The address contains the following passages:—

It is not for us to praise such a lifetime of loving service; we can only admire and envy that whole-hearted devotion to the cause of suffering humanity which has made it possible. Nor do you need our praise, for you will take with you the gratitude of countless humble folk, who, if they could speak of what is treasured in their hearts would tell of disputes averted by wise advice, of children guided to a fine manhood and womanhood, of want relieved by generous help, of sorrow comforted by unfailing sympathy. Such gratitude can never be fully voiced; but it will endure as long as life lasts....

We are well aware that no offering of ours can be in any sense an equivalent for the service you have rendered. The reward of that service lies in Higher hands, and the assurance of it is, we doubt not, already in your hearts. We ask you to regard this gift, therefore, as a mark only of our heartfelt admiration and affectionate friendship.

Mrs. Eveleigh spoke in the warmest terms as an old friend of the devoted services which Mr. Summers had rendered to the poor of London, and of his wisdom, patience, and persistence in well-doing, and gave the gratifying information that the members of the Dingley Place Mission had themselves contributed a testimonial of their own amounting to over £24.

Resolutions of thanks to the Committee and officers and to the members of the Rhyl Street Mission for their hospitality terminated the proceedings.

LIVERPOOL DOMESTIC MISSION.

THE Eighty-First Annual Meeting of the Liverpool Domestic Mission Society was held at Mill Street on Friday, May 3, the President, Mr. H. R. Rathbone, in the chair. Mr. Rathbone said they were meeting at the end of a chapter in the history of the Mission; he might almost say at the end of volume one. Owing to the death of the Rev. T. Lloyd Jones in October, 1917, and the resignation of the Rev. J. Anderton, that wonderful partnership through which such inestimable good had been done in Toxteth Park for thirty-five years had now been dissolved. The Rev. J. C. Ballantyne, who had been regarded as the only man fitted to be Mr. Jones's successor, was coming with a reputation already made, and with a record that enabled them to look forward to the future with confidence and hope.

Mr. C. Sydney Jones presented the committee's report and the treasurer's statement, in the absence of both Mr. R. H. Armstrong and Mr. Lawrence D. Holt. The accounts showed that the deficit of £227 16s. 4d. at the beginning of the year had been increased to one of £309 7s. 11d.

Although the prevailing note of the meeting was one of sadness for the double loss sustained by the Mission, there was a deep sense of thankfulness and even gladness that so much had been accomplished during the thirty-five years in which Mr. Jones and Mr. Anderton had worked together. Mr. Arthur Hall said that each had possessed qualities which were not quite so marked in the other, so that they filled in what was lacking in each other. All the speakers, including Mr. R. D. Holt, M.P., Mr. Harold Coventry, Mr. Edwin Haigh, C.C., and the Rev. J. C. Odgers spoke of the immeasurable amount of good which had been accomplished by both missionaries. The very buildings in which the meeting was held were a lasting memorial to Mr. Jones. He had won and kept the confidence of some of the shrewdest business men in Liverpool, which in itself was no easy task. On the other hand he had perfect sympathy with and understanding of the wants of the people among whom he laboured, and was therefore the very best interpreter between the rich and the poor. During the difficult times since Mr. Jones's illness the Society had become deeply indebted to Mrs. Lloyd Jones, who after her husband's death was good enough to accept the position of "Honorary Missionary" until the arrival of his successor.

The Committee record with deep regret the death of Captain Cecil Heywood Brunner, one of their number, who met his death in France last October.

Mrs. Lloyd Jones reported that the "Roll of Honour" bore 170 names of scholars and workers, 25 of whom had laid down their lives and were held in loving and reverent memory. Three had gained the Military Medal, two the D.C.M., another the Belgian Croix de Guerre, and several had been mentioned in dispatches. Parcels were sent regularly to all the old scholars on active service abroad, and so the latter were kept in touch with the Mission. In return many letters were received recalling "the good old times at the Domestic Mission." It was further reported that by means of a War Savings Association £351 12s. had been invested in War Savings Certificates by the people of the Mission since March, 1917.

The Revs. J. Anderton and C. Prestwich Scott responded to the resolution of appreciation and sympathy with the ministers. The Rev. J. Anderton, whom every one was pleased to see on the platform much recovered from his recent illness, spoke of the way he and Mr. Lloyd Jones had worked shoulder to shoulder for thirty-five years, and said that he gave up his duties with much grief.

On the motion of the Rev. Lawrence

Redfern, Mr. Wilfrid B. Stoddart was elected President for the ensuing year in the place of Mr. H. R. Rathbone, and Mr. L. D. Holt and R. H. Armstrong were re-elected Treasurer and Secretary respectively.

MANSFORD STREET CHURCH AND MISSION.

THE Annual Meeting of the subscribers and friends of Mansford Street Mission was held at Lindsey Hall, Kensington, on the evening of April 29, the chair being taken by the Rev. J. H. Weatherall. The Reports of the Minister and the various Committees were read, giving a brief account of the year's work, which even in normal times would have been an encouraging and successful record, and which appears still more remarkable when the present difficulties are considered and at a time when few churches can hope to do more than hold their own. The membership of the congregation increased considerably during the year, and now stands at the highest point in the history of the Mission: all the institutional activities have been fully maintained, and an important development has taken place in the work among the younger boys, through the revival of the Boys' Own Brigade Company and the Junior Cadet Company, together including about sixty members. Early in the year Mansford House, Birchington, ceased to be used as a military hospital, and after complete renovation again became available for the holiday and convalescent work of the Mission.

The Treasurer spoke reassuringly of the accounts, in spite of a large and increasing deficit, and informed the meeting of a legacy of £200 from the late Mr. E. B. Squire, one of the most faithful and generous supporters of Mansford Street.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the reports, gave an interesting and stimulating address on Mission work in relation to modern problems, emphasising the importance of the Sunday services in the church as the centre and inspiration of all its work. Institutional activity was sometimes regarded as a substitute for church attendance: it should rather be the natural outcome of the energies of a congregation of worshippers. He closed by making a timely protest against the statement so often made during the last year or two that the young men from our churches who are serving with the Forces are "facing reality for the first time in their lives," as if all normal life before the war had been a sort of unreal dream in which there were no wrongs to be redressed and no true service to be rendered to humanity. If such a statement were justified, then perpetual warfare would be the only "real" form of existence.

Among the other speakers, the Rev. A. A. Charlesworth, representing the London District Unitarian Society, made a suggestion for bringing together members of our churches in widely separated parts of London for the discussion of social conditions and needs, and the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, representing the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, expressed the appreciation of the meeting for the simple and manly words of the Rev. Gordon Cooper's report, "characteristic of the straightforward and unaffected methods of his missionary work, which had brought him so much success at Mansford Street, especially among the boys and young men." A cordial vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Cooper, and all the workers and helpers, for their services during the year, and to the Chairman for his presence and his address.

LADY DURNING-LAWRENCE has given £1,000, contributed through a concert fund at the Coliseum last Sunday, to the Manor House Orthopaedic Hospital, Hampstead, for Discharged Soldiers and Sailors.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Banbury.—On April 23 Dr. A. D. Tyssen, the acting trustee of the Unitarian Church, gave a lecture in the schoolroom on 'The History of the Old Banbury Meeting House.' The minister, the Rev. Percival Chalk, presided. Dr. Tyssen gave a valuable and detailed account of the history of the congregation of Presbyterians who afterwards formed the Unitarian Church in Banbury, and of their acquisition of the property which comprises the chapel and surrounding land and buildings, tracing its progress from the deeds and documents, and the personal history from the Banbury parish registers, biographical memoirs and other sources. On the following Sunday Dr. Tyssen preached in the evening on 'Education.'

Bath: Western Union.—The spring meeting of the Western Union of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches (Northern District) was held on April 29 in Bath. Ministers were present from Cirencester, Bridgwater, Shepton-Mallet, Trowbridge, Ilminster, Gloucester, Bristol, and Taunton, and were hospitably entertained at his house by the Rev. A. Cunliffe Fox and Mrs. Fox. The Secretary, the Rev. C. E. Pike, was asked to convey to the congregation at Cullompton the deep sympathy of the meeting in the loss they had sustained by the death of their revered and beloved minister, the Rev. Jeffery Worthington, and also to convey to the Home Secretary the following resolution, which was passed unanimously: "That this meeting consisting of ministers of the Western Union of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches appeals to the Secretary of State for Home Affairs to accord First Division treatment to Mr. Arnold Lupton." A paper on 'The Supersession of Sacrifice,' by Mr. H. G. Woodford, aroused an interesting discussion.

Bolton.—The co-operation of Unitarians has been cordially welcomed by the Bolton District Council of Christian Congregations, which will hold its first meeting at the Parish Church school on May 14. According to its constitution "the Council shall consist of the minister or ministers and two representatives (men or women) of each congregation that desires to be represented," and its object is "to bring nearer the realisation of the kingdom of God by witnessing to and upholding in all its fulness the Christian ideal of faith and morals, both in the congregations represented and in the community at large." A special meeting of the Bank Street congregation was held after morning service on May 5, to consider the whole scheme.

Bootle.—The Calendar of the Bootle Free Church gives details of various promotions obtained by men on the Roll of Honour, as well as casualties which have occurred in the recent fighting. It is sad to read, in one church Calendar after another, of so many brave lads being wounded, "gassed," or made prisoner, and our sympathies go out to all their anxious relations and friends. Captain Walter Short contributes another of his pen-pictures from France, this time a cheery description of 'The Transport Way.'

Bury.—The death is recorded, in action, of Fred. Hayhurst, a member of the Chesham Unitarian Church.—The Sunday school anniversary services at Bank Street Chapel, on April 21, were very well attended, and the collections (which, with donations, amounted to over £63, nearly £20 more than last year) were the highest for twelve years.

Colne.—The Sunday School Anniversary Services at the Unitarian Church on May 5 were conducted by the minister, the Rev. J. Pipkin, and were well attended. At the Quarterly Meeting of the congregation on Sunday, April 28, sympathetic reference was made to the loss the church had sustained by the death of Mr. Tillotson Wilkinson, who has been actively associated with the church since its foundation. A considerable increase in the attendances was reported, and the Treasurer's statement showed that the position generally is very satisfactory. Four additional names were added to the members' roll. The steady growth of the evening congregations, which are now larger than they have been for many years, is very gratifying.

Croydon: Dennett Hall.—After a considerable interval, evening services were resumed at Dennett Hall, Broad Green, on Sunday last. There was a very fair attendance—larger than had been anticipated—including the cheering presence of members of the Croydon Domestic Mission Committee and workers connected therewith. The minister in charge read to the congregation a very sympathetic message from the founder of the Mission, the Rev. C. J. Street, mentioning that there were many old Croydonians, and not a few still in some way associated with Dennett Hall, who remembered Mr. Street with affection and gratitude.

Mr. Street expressed his earnest wish that the work might prosper as it had done in its best days, and added: "The one thing above all others that stands out in my ministry at Croydon—now so far back in the past—is the establishment and maintenance of Dennett Hall and all the good work and purpose it signifies. It has been an ever-abiding joy to remember it; and to the Loving Father, from whom we derive all our strength of purpose and high faith, I commend its future."

Exeter.—A meeting to welcome the Rev. Donald B. Fraser, the new minister of George's Chapel, was held on April 24, Mr. E. Lemmon presiding. Several letters of apology for inability to attend had been received, including one from Sir James Owen, the Mayor of Exeter. Cordial addresses of welcome were given by Mr. C. M. Taylor, on behalf of the congregation and trustees; the Rev. Bowen Evans, Sidmouth, for the Association of Devon Ministers; the Rev. Walter Burgess, representing the Church at Plymouth; Councillor H. J. Munro, on behalf of the city; and the Rev. G. S. Woods, Taunton, for the Western Union of Unitarian Churches. Mr. Fraser, in responding, appealed to the enthusiasm of the congregation, and spoke with conviction of the possibilities for sound religious work which lay before them.

Horwich.—A Sale of Work was held in connection with the Unitarian Church on Saturday, April 27. The opening ceremony was performed by Mrs. John Harwood of Bolton, Mrs. Bradshaw of Bolton presiding. The sum of £120 was realised. On the following Sunday the Church anniversary sermons were preached by the Rev. Frederick Hall of Blackburn.

Huddersfield.—The gross receipts from a Sale of Work recently held in connection with the Fitzwilliam Street Church amounted to £157 1s. 11d. The small sum of £9 1s. 7d. covers the expenses incurred, hence the church finances are enriched by the substantial sum of £148 0s. 4d. Although the difficulties in the way of this annual effort were altogether abnormal, the results have not only exceeded the most sanguine expectations, but have surpassed by several pounds last year's high level.

Ilford.—The quarterly meeting in connection with the Unitarian Church was held on Monday evening, May 6, the business being largely formal. The chairman in alluding to the impending departure of the Rev. A. H. Biggs to assume charge of the Old Meeting House at Mansfield, Notts., at the end of June, dwelt upon the importance of a new minister being appointed ready to take up the work in the autumn.—Mr. Biggs was preaching anniversary sermons at Mansfield last Sunday, and the services at Ilford were conducted by Mr. E. R. Fyson, collections being made in aid of the Provincial Assembly.

Leeds: Holbeck.—Albert Morton, who was connected with the Sunday school from boyhood, and took a deep interest in both school and chapel, and also in the Boy Scout movement, has died from wounds received in action. He was 20 years of age, and joined the Seaforth Highlanders at the outbreak of war.

Leeds: Hunslet.—The Hunslet Unitarian Church held a social gathering on Saturday evening, May 4, to welcome the new minister, the Rev. A. Leslie Smith, B.A., who began his work there on Easter Sunday. A good number of members and friends came together, and Mill Hill Chapel and the Holbeck Unitarian Church, also the ministers and lay preachers of Yorkshire were well represented in the company. Music arranged by Dr. Dufton was given at intervals, and Mrs. Leslie Smith recited. The Girls' Club, which under Miss Dobson has won distinction among the clubs of Leeds, gave an exhibition of dancing and skipping, and the other institutions of the church also contributed to the success of the meeting. Short addresses were given by Mr. Paul Woffindin, chairman of the church; Mr. Martineau Lupton, of Mill Hill Chapel; the Rev. W. R. Shanks for the Yorkshire Unitarian Union; the Rev. F. Coleman, late minister of the church, and the Rev. A. Leslie Smith.

Leeds: Mill Hill Chapel.—The Record announces that Major Harold Brown, D.S.O., M.C., Croix de Guerre, has been killed in action. He was the son of Mr. G. W. Brown, the much respected Treasurer of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and a grandson of the late Mr. Wm. Brown, both well known members of the Mill Hill congregation. Fifty Sunday scholars are on active service at home and abroad, many of whom are suffering from wounds, sickness, and gas poisoning.

Leicester.—The congratulations of the Great Meeting are given in the Calendar to Captain Lilley on his having been appointed Examiner in anatomy under the Egyptian Government; and to Mr. C. R. V. Gibbs, who has qualified as Naval Interpreter (German). Thirteen of those whose names are on the Roll of Honour have made the supreme sacrifice. The complete list is as follows; Captain Arthur C.

Cooper (16 May, 1915); Lieut. Robt. Olive Harvey (October 13, 1915); Lieut. David Royce (January 7, 1916); Private Harry Ridger (June 7, 1916); Sergeant E. Kenney (July 14, 1916); Private Walter Cramp (Nov. 13, 1916); Major Cecil Colson (December, 1916); Private Ernest Overton (April 9, 1917); Private J. C. Smith (April 29, 1917); 2nd Lieut. Ernst A. Harvey (November 13, 1917); Private Fred. Hallick; Private Fred. Richardson (December 3, 1917); Private Thomas Potter (February 25, 1918).

Liverpool: Hope Street.—Three special Sunday evening addresses on 'Christian Unity' will be given by Dr. Mellor at Hope Street Church on May 26, 'A United Christian Church the only Hope of the World'; June 2, 'The Minimum Basis of Christian Unity'; and June 9, 'Are there any Signs of Christian Unity?' It is recognised that only a united Christian Church can, in the future, have any effect upon the life of the world, and the addresses are designed simply as a preliminary approach to a tremendous and urgent problem and as a sincere contribution to discussion.—The first of a series of Organ Recitals, inaugurated very successfully, took place on April 26. Mr. Alfred Hollins, the blind organist from Edinburgh, gave the recital, and two of the pieces selected were composed by him. Dr. Mellor conducted a short devotional service. Five other recitals, by Mr. F. Gostelow of Luton Parish Church; Mr. H. Walton of Glasgow Cathedral; Mr. C. W. Perkins of Birmingham Town Hall; Mr. W. G. Alcock of Salisbury Cathedral, and Mr. Kendrick Pyne of Manchester Town Hall, have been arranged by Dr. Pollitt, F.R.C.O., the organist of Hope Street Church.

London: Brixton.—The Rev. J. P. MacCarthy, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A., is preaching on Sunday, May 12 and 19, at Effra Road Unitarian Church, and on the 26th the Rev. H. Dawtrey will conduct the services. On June 2 the Rev. T. Munn hopes to begin his ministry.

London: Stepney Green.—The annual meeting of the College Chapel congregation was held on Thursday evening, April 25, the Rev. Harry Maguire of Billingshurst in the chair. The Committee's report was of an encouraging nature, touching on the progress in many directions due to "Mr. Long and his faithful band of workers." New members had joined who had found in College Chapel a "religious home and in Mr. Long a true pastor." The Sunday school had increased in numbers, the Band of Hope, Flower Show and other activities had been well kept up. The meeting received with much regret the news of the approaching resignation of Mr. Long, due to the fact that he was leaving Manchester College, Oxford, at the end of June, and that he had been invited to a pastorate in the Midlands. A resolution of warm thanks to him for all his valuable help at College Chapel was unanimously carried, in which was voiced also an expression of deep regret at his approaching departure. In responding Mr. Long said he should cherish very happy memories of his first pastorate, and thanked the committee, the congregation, and the Sunday school teachers for their help and co-operation at College Chapel. The Rev. H. Maguire on moving a vote of thanks to Mr. Wallace B. Tavener for his able help at the chapel during the past year referred in appreciative terms to his father, the late Rev. Lucking Tavener, and the inspiration he had been to him in his youth in common with many others in Stepney, Stratford, and elsewhere.

London Sunday School Society.—The Annual Musical Festival was held on Saturday, April 27, at Essex Hall. The competition was this year confined to senior choirs, and there were entries from eight London Sunday schools. Each choir, consisting of about twenty voices, half of whom were under 17 years of age, sang the test-piece ('Violets,' by F. H. Cowen) unaccompanied, and a piece of its own selecting accompanied. The standard of music was high, and there was a large and appreciative audience. Mr. G. Day Winter was the adjudicator. The winning choir was Bell Street Domestic Mission, Edgware Road, to whom the Banner of the Society was presented, together with the first certificate of merit. This choir, which scored 159 marks, was conducted and trained by Miss Harris. The second choir was that of St. Luke's Domestic Mission (Dingley Place), conducted by Miss Violet Withall, which secured 154 marks. The other choirs were: Highgate, 144 marks; Newington Green, 143 marks; Bethnal Green, 138 marks; Stratford, 134 marks; Islington (Unity Church), 112 marks; and Leytonstone, 112 marks.

Lye.—Anniversary Services were held at Lye on April 21, when the preacher was the Rev. Stanley Mossop of Handsworth. Special anthems were rendered, the soloist being Mr. James Elcock. The collection amounted to £30 10s. 6d.

Liverpool (Domestic Mission).—The Rev. J. Anderton, who has been Assistant Missionary at the Mill Street Mission since 1879, has resigned his post from July 1 on account of bad health.

Manchester: Fallsworth.—On Sunday, April 20, the 220th Anniversary Services in connection with Dob Lane Chapel were conducted by Lieut.-Colonel C. Seymour Bullock. Good congregations assembled morning, afternoon, and evening, and the addresses were greatly appreciated. Special anthems were sung, Mr. A. Rowbotham and Miss Annie Calvert being the soloists.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—The annual meeting of the Women's League, postponed from April 8, will take place on Monday, May 13, when there will be a discussion on the future work of the League. It is pointed out in the Calendar by Miss L. Johnson that, as women will be entering more and more into public life, it is very desirable that they should fit themselves for a right understanding and use of the powers conferred upon them, and this self-educational work is something which the Women's League might undertake. As a result of the raising of the age for military service, more men will be withdrawn from the church life and the work of the church, and the quickening of its religious life will more and more devolve upon the women. The banding of themselves together in a League should mean that work in every direction would be more efficiently done than is possible when work is individual and haphazard.

Norwich.—The congregation of the Octagon Chapel have unanimously invited the Rev. Margaret B. Crook to take charge of the pulpit for a period of six months. Miss Crook has accepted the invitation and will begin her ministry on June 30.

Nottingham.—On Sunday afternoon, May 5, an interesting ceremony took place at the meeting of the High Pavement Chapel Sunday school, when a large and beautifully framed copy of the picture 'Faithful unto Death,' presented to the school by the scholars and teachers, was unveiled on their behalf by the secretary, Miss E. Woolley. The lower school-room, which has lately been entirely redecorated, is now further beautified by a considerable number of new pictures, including a very fine oil painting of a scene in Derbyshire by the late Mrs. William Enfield, presented by Mr. Jesse Hind, J.P., a former superintendent, and a large wall copy of 'Sir Galahad,' by G. F. Watts, the gift of Mrs. J. M. Perry, always a generous benefactor of the school. A framed copy of the portrait of Channing was also presented on Sunday last by the children of the minister, and the school committee have determined to secure further portraits, as opportunity allows, forming ultimately a comprehensive collection of Unitarian heroes and heroines for the inspiration of generations of scholars to come.—Nottingham military hospitals have welcomed many Unitarian soldiers since the war began to pour its steady stream of wounded and disabled men into the home towns for care and restoration, and ministers of our churches in other parts of the country have been loyal to a fault in making known the presence of their young men in this city. There are at present in different parts of the town five Unitarian men, invalided home from the front, who had joined the ranks from Aberdeen, Auckland (N.Z.), Birmingham, Leigh and London. All five met with a few friends at the High Pavement on Monday, May 6, and spent a happy hour or two together. During the recent severe fighting in France the Sherwood Foresters, which include many of Nottingham's best youth, suffered heavy losses. Many men were reported missing and a large number were severely wounded, and among the members of the High Pavement Chapel considerable anxiety was felt, but happily two promising young men of the congregation are recovering from serious wounds, and of one reported missing definite news has now been received that he is a prisoner. News is anxiously awaited of a number of others.

Pendleton.—The Unitarian Free Church Calendar records the death of Lieut. Alex. Duncan, who was killed in action, March 25, and of Corpl. Reginald South, of wounds, in France, April 11. A Commemoration Service for those who have fallen will be conducted by the minister, the Rev. G. Randall Jones, on Sunday morning, May 12.—Mr. Jones is delivering a series of Sunday evening addresses (May 12-June 9) on some of the questions raised by "Ignotus" in a number of challenging articles in The Manchester City News which have now appeared in book form.

Rochdale.—The Monthly Messenger records the following losses: On March 28, killed in action in France, Pte. John Lenton Howard, 19th Lancashire Fusiliers; March 30, killed in action in France, Pte. Russell King, 17th Lancashire Fusiliers; March 31, at a Casualty Clearing Station in France, Pte. Arthur Foden, of the Australian Imperial Force.

South East Wales Unitarian Society.—The Annual Meeting of the Society were held in the West Grove Unitarian Church, Cardiff, on Monday, May 6. The morning was taken up with meetings of the Executive, the finance sub-committee meeting to consider applications for grants from churches, &c. After luncheon at the Queen's Hotel, given by Mr. H. Woolcott Thompson, a former President, to the ministers and delegates, the party paid a visit to the fine City Hall, arrangements for this having been made with the Lord Mayor by the Rev. F. Blount Mott, and Mr. J. B. Hatton Smith, Hon. Secretary of the Cardiff churches. The Annual Meeting of subscribers was held at 3.30 P.M. In the unavoidable absence of the President, the chair was taken by the Vice-president, the Rev. Simon Jones. Most of the churches in the Society were represented by their ministers and delegates. The committee's annual report contained a record of much good work done during the year, notwithstanding the adverse circumstances of the time. Sympathetic reference was made to those of our young men who had fallen in the war, and to the great loss which our churches had sustained through their absence. Through the willing aid of able laymen and laywomen services had been carried on continuously in churches with vacant pulpits and these services were gratefully appreciated. The District Minister had, during the year, paid a round of visits to several of the churches, carrying with him a message of hope and cheer. Recently, too, the Society had adopted The Unitarian Monthly, with an outside cover as the organ of the churches, the issue consisting of upwards of 250 copies. The treasurer's report was very satisfactory, disclosing a considerable balance to the credit of the Society. Mrs. John Lewis, of Pontypridd, was elected president in succession to Mr. D. R. Llewellyn, M.E., the retiring president, who has done excellent work during his two years of office, this being the second lady president in the history of the Society. The resignation of Mr. Gomer L. Thomas, who has acted as treasurer for some years, and who has also occupied the presidential chair, was accepted with great reluctance, and Mr. F. A. Whiting was elected as his successor. The ladies of the West Grove Women's League entertained the visitors to tea, and a public meeting followed in the church at 7.30, presided over by Mr. H. Woolcott Thompson. The speakers were Miss E. R. Lee, B.A., the Rev. J. P. McCarthy, Ph.D. (U.S.A.) and the Rev. Simon Jones, their subject being 'Abiding Things in a World of Conflict.' Mr. McCarthy made many friends. His genial manner added much to the success of the social functions of the day, and his evening address, full of sound commonsense as well as deep religious earnestness, left a deep impression upon all who heard him.

Yorkshire Unitarian Union.—At the Quarterly Meeting of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union, on April 30, it was announced that the Rev. W. R. Shanks had tendered his resignation as minister of the joint pastorates of Broadway Avenue and Idle, under the Union, owing to financial difficulties at the former church. The resignation was received with expressions of regret and of appreciation of the services he had rendered under trying circumstances. At the same meeting a cordial welcome was given to the Rev. A. L. Smith, minister of Hunslet. It was decided that the grants to the assisted churches should, in view of the cost of living, be kept at the old rate. It was also intimated that the Rev. J. W. Maw, M.A., of Dewsbury had, with the approval of his congregation, decided to give a period of four months of service with the army in France, in connection with the Y.M.C.A. The Union gave approval and promised its support in arranging for the supply of his pulpit in his absence.

 * THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week

AN INTERESTING TEN DAYS.

THE Rev. Dr. MacCarthy, after a most interesting trip to the Dorchester German Prison Camp under an escort from the British Foreign Office, carried out the following programme: Friday, April 26, address to the "Rotary Club" of Leeds. April 27, the indispensable journey to Ripon to see the famous ruins of Fountains Abbey. April 28, two services at Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds (the minister being on active service in Egypt). April 29, address to the Business Men's Luncheon Club, Leeds. April 30 and May 1 and 2, lectures in Harlaxton, Spittlegate, and Y.M.C.A. Huts at Grantham. May 3 to Bulford Hut, Salisbury Plain, where a conflict with a delayed theatre troupe made it necessary to postpone lecture till Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, when 700 New Zealand soldiers attended (after a parade) to hear a lecture on 'America' (with slides). Through this delay an invitation to preside at a meeting at the London Browning Settlement on May 4 had to be declined. May 5, service at Brixton in the morning, and the address for the annual meeting of the Sunday school at Mansford Street at 3.30; a "talk over the tea-cups" at 5, and the service at Mansford Street at 6.30. On May 6, address at the South East Wales Conference at Cardiff, Wales.—Dr. MacCarthy hopes shortly to visit Belfast for a series of temperance addresses.

PROGRAMME OF WHIT-WEEK MEETINGS, 1918, AT ESSEX HALL.

- Monday, May 20.
6 P.M. National Unitarian Lay Preachers' Union.
- Tuesday, May 21.
10.30 A.M. Sunday School Association Business Meeting.
2.45 P.M. Sunday School Association Public Meeting.
7.30 P.M. British and Foreign Unitarian Association Religious Service, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead.
- Wednesday, May 22.
10.30 A.M. British and Foreign Unitarian Association Annual Meeting.
3.30 P.M. Unitarian Historical Society (Small Hall).
3.30 P.M. British League of Unitarian Women (Large Hall).
7 P.M. Public Meeting: Addresses on 'The Power of Religion in Upbuilding the Life of the Nation.'
- Thursday, May 23.
10.30 A.M. Ministers' Meeting: Address by Dr. Mellone.
2 P.M. Central Postal Mission: Address by Dr. P. H. Wicksteed.
7.30 P.M. Essex Hall Lecture: C. G. Montefiore, Esq., M.A.
- Friday, May 24.
4.30 P.M. Unitarian Temperance Association.
6 P.M. Unitarian Temperance Association, Conference.

(Other details will be found in our advertisement columns.)

THE SWARTHMORE LECTURE, 1918.

The above Lecture will be delivered at the FRIENDS' MEETING HOUSE,
136 Bishopsgate, London, E.C., by LUCY F. MORLAND, B.A.

On TUESDAY, MAY 21.

Subject:—'THE NEW SOCIAL OUTLOOK.

The Chair will be taken at 6.30 p.m.

By WILLIAM LITTLEBOY.

N.B.—After delivery, the Lecture in book form will be on sale at the Friends' Book Shop, price 1s. 6d.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C.—FOUR LECTURES on 'ROMAN LAW AS COMPARED WITH ENGLISH LAW' will be delivered by W. BLAKE ODGERS, M.A., LL.D., K.C., Recorder of Bristol, on TUES., WED., THURS., and FRI., MAY 21 to 24, at 6 P.M. Free to the Public.

Board and Residence, &c.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.—Board - residence. Meat ration supplemented by vegetarian dishes and country produce. Enquiries, which must be accompanied by stamped envelope, from Miss SMITH.

Miscellaneous.

GALWAY SUITINGS, real Irish Tweed, all pure wool, for ladies' or gent.'s wear, 56 inches wide, 14s. 6d. per yard. Suit length, 3½ yards, 50s. 6d. Send for Bargain List.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

THAT OLD SET OF TEETH

You do not wear may now be worth up to £15 for the precious metals they contain. Send them to us. We will give you the highest possible value. Also buyers of gold and surplus jewellery. Offers made by return for goods sent by post. If offer not accepted, goods returned post free. Platinum Scrap £16 per ounce.

SATISFACTION ASSURED.

I. RAYBURN & CO.,
105 Market Street, Manchester.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE,	L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I.	H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL.	H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds ..	£4,500,000
Claims Paid exceed ..	£21,500,000

DEATHS.

GREG.—On May 3, of wounds received in action the previous day, Second Lieutenant Robert Philips Greg, the Cheshire Regt., dearly loved second son of Lieut.-Col. E. W. Greg, C.B. V.D., Ches. Regt., and Mrs. E. W. Greg, of Noreliffe Hall, Styal, Cheshire.

JONES.—On May 1, died of wounds received in action on April 24, Second Lieutenant Charles Arnold, dearly loved husband of Gertrude Jones (née Royle), and son of Mr. and Mrs. John Taylor Jones, 4 Heywood Road, Prestwich, aged 22.

POYNTING.—On May 6, Agnes Maud, only daughter of the late James M. Poynting of Monton and Fallowfield and of Mrs. Poynting of Brackenbrough, Hindhead, and granddaughter of the late James Holme Nicholson, M.A., of Wilmslow.

WOOD.—On the 8th inst., from acute pneumonia, Arnold Wood, of Ampton Lodge, Edgbaston, eldest son of Rev. Joseph Wood.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, May 5.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

Bell Street, Edgware Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. GOLLAND.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11. Rev. JOSEPH P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Dingley Place, St. Luke's, 11 and 7.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH; 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Mr. J. HARVEY LEWIS; 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Rev. F. H. JONES.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 6.30, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Rhyl Street, Kentish Town, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. ROSE.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. BASIL VINEY.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. ROBERT HARGROVE.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

Woolwich, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11, Mr. E. R. FYSON; 6.30, Rev. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Room, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. S. H. MELONE, M.A. D.Sc.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DONALD B. FRASER.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut.-Col. BULLOCK.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. RATTRAY.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. O. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Mrs. J. C. ODGERS.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. FLOWER, M.A.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. R. SCOTT.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR SCRUTON.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A. LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15, Mr. DAVIS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. A. FERGUSON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNEPEG, CANADA.

All Souls' Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

May

12. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.
19. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.
26. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation. Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION,

22 Northumberland Avenue, London.

Founded by the late Mr. G. R. Jesse in 1875.

The Society offers to send a LECTURER free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c.

SAMUEL JONES' FUND.

The Managers meet annually in October for the purpose of making grants.

APPLICATIONS must, however, be in hand NOT LATER THAN MONDAY, JUNE 3rd, and must be on a form to be obtained from the Secretary, CHAS. E. MARSHALL, 38 Barton Arcade, Manchester.

British & Foreign Unitarian Association.

WHIT-WEEK MEETINGS.

Tuesday Evening, 21 May, 7.30 p.m.

RELIGIOUS SERVICE

ROSSLYN HILL CHAPEL, HAMPSTEAD.
Preacher: Rev. ARTHUR W. FOX, M.A.

Wednesday Morning, 22 May, 10.30 a.m.

ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING.

ESSEX HALL. Report; Election of Officers and Committee; Resolutions and other business.
The President, Dr. CARPENTER, in the Chair.

Wednesday Evening, 22 May, 7 p.m.

PUBLIC MEETING, ESSEX HALL.

Addresses on
'The Power of Religion in Upbuilding the Life of the Nation.'

Speakers: Rev. Dr. CARPENTER, R. M. MONTGOMERY, Esq., K.C., Rev. BERNARD J. SNELL, M.A., B.Sc., and Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Thursday Evening, 23 May, 7.30 p.m.

ESSEX HALL LECTURE.

CLAUDE G. MONTEFIORE, Esq., M.A.

The Place of Judaism among the Religions of the World.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETINGS, WHIT TUESDAY, MAY 21, 1918.

President: Mrs. W. BLAKE ODGERS.

At 10.30 A.M. BUSINESS MEETING and President's Address, followed by a Conference on 'THE WORK OF THE ASSOCIATION.'

At 2.45 P.M. PUBLIC MEETING, Address by the Rev. H. McLACHLAN, M.A. B.D. (of the Home Missionary College, Manchester), on 'SOME NEEDS OF OUR TEACHERS.' To be followed by discussion.

The Meetings are open to all, Teachers and friends, as well as Delegates.

T. M. CHALMERS } Hon.
BERTRAM LISTER } Secs.

Essex Hall, London, May 7, 1918.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

ANNUAL MEETING, ESSEX HALL,

THURSDAY, MAY 16, 1918.

The Report, Balance Sheet, and the Report of the District Minister will be submitted.

The President, C. HERBERT-SMITH, Esq., LL.D., will take the Chair at 7 P.M.

Subscribers and friends are invited.

Tea at 6.30.

ALAN FORBES, Acting Secretary.

Unitarian Historical Society.

A PUBLIC MEETING

Will be held on WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, at 4 P.M. at ESSEX HALL,

when a Paper on the OLD MEETING HOUSE, BANBURY, will be read by

Dr. AMHERST D. TYSSSEN.

Chairman—JOHN C. WARREN, Esq., M.A.

Central Postal Union and Unitarian Workers' Union.

ANNUAL MEETING

ESSEX HALL, Essex St., Strand, W.C.,

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 23.

Dr. CHARLES HARGROVE in the Chair.

2 o'clock. BUSINESS MEETING.

Presentation of Report and Election of Committee and Officers.

2.30. Address by Dr. PHILIP H. WICKSTEED

ON

"Dante's Vision of Peace."

Friends and Supporters cordially invited.

NATIONAL UNITARIAN TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

will be held at

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX ST., STRAND,
On FRIDAY, MAY 24, 1918.

THE PRESIDENT,

REV. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, D.D., D.Litt.,

will take the Chair at 4.30 P.M.

A CONFERENCE will be held at 6 P.M., when

The Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.,

will read a Paper on

"THE RELATION OF 'ABSTINENCE' TO PERSONAL CHARACTER."

SITUATION REQUIRED.—WORKING
HOUSEKEEPER, or similar. Middle aged, healthy, thoroughly domesticated.—H. ELLIS, 10 Auckland Terrace, Kingston-on-Thames.

LINDSEY PRESS PUBLICATIONS

Cr. 8vo, Cloth, 2 vols., 8s. net, postage 6d.

THE WAY OF LIFE:

New Testament Studies.

By JAMES DRUMMOND, LL.D., Litt.D.

Vol. I. THE PARABLES OF JESUS. Vol. II. THE LORD'S PRAYER AND THE TEACHINGS OF JESUS.

"They are scholarly expositions, in the first place setting Christ's teaching in its original light, then modernising it, and finally applying it practically to the life of to-day. Essentially Scriptural in treatment, acutely reasoned, and felicitously expressed, they exhibit generally a sane outlook and a well-balanced grasp of truth."—Scotsman.

Cr. 8vo, Cloth, 3s. net, postage 3d.

OUT OF THE HEART OF THE STORM.

Twelve Sermons.

By HENRY GOW, B.A.

The Sermons are written by one who believes with President Wilson that "right is more precious than peace," and that no personal sorrow or loss should discourage us and turn us from our firm purpose to overthrow the Prussian autocracy.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net, postage 3d.

THE SOUL OF THE NATION.

Essays on Religion, Patriotism, and National Duty.

By W. HAMILTON DRUMMOND, B.A.

The Essays are written from the point of view of religious faith and a convinced Christian Idealism.

Fcap. 8vo, Cloth, red edges, 1s. net, postage 2d.

PSALMS & CANTICLES FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP.

Compiled and Edited by V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

The Psalms and Canticles are gathered from many sources, ancient and modern. They are arranged according to subjects, irrespective of age and origin.

LINDSEY PRESS, ESSEX ST., STRAND, W.C.2.

Postage is saved by ordering through a Bookseller.

READY NEXT WEEK.

Transactions of the Unitarian Historical Society

Contents.

APOLOGY FOR THE NONCONFORMIST ARIANS OF THE 18TH CENTURY. Prof. J. Powicke, Ph.D.
THE OLD NONCONFORMITY AT NORTON, DERBYSHIRE. II. Christopher J. Street, M.A., LL.B.
THE ORIGIN AND HISTORY OF THE OLD MEETING HOUSE, ABERDARE. Rees Jenkin Jones, M.A.

THE DEEDS OF WESTGATE CHAPEL, LEWES.

R. M. Montgomery, K.C.

THE CHURCH BOOK OF THE GENERAL BAPTIST CHURCH AT TURNERS HILL AND HORLEY. W. H. Burgess.

AN HISTORICAL LEGAL DECISION.

NOTES AND QUERIES, &c.

Subscribers to the Society receive a Free Copy.

5 ESSEX STREET, LONDON, W.C.

SANITAS FLUID

BEST WASH
FOR WOUNDS
BEST MOUTH WASH
BEST AIR PURIFIER
DESTROYS ALL
DISEASE GERMS

Clean
Fragrant
Non Poisonous
Does not Stain Linen

8⁰ & 1¹/₃ Bottles

THE "SANITAS" CO. LTD LONDON, E.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenaeum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, May 11, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3959.
NEW SERIES, No. 1062.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 18, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	153
PROFESSOR GILBERT MURRAY ON THE WAR	154
A CORNISH JINGLE	154
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—
Philosophy and Concrete Reality	154
Psalms and Canticles for Public Worship	155

NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS	155
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Where is the Religious Centre?	156
Our Men in Army and Navy	157

MEMORIAL NOTICES :—
Pasteur Charles Wagner	157
BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	157
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	157

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

AT a meeting of the British Academy last week the question was raised of the conditions of "International Scholarship after the War." The President, Sir F. G. Kenyon, said it would be impossible to resume intercourse with German scholars until they had renounced the crimes against civilisation which Germany had committed; he hoped British scholars might assist the process of their conversion, and render possible renewed co-operation. Canon Sanday, whose address should be read in full (vide The Times, May 10) specially referred to the Lichnowsky revelations, and their certain effect on the minds of all honest persons; and he believed that the leading German scholars could do invaluable good by leading the way for a national amends in regard to this country. He invited Prof. Troeltsch of Heidelberg to "say the best he could for his country, and at the same time to try to bring it into accord with the ideas of the Western Powers. He must first unsay emphatically certain things—monuments of perversity and unfairness—which he had said about the Allies; but Prof. Troeltsch was capable of much better things than he had said in the past, and he [Canon Sanday] believed that, with Prince Lichnowsky's memoir in his hand, he could be trusted to see what these better things were."

* * *

WE observe that Lord Bryce, the former President of the Academy, concurred in Sir F. G. Kenyon's views. He felt that "absolution" in this case could only depend on "repentance"; but perhaps the truth would in time filter down to the German people. If we are not misinformed, there is no question of "filtering down"; it is stated that a very wide circulation has already been given to the Prince's memoir—but with what views on the part of the authorities is, like most things relating to them, a matter for suspicion. By the way, we note with much pleasure the evidence of Lord Bryce's continued vigour, mental and physical, in spite of his attainment, on the 10th inst., of his 80th birthday.

* * *

IF there should be any need in our Whit Week Meetings of stimulus to renewed activity in propagandist work we may point to the evidence presented in the book by the late Dr. Silvanus P. Thompson entitled 'A Not Impossible Religion.' This eminent man of science, as the book proves, was also a keen critic of orthodoxy, and, what is more, an earnestly religious spirit. His book shows how, after rejecting the creeds as such, and pouring contempt on priestcraft and dogmatic arrogance, he still adhered to what he felt to be vital in Christianity; and both negatively and affirmatively he may be fairly said to have been in substantial accord with the type of religious thought and culture cherished in our churches. And yet so well-informed and eager a man evidently had no conception of Unitarianism except as a type of barren controversy. Whose is the responsibility for this? And how is such a mistaken notion to be effectually corrected?

* * *

IN a review of several books on 'Changing Religion' Mr. E. S. Robertson, in the May Bookman, asks a question suggested by Dr. Percy Gardner's volume on 'Evolution in Christian Doctrine,' the title of which sufficiently indicates his view that Christianity is not "cataclysmic" but has its place in an orderly world development. At the same time, it should be noted, he regards the English Church as his true religious home. The reviewer asks whether we may not regard "the Jesus life and teaching," not as due to "an exceptionally operated incarnation from without," but as a special manifestation of the nature of man, and he says: "We may yet come to acknowledge amply the divinest fact of history as this—Christ was simpliciter et naturaliter homo." He adds: "Prof. Gardner has made it clear that he would not look upon such a statement as connoting Unitarianism." Subtle theologians might see how to escape this connotation, but we think most ordinary people would not.

* * *

LORD COURTNEY'S death, at a good old age, has served, not only to recall strenuous days before those in which we live, but also to elicit tributes of respect to his independence of judgment. If Mr. Bonar Law is to be believed, the present House of Commons might well afford room for a few men of his kind, however awkward they prove for party purposes. Mr. Law, it will be remembered, thought a fair and candid verdict by any Select Committee of the House with regard to the Government and General Maurice was impossible to obtain, so prone is everybody to party prejudice. But we should like to doubt this.

* * *

WE drew attention a fortnight ago to Canon M. G. Glazebrook's little book 'The Faith of a Modern Churchman' and pointed out his remarkable freedom in dealing with orthodox doctrines. We wondered if such freedom would be permitted; the answer has come soon in the shape of a letter addressed to the Canon by his diocesan, the Bishop of Ely. The Bishop says he is unable to admit the claim that the two clauses in the Apostles' Creed referring respectively to the Virgin Birth and the Resurrection of Jesus can legitimately be "interpreted symbolically." In this he takes the position adopted by the Bishops at the Lambeth Conference, 1908, who recorded the conviction that "the historical facts stated in the Creeds are an essential part of the faith of the Church"; a conviction which was reaffirmed in Convocation, April, 1914. Dr. Glazebrook must find his position a difficult one; and now we wonder what he and his fellow Moderns will do. Still more we wonder when the Church will cease to squeeze out of its communion the men who seem best able to bring her thought abreast of the age.

PROF. GILBERT MURRAY ON THE WAR.

A COLLECTION of Essays and Lectures by Mr. Gilbert Murray, written at various periods from August, 1914, to March, 1917, has recently been published. The Introduction alone, dated January, 1918, was written after America entered the war. In a review in a recent number of Blackwood's Magazine this book was treated as pernicious and mischievous nonsense. That a book characterised by such high-minded patriotism, such wise warnings and so magnanimous a spirit should be so savagely criticised in what is held to be a reputable magazine, is, in our view, more alarming than a defeat in battle. It marks a blindness and perversity of mind which if it were widely spread would show that in the things that matter most we were defeated already. No victory in war could compensate for their loss.

There is no hesitation, no doubt, in Professor Murray's mind from the first essay to the last as to the necessity and righteousness of the war. In the Preface written a few months ago, he says, "I want peace. I have always wanted peace. The whole war is to me a misery and a loathing. I have no satisfaction in the killing of Germans. I wish nothing but a peaceful and honourable future for Germans as well as for the other nations of Europe, a peace with security to all and oppression to none. But, until the enemy begins to be of the same opinion, I see nothing for it but to fight and endure like grim death." In September, 1914, he wrote: "I believe firmly that we were right to declare war against Germany on August 4 and that to have remained neutral in that crisis would have been a failure in public duty." In March, 1917, he writes even more strongly: "If after the invasion of Belgium the rest of Europe had submitted to the Germans without a struggle, it would have saved millions of lives, tons of treasure, oceans of suffering; but it would have meant a greater evil to mankind than any such measurable losses. It would have meant that the Spirit of Man himself was dead." In another place he says: "We have become familiar with the knowledge that there are things in life which are greater than life." He uses Mr. Gladstone's words about the Kingdom of Naples to characterise Prussianism. "It is the negation of God erected into a system of Government," and he goes on to say, "The sort of thing for which we are fighting, the old ordinances, the old kindness, and the old humanities, is it too much to say that if there is a God in man it is in these things after all that God in man speaks?" And again in another place: "In other nations the sword is the servant of the public welfare, a savage servant never used but in the last necessity; in Germany all the resources of the nation are the servant of the sword."

The writer of such words is castigated by Blackwood as unpatriotic! Have they no shame when they remember their review of Keats? Their review of Professor Murray's book brands them with as deep disgrace as that. Professor Murray's offence is that he hates Prussianism not only in Prussia but in England, and that he treats pacifists with respect. He admired President Wilson even before he entered the war, and in his lecture to Americans in 1916 while stating our case with strong conviction, he did not attempt to argue them out of their neutrality. "No: we cannot ask Americans to stand in our shoes: but I would like them to know and fully realise that by Heaven, we would not stand in theirs, nor in any others but our own." "Go about England to-day and you will find men and women whose hearts are broken, but who are uplifted by a new spiritual strength. They know that there are issues greater than life, and that for those issues it is well to die, it is well also to suffer." We may be proud and thankful that a man who could speak like this has represented our people in America.

Such words as we have quoted and many others in these lectures and addresses are what we need. We are suffering not only from sorrow and failure and loss but from the clouding of the ideal. To lose the ideal with which we entered on this war is the greatest loss of all. Professor Murray renews our faith in the ideal and in so doing gives us more courage and confidence. It has been besmirched and tarnished by many of our own writers and politicians, but the fact still remains true that we could do no other than we did in entering on this war, and that we must go on until Prussian militarism is destroyed. He who makes us realise anew, as Professor Murray does, the ideals for which our young men have died, enables us to bear our suffering and loss and deserves the deepest gratitude from this nation in its time of sorest need.

H. Gow.

A CORNISH JINGLE.

Down by Ogo Dour,

In the country of the West,
There runs a little stream,
Flowing down from the Moor,
Till at last it finds rest
In a leap to the sea.

Over the bay the seagulls scream,

While thunder the waves below,
In caves hollowed out far beneath
By the wild tides' ebb and flow.
And O, it is there that I would be,
When the sun is shining on cliff and sea,
Down by Ogo Dour,
In the West Countree!

On the banks of the stream

See, how closely they cling,
The flowers I love best—

Early heralds of spring,
Dog-violet with fragile grace,
Celandine, and primrose pure—
I vow it is a heavenly place,

Down there by Ogo Dour,
In the Country of the West!

CIVIS.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

PHILOSOPHY AND CONCRETE REALITY.

DR. WILDON CARR, the President of the Aristotelian Society, has rendered a great service to English readers by writing an exposition of the philosophy of the great Italian thinker, Benedetto Croce.* The fact appears to be that Croce is better known on the Continent of Europe than in England.

The great, outstanding position won for themselves by the natural sciences in the nineteenth century appeared to place their essential perspective in philosophy in a wrong position. They almost hypnotised the beholder by their revelation of the wonders of life:—

The world is so full of a number of things
I am sure we ought all to be as happy as kings.

Charles Darwin, T. H. Huxley, and Herbert Spencer, who, though they claimed to be but students and staters of facts were regarded rather as the noble magicians who transformed the world of phenomena into scientific categories, which became the modern Arabian Nights entertainment, always understood that in the new realism exactness of observation, correct statement of facts, right combinations and classifications were to be part of the stories. The 'Romance of the Sciences,' as the title of a series of books to awaken scientific interest, reveals the attitude which the last generation maintained towards the study of science. Croce cites the case of Herbert Spencer as claiming to be a philosopher by writing eighteen large volumes to represent a scientific view of the subject. Yet Spencer, Croce points out, had read neither Plato nor Kant. Why is Herbert Spencer, comparatively, so neglected to-day? If that question be answered, we probably are on the way to understand what will be regarded by some as a paradox, viz., that whilst philosophy must take account of science, scientists can only enter the kingdom of philosophy through the eye of a needle. Croce says the neglect which has befallen Spencer is due to his lack of historical knowledge.

The searchlight of history is to Croce a sine qua non for philosophy, and the historical concept is admittedly so for science, under the name of evolution, co-extensive and co-intensive with the whole result of scientific research, past and present. In all branches of knowledge, and in all our thought, our history, internal and external, is our reality. The concept of history is the concept of reality as the eternal present. History involves, it is true, the relation of before and after, but both in the individual and in the race (and indeed in universal life) there is no past in the sense of non-existence. The "eternal present" means that the past is absolutely part of the present—"if cut off from the present it loses all meaning and content." So with the future, the "as yet undetermined, the actual possibility, which is a necessary part of the concept of every present process or change." Dr. Carr summarises Croce's view of the function of history interestingly: "In history we lose all distinction between thought and reality, between purposes and events, between mind and body, and show the actual unfolding of the full reality as an indwelling life expressing itself in action, and the highest form of philosophy is therefore history." In other words, history is in fact "identical with the act of thinking itself."

This apparently paradoxical statement is the basal position in Croce's doctrine of history. If we regard the full concrete reality of actual life dynamically, we are just describing history as distinguished from historiography, which concerns itself with the literary form into which historical experience is written out from experimental documents. On examining into Croce's view, we can readily see that Herbert Spencer was scarcely likely to produce an illuminative account of philosophy.

* THE PHILOSOPHY OF BENEDETTO CROCE. By H. Wildon Carr. (Macmillan, 7s. 6d. net.)

Croce's philosophy especially concerns itself with two great problems. One of these as we have just described is that of history; the other is that of art. As history deals with the dynamic aspect of full concrete reality of actual life, it is the function of art to conceive concrete reality of actual life, statically. Natural science presupposes history, but similarly history presupposes "a world of images and of pure philosophical concepts or categories, for historical propositions and judgments depend on the synthesis of the images and the concept." The science of the "pure image" is aesthetic. The science of the "pure concept" is logic.

The mental activity involved in the production of "pure images" is the expression, and the intention of the image is expression. Croce says emphatically "intuition is expression and it is nothing else, nothing more and nothing less."

This doctrine of the basis of art has interesting consequences which may be stated in Croce's words translated by Dr. Carr: "From the philosophical standpoint, the art of producing and the art of enjoying are identical, because philosophy is concerned with the quality and not with quantity. The little dose of inventive imagination I possess requires the aid of Shakespeare to intensify it to the point of forming within itself the whole tragedy of Othello's passion; and Shakespeare had no need of me or others like me to raise himself to that complex-vision. I, indeed, when I read 'Othello,' am not identical with the artist Shakespeare, but I and the author of 'Othello' are facts of the same aesthetic substance, however uneven the distribution, however different the dose in each of us, and however different the stimulation under various circumstances."

The fascination of the quest of philosophy to Croce's mind is the attempt to investigate concrete reality. He believes that this should be the aim both of the sciences and of philosophy. He deals with incisive effectiveness, from his own point of view, with the relation of reality to art and to history. He believes that if we investigate art and history aright we enter the very temple of reality. He believes that the natural sciences as presented ordinarily make us exiles from our native humanism, but what is more insidious, takes us away to a country remote from concrete reality.

On this question of the natural sciences, it is well to bear intently in mind that Croce is not antagonistic to science. No thoughtful man who enters into the heritage of the nineteenth century can be to-day indifferent to their utility and their illuminative functions. They are telescopes and microscopes for the mind to focus concentration in certain areas and fields of facts. But individual sciences only deal with abstractions.

Let me quote the excellent exposition of Dr. Carr on this point: "The abstractions with which the sciences deal, and which seem to separate themselves out as independent and isolated facts and events, and groups and items of facts and events, have no existence and no meaning apart from the whole from which they are abstracted." In other words, science constantly analyses. It presents us with the chemical, physical, geological and other aspects as parts of concrete things, but it never re-constitutes the original things from which the various aspects have been abstracted. Thus we have a science for every aspect, but philosophy is the only hope for obtaining a science which deals with the world of concrete reality as it presents itself in synthetic experience.

Croce's outlook on life, therefore, is vast and comprehensive. We are drawn by his earnestness and clear-headedness. He brings into the crucible sciences, old and new, all authority and dogmatism—and what will cause a shock to many, all religion of a transcendent, rather than an immanent life, which bases itself on authority, instead of philosophy.

Croce claims to have presented a view of philosophy which frees it from the dualistic hypothesis, but he realises that there is no finality in his, any more than all other philosophy. "Philosophy lives and, like the life it seems to comprehend, new forms bring with them new problems. Philosophy must be a method, not a system." So writes Dr. Carr, and his remarkably clear exposition of the embarra de richesses of Croce's books deserves highly of the republic of philosophers and literary, and, we venture to add, of scientific students. For Croce is not only a great Italian, he is a profound thinker, rich himself in the intuitions of art and permeated with the historic spirit in more than the technical sense of the term. He is, we believe, one of the men who will count amongst the foremost in the estimate of the future on the work of our generation, in the development of philosophical thought.

FOSTER WATSON.

PSALMS AND CANTICLES FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP.

THE distinctive feature of this admirably compiled little book is that it represents a much wider range of selection than has hitherto been attempted. About two-thirds of its contents are taken from the Bible, and especially from the Psalter, which, as the Editor, the Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A., says in his Preface, "must always hold its place as the original and chief inspiration of the Psalmody of the Church." The remainder is from various sources, ancient, mediæval, and modern. It includes, of course, the Te Deum. The version given is the first of the alternative versions that appeared in the 'Essex Hall Chant Book,' the one, namely, which in the middle verses of the hymn departs furthest from the customary phraseology. That ardent protagonist of the orthodoxy of his day, Mr. Paxton Hood, in his 'Life of Isaac Watts,' denounced Unitarians for altering other people's hymns, and indignantly exclaimed, "We have even seen the Te Deum adapted to a Unitarian service." But in view of what Isaac Watts, the subject of his whole-hearted eulogy, had done in the way of altering the Psalms so as to make them more suitable for Christian worship, it ill became Mr. Hood to rail at Unitarians for adapting this ancient hymn to their service. If it was right for Isaac Watts to "make David speak as a Christian," Unitarians are surely justified in making St. Ambrose or St. Augustine (or whoever was the author of the Te Deum) speak as a Unitarian Christian. But none of the Unitarian adaptations of this noblest and most characteristic of Christian canticles has achieved universal acceptance in our group of Free Churches, and many of the Churches doubtless will still prefer a closer paraphrase of the original than the one given here. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the second edition of the book will include the more conservative version contained in 'Common Prayer for Christian Worship.' The voice of the mediæval Church is finely represented by St. Francis of Assisi's 'Canticle of the Sun,' and St. Thomas a Kempis' 'Blessed is the soul that heareth the Lord speaking within her.' Considering how great a place the chanting of the Psalms has occupied in Church services, it is somewhat surprising that so few modern writers have attempted this kind of composition. We are pleased to see a canticle from the 'Devotions' of John Austin, who had a distinct genius for such work, and we should like to have seen others from the same source, especially those most beautiful psalms for All Saints' Day, beginning, "Let us humble ourselves, but not grow faint, at the sight of others so far before us," and "Precious, in thy sight, is the death of thy saints, which finishes thy greatest work, the perfecting of souls." Dr. Martineau is represented by the canticles which he contributed to the 'Ten Services,' the first place in the book being assigned to his "I was glad when my companions said unto me, Come, it is our holy day." The 'Psalms and Litanies' of Rowland Williams have, we imagine, been drawn upon to a larger extent than in any former collection. They are not centos of Scripture passages, but are thoroughly modern in thought and language. This is true also of Rollo Russell's 'Psalms of the West,' about a dozen of which find places here. Some time ago a service book was prepared by Dr. Jacks for use in the Chapel of Manchester College, Oxford. It contains several new chants, and we are very glad to see them included in this volume and thus introduced to a wider field of usefulness. Perhaps the most striking and beautiful of them is the one beginning,

When my soul is in heaviness, and my heart is disquieted within me;
When darkness is round about my path,
and all thy tempests go over my head;
Then will I betake me to the great congregation, to hear the psalm of thy redeemed,
and to cast my burden on the Lord.

J. M. C.

NOTES ON SOME RECENT BOOKS.

[A short Notice in this column does not preclude a review in a later issue.]

Blackwood (Algernon). THE PROMISE OF AIR. London, Macmillan & Co. 275 pp., 6s. n.

Lovers of Mr. Blackwood's writings will scarcely need to be told that this is not a book about aviation for the use of flying men. It is a book, for those who have the bird-nature, about the secret ecstasy of bird-life—a subject full of joyousness and beauty which he treats in his characteristic way.

Drummond (W. B.), M.B., C.M., F.R.C.P. (Edin.) MEDICAL DICTIONARY; with coloured plates and other illustrations. London, J. M. Dent & Sons. 625 pp., 10s. 6d. n.

An admirable book of reference for social workers, school teachers, factory inspectors, &c., for whose use it has been specially prepared. Those who are frequently called upon to render medical assistance in the absence of professional help should find it invaluable.

Johnson (Stanley C.), D.Sc., F.R.E.S. GROW YOUR OWN VEGETABLES: with diagrams and appendices. London, T. Fisher Unwin, Ltd. 191 pp., 6s. n.

A practical illustrated handbook for allotment holders and those wishing to grow vegetables in small gardens, based on the fundamental necessity for increasing our home-grown food supply.

Nippold (Otfried). DANGEROUS OPTIMISM. Allen & Unwin. 20 pp., 2d. n.

A reprint of an article on the possibilities of democracy in Germany by the author of 'German Chauvinism,' who is Professor of International Law at the University of Berne.

Papers for the Present: I., II., and III.: THE MODERN MIDAS; THE BANKER'S PART IN RECONSTRUCTION; SPIRIT CREATIVE (George Sandeman). (Issued for the Cities Committee of the Sociological Society) London, Headley Bros. 16, 36, and 21 pp., 6d. each.

These pamphlets are the first three of a series of ten "Papers for the Present" dealing with current topics and prevailing issues, and intended "as a contribution to the re-ordering of public life." The faith of the Committee responsible for their production is in "Moral Renewal, next in Re-education, and therewith Reconstruction." Bearing this in mind we should be inclined to place 'Spirit Creative' (by Mr. George Sandeman) first in the list, as it deals with the fundamental principles at the root of all sane, wholesome, adventurous life and brotherly co-operation. What those principles are the author has dealt with already in his book on 'Social Renewal,' and in the pamphlet to which we are referring he sounds the same joyous, Franciscan note which sociological dissertations, as such, very rarely convey.

Robertson (Right Hon. J. M.), M.P. THE ECONOMICS OF PROGRESS. London, T. Fisher Unwin. 294 pp., 12s. 6d. n.

A series of lectures delivered in 1917 to the Political and Economic Circle of the National Liberal Club. The chapters cover a wide field and deal with education, labour, land, capital, commerce, and population, the last named being considered so important that Mr. Robertson devoted two lectures to it.

Robinson (W. E.), M.D., Assistant Physician and Pathologist to the Infants' Hospital, S.W. BABY WELFARE. London, Fisher Unwin. 206 pp. index, 7s. 6d. n.

Based on lectures to nurses, this is too technical, perhaps, for most lay folk, and sensitive mothers may find the pathological matter uncomfortable reading. But for a fit audience it will be found extremely interesting and helpful.

Rose (J. Holland), Litt.D. WHY WE CARRY ON. London, T. Fisher Unwin. 42 pp., 1s. 6d. n.

Some of the chapters in this little book have already appeared as articles in The New Europe, The Daily Chronicle, &c. They sum up once more the reasons why, in the writer's opinion, a "decisive triumph of the Allies" and the overthrow of the "German-Austrian-Turkish system based on force" can alone guarantee the setting up of a League of Nations and the re-establishment of International Law.

Singer (Ignatius). THE THEOCRACY OF JESUS. London, C. W. Daniel, Ltd. 54 pp., 1s. n.

A paper read before the "Brotherhood" affiliated with Bank Street Chapel, Bolton, which aims at giving a practical interpretation of the Golden Rule and restoring it to the importance which was claimed for it by Jesus.

Smith (Sir George Adam), M.A., D.D. SYRIA AND THE HOLY LAND; with maps. London, Hodder & Stoughton. 56 pp., 1s.

A very useful little book by an authority on the subject, which conveys an astonishing amount of information within its limited pages and indicates some of the problems awaiting "the Power or Powers to whom the political future of Syria falls." The realisation of Zionist aspirations and the perplexing questions which these also raise are touched upon suggestively.

Sunderland (J. T.), D.D. RISING JAPAN. London, G. P. Putnam Sons. 220 pp. index, 5s. n.

The well-known Unitarian minister and author here defends Japan against injurious prejudices, chiefly among his American countrymen, and apparently fostered by German agents. It is an interesting and informing book.

Sykes (The Rev. H.), M.A. PALESTINE AND JERUSALEM. 64 pp. maps, 10d. n.

A soldier's handbook dealing briefly with the geography, history and present day life of the Holy Land, which contains some very sensible advice as well as a good deal of practical information.

Thompson (Silvanus P.), D.Sc., F.R.S. A NOT IMPOSSIBLE RELIGION. London, John Lane. 335 pp. index, 6s. n.

A notable contribution to current religious development. The distinguished scientist's chapters, though not closely knit into a system, vividly portray a religious type aloof from dogma yet passionately earnest. His denunciations of conventional doctrines are sometimes violent, but orthodox people are warned off; the heterodox may learn to affirm the new ideas with new boldness and new understanding.

Whitwell (Richard). THE CLOUD AND THE FIRE. London, A. C. Fifield. 70 pp., 2s. 6d. n.

A series of sincere attempts to express in alternate prose and verse the joy of faith in God and His revelation of love. Mr. Whitwell has spiritual insight, though his phraseology is sometimes a little laboured.

MRS. SYDNEY MARTINEAU will be glad to hear of any lady who would be willing to take charge of the Hostel at Lawrence House, 1 Essex Street, during June or part of June, while the Matron is away on holiday. All out-of-pocket expenses would be paid. Mrs. Martineau will be pleased to give full particulars. Communications should be addressed to her at Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WHERE IS THE RELIGIOUS CENTRE?

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Many of us have wished to take part in the illuminating correspondence on 'The Churches and the Ministry,' but have refrained owing to pressure of work or the fear of trespassing upon your generosity. As I am leading the life both of a full-time secondary schoolmaster and of a minister of religion, it will be readily understood that I have not much time for newspaper correspondence. Moreover, questions of organisation, over which our strength has been frittered for many years past, when it ought to have been spent in developing our message, do not awaken great enthusiasm in me. Personally, I am of opinion that the chief cause of any failure which we may have experienced, has been the fact that those of us who are in the active ministry have not shown the practical value of those truths which Dr. Martineau wrought out by hard thinking in the study. Who can doubt that if the implications of the doctrine of man's sonship to God had been preached with half the zeal that the vicarious atonement of Christ has been proclaimed, we should have more justification for our existence as a Church?

Now the letters from Mr. Davis and Dr. Mellor raise a question not of organisation but of theology, which is our main duty as a Church with a message. Consequently I venture to write. I have valued Dr. Mellor's writings and especially his very able book on 'Religion, Modern Science and Philosophy,' which, contrary to my usual practice in these busy times, I have read more than once. It is a matter of regret that I find that he has joined those who are attacking from within the faith which our Churches have proclaimed. We have had enough to contend with from without and now we have to sustain a revolt within our own camp. The attitude of some among us almost justifies the remark made to me the other day by a Presbyterian minister that we are standing for "an amorphous something, but what it is no one can tell." All I could reply was that "I know what the Unitarianism is for which I stand and it is the bread of life to me."

There is much in Dr. Mellor's letter from which I dissent, but I must confine myself to his main thesis that the highest religion is found in centralisation in Jesus. I regret that a mind so philosophically strong as Dr. Mellor's should hold this position. If I had been asked for a clear statement of my own faith, I should have pointed to the concluding passage in Dr. Mellor's book referred to above and which I supposed summed up his contention. "The life of religion is not in revelation, nor in organisation, nor in history, but in the soul of any human being to whom the experience of Faith comes, in the heart of anyone who sees a vision of truth, beauty and goodness, perfect and unchanged beyond the darkness and ignorance and the changefulness of the moment." "Not in revelation," then not in a Book specially inspired! "Not in organisation," then not in the Church, even though it became Catholic. "Not in history," then not in the Jesus of history, though it may be in the Christ in the soul. But in that centre of eternal and divine life, which anyone may discover in himself. Has Dr. Mellor retracted these beliefs? In them some of us abide, and because we abide in them, we are happy in the ministry of our small communion.

Personally, I hold we must begin with the study of man and adopt the same method in religion as in every other sphere of thought, proceeding from the known to the unknown. That surely is the starting point. In the light of this, I would put a few plain questions.

1. In which Jesus is our faith to be centralised—the Jesus of the Synoptics or the Logos of the Fourth Gospel or the Christ of Paul or the theological Christ of the Creeds; or, to come to modern interpretations, the eschatological Jesus of Schweitzer, or the subconscious Jesus of Dr. Sanday, or the kenotic Christ of Broad Churchmen, or the ethical Jesus of Liberal Christianity? We shall do well to read again Dr. Carpenter's volume 'The Historical Jesus and the Theological Christ' before we say we believe in centralising Faith in Jesus. Has scholarship yet reached an agreement on the person or the teaching on the work of Jesus? Jesus may be the greatest Revealer, and I love him because by his life he discovered truth and delivered it in words which shall not pass away, but the individual man in the Interpreter. Obviously the measure in which Jesus is the Revealer to any man is limited by that man's power of interpretation. If there is to be intellectual freedom in the region of interpretation, as Dr. Mellor suggests, are we not all driven back upon ourselves, and must we not confess that our faith is centralised in the highest we can see? Is not this to surrender the whole position for which Dr. Mellor contends?

2. Is it possible to avoid setting up an external authority in morals and faith, if there is to be ethical and religious centralisation in Jesus? Are we not guilty of the very fault which we bring against the Roman Catholic who accepts the Infallibility of the Pope—that of erecting into a first principle an authority which can never be the major premise, and of surrendering our belief in the final authority of God in the soul?

3. Lest it be thought that I, as a Unitarian, am guilty of an individualism which destroys the truths of immanence and incarnation, let me say that I have a deep sense of God as a Person who is in intimate touch with my soul. Like Cardinal Newman, I can think the world away, but I cannot think away the two persons, God and myself. Just as when I look on the material world, I find the universe stretching from my feet into infinite space, so when I look into my soul I see the spiritual universe of God stretching away above, beneath and around my spiritual self. I know I can never flee from His spirit, and that in Him we all live and move and have our being. Our spirits blend with His. Of the incarnation of the Divine I have no doubt, and I repeat after Dr. Martineau, "The Incarnation is true, not of Christ exclusively, but of man universally and God everlastingly! He is manifested everywhere, in nature, in man, and pre-eminently in Jesus, the greatest of all men, but I am the measure of the revelation I have received of God." In this I would associate myself with the words of Dr. Drummond which have recently appeared in your columns.—Yours, &c., ALFRED HALL.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May I, through your columns, thank the Rev. V. D. Davis for his letter in the issue of May 4? He makes the position so clear by his thoughtful, reasoned words. And his last paragraph is a "word of cheer" for us all. I came upon the following verse just after reading his letter, and I think it puts our "faith" (on that subject) in a nutshell: "God, who raised Jesus from the dead, and gave him glory, so that your faith and hope might be in God" (I. Peter i. 21). This definitely tells us not to transfer our worship to Jesus, however highly we love and honour him.—Yours, &c.,

M. WOLFF.

Bath, May 8, 1918.

OUR MEN IN THE ARMY AND NAVY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—It is intended to send out the next number of the Lawrence House Bulletin in June; and before putting in hand the addressing of upwards of six thousand envelopes, I should esteem it a favour if alterations in the addresses of men in the Army and Navy, along with particulars of men who have recently joined up, were forwarded to me at Essex Hall not later than Monday, June 3. Will the ministers and secretaries of our congregations kindly render all possible assistance in making the list as accurate as possible?—Yours, &c.,
W. COPELAND BOWIE.
Essex Hall, London, W.C.2.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

PASTEUR CHARLES WAGNER.

WE much regret to hear of the death of Charles Wagner, the well-known leader among Liberal Protestants in France, a personal friend to some of us in this country and the United States, and by his writings a true minister to the religious life of readers in many lands. Born January 3, 1852, in Alsace, he came of ministerial stock, his grandfather and father being pastors. The latter died when Charles was seven; and his mother and her five little ones had hard times, yet happy, in their home among the Vosges hills. Here he developed the love of nature and rural things which clung to him all his life and besides imparting charm to his books and sermons, led him out of the sterner type of Lutheran theology into a sunnier faith. When fourteen he began studies at Paris, and passed through a profound religious crisis of which he has left a memorable record. The annexation of his native land by Germany also affected him deeply, and though he at first undertook pastoral duties in German he in time became more and more attached to France, and, after serving in a country parish in the French Vosges, in 1882, he went to Paris and, plunged at once into work among the working class. By and by, the little upper-chamber chapel in the Rue de Arquebusiers proved too small, and he removed to a hall in the Boulevard Beaumarchais, where he preached to an audience largely composed of men. Indefatigable in his endeavours to diffuse a vigorous living and modern faith he lectured also elsewhere, and wrote much for the religious press. His affection for the common folk was boundless, and he specially devoted himself to young men and women, who in return loved and almost idolised him. The titles of his books indicate the trend of his mind: 'Justice,' 'Youth,' 'Courage,' 'Along the Road,' 'Around the Hearthstone,' 'Be a Man,' 'The Simple Life'; this last rendered his name famous on both sides of the Atlantic. Another and deeply touching book is the 'Better Way,' a series of meditations arising in connection with the death of his little son.

Pasteur Wagner cordially co-operated with Liberal religious thinkers and workers in our country and others, and his presence at our International congresses will be remembered. He was a genial companion as well as a zealous fighter for liberty and moral advance, and it is with sincere homage to a good, brave, and fruitful life that we add our little wreath in his memory.

MRS. ROGERS writes acknowledging a generous response to the appeal for financial aid for the John Pounds House, Southsea. The donations have sufficed to pay off all debts and leave a small balance in hand.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

171ST LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,483	14	10
2nd Corp. D. W. Rymer, R.E.	0	10	0
Lieutenant Roger Drummond (2nd)	1	10	0
Miss L. M. Rimmington (3rd)	1	0	0
Collected by Mr. D. D. James, from friends at the Unitarian Church, Toronto	3	2	6
Miss S. J. Gregg (26th)	1	0	0
	£20,490	17	4

Parcels have been received from:—Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas; Miss E. C. Hervey; Miss Nettlefold; Miss Eveleigh; Mrs. Crompton; (a case of 211 garments from the ladies in Adelaide S.A.); Church of the Messiah Women's Friendly Society, Birmingham, per Mrs. J. Worsley Austin; Mrs. Piggott; Miss Short; Mrs. J. J. Rawsthorn; Miss M. T. Worsley; Miss Else.

MONTHLY NOTES.

By the time this is in print, I shall be in France again, and I must ask the indulgence of subscribers if correspondence is not promptly attended to. The object of my journey this time is to go thoroughly into the condition of the hospital for tuberculous Belgian soldiers at Chambéry. Recent accounts have been rather disquieting, and there seemed many things urgently required before they face a second winter there. We offered to do certain very much needed sanitary work, and to arrange for a sufficient supply of hot water. Last winter it was impossible even to get hot water to fill bottles for the men. The estimates for this work have come, and it is in order that I may go thoroughly into them on the spot, and decide what is and what is not absolutely necessary, that I am going out at once. I hope also to be able to start a canteen for the men. We are planning to take a small villa with a garden for the purpose near the hospital, and to have three or four ladies living there and sharing modest expenses. It is hoped these ladies would also be allowed to do a certain amount of nursing for those too seriously ill to be out of bed, in addition to running the canteen. I am undertaking no financial responsibility about the canteen, but I am anxious to hear of some ladies willing to go out at their own expense. I want them over 40 years of age (not trained nurses or V.A.D.). There is practically no risk at all of infection and we expect the expenses will be about three guineas a week. I shall, however, have a large financial responsibility for the sanitary improvements which we want to make, and to help me with this expense I want to beg very earnestly for increased support. No money shall be spent that is not necessary for the good of the men. They are mostly soldiers who fought in the wet trenches in the first winter of the war, to whom we owe such an immense debt of gratitude. One of the recent arrivals at the hospital writes to me only this week, thanking me for some socks. He says: "I received my pair soon after my arrival at this hospital, direct from the front. I was terribly sad to see what a long journey I had come, away from all my comrades, and only because a stupid and insidious foe had attacked my chest. I am ill—ill without glory and without the consolation of feeling I was wounded for my country. So you can imagine how dismal my thoughts were. But the sight of the gifts you have sent us has already done me good and they are a great consolation. I said to myself, 'We are not altogether forgotten,' and I began to feel better at once. I cannot write more, as I am writing in bed and my head swims, but I must just say 'thank you.' I know that the feeling expressed in this letter is very general among the men. It is far sadder to be ill than wounded, and in these cases the chances of recovery are not so great. This class of hospital especially needs that the conditions should be as good as possible. ROSE ALLEN.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Bristol: Lewin's Mead.—On Sunday, May 5, the Annual Service for the Young was held, when the young people from the Red Lodge (Miss Mary Carpenter's foundation) attended. Sunday, the 12th, was the 96th Anniversary of the united schools, comprising the Lewin's Mead Schools, Stoke's Croft School, the Domestic Mission, the Boys' Industrial and the Girls' Industrial Schools. The united choir was trained by Mr. Churchill, Master of Stoke's Croft School, who also set to music some hymns of the Rev. A. Blatchford, Mr. Bunce, and others. The singing was much enjoyed by a crowded chapel, notwithstanding the fact that very many had to walk miles owing to the recent stopping of the Sunday trams. Both Sunday services were taken by Dr. Tudor Jones, who has for some months been busily engaged on important work of national service in various parts of the country in addition to his church work, sometimes travelling between 500 and 600 miles and giving three lectures and classes daily.

Chester.—The Roll of Honour of Matthew Henry's Chapel contains the names of forty-seven past and present members of the school and congregation, two of whom have made the supreme sacrifice.

Dean Row and Styal.—Mr. Ernest A. Smith, B.Sc., who has been studying at Manchester College since 1916, will enter on ministerial duties here in July.

Hull.—The Rev. Margaret B. Crook paid a welcome visit to Park Street Church on Monday, when she addressed a meeting of the church ladies on the work that women can do for the churches. In the evening she spoke to the members of the Womens' Friendly Society.

Hull.—Home Fires for May contains an article by the Editor, the Rev. F. M. Falconer, dealing with Professor Hobhouse's views on war-aims and the formation of an International State; the usual Church Notes, 'Happenings about Town,' and extracts from letters from Park Street Church members on active service.

Ilkeston.—The 226th Anniversary of Ilkeston's oldest Nonconformist body was held on Sunday last at the Unitarian Chapel. Mr. R. Bulley, who has charge of the congregation, in the course of an address on 'Our Faith,' said they were proud to know that it was in 1692 that the founders of their church met together in the house of Hannah Carrier, which was registered as the first Dissenting place of worship in Ilkeston. There was a good congregation, and an augmented choir from Stamford Street Chapel rendered the special anthem.

Leytonstone.—The progress made by the Sunday school connected with the Leytonstone Free Church during its first year deserves to be recorded. There are twenty-two members on the register, and the average attendance for the quarter just ended is fourteen, an encouraging number when one remembers that the church was only started a comparatively short time ago. During the year the school has affiliated with the London Sunday School Society, and, under the supervision of Miss Burt, entered for the Annual Singing Competition for Sunday School Choirs held at Essex Hall on April 27. The First Anniversary and Flower Service was celebrated on April 21, when Mr. A. Stephen Noel (Secretary of the London Sunday School Society), and the Rev. Bertram Lister (President of the Society), preached in the morning and evening respectively. From the first the members have had a desire to do some practical social work, and already this has resulted in entertainments and toy-collections for the slum children of Hoxton Market. A Guild has now been started of which Mrs. Bonner is president, and Miss Burt leader. Thanks are due to Mr. and Mrs. Bonner for their kindness in granting free use of the Academy premises in Fairlop Road for all the meetings of the school and Guild. Mr. Bonner, who shows his warm interest in the liberal religious movement at Leytonstone in many practical ways, has been elected Chairman of the Sunday School Committee. Miss Peterken is the Secretary.

Macclesfield.—A Social Gathering of the King Edward Street congregation was held last Saturday evening, May 11, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Winder to wish Godspeed to the Rev. J. Hipperson, who is leaving at the end of the month to join the R.A.M.C. Mr. Winder and Mr. A. E. Piggott paid high tributes to Mr. Hipperson's work during his four and a half years' ministry in Macclesfield and wished him Godspeed and an early return. He was then presented by Mr. Henry Rushton with a wrist watch and a wallet containing treasury notes.

Manchester: Fallsworth.—Twenty-eight new members have been welcomed into the congregation since last May, many of them Sunday scholars.—The Red Cross and War Comforts Bazaar, which was held under the auspices of the Fallsworth Society, realised the large sum of £2,300, a record event for the township, and it is gratifying to learn that all religious, political and industrial organisations worked together with the utmost harmony and goodwill to bring about this result.—Pte. J. Coates is reported to have been killed in action, and unconfirmed information of similar import has been received concerning Pte. Herbert Sellers.

Manchester: Moss Side.—Corporal Harold Lloyd, Manchester Regiment, an esteemed member of the Unitarian Church, with which he had been connected from boyhood, was killed in action in France on March 2, 1918.

Manchester: Pendleton. A Service of Commemoration was conducted on Sunday, May 12, at the Unitarian Church by the Rev. G. Randall Jones for Lieut. Alex. Duncan, Corporal Reginald South, and Private Herbert Smith, members of the Sunday school and congregation, who have fallen in the war.

Mossley.—The Sunday School Anniversary Sermons were preached on May 5, the Rev. G. R. Jones, Pendleton, officiating morning and evening, and the Rev. H. W. Callow, Congregational minister, Mossley, in the afternoon. The collections amounted to £70, an increase of £15 on the amount collected for many years.

Midland Guilds' Union.—The 4th Annual Meetings of the Union were held at the Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, on Saturday May 11. Over fifty members were present at the Business Meeting, when an interesting report was given of the year's work by the Secretary. The financial statement was very satisfactory, a balance of £5 being in hand. A series of short reports from the constituent Guilds was presented. Although some Guilds had ceased to meet owing to the difficulties of the times, others had continued as usual, and one had increased its meetings from monthly to weekly dates. The President, the Rev. H. Warnock (Walsall), and the Hon. Secretary and Treasurer, the Rev. W. G. Topping (Coseley), resigned their offices owing to the pressure of work, both being engaged in national service. A hearty vote of thanks for their three years of unremitting zeal was accorded them. The following were elected for the ensuing year. President: the Rev. H. C. Hawkins (Oldbury); Hon. Secretary and Treasurer: Mr. Gill (Birmingham); Vice-Presidents: Miss Twist, Mr. Colman, and the Revs. H. Warnock and W. G. Topping. After tea a large congregation assembled for the Annual Communion Service, which was conducted by the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, assisted by the Rev. A. H. Lewis. An address was given by Mr. Lewis.

Nantwich.—The Annual Sunday School Concert was held at the Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel on April 24 and 25. There was an excellent attendance on both occasions and the proceeds reached a record amount. The children, who had been trained by Mrs. J. Park Davies assisted by Miss Houghton and others, rendered a number of action songs and drills. Two plays were contributed by the teachers and senior scholars, one of which had been specially written for the occasion by Mr. D. W. Ross M.A., of Willaston School. The whole performance was repeated for the third time on May 8, and the proceeds were devoted to the Fund for providing comforts for our prisoners of war in Germany.

Oldbury.—The Unity Sunday School Anniversary Services were held on April 21 and April 28. Despite the heavy fall of snow throughout the first day the congregations were larger than usual, and appreciated the singing of the special hymns by the scholars and the anthems rendered by the choir of the church. The preachers were the Minister and Superintendent, the Rev. H. C. Hawkins, and the Rev. A. H. Lewis of Small Heath, on the first Sunday; on the second Messrs. J. Nicholls and H. Crabtree, Vice-President and Visitor of the Midland Sunday Schools Association. At the children's afternoon service seventeen certificates were distributed for regular attendance. The offertories exceeded the previous year by a large amount. The "Scholars' Own" offerings amounted to £2 11s., an increase of 17s. 7½d. over 1917. This is an encouraging feature of self-support by the children, who have during the year raised a total of £7 5s. 1½d. at Harvest Festival and other services.

Oxford.—In his sermon at Manchester College on May 5, Dr. G. Hawes Hicks, who took for his subject 'The Bondage of Human Lives,' said that many were held in slavery by the external conditions forged by the artificial contrivances of civilisation. Myriads of precious seeds that would have grown in rich soil had fallen in unfruitful ground; hundreds of possible poets had never sung their songs; hundreds of possible scientists had never had the opportunity to make their discoveries; and hundreds of possible statesmen had never had their voice in the government of the country. This tremendous mind wastage had been going on for centuries until now we are met on all sides with the demand to bring life up to efficiency. The fault was due largely to our inveterate habit of grouping men in masses. The type is dependent upon the single life. The terrible crisis through which the nations are passing had taught us many important things, but particularly it had brought home a realisation of the truth that distinguishes the Christian religion from any of the religions that preceded it—the principle of the infinite worth and value of each individual soul. Another truth brought home, and one charged with promise, was the greatness of our common manhood, and of unselfish devotion and obedience to duty such as had hardly been expected in former days. The main question was whether we could retain this great stream of moral virtue and self-sacrifice, consecrated to the service of the highest, when the hideous conflict was over.

Preston.—Last week the minister of the Unitarian Church (Lance-Corporal M. Rowe), who since his return from France has been retained on instruction work at the R.A.M.C. Depot, addressed a letter to members of the congregation and friends in the course of which he said: "The authorities have kindly permitted me to visit Preston and take services each Sunday whenever possible, so long as I am on duty here. From next Sunday, May 12, I hope to occupy the pulpit, and thus combine two tasks of national importance, the ministerial and the military.... I am looking forward to the pleasure of occupying my pulpit again for a time, and of being amongst you for a day each week-end." There was a good congregation last Sunday evening, when M. Rowe delivered the first of a series of addresses the titles of which include the following: 'The Army and the Churches,' 'The Value of Tommy's Criticisms,' 'Reconstruction in a New Spirit,' 'A Living Church in a Remodelled World.'

Stand.—The congregation of Stand Chapel has just sustained a serious loss in the death from wounds on May 1 of Second Lieut. Charles A. Jones, son of Mr. John Taylor Jones, Chairman of the Chapel Committee. He joined the Inns of Court O.T.C. in November, 1915, and after receiving his commission was posted to the A.S.C. (West Lancashire Territorial). He was transferred to the Manchester Regiment and was recently attached to the Royal Berkshires. Lieut. Jones was a Sunday school teacher, secretary of the Mutual Improvement Society, and a very willing cheerful sharer in the social activities of both chapel and school. He always exercised a healthily radiant influence. He is the tenth of the men of the congregation to fall, out of a Roll of 109. His younger brother, Second Lieut. Leslie T. Jones, has seen active service both in the East and in France.

Stannington.—The Sheffield Unitarian Monthly Record has drawn attention to the fact that Mr. Heber Revitt—a very old and faithful member of Underbank Chapel—composes verses, and that, although he is 77 years of age, he has written a lengthy poem in memory of those who have fallen in the war, of which two touching stanzas are quoted.

Walsall.—The death is announced, in the Unitarian Church Calendar, of Pte. Edward Davis of the 7th Leinster Regiment, who died in Amiens Hospital, on March 25, of wounds received in action. The Calendar also contains a letter from Sergt. Homer, formerly a teacher in the Sunday school, which is commended to any who may be inclined to doubt the value of church and school work. "No space of time, however long," he says, "can efface from my memory those cherished friends and those cherished lessons of life that were gained in the dear old Sunday school and chapel. We who are in this stern and grim struggle for the ideals of freedom we learned so well there are fortified and encouraged by your remembrance, and many lonely vigils are brightened and solaced by memory of the good old times we spent together. In the soft stillness of the night—broken by the roar of guns—we see again in imagination those dear faces we hope to see again soon, though some we shall never see again in this world. However their example and courage still remain with us to spur us on to victory. Never was our faith more necessary than now—when the mysterious ways of Providence seem more mysterious than ever—as we see the awful suffering caused by those who have disobeyed the laws that He has made. But amid all that is terrible and heartbreaking there shines the courage and devotion—the true Christianity—of those who are dying that we might live."

Wellington, N.Z.—The experiment is being tried at the Wellington Free Church of holding special Services of Fellowship. An encouraging number were present at the first one in February, and it was suggested that the services should be held monthly. No "attractions" were offered save that of simple human comradeship, and there is no sort of obligation on the part of members of the church to attend.

Wolverhampton.—The Sunday School Anniversary Services were held at All Souls' Church on Sunday last, May 12, the preachers being the Rev. J. A. Shaw, (in the morning and afternoon) and Mr. Norman Tiptaft (in the evening). The collections realised £19 7s. 6d., an increase of £8 on the previous year.

 * THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.

'THE PURCHASE POLICY.'—In connection with our remarks last week, the Rev. W. Whitaker emphasises the point that the chief "gains" hoped for by those who have long advocated the nationalisation of the drink trade are: (1) the abolition of "vested interests," which lead to corruption and political intrigues; and (2) facility to introduce reform in management.—Mr. F. G. Jackson points out that the present law and powers of the House of Commons would secure much reform if supplemented by vigorous administration.

Board and Residence, &c.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.—Board-residence. Meat ration supplemented by vegetarian dishes and country produce. Enquiries, which must be accompanied by stamped envelope, from Miss SMITH.

Situations, Vacant and Wanted.

SITUATION REQUIRED.—WORKING HOUSEKEEPER, or similar. Middle aged, healthy, thoroughly domesticated.—H. ELLIS, 10 Auckland Terrace, Kingston-on-Thames.

Miscellaneous.

BLOUSE LINEN. Fine Irish Linen for Ladies' Blouses, snow white, one blouse-length 4s. 6d., or three blouse-lengths for 13s. 3d., postage 5d. Send for Bargain List.—HUTTON'S 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

THAT OLD SET OF TEETH

You do not wear may now be worth up to £15 for the precious metals they contain. Send them to us. We will give you the highest possible value. Also buyers of gold and surplus jewellery. Offers made by return for goods sent by post. If offer not accepted, goods returned post free. Platinum Scrap £16 per ounce.

SATISFACTION ASSURED.

I. RAYBURN & CO.,
105 Market Street, Manchester.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

May

19. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.
26. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.
Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation. Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C.—FOUR LECTURES on 'ROMAN LAW AS COMPARED WITH ENGLISH LAW' will be delivered by W. BLAKE ODGERS, M.A., LL.D., K.C., Recorder of Bristol, on TUES., WED., THURS., and FRI., MAY 21 to 24, at 6 P.M. Free to the Public.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY. No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I. H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL. H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

PEARL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000
Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

BIRTH.

TARRANT.—May 10, to Arthur George and Jessie Tarrant, of Wandsworth, a son.

DEATH.

BOYS.—On May 14, Elizabeth Boys, widow of the late Jacob Boys, of 59 Grand Parade, Brighton, in her 94th year.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, May 19.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

Bell Street, Edgware Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. GOLLAND.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11. Rev. JOSEPH P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Dingley Place Mission, St. Lukes, City Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. WOOLEY.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11, Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE; 6, Rev. J. MACCARTHY, Ph.D., of Waltham, Mass.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND; 6.30, Mr. E. HAYNES.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. J. W. PETERKEN.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.

Rhyl Street, Kentish Town, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. ROSE.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. A. J. HOWARD HULME.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. Dr. CHARLES HARGROVE.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

Woolwich, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM; 6.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Room, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. H. E. PERRY.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DONALD B. FRASER.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. J. CYRIL FLOWER, M.A. (Anniversary Services).

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut.-Col. BULLOCK.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. RATTRAY.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. W. H. JACOBSEN; 6.30, Mr. W. NEWALL.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11, Miss A. MAUDE ROYDEN; 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. McLACHLAN, M.A. B.D.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. R. SCOTT.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A. B.D.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A. LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. A. FERGUSON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNEPEG, CANADA.

All Souls' Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

British & Foreign Unitarian Association.

WHIT-WEEK MEETINGS.

Tuesday Evening, 21 May, 7.30 p.m.

RELIGIOUS SERVICE

ROSSLYN HILL CHAPEL, HAMPSTEAD.

Preacher: Rev. ARTHUR W. FOX, M.A.

Wednesday Morning, 22 May, 10.30 a.m.

ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING.

ESSEX HALL. Report; Election of Officers and Committee; Resolutions and other business.

The President, Dr. CARPENTER, in the Chair.

Wednesday Evening, 22 May, 7 p.m.

PUBLIC MEETING, ESSEX HALL.

Addresses on

'The Power of Religion in Upbuilding the Life of the Nation.'

Speakers: Rev. Dr. CARPENTER, R. M. MONTGOMERY, Esq., K.C., Rev. BERNARD J. SNELL, M.A., B.Sc., and Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Thursday Evening, 23 May, 7.30 p.m.

ESSEX HALL LECTURE.

CLAUDE G. MONTEFIORE, Esq., M.A.

The Place of Judaism among the Religions of the World.

THE

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETINGS,

WHIT TUESDAY, MAY 21, 1918.

President: Mrs. W. BLAKE ODGERS.

At 10.30 A.M. BUSINESS MEETING and President's Address, followed by a Conference on 'THE WORK OF THE ASSOCIATION.'At 2.45 P.M. PUBLIC MEETING. Address by the Rev. H. McLACHLAN, M.A. B.D. (of the Home Missionary College, Manchester), on 'SOME NEEDS OF OUR TEACHERS.' To be followed by discussion.

The Meetings are open to all, Teachers and friends, as well as Delegates.

T. M. CHALMERS } Hon.
BERTRAM LISTER } Secs.

Essex Hall, London, May 7, 1918.

BRITISH LEAGUE OF UNITARIAN AND OTHER LIBERAL CHRISTIAN WOMEN.

ANNUAL MEETING,

ESSEX HALL, WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, at 3.30 P.M.,

Mrs. BLAKE ODGERS (President) in the Chair.

Opening Service conducted by Miss E. R. LEE.

Reports of League work, &c., followed by an Address on "OLD IDEALS AND NEW DUTIES," by Mrs. E. I. FRIPP.

All Friends cordially invited.

Central Postal Union and Unitarian Workers' Union.

ANNUAL MEETING

ESSEX HALL, Essex St., Strand, W.C.,

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 23.

Dr. CHARLES HARGROVE in the Chair.

2 o'clock. BUSINESS MEETING.

Presentation of Report and Election of Committee and Officers.

2.30. Address by Dr. PHILIP H. WICKSTEED ON

"Dante's Vision of Peace."

Friends and Supporters cordially invited.

NATIONAL UNITARIAN TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

will be held at

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX ST., STRAND, On FRIDAY, MAY 24, 1918.

THE PRESIDENT,

REV. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, D.D., D.Litt., will take the Chair at 4.30 P.M.

A CONFERENCE will be held at 6 P.M., when The Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A., will read a Paper on

THE RELATION OF 'ABSTINENCE' TO PERSONAL CHARACTER."

Constable & Company, Ltd.

By Edmund G. A. Holmes.

THE PROBLEM OF THE SOUL

Crown 8vo, paper, 1s. 3d. net; cloth, 2s. net.

A Tract for Teachers.

"Provocative both of thought and of controversy.... A brilliant contribution to educational thought."

Times Educational Supplement.

WHAT IS AND WHAT MIGHT BE

New Cheaper Edition. Paper, 1s. 6d. net; cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

THE TRAGEDY OF EDUCATION

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

Ready Shortly.

THE SECRET OF HAPPINESS

By A Clutton-Brock.

THE ULTIMATE BELIEF

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

STUDIES IN CHRISTIANITY

[In preparation.]

ADOLESCENCE

By STEPHEN PAGET. Paper, 7d. net; cloth, 1s. net.

AND BEHOLD WE LIVE

Papers by a Wounded Soldier. Edited by the Hon. and Rev. CANON JAMES ADDERLEY, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. net.

"This friendly direct personal story shows the Church its deficiencies and its needs more effectively than many a more pretentious discussion of 'Lessons of the War.'"

Times Literary Supplement.

BEYOND THE RHINE

By MARC HENRY. 6s. 6d. net.

Memories of Art and Life in Germany.

"The most readable volume of the kind we have come across in the last four years, and one incomparably superior either to the uncompromising denunciation of the 'secret history' and 'Court memoirs,' which form the stock-in-trade of most contemporary writers on the subject.... M. Henry knows his Boche."—Globe.

THE VICTIMS RETURN

By NOELLE ROGER. With an Historical Note by EUGENE PITTARD. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

A moving and graphic account of the flight of French refugees into Switzerland.

REMNANTS

By DESMOND MCCARTHY. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

Chapters on a variety of themes.

"These sketches have atmosphere, character, and savour, and were well worth reproducing in book form." Glasgow Herald.

MOTLEY, AND OTHER POEMS

By WALTER DE LA MARE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

A new volume of verse including a selection which has been printed only in a limited edition issued by the Beaumont Press.

A NEW STUDY OF ENGLISH POETRY

By Sir HENRY NEWBOLT. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"The conspicuous virtue of these lectures is their breadth of outlook allied to catholicity of taste and the keenest interpretative faculty."—Daily Telegraph.

POEMS BY ALAN SEEGER

With an Introduction by WILLIAM ARCHER. Second Impression. 5s. net.

THE LETTERS AND DIARY OF ALAN SEEGER

Containing a Photogravure Portrait of the Author. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

COLLECTED POEMS OF HERBERT TRENCH

Fcap. 8vo, 2 vols. 10s. 6d. net.

These two volumes contain forty new poems and the only existing correct text of the author's previous poems, every other edition of the latter being now out of print and unobtainable.

LONDON: 10 ORANGE STREET, W.C.2.

GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN, LTD.

PROBLEMS OF THE PEACE.

By WILLIAM HARBUTT DAWSON, Author of "The Evolution of Modern Germany."

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"A notable book, possibly the most notable of all the many which have appeared in this country dealing with the terms of settlement."—New Statesman.

A New Volume in "The Library of Philosophy."

THE ELEMENTS OF CONSTRUCTIVE PHILOSOPHY

By J. S. MACKENZIE, Litt.D., Hon. LL.D., Emeritus Professor of Logic and Philosophy in University College, Cardiff. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

"We compliment Prof. Mackenzie on the production of a book which has in the truest sense what its title indicates, the elements of construction." Glasgow Herald.

ESSAYS IN SCIENTIFIC SYNTHESIS

By EUGENIO RIGNANO. Translated by W. J. GREENSTREET, M.A. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The biologist, psychologist, historian, the economist and "the man in the street" will each find something of vital interest in this volume.

WE MODERNS:

Enigmas and Guesses.

By EDWARD MOORE. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d. net.

A series of aphorisms and reflections in radical criticism of modernity from the standpoint of an ultra-modern, with particular reference to Morality, Art and Literature.

PRISONERS OF HOPE

By Prof. A. S. PEAKE, M.A., D.D. Crown 8vo. Paper Covers. 1s. 6s. net.

The Author believes that the cause of the Allies is righteous, but recognises that the views of the conscientious objector to military service should be placed in a true light.

THE MAKING OF WOMEN:

Oxford Essays in Feminism.

By A. MAUDE ROYDEN and others. Edited by VICTOR GOLLANCZ. Second Impression. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

"A brilliant book. It is undoubtedly one of the most serious and responsible contributions to an entrancing subject which has been written." The Common Cause.

Ruskin House, 40 Museum St., London, W.C.1.

Transactions of the Unitarian Historical Society

Contents.

APOLOGY FOR THE NONCONFORMIST ARIANS OF THE 18TH CENTURY. Fred J. Powicke, Ph.D.

THE OLD NONCONFORMITY AT NORTON, DERBYSHIRE. II. Christopher J. Street, M.A., LL.B.

THE ORIGIN AND HISTORY OF THE OLD MEETING HOUSE, ABERDARE. Rees Jenkin Jones, M.A.

THE DEEDS OF WESTGATE CHAPEL, LEWES. R. M. Montgomery, K.C.

THE CHURCH BOOK OF THE GENERAL BAPTIST CHURCH AT TURNERS HILL AND HORLEY. W. H. Burgess.

AN HISTORICAL LEGAL DECISION.

NOTES AND QUERIES, &c.

Subscribers to the Society receive a Free Copy.

5 ESSEX STREET, LONDON, W.C.

Unitarian Historical Society.

A PUBLIC MEETING

Will be held on WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, at 4 P.M. at ESSEX HALL,

when a Paper on the

OLD MEETING HOUSE, BANBURY,

will be read by

Dr. AMHERST D. TYSEN.

Chairman—JOHN C. WARREN, Esq., M.A.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION,

22 Northumberland Avenue, London.

Founded by the late Mr. G. R. Jesse in 1875.

The Society offers to send a LECTURER free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenæum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate, Saturday, May 18, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3960.
NEW SERIES, No. 1063.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 25, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

THE WIDER CIRCLE	161
OUR MESSAGE TO OUR TIME	162
BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSO- CIATION	163

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION	164
BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	165

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY	165
SOUTHERN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION	166
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	166

THE WIDER CIRCLE.

WE do well at all times to remember the full width of our circle, but especially when those who visibly represent it are necessarily fewer than in happier days. If numbers are small, the significance of great aims and ideals remains undiminished. If the reports printed by our various societies are inevitably reduced in bulk, that is no token—or need not be—of slackened effort. And, certainly, the abbreviated accounts of the Whit-week meetings which are all that we can give this year, will not be taken by the wise as indicating a waning interest. Ill would it be for us as a religious people if we did not realise, in common with all serious persons, the deepened needs of men at this time, the greatly increased gravity of to-day's moral and social problems, and the urgent call for faithful service in whatever special duty devolves upon us.

There was a suggestive arrangement in the later Temple services by which the wider circle of Israel was brought to mind. In addition to the presence of officials who took an active part in the ritual for the day, certain "standing men," we are told, attended in turn, as representatives of the whole people. Thus, any devout minded Israelite who was prevented by accident or necessary business from wending his way to Zion's Hill had the comfort of feeling that the "standing men" stood for him among the rest; while (let us hope) these in their turn, in spite of the deadening effect of use and wont, really felt conscious of their own vicarious significance. In some such way, the few who have been able to attend the meetings and the many who have not may still realise their oneness of spirit. The soldiers and sailors, organisers and workers in other branches of national service, and, not least, those who much suffering absent themselves awhile from public gatherings, will know that their assembling brethren have not forgotten them. On the contrary, it is just in so far as the wider circle is kept steadily in view that our "standing men" rise above fussy small-mindedness into the abundant life of the fellowship as a whole.

Indications of this heightening vision have assuredly not been lacking during the week; and as it closes we are impelled once again to lift our eyes towards horizons far beyond the limits of sect or party. For is it not true that, as in every sect and party there are, we know well, people just as sincerely attached to the cause of truth and right and goodness as we ourselves try to be, so the ties of the spirit permeate on every side till they establish a communion wide as the world? It is, indeed, a special piece of work that our group of churches has to do, both to break down and to build up, but we should be most untrue to our special duty if we did not clearly recognise, and unwearingly point out to others, that differences of creed should be no bar to religious fellowship. Let us add, the more emphatically just because of the immediate temptation to feel otherwise, that differences of nationality should be no bar to human fellowship. It is wickedness that prevents fellowship in either kind. We must see to it that the wickedness is not ours.

ANY lingering hesitation as to alleged "peace offers" which may have survived recent Parliamentary utterances must surely have vanished after Mr. Wilson's emphatic words on the subject last week. The President has probed the matter thoroughly, and declares that in his opinion no sincere offer has yet been made by the Central Powers. There is nothing for it but to convert them by defeating them soundly.

THE important re-statement of "objects" by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, adopted on Wednesday, is worthy of the attention of all our friends, but especially of those who are rightly zealous to guard the congregations against dogmatic trusts and limitations. The change, as Mr. Montgomery pointed out, only brings to explicit statement the principle upon which the Association has hitherto shaped its policy. We quote, therefore, the words of the first clause of the Rule: "The diffusion and support of the principles of Unitarian Christianity, including the formation and assistance of congregations which do not require for themselves or their ministers subscription to any doctrinal articles of belief."

* * *

CANON GLAZEBROOK, replying to his Bishop's letter, referred to in these columns last week has quoted from the Bishop of Oxford himself—lately so orthodox as against Dr. Hensley Henson—to show that considerable latitude is allowable in regard to the "historical" clauses in the Apostles' Creed. Moreover, the Canon finds some support in the recorded expressions of Convocation and the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Bishop of Ely says he will undertake an examination of his Canon's arguments by and by. Meanwhile, what a pity it is that good men have perforce to say things which, in the ordinarily accepted sense, they do not mean.

* * *

LAST March died in her 70th year Mrs. Celia Parker Woolley, of Chicago, a woman truly memorable in her own country, and certainly not to be without tribute in this. She was already in middle age when, after long journalistic experience, she became minister of a "liberal" congregation. Six years later she took a bolder step still, the courage displayed being properly appreciated only by those who have lived in a land with two strata of inhabitants, such as the whites and the blacks. Mrs. Woolley started a Centre (named after Frederick Douglass) for religious, social and educative work and fellowship among the negroes, and the rest of her life was given to this noble service.

* * *

IN connection with an interesting communication sent from France by our Editor, the Rev. W. H. Drummond, as a greeting to the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, some portions of which we hope to present next week, Dr. Carpenter mentioned that the Rev. H. Gow, of Hampstead, is expecting shortly to cross the Channel for some months' service similar to that of Mr. Drummond.

[THE "INQUIRER" WILL BE INCREASED BY FOUR PAGES NEXT WEEK IN ORDER TO INCLUDE REPORTS OF VARIOUS MEETINGS.]

OUR MESSAGE TO OUR TIME.

By the Rev. A. W. FOX, M.A.

THE Annual Service of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association was held at Rosslyn Hill, Hampstead, on Tuesday evening. The Rev. A. W. Fox, of Todmorden, who conducted, preached the sermon given below.

"With freedom did Christ set us free: stand fast therefore, and be not entangled again in a yoke of bondage."—Gal. v. 1.

For bondage put creed or dogmatic system however dilute, and the result will express clearly one side of our distinctive message as Unitarian Christians. The other side I shall try to develop no less clearly.

All of us had hoped that by this time the horrors of war would have found their slow but sure healing in peace. We had looked forward to meeting this year in quiet joy, not untinged with sadness, leaving the past behind us as a hideous nightmare, looking to the future with the settled determination of moving onward towards the Kingdom of God. Our "dear boys"—all that are left of them—are preparing to go to the front, most of them are at the front already. Those who are there are enduring untold hardships for you and for me. Are we worthy of them? Are we preparing worthily for the home-coming of those who are left, as our bounden duty calls us to do? Are we ready to make severe sacrifices for our simple faith, to keep our work going and increasing, that our land may be happier and holier for them on their return? Are we determined to shake off all indifference to worship, Sunday by Sunday, wet or fair, to take our places in the school, to proclaim our message with burning zeal and tireless enthusiasm, or are we to rest content with simply marking time in our religious work?

We are a small body of small churches more or less loosely knit together by certain vital common principles. Our faith is free—free from the bondage of creed or dogmatic test, free from intellectual hindrances to holy living, free from the iron dogmas of a slowly corrupted Christianity, free to move forward in unfettered Christian discipleship in endless progress. Are we doing our utmost to share our freedom with others, or leaving them to find their way thither by themselves and unaided? Are we flashing the torch of truth and freedom across the dark waters of life's troubled sea, or resting secure in sheltered harbours? Do we realise that a religious movement which is not aflame with missionary enthusiasm is slowly dying, if not dead already? Are we as resolute, as we ought to be, in demanding from others that intellectual veracity so precious to ourselves, which is to the full as vital as emotional sincerity? Are we to suffer the proclamation of ambiguous explanations of plain dogmatic statements of belief without one word of determined protest?

Had St. Paul moved about saying, "There is much truth in Shammai, in Hillel, in Gamaliel, in Plato," where would Christianity have been? Had he used old formulæ coupled with mental reservations in dogmatic matters not understood by his hearers, had he been devoted to eclecticism instead of to truth, once more, what influence could he have exerted upon the religious progress of the world?

He was the Apostle of liberty: but he never mistook liberty for licence, as sometimes happens within our ranks, never dreamed that the cause of truth could be won without persistent conflict. That other supreme thinker of the early days represents Jesus as saying, "The truth shall make you free." In our insistence upon freedom we sometimes forget the vital importance of the truth. Yet we believe, do we not, that our God has committed to us purer and clearer truth than to others? Is it, then, a time to hold our peace, when thought is bursting the old barriers and eagerly welcomes any genuine guidance? We need to wound no one willingly; we need only the weapons of reasoned argument and loving persuasion, with the "sword of the spirit, which is the word of God." We are called to help others to fling off the yoke of ancient bondage, to bid them come along with us to the free service of our common Father. I regard with grave misgiving an attempt of some amongst us to insist upon a return to sacramentarianism, to fasten a new, if lighter, yoke of dogmatic bondage upon the souls of the men and women of the future. I speak in all gentleness: but we have suffered too much in our age-long battle for freedom to accept willingly any diluted orthodoxy in the future. A free atmosphere does not accord with orthodoxy of any kind, religious, social, or political.

Truth in its fulness does not lie in the way of any dogmatic orthodoxy, however simple its dogmas may be. For the rest of us, bound together as we are by certain principles constantly growing in breadth and depth, while we need to guard our freedom, we need to be true to our principle. We need to fling off a certain shyness, a certain exclusiveness, which have afflicted us too long. We need to "cry aloud, and spare not." If our civilisation is to be reconstructed on the only enduring basis of religion, we need to unfold the new heavens of our simpler faith, if a new earth is to take the place of this dogma-weary world. Our God in His gracious goodness has committed to us certain principles containing the seed of endless growth. We are confident that they can exercise a mighty influence for the well-being of others. We need, then, to take our light from under the bushel of false modesty, to let it shine to the glory of God. We need to be baptised with the living fire of a missionary spirit. We do honestly try to live out our faith. We must do more, we must share it with others.

I am not stressing the need of controversial preaching, though the day for that is not over yet. The method may be different; but the need of clearing away error is ever-present. We are prone to exaggerate the signs of growing liberalism in the rank and file of orthodoxy. The vast majority of our church-going fellow Christians is far more orthodox than we are willing to imagine. Many of the theological colleges are backward in thought. A sacerdotalist sacramentarianism almost Roman in kind is the dominating influence in the Anglican Church. I say nothing of our universities: they are a little world in themselves. But I do say that we cannot judge of the rank and file who do care from a handful of leaders, or from the great mass of those who do not care. Yet we are constantly making that mistake. I live and work in a town remarkably free from the sectarian spirit, where I am welcomed as a preacher in many denominations. But that does not blind me to the need of persistently preaching the positive principles of our simple faith, plainly but with tender consideration for others. Nor am I afraid of calling that faith by the one name, which covers all of its varieties, the name Unitarian, which I use in no narrow or negative sense, nor would force upon any one.

In a few words let me set forth the principles which have been and are the inspiration of my life, which I commend lovingly to others that a like inspiration may be theirs. To me, as I have learned from Jesus, there is one God our Father, one in person, one in being, one in will, one in power, one in love, to whom all of His children can come directly in prayer, to whom He reveals Himself directly in communion and through conscience. Such a God Jesus worshipped himself, taught us to worship, to love with our whole being, to serve continually with all our powers. Such a divine Father implies a genuine brotherhood amongst all nations and all individuals. I say a real and living brotherhood, since the sacred word is often used as a glorified mask for sectional selfishness. Such a brotherhood has never existed universally, certainly does not exist now. But it will exist one day, and we can hasten its coming.

What old-fashioned platitudes, I seem to hear someone say! The truth is old and new; but it is truth—that is what matters. It is old because Jesus taught and lived it: it is new because it has been rather the badge of a banner than a law of conduct. Who will dare to say that the brotherhood of man rules all lives, to say that such a principle is untrue? Until it is practised faithfully, it remains new.

Add to these two principles two more, the possibility and actuality of communion with God, and immortality, and we have the essence of our message at this time. Communion with God includes salvation by character, the only kind which Jesus taught—"By their fruits, ye shall know them." Our four principles do not differ, I say it in all humility, from the teaching of Jesus. They may differ from some of the Pauline speculations, which lie at the root of many present-day orthodoxies. But Jesus is our Teacher, not Paul, great and glorious as the Apostle was. In addition to this, it is well to remember that Christianity is not merely personal religion, but religion centred upon a person. The teaching of Jesus is no mere centre of ethical precepts gathered into a system like the work of Marcus Aurelius. It is that; but it is far more. It is pure spiritual and ethical teaching flowing from a perfectly pure spiritual and ethical soul. Believing Jesus to be, as Mr. Thom has said in effect, "God's ideal man born into the world to shew all what they are called to be," we long to approach that ideal sonship, which he has revealed to us, whereby every son of man can be like him a son of God. Man he must have been, else we could not be his disciples, attain his sonship.

Jesus as a living man shewed us the divinity of humanity. We long to be like him, to develop the divine within each one of us. That is where the personality of Jesus is of such importance to us, why it counts so much in our personal religion. Our leader, our example he is: but he remains our brother, "bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh, tempted as we are, but without sin." He calls us to live the life he lived, if need be to give our life for others. Hence we are not, like some of our fellow-Christians, anxious to save our own souls first. Those we leave to God our Father. We seek humbly to follow our Master in "saving our lives by losing them" in loving service. That was the essence of his life, that ought to be the essence of ours. That is the one pathway of true discipleship, the one way of winning the hearts of men and women to such lives as children of God were destined to lead, as they will lead one day, when the "kingdom of God" comes in every human soul. These are the principles of our message, joined to that noblest freedom which consists in giving up our own wayward will to the service of God in the service of man. They are not cast in adamant; when higher are found, we will accept them gladly. In the meantime we will try to live up to them.

It is a kind and loving message sorely needed by this troubled world. It is hindered by no creed, no theological test. We close our churches to none; while we try to persuade others to think with us, we leave them free to judge for themselves. As Unitarians we refuse to suffer the imposition of tests upon ourselves, nor do we impose them upon others. In this way we leave room for all to grow toward perfection by communion with God and the service of man. We are open to receive revelation from the four winds of heaven, holding that

The Lord hath yet more light and truth
To break forth from His word.

But we realise that perfection of character is the ideal in life, that its real touchstone is unselfish service. Such a message, I repeat, is sorely needed in these woeful days. Had its principles been the laws of human life, this hideous war could never have come to pass. Without them any lasting reconstruction, religious, social, moral, political, will be but as the shadow of a dream. Unless they form a part of every human life, we have small security against the repetition of the present horrors. They are real religion, which is of little worth unless it be life itself, life in, life with, life for God, lived in the willing service of man.

Any scheme of reconstruction based upon selfishness national, international, or individual is foredoomed to failure. We can help to prevent any such failure, if we will be true to our message, and make it heard from one end of the land to the other. We must live it: yes, but that need not hinder us from proclaiming it to others. We need to be "instant in season and out of season," to plead with others to shake off the yoke of dogmatic bondage. We need to be more genuinely democratic to welcome in warm brotherly kindness all comers into our churches. Our Master was a carpenter; who are we to act with condescension to his brothers and ours? We need to train our children first in the home, then in the school, to be true citizens of the Kingdom of God. We need to point out errors of thought kindly and lovingly, but with unflinching firmness. We need to bring home to others the truth that life is not served by creeds or dogmas, but by unfeigned brotherly conduct. We need above all to pray to God our Father to help us. In the olden times our forefathers, of whom we are reasonably proud, held family prayers in the home. I plead for the old custom, which lifted the hearts of the worshippers into communion with God.

If we are true to them, to ourselves, to one another, to our God, we shall be able to welcome home our "dear boys" with no qualms of conscience. Their terrible experience will have branded upon their souls the need for a real and living religion unfettered by ancient dogmas and outworn creeds. We can offer them and others a religion to live by, a religion which robs death of all terrors. But we need to bestir ourselves, to be less content with "the day of small things," to remember that not liberty alone demands our sturdy support, but that intellectual truth must be preached fearlessly and fervently, so that emotional truth may be guided and made strong. With my whole heart I plead for renewed missionary activity, for a quenchless enthusiasm in drawing others to our simple faith. Our land has need of it. Every congregation may be a missionary centre to the lasting good of our land to its own measureless advantage. We are few: but the first Christians were fewer, and see what they achieved! May our God put it into our hearts to realise the supreme value of our message, to utter it fearlessly to a suffering world waiting for the blessedness of its healing power.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meeting of the Association was held on Wednesday morning, May 22, Dr. Carpenter, the President, occupying the chair. The report was taken as read.

Dr. Carpenter, in moving its adoption, referred to the impressive testimony borne by the Roll of Honour hung in the entrance to Essex Hall, which records the names of those who have fallen in the war, to the sacrifices made by Unitarian churches and homes. Over six hundred of our brave young men had laid down their lives, and they saluted their memory with the deepest reverence and respect. The expenditure of the Association had increased by £900, one of the most interesting items being the £290 for war bonuses to ministers undertaken in connection with the Sustentation Fund. In regard to publications, Dr. Carpenter called special attention to the two books by Dr. Drummond on the Parables and the Lord's Prayer which have recently been published, and the 'Psalms and Canticles' prepared by the Rev. V. D. Davis. It was a matter for disappointment that the preparations which were made for co-operative or concerted action in the matter of local conferences during the autumn and winter had not been carried out. The conference organised by the Liverpool District Association, which was held at Southport, had proved such a success and was felt to be so helpful in a time of exceptional strain and anxiety that he hoped the arrangements which fell through last year for various reasons will be carried out this year. The report of Lawrence House showed how much its hospitality was appreciated by men on their way to or from the front. The value of the Rev. T. P. Spedding's work among the men in the Home Camps could not be overestimated. It was very arduous, involving long journeys, but his warm, brotherly sympathy had been fully appreciated by those whom he had been able to visit. To him had also fallen the task of organising the distribution of The Bulletin which had been posted to over 6,000 men on active service. In conclusion Dr. Carpenter quoted the following paragraph which closes the Report: "A sifting process is at work among men and nations; and sooner or later the chaff will be blown out of the churches as well as out of human life. The hour of danger and difficulty is the testing-time of our principles and of our constancy in upholding them; in that hour the courageous spirit and the wide vision are most surely needed. In the immediate future, unless people are reading the signs amiss, a free religious faith, with reason at its roots and reverence in its heart, will have new opportunities in the world; and larger obligations will consequently be thrust upon all who cherish an unfaltering trust in God, and who are inspired by an unconquerable love of righteousness and goodwill among men. But we have to remind ourselves, again and again, that righteousness and goodwill do not find their way into the minds and hearts of men unbidden: every one who desires their triumph in the world must beckon them, cherish them, and labour for them."

The Rev. Cyril Flower seconded the adoption of the Report, at the same time taking the opportunity of paying the earnest tribute of one of the younger men in Unitarianism to the value of Dr. Carpenter's teaching and influence, his tireless labours on behalf of the Association, and the affection which he inspired. He ventured to raise one single point of criticism on the ground that no definite denominational action had been taken at the time of the passing of the Man-Power Bill. He had himself welcomed the fact that men of all professions were to be definitely called upon to give their services in the national cause, and profoundly regretted that ministers and clergy had since been exempted. In view of the difficulties which this position produced it would have been of the greatest help if the Association had given to ministers of military age some definite guidance.

Mr. G. R. Armstrong referred to the admirable services which had been rendered by Mr. Spedding during the latter part of 1917 at Moss Side, Manchester, where, by his efforts, the congregation were stimulated to make a fresh start and a minister was appointed. He described the position at Longsight, where the same kind of help is urgently needed, and expressed the opinion that these cases were typical of the kind of work waiting to be done by the Association. It would enable a fresh start to be made by congregations with a past, and possibly a future, which were in danger of being extinguished by the difficulties of the war, and needed just the kind of help which a central organisation like the Association could give them. The Rev. A. W. Fox strongly supported this plea.

Mr. Percy Preston presented the treasurer's report, and announced that Mr. Brown, who took up the work of treasurer temporarily on the death of Mr. Howard Chatfield Clarke, was to be relieved of his duties by Mr. Harold Wade later on.

The Rev. W. G. Tarrant moved a vote of thanks to Dr. Carpenter for the services rendered by him as President. They had had in him, he said, an unusual President, and what they wished to express would be felt throughout the country. It was difficult to imagine what new worlds there were for Dr. Carpenter to conquer, he had held so many offices, but he had an inordinate passion for work, and they hoped he would be spared for many years to serve their cause by word or pen. The Rev. W. Jellie seconded the resolution, which was supported by Dr. Blake Odgers, and formally put by Mr. E. M. Montgomery, K.C., as Chairman of the Executive, and carried with acclamation, those present rising from their seats with prolonged applause.

The President made his acknowledgment in characteristically modest terms, expressing his desire to still help the Association as opportunity served. He said he had received a letter of greeting from the Rev. W. H. Drummond, which he proceeded to read. Mr. Drummond is now the leader of the biggest Y.M.C.A. hut in France, and speaks in glowing terms of the work which he is able to accomplish there and of the wonderful response made by the men with whom he comes in contact to the message of liberal religion. Dr. Carpenter added that he was rejoiced to hear that the Rev. Henry Gow was shortly going to undertake similar work in France.

The President then moved that Mr. Richard D. Holt, M.P., be elected President for the ensuing year. It was interesting to recall that his great-grandfather, Mr. Richard Potter, was one of the earliest presidents of the Association as far back as 1834. Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P., seconded the motion which was adopted. The officers were then elected, and a resolution adopting the revision and amendment of the Rules of the Association recommended by the Executive Committee was also moved by Mr. Montgomery, K.C., seconded by Dr. Hargrove, and passed.

Resolutions expressing thanks to the local treasurers for their success in obtaining subscriptions and to the congregations for collections made on behalf of the missionary work of the Association; and to the Rev. Arthur W. Fox for the Anniversary sermon preached at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, were submitted by the President. In regard to the former Dr. Carpenter took occasion to pay a tribute to the memory of the late Mr. Howard Chatfield Clarke and Mr. Charles Hawksley. A further resolution conveyed the greetings of the Association to the American Unitarian Association, and expressed gratitude to the President of the United States for his vindication of "the principle of justice to all peoples and nationalities and their right to live on equal terms of liberty and safety with one another, whether they be strong or weak."

It had been objected by many in the United States when he was there two years ago, Dr. Carpenter said, that President Wilson had not yet given the word for America to enter the war, but it was now better realised what enormous difficulties he had had to face. When at last America did come in, the President was able to appeal to the loftiest and most unselfish ideals. He has said that he would never have entered a selfish war, and he brought his country in purely for the sake of liberty and peace. His pregnant hint that he would not abandon Russia any more than he would abandon France encouraged the hope that by the end of the war circumstances will be such that we shall be able to free that hapless people from the grip of the Central Powers.

The Rev. F. H. Kent, of Grafton, Mass., responded to this resolution in the most cordial terms, emphasising the fact that the two countries represented by the British and American Unitarian Associations had now been brought into contact with each other in a way that would have been impossible had it not been for the war. He drew the most hopeful auguries also from the fact that in the United States all nationalities are now fused into one common brotherhood, bound together by one common aim, bringing the time nearer when all countries would share the same aspirations and co-operate in perfect harmony. Dr. Wilson had done more to realise this vision of the future than a hundred years of peace had accomplished, and if it were true—as had been remarked to him by an English member of parliament—that America always produced a great man at every crisis of her history, it might also prove to be true that President Wilson was the greatest, in view of the vast numbers of men of all nationalities ranged together under his leadership. Mr. Kent urged that very much might be done to develop the sympathy and good understanding between the people of America and of Great Britain if some of those who lived near camps where American men are now in training with English troops—and they were coming over in numbers which would surprise them if he could reveal the facts—would give hospitality to these men as occasion offered. They would prove acceptable guests, for they represented every profession, some of them being the finest products of the Universities, and if they did not recognise the distinctions between officers and men as English people did, or observe the same customs, they would be very glad to have an opportunity of finding out what was best in English life, and of learning why those customs, unfamiliar to them, were followed by people who were fighting for the same cause as themselves. In conclusion, Mr. Kent spoke of the breaking down of the barriers between religious bodies which is resulting from the challenge of the soldiers themselves, and which is so significantly seen in the ranks of the Y.M.C.A., and pointed out that Unitarians, as a religious body with no fences to remove and no doctrinal fetters to hamper them, have a great opportunity before them if they would prepare for that fellowship, wide as humanity, of which we are receiving the vision at the present time. Lieut.-Col. Bullock added a few stirring words, exulting in the fact that the British and American flags now flew proudly together.

A resolution in support of the League of Nations was proposed by the President and passed; and a resolution, of which Mr. J. C. Warren had given notice, instructing the Association not to appoint delegates to attend the Conference provisionally summoned by the Scandinavian prelates, which was seconded by the Rev. Cyril Flower, was discussed with some warmth. Among the speakers were Mr. H. G. Chancellor, Mr. G. Armstrong, Dr. Herbert Smith, and the Rev. H. Dawtrey. The President pointed out that the Committee had received no official notice of such a Conference as was referred to in Mr. Warren's motion, and he believed no decision had as yet been arrived at in regard to its scope or details. In the end the "previous question" was proposed, and being carried by a large majority the resolution was not put. The proceedings then terminated.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

THE Annual Meeting of the Sunday School Association was held on Tuesday morning, May 21, the President, Mrs. Blake Odgers, in the chair. After opening prayer the statement of accounts was presented by the Treasurer, Mr. H. Wade. The income and expenditure approximate very closely to the figures of the previous year. A considerable increase occurred in the delegates' travelling expenses, showing that much useful activity had taken place.

The Secretary, the Rev. Bertram Lister, presented the report, which, like other reports at this time, had been kept as short as possible. Subsequent speakers amplified the bare statements made in it regarding publications, the Endowment Fund, scheme for the foundation of a Convalescent Home for men at Great Hucklow as a memorial to those of our communion who have fallen in the war, the work of the sub-committee on Propaganda, and the new scheme for the training of teachers. In regard to the latter, the work is already in progress, the first thing to be done being the preparation of a Teachers' Register, which should prove of great use. Mr. Lister spoke of the inspiring character of the conference held at Great Hucklow, which was called by the Manchester District Association to discuss the proposals for the Convalescent Home, and of the cordial sympathy existing between our own Sunday School Association and the corresponding Association in America. There had been an exchange of books, though a number of those sent out from this side had never reached their destination, and others were going to be forwarded to replace them.

Mrs. Blake Odgers formally moved the adoption of the reports, and the Rev. H. Perry, in seconding, emphasised the necessity of making the teachers' training scheme national in its scope and of fostering the religious life of our own people, for which purpose the Association was in existence.

The President then extended a cordial welcome to delegates, friends, and teachers, whose presence, she said, was all the more valued owing to the difficulties of travelling in these days, and the fact that London is not the happiest place to visit at the present time. Speaking, not as a Sunday school worker herself, but, as Mr. Bodell Smith said later, from the point of view of a parent, realising the vital importance of the religious training of young minds in the home no less than in the Sunday school, Mrs. Odgers laid particular stress upon the great task of building up character which is the object of Sunday school activities. More than anything else they wanted to teach children to love goodness and to obey the voice of God in their hearts, and the key to the most abiding results was through personal influence and example. This they should find first of all at home, but, if it was lacking there, then at the Sunday school. That help should be given which the child wanted and for which the need was frequently expressed in questionings that parents so often ignored or discouraged. She hoped that when the raising of the age-limit for boys and girls leaving school had been effected they would be able to keep them longer as Sunday scholars also. In regard to the question of propaganda, while she wanted to make children good more than she wanted to make them Unitarians, she felt that they should be trained in the right atmosphere, and taught the faith which had such a direct bearing on life and conduct, which feared no new revelation, and which was found to stand firm even amidst the shocks and horrors of the present war.

The adoption of the report was carried unanimously.

The Rev. H. Bodell Smith moved the election of officers, and expressed the gratitude of the Association to Mrs. Blake Odgers for the efficient way in which she had served their cause as President during the past year. Mr. F. D. Bowles, J.P., C.C., of Hackney had been nominated President for the coming year. The Rev. Morgan Whiteman seconded the motion. The Rev. Cyril Flower supported the resolution, which was carried.

Acknowledgments were made by Mrs. Blake Odgers and the new President, and Mr. Wade then gave some details about the effort to raise an Endowment Fund, which would enable them to meet the expenses of the work they had planned without approaching from time to time a few liberal friends. Only a private appeal had been made so far, but this had resulted in £3,406 being promised, of which £3,226 had been already received, given by a number of generous donors. A public appeal would be made later, but no date could be fixed for this in view of the war situation. Meanwhile new subscriptions were required, and many who were subscribers already had expressed their intention of raising the amount of their contributions. Mrs. Travers Herford urged that if Sunday school collections were not taken for the Association it would be a good thing to adopt this plan, with a view to increasing the interest in its work which the scholars would probably feel if they had a direct share in supporting it, and did not receive all it had to give them without making any return. This suggestion was supported by Mrs. Bloure and referred to the Committee for consideration.

The Rev. J. A. Pearson dealt with the Sunday School Monthly, and announced that an interim hymn-book containing a hundred hymns (price 3d. and 6d.) would shortly be issued pending the preparation of the larger hymnal, which was being delayed owing to its scope and the difficulties of the time. This little book would meet a very urgent need, and as 10,000 copies were on order, it would soon be unnecessary for any Sunday school to be obliged to go outside their own body for a hymnal for common use.

Miss Francis, Secretary of the Propaganda Sub-Committee, gave an interesting account of the circumstances which had led to its formation.

In the absence of the Rev. C. Peach, the Rev. T. P. Spedding explained the project, originating with the Manchester District Association, for founding a Convalescent Home at Great Hucklow for sailors and soldiers, primarily of our own body, who have been discharged from the army, as a memorial to those of our own communion who have fallen in the war. It had been felt that it was better for our gratitude to find expression in a national manner than in smaller memorials which might be got up locally all over the country, and it was fitting that the name of Florence Nightingale should be given to the home. A house has already been purchased in the neighbourhood. There, early in the summer, it is hoped, convalescents discharged from the forces may be received pending the building of the new home, and Mr. and Mrs. Peach will act as Warden and Matron. The sum of £10,000 will be needed for this scheme, of which £5,000 is to be invested. The object for which this money would be required was one which would appeal to everybody, and the success with which the initial appeal for donations to the Endowment Fund had been met, Mr. Spedding said, made him sanguine that money would be as gladly given to raise this memorial to the fallen.

The last speaker was Mr. Chalmers, Joint Secretary of the Sunday School Association, who, in a short address on the 'Future of the Sunday School Association,' gave his hearers much food for thought, as usual, though it was not possible to do more than touch on a few aspects of this wide subject. They were, he said, in a sense trustees of the future for the young people, and he regretted that the Association was not more frequently consulted in regard to the education of those young people. If the Sunday schools were to continue their work would depend upon the churches, and the life of the churches depended upon their pioneer work. It was their business to be pioneers. Any ecclesiastical union that was talked about must be based upon the free choice of the individual, and any idea of their giving up their special work for the point of view that differences of opinion were dangerous was out of the question. Another point was that the whole teaching of the Sunday schools and the churches should be centred in the definite historical personality of Jesus, freed from all the stories which had grown up around his name and surrounded it with so many spectacular accessories that the man himself was in danger of being forgotten. If they went back to the past for inspiration—to mediæval times, for instance—let them beware of taking from the past what was not suited to the thought of to-day. Let them take what was best from the Middle Ages—the childlike faith in the presence of the Unseen which was characteristic of that age, without accepting the fairy tales that eclipsed the divine power.

A few words by the Rev. H. Dawtrey, who spoke of the great work before the Society in training children in those principles which would diminish the menace of war, brought the meeting to a close.

AFTERNOON MEETING.

An extremely practical and stimulating address on 'Some Needs of the Sunday School Teacher' was delivered by the Rev. H. McLachlan. The supreme need of the teacher, he said, was effective training—and needs must be distinguished from wants, or desires. He hoped that after the war summer schools would be held more frequently, and in Manchester as often as in Oxford. He also wished to see a closer connection between our Colleges and our Sunday schools, which would probably result in more candidates coming forward for the ministry. Popular lectures might also be arranged, and the various societies and unions which are now so isolated aroused and given more work to do. Mr. McLachlan advocated a better system of advertising the Society's publications. Other suggestions were made relating to the need of a liberal commentary of the Bible, particularly of the New Testament, in a cheap form; of better methods of instruction and an improvement of equipment; of the co-operation and sympathy of the ministers, and of the desirability of including training for teaching in the curriculum of the theological colleges, relieving the staff sometimes from being overworked by obtaining the help of men and women interested in art or science or literature who would be very glad to give series of addresses on their own subjects. The war had really revived interest in the great fundamental question of religion, and it was for them to respond to the call of the hour. They must try to direct the magnificent loyalty which our men had shown to their country to the living gospel of Christ.

The Rev. J. W. Saunders opened the discussion, in which the Revs. A. W. Fox, H. Bodell Smith, Cyril Flower, Dr. Carpenter, Mrs. Bloure, Miss Johnson, and others took part. Referring to the plea which had been put forward for a commentary on the Bible, or, at least, the New Testament, in harmony with modern liberal thought, Dr. Carpenter recommended those present to study the two books by Dr. Drummond which have just been published, and in which the teaching of Jesus, including the Parables and the Lord's Prayer, are expounded in beautiful language, giving the true spirit of Christianity. He would like to see those volumes go into every home, rich and poor alike, throughout the country. Opinions seemed to be unanimous as to the active part which ministers must play in training and organising the Sunday school teachers. A very hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. McLachlan for his admirable address.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

172ND LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,490	17	4
Mr. F. Maddison (37th)	0	10	0
Miss A. Fricker, Trinidad (20th)	1	0	0
All Saints' School, Islington, per Robert Bates, School Secretary (5th)	0	3	6
Mr. and Miss Hirst (28th)	4	4	0
West Grove Women's League, Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox (34th)	0	9	0
M. l'Abbé Nizet (3rd)	0	9	0
Haverstock Central Girls' School, per Miss M. E. Surrage (26th)	1	12	0
Mr. H. Woolcott Thompson (22nd)	100	0	0
J. G. F. (7th)	1	1	0
Effra Road Unitarian Church, Brixton, per Miss L. Martineau (3rd)	5	4	0
Liverpudlian (11th)	25	0	0
	£20,630	9	10

Parcels have been received from: Old Meeting House, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Mrs. James Harwood; Lewin's Mead Domestic Mission Girls' Sewing Class, Bristol (per Mrs. Gaylard); High Pavement War Relief Committee, Nottingham (per Miss Guilford); Mrs. Robinson.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THE verses "Your King and Country need you (August, 1914)," by Lady Agatha Russell which appeared in THE INQUIRER some time ago, have been printed on a card which can be obtained from R. F. Hunger, 310 Euston Road, London, N.W.1, price 1d. (8d. per dozen). The proceeds will be given to the British Red Cross Society.

THE Rev. Samuel A. Eliot, D.D., has been elected President of the Religious Education Association of America. The Association includes in its fellowship all religious bodies, evangelical and liberal, Protestant and Catholic, Christian and non-Christian. Both geographically and in the scope of its interests, it is one of the largest religious associations in America.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

THE Annual Meeting of the London District Unitarian Society was held at Essex Hall on Thursday evening, May 16. Dr. Herbert Smith, President, in the chair. In view of the Government appeal for economy it had been decided that nothing more than a list of subscribers should be printed this year. Mr. Alan Forbes, the Acting Secretary, read the annual report, which showed that good and faithful work had been done in spite of the stern conditions of the moment, although the Committee had "no romantic story to tell of spiritual adventure, new enterprises undertaken, and striking results achieved." What may happen to some of the churches which are assisted by the Society is uncertain, but the fact that they have real vitality, though their numbers may be small, encourages hopefulness. The most noteworthy change has occurred at Woolwich, where suggestions were made early in the year that an amalgamation might be arranged between the Unitarian Church and a liberal congregation, an offshoot from a local Congregationalist Church, in the interests of good fellowship and economy. It was pointed out very emphatically by various speakers in the course of the meeting (including Mr. Hancock, Chairman of the Unitarian congregation) that this amalgamation was spontaneously desired and thought out by the two bodies concerned, without any attempt whatever being made from outside to bring about such a union, although the London District Society, when appealed to for advice, cordially approved of the scheme, and were willing to render any assistance in their power. The report, in commenting on the happy result which has been achieved, says: "The officers appointed are representative of both sections, which are in complete harmony, and for the present the ministerial arrangement is that Mr. Smith, the pioneer preacher who was in charge of the one time Liberal Congregationalist section, is at the head of the united body. We congratulate our friends on the good spirit which has brought about this result, and express to them our confident anticipation that in union they will find increasing strength."

At Acton, which had to face the withdrawal of the grant from the Sustentation Fund and the resignation of the Rev. H. C. Horsley, the Rev. Gardner Preston has now undertaken ministerial charge of the congregation, thus relieving the congregation of great anxiety, and it is hoped that brighter days are in store under his experienced leadership. At Lewisham, where the Rev. A. H. Dolphin has succeeded the Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope, there is an increase in the attendances, and the Committee records with much satisfaction that a heavy mortgage upon the buildings, which was held by the late Sir Edwin Durning Lawrence, has been most generously cancelled by Lady Durning Lawrence, who has made a further gift of £150 to effect some necessary repairs. The Rev. J. A. Pearson is still taking charge of the services at Kilburn, a readjustment of his work which has been rendered easier as so much missionary activity must, of necessity, be suspended during the war. His services are greatly valued by the congregation, who have gone far during the year towards extinguishing a debt of £200. The Rev. R. Travers Herford's work at Peckham is still having excellent results, and an appeal will shortly be made for a fund to meet the expense of urgently necessary repairs. The report states that at Kentish Town, Finchley, Kilburn, and Mansford Street there has been a substantial increase in subscribing members, and pays a tribute to the admirable work of the Pioneer preachers at Walthamstow, Stratford, Forest Gate, and Woolwich. Hearty good wishes are accorded to the Revs. W. H. Stephenson and Thomas Munn who have been appointed ministers at Stamford Street and Brixton respectively. We must pass over for want of space the sympathetic references to the resignation of the Rev. F. Summers, and the great loss sustained by the Society through the death of Mr. Howard Chatfield Clarke, Mr. Charles Hawksley, the Rev. T. E. M. Edwards, Mrs. Shannon, and Mrs. Taylor, and other matters of interest. The report ends with these words: "In conclusion, we desire to give voice to the common pride in the young men who on the battlefield are serving the same cause of which they were a strength in the Churches, to our thankfulness to God for their willing self-sacrifice, while at the same time we pay our reverent tribute to the memory of those who have fallen."

Mr. Taylor, in presenting the financial report, which shows a considerable falling off in income due to many causes, stated that, notwithstanding these serious times, he had enrolled twenty-five new subscribers. It is a regrettable fact that the amount from collections has diminished by over £3. The report of the Minister, the Rev. J. A. Pearson, was, as usual, characterised by the note of earnest religious zeal and unabated optimism. The bulk of his work is now done at Kilburn, Leytonstone, and South Norwood, but he contrives to keep in touch with many other churches, and his sympathy and help are valued by them all. He alluded with special pleasure to the fulfilment of a long-cherished desire in the inauguration of Saturday afternoon conferences at Ilford. Leytonstone and Stratford soon followed the example of Ilford, and on the previous Saturday the friends at Parson's Hill held a meeting at which seventy people, representing six denominations, were present. Mr. Pearson hoped that this movement would grow. He was looking forward, he added, to a renewal of all the old activity after the war, for there were vast areas of population which were not served by any of our churches. That our religious and educational work was of real national importance was becoming more and more evident every day.

Dr. Herbert Smith, in moving the adoption of the reports, alluded in specially appreciative terms to the support which Mr. Howard Chatfield Clarke and Mr. Charles Hawksley had given to their cause. He believed that the war was going to be the salvation of the country after all, and that if they could only look forward, say, forty or fifty years, they would realise this better. They were already seeing the effect which it was having upon life and ideals, and he ventured to think that the people at home had a very different outlook upon things now to what they ever had before. In the future all questions of social reform would be approached from an entirely different standpoint, and religious difficulties, also, would be handled in a way quite different to anything they would have experienced if the war had not taken place. Their young men were, by their sacrifices and death, bringing about the very state of things for which we believe they would have been working if they had lived. The motion was seconded by Mr. Gibbard, and passed unanimously.

Mr. Fyson moved the election of the officers and Committee for the ensuing year, Mr. Arnold Tayler seconding, and a very cordial vote of thanks to Mr. Alan Forbes for the efficient way in which he had carried on the work of Secretary in Capt. Ronald Bartram's absence, and to Mr. Taylor for his zeal in obtaining new subscribers and facing the financial difficulties so hopefully, was proposed from the chair, seconded by the Rev. A. A. Charlesworth.

SOUTHERN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE forty-first Annual Meeting of the Association was held at St. Thomas's Chapel, Ringwood, on Thursday, May 16, the President, Mrs. Cogan Conway, in the chair. The day was fortunate in perfect weather, as it was on the last occasion when the Association met at Ringwood, in the summer of 1912, when the preacher of the annual sermon was the Rev. Dr. S. M. Crotters of Cambridge, Mass. This year the attendance was not so large, owing to the difficulties of travel and the stress of war-time, but a happy spirit of fellowship pervaded the gathering, and in the town itself there had been a gratifying mark of friendliness, for the meeting had been announced from the pulpit both of the Wesleyan and the Congregational Chapel, and bills put up on their notice-boards. Members of both congregations were present at the evening service.

The chief matter recorded in the annual report was the united effort of the series of Sunday evening addresses on 'Religion and National Reconstruction' given simultaneously by the ministers of the district, each in his own pulpit. The addresses had been well advertised and a special leaflet had been widely distributed making the announcement and giving particulars as to the Association and the churches, but the result, so far as reaching a wider public was concerned, had been very disappointing. Only in one instance, at Wareham, had there been any marked increase in attendance, and that, as a matter of fact, was to be put down not so much to the special subject as to the general revival of interest in the congregation due to the devoted work of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Stephens. Some mitigation of the disappointment was found in the fact that the addresses at Southampton were reported in the local Times and at Bournemouth in the Echo and Guardian, and in the undoubted interest and success of the week-night discussions of the subjects after each of the Sunday addresses, at Portsmouth and Poole.

The Rev. W. G. Tarrant attended the meeting as representative of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and in response to a resolution of welcome and grateful acknowledgment of the "counsel, the constant sympathy and generous support" received from that Association, made a cordial and helpful speech.

The regret of the Association was expressed to the Rev. J. Ruddle in his relinquishment of the ministry at Newport, with an assurance of the warm regard in which he is held by fellow-workers in the district and their gladness that he is still to remain in their midst. The officers and representatives of the Association were reaffirmed, including Mr. Ruddle as Hon. Secretary of the Sunday School Union. A further resolution welcomed the formation of a Lay Workers' Union in the district, of which Mr. Herbert Carter is President and Mr. Edward Lanham, Hon. Secretary. The thanks of the Association were given to the lay preachers, and especially to Mr. and Mrs. Stephens for their services at Wareham, and to Mr. S. C. Ryley for his at Emerson Hall.

After tea in the schoolroom, with an overflow of the young people into the chapel-yard, the evening service was held, conducted by the Rev. H. S. Solly, when the annual sermon was preached by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant. His first text was Job xxxii. 8: "There is a spirit in man, and the breath of the Almighty giveth them understanding," to which Luke xi. 13 was added, and the sermon was a quiet and forcible appeal for the recognition of the reality of the deeper aspects of our life, and the gifts of inspiration which come to us direct from God.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Banbury.—A United Intercession Service was held on Whit Sunday in the People's Park, attended by a large gathering of all the Anglican and Nonconformist churches of the town. The service was conducted jointly by the vicars of the two parishes, the ministers of the Wesleyan, Baptist, Primitive Methodist, Congregational, and Unitarian (the Rev. Percival Chalk) churches, by Mr. W. C. Braithwaite of the Society of Friends, and the local Captain of the Salvation Army.

Dewsbury.—The Annual Sale of Work in connection with Unity Church was held on Saturday, May 4, being opened by a former member of the congregation, Mr. Arthur W. Firth. The minister, the Rev. John W. Maw, presided. The Sale was reopened on Tuesday, May 11, by Miss Dorothy Hemingway, the Chairman being Mr. E. D. Gaunt. Entertainments were given by the children and young ladies of the Sunday school under the able direction of Miss Ledgard. The sale realised £210, a gratifying result of much hard work on the part of those responsible for the effort.—The death is announced of Private Harold Idle of the Royal Engineers, from wounds received in action in France last month. Mr. Idle was a former scholar and teacher of the Sunday school and did splendid and devoted work as Sunday school Secretary.

Dissenting Ministers of Warwickshire.—The Monthly Meeting of Protestant Dissenting Ministers of Warwickshire and Neighbouring Counties held their 823rd meeting at the Warley Institutional Church, kindly lent for the occasion to the Oldbury Unitarian Church, who were the hosts. A number of the members and their wives spent an enjoyable afternoon in the country. The meeting after conducting its usual business passed a resolution of sympathy with the Rev. Joseph Wood, in the loss of his eldest son, Mr. Arnold Wood, of Birmingham. The Rev. S. Mossop (Handsworth) opened a discussion arising out of a paper read at the previous meeting by Miss Bowler on 'What We Want from the Ministry: a Lay View.' After a very able address a brisk discussion followed in which the Revs. I. Wrigley, J. M. Whiteman, J. M. Lloyd Thomas, and H. C. Hawkins (chairman) took part; the opener replying after tea. The Rev. G. H. Smith voiced the thanks of the visitors to the Oldbury and Warley congregations for their hospitality.

Liverpool: Hope Street.—Last Sunday morning Miss Maude Royden occupied the pulpit. Liverpool has a deep interest in the Royden family. Sir Thos. Royden, father of Miss Royden, was one of the members of Parliament for the city. Apart altogether from local associations Miss Royden has made her own public position. She has become one of the leaders of the women's social and political movement; and it is well known, of course, that she is a co-pastor at the City Temple, London. Miss Royden does honour to the pulpit. She attracts by reason of the possession of natural gifts. Her voice, style, and self-command render great assistance. She preaches as one deeply impressed with the significance of the action. On Sunday morning Miss Royden spoke on 'The Understanding of God.' She placed under review certain aspects, misplaced and mistaken, generally adopted. The question of weather, the problem of war, were cited as illustrations. There was the case of a certain minister who suggested prayers for an atmospheric change—it was in an agricultural district. One of the congregation muttered: "No use while the wind is in this quarter." Miss Royden believes in the immanence of the religious spirit, and because of this she feels she can afford to treat men and women as really spiritual beings. Perhaps her conviction explains much of her success. It may be added that the seating capacity of the church was taxed to a degree, and Hope Street Church is not a small one.

Manchester: Blackley.—The Annual Whit Sunday Scholars' Festival held at Cross Street Chapel in connection with the Manchester Sunday schools proved once again a splendid success. The weather was ideal and the assembly in consequence very large. The children's hymns were most beautifully sung. The Rev. J. H. Ewbank delivered the address. The children's choir was conducted by Mr. Sam. H. Whittaker, and Miss Edna Barratt was the soloist. Mr. Oliver A. Heys presided at the organ. Miss N. Nichols, the Secretary, and the Committee are to be congratulated on the success of the event.—The chapel Anniversary Services were held on Sunday, May 5, the preacher being the Rev. Sam Crook, Willert Street Mission. In the afternoon the choir performed a cantata.

Mottram.—The Sunday School Anniversary Services in connection with the Unitarian Church were conducted on May 12 by the Rev. H. E. Haycock of Urnston. There were large congregations, and the collections amounted to nearly £20, a considerable advance upon last year.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—At a meeting of the Women's League held in the Church of Divine Unity on Monday, May 13, Dr. Lillie Johnson was elected to succeed Mrs. Alfred Hall as President. Other officers and a committee were also elected and it is hoped that the work of the League will be carried on and extended.

St. Helens.—On Saturday, April 27, a Sale of Work was held at the church, having as its object the raising of funds to meet the cost of necessary renovations and repairs to the church, to assist the Sunday school in the matter of better equipment, and to create a nucleus for a Building Fund. This is the first effort on sale of work lines ever made by the St. Helens congregation. The newly-formed Women's Society was responsible for the work which was put in, and entered into it with spirit and enthusiasm. The total receipts, including donations, reached £70. This being an initial effort the preliminary outlay was rather heavy, but when expenses had been met some £40 was allocated to the various objects. The Sale was declared open by Mr. Harold Coventry of Wallasey, who spoke in optimistic terms about the future of Unitarianism and liberal religion generally. The Rev. J. Horace Short, minister of the church, presided. Several friends from the Liverpool churches were present. After evening service on Sunday, May 19, the congregation passed a resolution of protest against the harsh punishment meted out to Mr. Arnold Lupton in the six months' imprisonment which he is at present undergoing. It was urged that some account should be taken of Mr. Arnold Lupton's lengthy and honourable public service and that he should be released forthwith. The terms of the resolution were forwarded to the Prime Minister, the Home Secretary and Mr. Rigby Swift, St. Helens representative in Parliament.

Stockton-on-Tees.—The 230th Anniversary Services in connection with the Unitarian Church were held on Sunday, May 12, The Rev. Alfred Hall of Newcastle preached morning and evening. The usual Anniversary Conversation was held on Monday, May 13, when the Rev. J. G. Lambeth of Middlesbrough was present and made a short speech. The minister, the Rev. Arthur Scruton, expressed regret that Mr. W. J. Watson, J.P., was unable to be present and take the chair as he has done at these meetings for many years.

Woolwich.—'The Message and Work of our Churches To-day' was the topic discussed at a Conference of Neighbour Churches, arranged by the Woolwich congregation, on Saturday, May 11. The Rev. J. Arthur Pearson presided, and friends were present from Lewisham, Bermondsey, Forest Gate, Stratford, and Woolwich. The chairman pleaded for a deeper earnestness in our religious life, and subsequent speakers, including Dr. Lionel Tayler, Dr. F. H. Hayward, and Mr. Fred W. Dalley (Assistant General Secretary of the Railway Clerks' Association) spoke of the necessity for studying tendencies and taking cognisance of realities, of individual responsibility in regard to reconstruction, and of the problems which are not the result of the war, but upon which the war has thrown a fierce light. The last-named, in a clear and able speech, dealt with the dehumanisation of industry and made a strong plea for the abolition of the wage-system. Between man as a casket of so much labour power and man as the temple of the Holy Spirit, only one decision could be made.

* THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.

* Secretaries of churches which publish Calendars are requested to send the Calendars regularly, and as soon as possible after publication, to the Editor.

DEATHS.

DAVISON—At 6 Chalcot Crescent, Regent's Park, N.W., on Whit Sunday, Margaret, only surviving daughter of the late Rev. David Davison, in her 90th year.

HIGGINSON—On May 17, at 105 Park Street, St. Kilda, Melbourne, Edward Hill Higginson, elder son of the late Rev. Henry Higginson, Minister of Melbourne Unitarian Church, aged 66 years.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, May 26.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

Bell Street, Edgware Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. GOLLAND.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11. Rev. HENRY DAWTREY, B.A.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Dingley Place Mission, St. Lukes, City Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. WOOLEY.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL: 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 6.30, Rev. Dr. F. W. G. FOAT.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. H. G. CHANCELLOR, M.P.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.

Rhyl Street, Kentish Town, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. ROSE.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Rev. A. H. DOLPHIN.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. JOSEPH P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

Woolwich, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11, Mr. JOHN BEGG; 6.30, Mr. JOSEPH P. ROSLING.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. H. JOHNSON, B.A.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. R. F. RATTRAY.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Room, Downing Street, 11.30, Miss E. ROSALIND LEE, B.A.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DONALD B. FRASER.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut.-Col. BULLOCK.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. C. S. JONES, M.A., J.P.; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. MCLACHLAN, M.A. B.D.

MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. R. SCOTT.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A. B.D.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church High Street, 11 and 6.30.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. LEE.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. D. DAVIS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. A. FERGUSON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fishguard Street, 11.

WINNEPEG, CANADA.

All Souls' Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

May

26. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.
Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.
Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation. Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION
OF VIVISECTION,

22 Northumberland Avenue, London.

Founded by the late Mr. G. R. Jesse in 1875.

The Society offers to send a LECTURER free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDOCASTLE, F.S.I.	L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL.	H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
	H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low, Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Transactions of the Unitarian Historical Society

Contents.

APOLOGY FOR THE NONCONFORMIST ARIANS OF THE 18TH CENTURY. Fred J. Powicke, Ph.D.
THE OLD NONCONFORMITY AT NORTON, DERBYSHIRE. II. Christopher J. Street, M.A., LL.B.
THE ORIGIN AND HISTORY OF THE OLD MEETING HOUSE, ABERDARE. Rees Jenkin Jones, M.A.

THE DEEDS OF WESTGATE CHAPEL, LEWES. R. M. Montgomery, K.C.

THE CHURCH BOOK OF THE GENERAL BAPTIST CHURCH AT TURNERS HILL AND HORLEY. W. H. Burgess.

AN HISTORICAL LEGAL DECISION.

NOTES AND QUERIES, &c.

Subscribers to the Society receive a Free Copy.

5 ESSEX STREET, LONDON, W.C.2.

LINDSEY PRESS PUBLICATIONS

Cr. 8vo, Cloth, 2 vols., 8s. net, postage 6d.

THE WAY OF LIFE :

New Testament Studies.

By JAMES DRUMMOND, LL.D., Litt.D.

Vol. I. THE PARABLES OF JESUS. Vol. II. THE LORD'S PRAYER AND THE TEACHINGS OF JESUS.

"They are scholarly expositions, in the first place setting Christ's teaching in its original light, then modernising it, and finally applying it practically to the life of to-day. Essentially Scriptural in treatment, acutely reasoned, and felicitously expressed, they exhibit generally a sane outlook and a well-balanced grasp of truth."—Scotsman.

Fcap. 8vo, Cloth, red edges, 1s. net, postage 2d.

PSALMS & CANTICLES
FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP.

Compiled and Edited by V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

The Psalms and Canticles are gathered from many sources, ancient and modern. They are arranged according to subjects, irrespective of age and origin.

LINDSEY PRESS, ESSEX ST., STRAND, W.C.2.

Postage is saved by ordering through a Bookseller.

3s. net, postage 3d.

OUT OF THE HEART OF THE STORM.

Twelve Sermons preached at Rosslyn Hill Chapel Hampstead, and Manchester College, Oxford.

BY

Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

The sermons are written by one who believes with President Wilson that "right is more precious than peace," and that no personal sorrow or loss should discourage us and turn us from our firm resolve to overthrow the Prussian autocracy. They are written too in the growing confidence that faith in God and in the supremacy of Love has become more and not less possible and real through the conflict and agony of recent times.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY.

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,

Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

Board and Residence, &c.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.—Board-residence. Meat ration supplemented by vegetarian dishes and country produce. Enquiries, which must be accompanied by stamped envelope, from Miss SMITH.

Miscellaneous.

MUNSTER SUITING, pure wool and worsted for ladies' and gent.'s wear, 56 inches wide, 16s. 6d. per yard. Suit length, 3½ yards, for 57s. Send for Bargain List.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT. Cash or offer by return. Before selling make sure of their value by writing for FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any artificial teeth.—E. LEWIS, 29 London Street, Southport, Lancs. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000

Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

* * * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2;
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines extra lines 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenaeum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate, Saturday, May 25, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3961.
NEW SERIES, No. 1064.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 1, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	169	CORRESPONDENCE:—	BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	176
THE SOCIAL GOSPEL OF STOPFORD BROOKE	170	Where is the Religious Centre?	LAY PREACHERS' UNION	177
HALLOWED GROUND	171	An 'Index Commendatorius'	THE WOMEN'S LEAGUE	177
HARD SAYINGS IN THE TEACHINGS OF		THE REV. W. H. DRUMMOND IN FRANCE	THE TRIUMPH OF LIFE	177
JESUS	171	175	NATIONAL UNITARIAN TEMPERANCE ASSO-
RELIGION AND UPBUILDING	172	BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—	CIATION	177
THE LIBERAL RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT IN		Inside the British Isles	UNITARIAN HISTORICAL SOCIETY	178
ITALY	173	THE CHURCH AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOL	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	178
THE PLACE OF JUDAISM AMONG RELI-		176
GIONS OF THE WORLD	174	THE POSTAL MISSION
		176

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

WHILE we are once more called upon to display the very little bit of courageous effort and steadiness required of the home people while the great and critical battle is renewed in France, let us wholeheartedly acknowledge our incalculable debt to the soldiers of different lands who are fighting and suffering in our behalf and that of humanity. With sorrow and with triumph we think of their valour, their sufferings, and in so many cases their death. Not in vain, please God, shall they or we pass through this agony. Meanwhile, shall we not recall the fact that, whatever serious turn the military situation may take, our country is really in a marvellously favourable position in many ways. The food problem, difficult as it is, appears to be on the way to approximate solution; we are told that some four-fifths of the needed supplies will be home-produced this year—thanks in no small part to the cultivators of allotments. Mr. Prothero has assured these auxiliaries to the farmers that their holdings will be secured to them at least till 1920; we hope many will remain in their possession and cultivation permanently. The profits are far from being merely material. And one more excellent reason for thankfulness is the fact, just made known by the Food Ministry, that since rationing was introduced the death-rate has been the lowest on record in recent years.

* * *

MR. GEORGE BARNES, M.P., on Wednesday unveiled a Scroll of Honour which had been placed in the Board Room of the General Federation of Trade Unions, as a tribute to the Treasurer, Col. John Ward, M.P., and to the members who have been killed or wounded in the war. Col. Ward, said Mr. Barnes, realised from the first the tremendous issues of the war and took up military duties at once, as a humanitarian necessity; and the example set by him pointed out the only possible way towards securing liberty for mankind.

THE warning given by Mr. Henderson with respect to the dangers besetting the Education Bill is one which we must take seriously to heart. Speaking as a Labour man, Mr. Henderson expressed the strongest possible desire that the prospects of the next generation shall not be blighted by the selfishness of a comparatively few employers. One of the disadvantages of Mr. Fisher's measure is that every one speaks well of it, and a notion has in consequence sprung up that it is sure to get through Parliament. But there are ominous signs that, in the interests of trade, a resolute attempt will be made to strike out or disastrously minimise the provisions for continued education after school age. It is again pleaded, as in the old factory legislation struggle, that British industries will be killed if deprived of cheap young labour. The crippling that is already suffered through the war must, it is urged, be redressed as soon as possible. Granted, but it must not be at the expense of the higher life of the people. If we needed new incentives to this resolve we have them in the continued and increasing evidence that at present there is widespread deterioration, mental and moral, among the young, and if it is worse, apparently, in Germany, that is no comfort to us. Mr. Fisher must be vigorously supported, especially in view of the crowded Parliamentary programme.

* * *

THE case of the Friends' Service Committee, three members of whom, including the Chairman and Secretary, have been heavily sentenced at the Guildhall for contravening a regulation issued under the Defence of the Realm Act is still sub judice, an appeal having been lodged. The reported facts, however, are of grave importance, and should at once be carefully noted and very carefully considered by our readers. The Committee, claiming to act on behalf of the whole Society of Friends, published a pamphlet entitled 'A Challenge to Militarism,' without printing on it the name of the author or submitting copies to the Press Bureau, contrary to the regulations. The pamphlet deals with the subject of conscientious objectors, and 80,000 copies are said to have been printed. The Society declares that its members "desire to be law-abiding, and are only impelled to refuse to carry out Government regulations when vital principles are at stake"; they recall the fact that 12,000 of their body were imprisoned in the seventeenth century because of their fight for religious liberty, and point out that thousands of men have joined the army in the conviction that "they were fighting for liberty against the nation which exalted the State as a God"; and they feel bound in this matter to obey "the guidings of God rather than the regulations made by the Government." The magistrate accepted the imprint of the Committee as sufficient in regards to authorship, but in view of the refusal of the defendants to submit future publications to the Censor inflicted severe penalties, as stated above.

* * *

AMONG the favourite jokes relating to soldiers and their "religions" is one which tells of a certain Unitarian who was let off church parade one Sunday morning because there was no place of worship of his persuasion to which he might go; the sequel being that a surprising number of his comrades were converted to Unitarianism before the next Sunday came round. The Times reviewer, noticing the publication (referred to some months ago in our pages) by the Walthamstow Antiquarian Society of a monograph dealing with the Rev. Eliezer Cogan's connection with the town, quotes an anecdote of Benjamin Disraeli who, as many of our readers know, for several years attended the school kept by Cogan. The story goes that Disraeli went with the Church boys to St. Mary's, instead of the Meeting House in Marsh Street of which their master was minister. The Church service being long, and the boys generally late for dinner, Disraeli suggested they had better all become Unitarians for the term of their school life.

* * *

IN accordance with a commendable habit recently set up by some leading newspapers, articles now appear on the eve of the chief days in the ecclesiastical calendar, and last Saturday we noticed several dealing with the Trinity. We have, of course, no word to say against attempts made by the various writers to deepen and widen the sense of that Divine Life in which our mortal lives subsist; and if we cannot but observe their peculiar difficulties in trying to set forth the doctrine of the Tri-unity we are at the same time quite conscious that the attempt to set forth any precisely defined theory of that Life is beset with difficulties inherent in the subject and our limited intelligence. We notice, indeed, that one of the more thoughtful of the writers pleaded for modesty and reticence in expressing the Christian belief as to the Godhead; but, oddly, he seemed to forget that these are just what is lacking in the Athanasian Creed, which on every great Church day is still hurled at heretics with such audacious arrogance. We observe, also, a complete silence respecting the actual course of the growth of the Orthodox dogma; one would think all had developed as naturally and quietly as a flower opens. Would it not be instructive to many such writers and their readers if we could get into their hands such short but enlightening account of the matter as is given in the late Mr. Hugh Stannus's 'History'?

* * *

THE book by the late Dr. Silvanus Thompson, 'A Not Impossible Religion,' which we mentioned in a recent issue, is thus commended by The Modern Churchman to the readers of that magazine: "It builds a bridge between traditionalism and modernism. It presents a faith which is as far removed from 'cheap and flippant unbelief' as from 'earnest credulity.' We might cite a hundred passages," continues the editor, "but have limited ourselves to four, which present in vigorous and uncompromising language the ideals for which The Modern Churchman has contended for the last seven years, but in more measured terms." The four passages respectively assert an undogmatic Christianity, the faith taught by Christ himself—not that about Christ which his followers have taught, the natural humanity of Jesus—as opposed to the doctrine of the Virgin Birth, and condemn the "materialism" of current sacramental teaching. Our readers will no doubt observe the suggestion of the Rev. W. C. Hall, in a letter to us, that we should set up an 'Index Commendatorius,' to include works of this kind written by non-Unitarians for the general public. If we could be sure the general public would be sure to follow our 'Index' we should be happy to see the adoption of the suggestion; there is nothing much, we suppose, in telling Unitarians where to find a little more Unitarianism.

* * *

READERS will observe with interest the communication sent by our Editor, the Rev. W. H. Drummond, to the Association meeting last week, and will heartily rejoice in the abundant work he is doing and congratulate him on the abundant energy he has for it. So important and engrossing, indeed, has it proved that he hopes to extend the period of his stay in France, if the necessary arrangements can be made.

THE SOCIAL GOSPEL OF STOPFORD BROOKE.

IN common with many others, I believe, I am greatly indebted to the 'Life and Letters of Stopford Brooke,' by Dr. Jacks, especially in regard to the Social Gospel which is here presented to us. Stopford Brooke's first curacy was in a more or less slum parish of Marylebone, which he held for about two years. He spent his days in visiting the poor, in distributing soup and blankets, and he preached from time to time to a congregation "mainly composed of old women in quest of charity." In the evening, however, he was the guest of the fashionable world of Piccadilly and St. James's. It was a startling combination, and it taught him much. His pastoral work at this time was his one real vital contact with the under-dog whose lot he could not but contrast with that of the beau monde with whom his evenings were usually spent, and this stirred in him a passion and enthusiasm for social redemption which remained with him throughout life. He was deeply moved by the sordid and degrading conditions under which the poor are compelled to live in our great cities, especially by the laborious and monotonous drudgery of the women and mothers. He held that at no period of the world's history had such woeful and tortured lives been lived as these. Soup and blankets went a very little way to meet the situation. He became more or less socialistic in his sympathies, and so remained for the rest of his life, though he was by nature an aristocrat and an aesthete who kept the poor and the sordid and the ugly at a somewhat distant remove. He realised that side of Christ which the artist loves to contemplate, but not that which associated him with lepers and outcasts, which made of uncultured fishermen his intimates and disciples, and hung him between two thieves on a malefactor's cross, with Gehenna in prospect. On the other hand, since the poet can see "a world in a grain of sand," so it is not to be doubted that to the fine perceptions and imaginative vistas of a Stopford Brooke one single case of abject poverty or of cancer would bespeak and reveal the tragedy of a world. And he had a heart to feel all human woes.

What was his Gospel, and what were its social implications? It was a very simple one—the Fatherhood of God, the leadership of Christ, and a strong faith in the Life Immortal. This remained always the groundwork of the life of Brooke, and it was his social gospel too. Not the most hideous of social conditions—and he realised that for multitudes of men social conditions were hideous enough—not the maddest and most frightful of wars could shake that faith. Love was at the heart of things. Men were brothers. Christ was the Way of the Perfect Life. And those who loved would meet again and share together in a more blessed life the life that knows no end.

This gospel is unsurpassable. It merely needs to be carried out. It is the gospel the world needs to day. If God is our Father, then all men are brothers; work that out and you will fashion the millennium. If Christ is the Way of the Perfect Life, the following of that way would redeem men and nations. And if all men have immortal souls, they should so live, and work under such conditions, and be provided with such a standard of life, that they may have the fullest opportunities of realising their divine and eternal being. Carry out these, and you will have a new society and a new world. That was the whole of Brooke's Gospel, and he applied it in his teaching to all the ranges and the reaches of human life.

As I read the 'Life,' however, I seem to feel more and more that here was a gospel wholly adequate for the needs of the day, and deeply apprehended and felt by Brooke himself, yet strangely ineffective in its operation when we remember the power of the preacher and his wondrous gifts. And I ask: Why? Was it not due to a certain aloofness in him, a certain lack—incapacity even—of contact with the sterner and grosser and uglier sides of humanity and of life? When he retired from Bedford Chapel he wrote: "They have had me for more than thirty years: it is time that they should stand alone and do what they have heard." As if he felt that the doing had been conspicuous by its absence! Was it the artist in him rather than the social reformer that appealed to them? The two main passions in him were art and religion. Of the two it would be difficult to say which came first: they were so finely blended. But the social passion, which issued from them, although keenly and sincerely felt, was rather a by-product. He was essentially a religious artist, only secondarily a social reformer. As the years glide by the social passion fades away. The artist and his religion remain.

Also it is to be noted that he loved Nature even more than he loved humanity. Of this we have his own confession. He was supremely the lover of beauty, material and spiritual, and it was his religious quality wedded to his rare perceptions as an artist which made him unique in his generation. In an earlier and more religious age this combination would have attracted no special attention. He wearied of preaching, he wearied even so it would seem, largely of man, outside the intimate ties of home and friends, but he never wearied of nature and of art. And he never lost his abiding stay in religion.

I am not at all sure that the world of the future will rate nearly as highly as we have done the value of such a life as that of Stopford Brooke. I hope it will greatly value poetry, and art, and religion, and all the deep immortal things. I hope it will value them more than anything. But I think we shall get a greater art, and a greater poetry, and a greater religion from those who have been more in the storm and stress of the world's life, and who have learned their lessons where ordinary men and women battle and die. Milton gave up his poetry during the struggles and agonies of the Commonwealth, and gave his pen to the service of Oliver Cromwell.

But he wrote 'Paradise Lost' and 'Samson Agonistes' afterwards.

You shall search far and wide, however, ere you discover words that more adequately convey in brief compass the social gospel the world needs to day, and has always needed, than those we find in an 'Address to Working Men' delivered by Stopford Brooke in 1878:—

"We are all going on, one and all, together to form in the end a complete Humanity....For all shall there be members of one body and one of another. Each shall live for all, and the whole shall live for all its parts. The interests of the whole shall be one with the interests of the individual, and the individual shall be sacrificed no more to the whole. There shall be no special class, no special rights, no divisions made by selfishness. One common love shall bind all together in one body, because all shall worship absolute love from the least to the greatest. That is what I look forward to night and day, that is what I believe, and it is a glorious thing to trust in, and makes life, even in sorrow, beautiful, and the hardest work divine."

H. H. JOHNSON.

HALLOWED GROUND.

IF for a land green-pastured thus
They fell, for these fair fields and us,
Looking their last on wastes afar—
Black ruin, and the flames of war—
How dear, how more than dear,
How sacred ye appear,
Meadows, and silver gleams
Of meadow-fringing streams,
England and summer—sweet before,
Now sacramental evermore!

W. G. TARRANT.

THE Rev. Thomas Van Ness in forwarding a copy of an Order of Service held at the Unitarian Church, Brookline, Mass., to mark the first anniversary of America's entrance into the war, writes as follows to the Secretary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association:—

"Remembering London in 1915, I cannot but compare the Boston of 1918 with it. The same scenes on our Common as at Trafalgar Square; the same enthusiastic meetings and placards; the same young men in uniform, only more proportionally. Our great Fore River Shipyard is a scene of feverish activity. Camp Devens, near by, has its forty thousand soldiers. The U.S. Navy Yard hums with work. All this shows little to you on the other side, but it spells might and power in a few months. Last night a huge meeting in Symphony Hall. Sir George Adam Smith, of Aberdeen, was the chief speaker. The roar of applause which followed his telling remarks must have made him realise how fully the Americans are one with the British. You may have forgotten my little talk to the ministers in Essex Hall when I predicted that another assault on the United States would sweep us into the war. It took longer than I thought to arouse us as a whole nation; but now that we are aroused, we are fully so. Let there be no doubt of that. I can only send my profound good wishes to you and to all the brethren."

HARD SAYINGS IN THE TEACHING OF JESUS.

THE Warden of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, Manchester, in the course of lectures recently given at various centres to Sunday school teachers dealt with several points of gospel teaching specially interesting to many people just now. The following are notes of the first of three such studies.

I.—THE UNRIGHTEOUS STEWARD.

"And the Lord commended the unrighteous steward, because he had done wisely, for the sons of this world are for their generation wiser than the sons of light."—Luke xvi. 8.

The Parable of the unrighteous steward presents a singular example of conduct commended, which can only be described as fraudulent and immoral. The clear antithesis which this offers to the ethical doctrine of Christ makes it plain that the point of the parable cannot lie in such commendation.

It is really an a fortiori argument. If the unrighteous steward is praised by his earthly Lord for provision made for the future by dishonourable means, how much more shall a righteous man be commended by his heavenly Master, if he provide for eternity by a good use of what has been committed to his care?

The greater our gifts and possessions, the heavier our measure of responsibility. The prostitution of noble powers in an artist or poet offends more against our sense of right than the evil use of his hands by the pickpocket or petty thief. The abyss is greater between the actual and the possible. Bribery, to which Francis Bacon fell a victim, was common enough in the reign of James I. But the Lord Chancellor was one of the profoundest thinkers of his age, and occupied the most exalted judicial office. We cannot rank his guilt with that of the underlings and parasites of the court. As he himself confessed of the penalties imposed upon him "It was the justest censure in Parliament these two hundred years." Partly the common judgment upon Judas is based upon the feeling that one who enjoyed the confidence of Christ should have been lifted above the temptation of a handful of silver. However mixed the motives of the traitor, and however sincere his remorse, the breach between his profession and his practice remains for ever unreconciled.

No man can escape temptation. Jesus Christ was tempted. But he, who was in a supreme sense steward of the mysteries of God, could not be drawn aside from his appointed path, though it led to the cross, whether to minister to national pride or to personal glory, but resolved to be among men as "one that serveth." The steward in the parable might have acted otherwise than as he did.

We cannot altogether deny the influence, for weal or for woe, of our parentage, or the power of our environment, but human experience concurs in the robust, commonsense verdict of Samuel Johnson: "Sir, as to the doctrine of necessity, no man believes it. If a man should give arguments that I do not see, though I could not answer them, should I believe that I do not see?" The freedom of the steward is assumed, and he is praised for his prudence, though it is expressed in wrongdoing.

Our Lord was an idealist, but not, therefore, lacking in practical wisdom, or in what the Dictionary defines as "sagacity in adapting means to an end." Did he not bid his disciples "Be wise as serpents and simple as doves," and have not his methods of teaching been abundantly justified by the result? Alas! in the promotion of great moral and spiritual ends, practical wisdom is often conspicuous by its absence. "The sons of this world are for their generation wiser than the sons of light." The debt which England owes to Puritanism can scarcely be exaggerated. Yet its excesses and imprudences have much to answer for. "Humour," says the historian, "the faculty which above all corrects exaggeration and extravagance, died away before the new stress and strain of existence. The absolute devotion of the Puritan to a Supreme Will tended more and more to rob him of all sense of measure and proportion in common matters. Little things became great things in the glare of religious zeal, and the godly man learnt to shrink from a surplice, or a mince-pie at Christmas, as he shrank from impurity or a lie." Consequently, the reaction at the Restoration induced a flood of immorality which swept almost everything before it. There is no danger that the errors of the Puritans will be repeated in our time, but there is the same want of sagacity in the adoption of means to ends.

The churches have much to learn from the liquor trade, not indeed in the matter of methods, but in the spirit of unity and community of interest which renders the traffic so powerful in the country.

Of forms of church government there are not a few, and of organisations there are many. Possibly a little more of the practical wisdom of the steward in the parable would reduce their number, or, at least, ensure that faith in the fetishes of our fathers did not hinder a prudent preparation to meet the religious requirements of our children. In the administration of charity, if prudence had its proper place, there would be fewer imposters in our cities, and the deserving poor would not so frequently go in want.

Ecclesiastical intrigue, or subtle Jesuitical politics were not enjoined by our Lord. "Such wisdom," as James said, who so often echoes the tones of Jesus, such wisdom is not a wisdom that cometh down from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy, and good fruits, without variance, without hypocrisy."

RELIGION AND UPBUILDING.

ON Wednesday evening last week a Public Meeting was held at Essex Hall, when addresses were given on 'The Power of Religion in Upbuilding the Life of the Nation.' The attendance was good, in present conditions, and keen interest was manifested.

Dr. Estlin Carpenter.

After an opening hymn, Dr. Estlin Carpenter, who as President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association occupied the chair, gave the opening address. He said that the subject suggested for their consideration seemed to imply that the life of the nation had fallen in ruins and needed restoration, but as he looked around and saw the immense energies of sacrifice which had been evoked during the war he recognised in them the development, under the terrible stimulus of the strife, of powers and impulses long operative on a feebler scale and partially disguised beneath other and more conspicuous tendencies. The question before them was what principles should direct the new growth. Religion was ultimately the might of a great trust, the force of an earnest endeavour, the victorious ascent of an ever aspiring love. The historian saw it everywhere among the great civilisations of antiquity—Egypt, Mesopotamia, India, China—shaping the order of society, and guiding the life of the individual and presiding over the unity of nations. What Europe would have been without the Church no one could imagine. After the decline of the Roman Empire the new culture had been largely shaped by Christianity. The Church had subdued the invaders, cultivated the wastes, preserved and fostered learning, promoted education, founded universities, built the cathedrals, written a 'Divina Commedia,' an 'Imitatio Christi,' a 'Pilgrim's Progress.' In these days of accusation against the Church of having failed to prevent the war, or to secure an honourable peace, it was well to remember that these very charges sprang out of a spirit which was itself largely the creation of the whole range of Christian thought and feeling which the Church had nourished. But now we were confronted with a multitude of new problems in the industrial order, the methods of government and administration in innumerable departments of our social life. What had religion to say to them?

It could not supply the requisite knowledge, but it could inspire the necessary drudgeries of study. Moreover, every great problem would be found to have a moral side, and religion could insist that it should not be overlooked; and when ancient rights had become modern wrongs it should infuse patience and sacrifice and mutual goodwill. It must beget the conviction that there is no moral wrong for which the Providence of God has not supplied a moral remedy, and that it is in our power to find it out and apply it. Religion in its broadest sense is, as Mr. Birrell once said of Liberalism, not a creed but a temper. It is an attitude to life; personally, a safeguard against low views of duty, a spur to faithfulness; and universally, in its lowest terms a faith in what Stevenson once called "the ultimate decency of things," a sense of purpose in the great world-process, and consequently a trust in the worth of human nature, a high valuation of man's powers, a refusal to look on his history as a record only of blood and tears. We live, said Wordsworth, by admiration, hope, and love; and there is a difference between the possible objects of these emotions, sport, wealth, comfort, food, drink, ease, and the things that are true and worshipful, just, pure, noble and of good report. The real bonds which hold society together are the things unseen, not appetite, nor fear, cash-nexus, mere custom, habit. These are on the surface; beneath are deep-rooted loyalties, respect for engagements, the sense of obligation, fidelity to promises, recognition of duties, far-reaching ties of love.

There had been a magnificent demonstration of this in the war. Here was the religion of the men in the trenches; here was the promise and potency of the religion of the future. It would be the task of the Churches to show that this was essential Christianity. There were many reasons why they had failed to do so. The Christian message was first launched in the expectation of the speedy end of the world, the collapse of nature, the great judgment on the living and the dead, the tremendous alternative of "everlasting" heaven or hell. It was a message of rescue, of deliverance from overwhelming danger. Here was the ground for the urgency of the Christian missionary and the declaration that there was only one name through which men could be saved. Who, then, was Jesus Christ, and how were his person and work to be explained? The conception of Christianity as a method of personal salvation led to the great ecclesiastical and dogmatic developments culminating in the famous creed which enforced the maintenance of "the Catholic faith whole and undefiled" under pain of perishing everlastingly. Every one now knew what an immense change had taken place in our outlook. Biblical infallibility was gone; Church authority was going. What remained? The life and spirit of Jesus, disengaged from its environment of temporary circumstance, his appeal to the intrinsic forces of the soul, his trust in man, his call to us to be perfect as the Father in heaven is perfect, which would summon us forward through all eternity.

This was reinforced by the experience of nineteen centuries. New elements of thought and life had entered in, and the stress of Christianity no longer fell on personal salvation. What had taken its place? The hope of the salvation of society, its deliverance from selfishness, greed, ambition, cruelty, its rise into a new social and international order of freedom, justice, and goodwill. Quoting from a remarkable memorandum of the secretaries of the Students' Christian Union, and from Dr. Charles Eliot of Harvard University, the speaker showed how this was the aim of the young, the basis of the religion of the future. What had been sometimes called the New Reformation in the latter part of the last century was passing into a New Transfiguration, where one may see the radiant figure of Jesus on the mount of humanity with the great impersonations of Truth and Righteousness on either hand, and a multitude of holy and humble men and women who had done the world's work and borne the world's pains around him, and he was heard saying, not "I am the Christ," or "I am the second Person of the Trinity," but "I am among you as he that serveth." Two significant movements were already afoot, the approach of the Anglican and Nonconformist churches to each other, with mutual recognition of the validity of each other's experience, and the creation in many local centres of interdenominational councils for social service. The Church must transform the world, or the world would absorb the Church. And this was true on the international field as well as within our own people. There were those in the enemy forces looking like ourselves for the new order. We were realising surely that the "kingdom of God" would not come until we ourselves fulfilled the heavenly will. When all men do that likewise, we shall have again, and with new clearness, the voices which say "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of them that preach us the Gospel of Peace," and "the morning stars shall sing together for joy!"

Mr. R. M. Montgomery, K.C.

Mr. Montgomery pointed out that although the power of religion was immense in the upbuilding of national life, it was not every form of religion which had that power. He instanced the case of a conscientious objector who declined to join any organisation, who did not think it right to give a vote, whose place of worship gave itself no name and who could only describe himself as a follower of Jesus. Looking at history it seemed clear that forms of religion linked with a priesthood did not help the upbuilding of national life. It was significant that great steps forward in national life in England were taken at the time of the Reformation and at the time of the Commonwealth; that the French Revolution was linked with a revolt against priesthood; that in America the War of Independence and the War against slavery were conducted by men who set no store by priesthood; that in Italy it was Mazzini who led the movement for national life. Was it possible that Ireland's failure hitherto to achieve national life was not unconnected with the existence of a priestly form of religion in that country, and was Russia's position in regard to national life at the present moment not referable largely to the same cause? Christian priests were in the habit of tracing their descent from the Apostles, but they did injustice to the antiquity of their pedigree. Their family history extended back through Judaism to very early times and the father of priests was the Spirit of Incantation. It was noticeable that Judaism had not succeeded in maintaining a Jewish nation. Some other types of religion which appeared to have no power in the upbuilding of national life were passed in review.

The Rev. Bernard J. Snell.

Mr. Snell, the past president of the Congregational Union, in his opening remarks expressed himself as honoured by the request to be present and said it was a pity Independents knew so little of the history of the early presbytery in England, though such spokesmen as Emerson, Martineau and Stopford Brooke were the instructors of the body he was representing. He, however, regarded Unitarians as people who, having "arrived," were now (might he say) deficient in driving power—liberal in theology and conservative in most else, as those who, having been born "in Boston," do not feel the need of being born again. He recognised that Unitarians had had more than their share of fire called down on their heads, but they did not seem to have suffered in spirit. It was a pity that Unitarians did not know Independents better—closer contact would make for mutual improvement. Mr. Snell then made a stirring appeal for fellowship in face of evil. On the subject of the evening he said he could only speak as one living in the shadow of these terrific days. Religion was a binding to God, an imperative relegating of life to the doing of the will of God. When it was not so things went wrong. The will of God as expressed with increasing clearness by prophets from Amos to Jesus was the upholding of Justice, the attitude of Mercy, the diffusion of Truth. Character was no less the salvation of nations than of men. Religion meant the endeavour to get God's will done. Before the war it was losing its savour, but in days of stress and woe we reverted to the Puritan spirit which marched to the music of Religion. The only religion that awakened respect was the religion that casts out devils.

After an impassioned indictment against the spirit animating our present enemies, Mr. Snell declared that God had so fashioned the universe that, as gravity holds it together physically, so righteousness holds it together spiritually. That was the faith that held us to life—faith in a living God who so works through men that, if they speak not the truth, the truth remains unspoken; if the sense of mercy lapses, pitiless cruelty is done; if Justice is not wrought for, injustice tramples its victims in bloody mire. The awful solemnity of life lay in the fact that not God himself could uplift men if they withheld their help.

The Rev. H. Gow.

Mr. Gow began by mentioning two articles by Prince Troubetzkoy in the January and April Hibbert Journal, the first describing the world from the point of view of sympathetic Pessimism, the second suggesting the Christian answer. The first was typically Russian in its intensity of gloom and also in its sympathy. It was nobler than the Pessimism of Ecclesiastes because it was not the misery of a man who had tried by every means to find his own happiness and failed, but the misery of a man grieving like a god for the hopeless pains of the world. The second article, with its doctrine of the Atonement, was like some part of St. Paul's teaching hard to understand, and especially so for Unitarians, but the speaker believed there was an important element of truth in it. The horror of this war is not merely due to Germany—it is partly due to God. We do not believe it is ordained by God in every detail, but we must believe that it is allowed by God and that God is partly responsible. That may sound terrible but it has in it also a gleam of light. If God is in it—not apart from it, and merely surprised and distressed by it—then we may believe that out of the heart of evil good will come, that through uttermost suffering something is being done for the renovation of the world. We should have no reason for thinking this if we thought of evil as only due to man or to the blind working of blind forces.

The religion of this time for most of us is a religion of submission and heroic trust. I find myself preaching two things, said

Mr. Gow, with full belief: (1) that self-sacrifice for right is a noble and a sacred duty; (2) that death is not the end. Give everything and trust in God. This, too, is essentially the religion of the soldiers. They talk of "Kismet" by which they mean not that death is ordained at a particular moment, but that it does not matter, not that it does not bear thinking of but that it is not worth thinking of in comparison with doing their duty. Some of them have a deep faith in life after death but most of them are content to do their duty and leave the issue to God. The mark of our religion is a certain obedience and submission. We go forth not knowing whither we go. We resolve to be brave and true, to die for right, and to trust God for the result.

But this religious teaching does not meet the Pessimism of Troubetzkoy or the still more hopeless Pessimism of Mr. Bertrand Russell, for whom all heroism is a splendid but unavailing resistance against powers of evil which must conquer in the end. The more deeply I feel the duty of self-sacrifice and the joy of faith in another life, the more I become aware of a certain danger in that thought alone. It tends to make us too content with the conditions which have wrought their death, too blind to the real evil of this war. What does war matter? What does any evil matter, however terrible, if it is so glorious a thing to die for right and if all is well beyond the grave? We tend to become Christian mystics indifferent to the real evils of the world and even denying their existence.

The noblest pacifists have realised a truth which we need. They feel this war is an outrage on humanity, they are not content with the religious doctrines of self-sacrifice and immortality. They are filled with the sense of the horror and hatefulness of war. This thing is unutterably evil. I do not agree with them in thinking that it ought to be stopped by any means and at any cost at this moment, because I believe that such a course would only lead to a recurrence of the evil in still more awful forms in a few years time, but I recognise with them that mere acceptance of the duty of self-sacrifice is not enough. We cannot escape from a vicious circle described by Troubetzkoy through admiring self-sacrifice but by feeling, as Paul felt about the death of Jesus, that something has been done for us which has changed the situation. These young men of ours taken from us in the strength and beauty of their manhood, with the high promise of their life on earth destroyed, we must not think of them merely as brave and noble examples, we must not even think of them merely as having entered on a fuller life with God. I believe all this is true, but it is not the whole truth. Sometimes mourners are told as an additional comfort that their son died carrying out a successful work and in the hour of victory. It has not been given to many of our sons to die like Nelson knowing that the battle was won, and the cause for which they gave their lives triumphant. They have died often in conflict where no plain issue was discerned, they have died in retreat or holding with desperate courage a position which they knew was lost. It does not matter; it does not make the slightest real difference. They have done something; their death has changed the situation. They have saved us by their blood, if we will receive it, not from the Germans, but from the power of evil in ourselves. They have made us hate war with a more holy hatred; the power of their death is not to be judged by its external results in victory—there were often no such results. It is not even to be judged by its effect upon us in making our hearts glow with admiration and reverence: the death of these young men is an atonement which has changed the world. It is something which has happened which we can never get away from and which we do not want to get away from. Sacrifice is not merely an example "go and do thou likewise"—sacrifice is in itself a deed. They have done something for you and me; that is what we need to feel just as St. Paul felt that Jesus in dying on the Cross had done something for him and the world, and not merely left him an example. I am bought with a price. Some one has died for me. My life is not my own. Heart's blood has been shed for me, men have suffered agonies for me. That is not merely a call to me to go and do the same. It is more and deeper than that. It is the giving of a new life, a new resolve, a new confidence in God. It changes my life if I will understand it and receive it. "The old things are passed away, behold all things are become new." We look out into the world with new life and courage. We have a great trust committed to us by our dead, not merely of being like them in courage and faith, but of accepting and fulfilling the sacrifice which they have made for us. Their blood is not wasted if it is shed in defeat as Christ's was shed, it is only wasted if it does not make us purer, stronger, more determined to do the work for which they died. They died for justice and for peace and they leave the cause of justice and of peace as a sacred charge to all of us; through their death they give us a newness of life and raise us into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

THE LIBERAL RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT IN ITALY.

It is interesting to learn that the great Italian actress, Eleonora Duse, is a regular subscriber to the Reforma Italiana, and very enthusiastic about the work of the Society of Italian Free Believers. She expressed herself recently on the subject in the following emphatic words: "We Italians can no longer remain Catholics; we must take up the fight in dead earnest against scepticism. We are eager to associate ourselves with a faith-inspiring, religious work, but must refuse to identify ourselves with one which forces a creed upon us. We are ready to receive a faith like this, which stands for spiritual progress, which elevates the soul, and which leads to all that is best in religion and life. Your Review has come to us none too soon, for it offers to Italy the things of which she is most sorely in need: freedom to worship God according to the promptings of conscience, a true faith, and untiring activities in proclaiming a grand ideal. The duty of well-doing is an ever present one, but now, more than ever before, we are called upon to exert ourselves to the utmost that our brave soldiers may be helped and strengthened, and that the cause of freedom may eventually triumph."

THE Annual Meetings of the Liberal Christian League will be held at Sion College, Embankment, Blackfriars, on Tuesday, June 25. The President's reception will be at 4.30; at 5.45 there will be a devotional meeting, followed by a conference on 'Social Service,' introduced by the Rev. H. H. Johnson. The Public Meeting, at 7, will be addressed by Miss Maude Royden, the Rev. J. P. MacCarthy, Ph.D. (U.S.A.), Lieut. - Col. Seymour Bullock, the Rev. R. N. Pyke, and others.

FROM The Whitehaven Monthly, a publication which circulates among members of the Y.M.C.A. in Whitehaven, we learn that Dr. Tudor Jones is lecturing on 'Elements of Economics' and 'Reconstruction' for three weeks during the present month.

THE PLACE OF JUDAISM AMONG THE RELIGIONS OF THE WORLD.

THE ESSEX HALL LECTURE.

ONE of the largest audiences of the week gathered for the Essex Hall lecture on Thursday evening. Mr. C. G. Montefiore had been invited to speak on 'The Place of Judaism among the Religions of the World,' and his interesting and simple setting forth of the possibilities and responsibilities of an ethical monotheism in the modern world was received with much sympathy and approval. Dr. Carpenter occupied the chair, and in introducing and welcoming the lecturer referred to his distinguished services as leader of the movement for liberal Judaism in this country. By coming in their midst he placed the seal on a sympathy again and again expressed in public and private, and they had the greatest reason for grateful anticipation of the lecture.

Mr. Montefiore, prefacing his lecture with the remark that he was to speak about Judaism, and not about the Jews, described the average Christian view about Judaism and its religious place. Would it not, he asked, be true to say that in this view the religious contribution of Judaism to the world is considered to be that it produced the Old Testament scriptures, with all their nobilities and defects; and secondly, that it gave birth to Christianity; and that it has not made any further contribution to the world, nor is it likely to do so in the future? Of the two types of Judaism, the orthodox and the liberal, the former was looked on as a picturesque and curious survival, the disappearance of which would be regretted; it was regarded as a nice museum religion, and, of course, it was desirable to have living museums as well as dead ones! Liberal Judaism, on the other hand, was regarded as an unpicturesque and chilly sort of compromise, without much of a future, which would gradually be merged in some form of liberal Christianity. There were reasons for this judgment. The average Christianity would not judge Judaism as it would judge other religions—Mohammedanism or Buddhism, for example. Judaism would be regarded as the exclusive religion of a small race. It could never be a universal religion; it was only national or tribal. The days of such faiths were over; the religions of the future must be universal.

Judaism, however, in both its main forms dared to dissent from the view which he had tried to set forth. Both ventured to believe that Judaism has some place to fill and some work to do in the religious development of the world. They believed that when the prophet five hundred years before the Christian era declared that the Jews were the servants of the Lord he said something true for that five hundred years, which will be true in the future also. In the interpretation of its mission by orthodox and liberal Judaism there was considerable divergence. Orthodox Judaism did not repudiate the conception generally held by the outsider; it allows that Judaism is a national religion, believes that it will remain national, and considers that this makes its place among religions unique. Its salient doctrines, however, were universal in character, and the belief prevailed that the world will ultimately adopt them. Thus a universal creed was wedded to a national embodiment. Then Judaism was a non-proselytising religion: the conversion of the world to Jewish monotheism with its implications lies in the hands of God. The Jews are partners with God in bringing about the golden age when the Lord shall be one and his name one. Thus the gaze of orthodox Judaism is turned inwards rather than outwards.

This attitude was conditioned by the orthodox attitude towards the letter of the Old Testament and was not shared by liberal Jews, because they looked at the Law from the vantage ground of criticism and liberty. Orthodoxy, indeed, depended on a conception which had been riddled by modern criticism. Liberalism agreed with the other in the conception of a Jewish mission, and in holding that the religious work for the world did not terminate nineteen hundred years ago. But the Liberal held that if Judaism is to play a part in religious history it must be a Judaism very different from any which the world has known, the right as well as the principle of which must become suitable for the men and women of many races rather than of one; and to achieve this was a thrilling and difficult and delicate task. Judaism in this view was essentially a religion and the Jews a religious community. They did not want to be merely a survival, but a religion for occidentals. Thus the dispersion of the Jews was a condition for the fulfilment of the Jewish mission. It must be a developing religion, modern and progressive, but with roots stretching back into the past. Just as the modern Unitarian believed that his own conception of the truth must prevail, so the Liberal Jew, in a precisely similar and parallel position, believed in his own faith. Nevertheless he (the lecturer) believed in the distinct victory of Judaism with some reservations. He could only picture that religion as his own, purified, developed and enriched. There was no inconsistency in believing in its part in the religious history of the world without at the same time dogmatising as to the name or names of the religion of the far distant future nor of the buildings in which the worship of God shall be carried on. The larger theism would emerge. Judaism was thus an historical religion on the one hand and a theistic religion on the other, and liberalism emphasised both characteristics. Monotheism was its essence, and with that it sought to be a religion of reconciliation and balance—a religion of the "just middle."

All forms of Judaism were very serious in the assertion of the divine transcendence, and in the bias against pantheism. God is transcendent as well as immanent. It was serious also as regarded its sacred Scripture: not obsessed by miracles, authorships or dates. There were human imperfections in the prophets and teachers, and it was not to be assumed that no light had come into the world except through Jewish windows. It was particularly their duty to proclaim an ethical monotheism; and at this very moment they saw many reasons for maintaining the truth of their cause, and its spiritual power. Many dangers lay ahead of it: atheism and despair and reactions also. Democracy would be on its trial, and a religionless democracy might become more than a visionary peril. In the middle of these and other dangers Judaism must be true to its teaching of the divine Fatherhood. As contrasted with orthodox Judaism, liberalism was to a larger extent free and independent. If believed in the moral freedom of men because there is a divine freedom beyond the human. A theism of this kind was required for the world, but it was a difficult theism, and it was greatly on its trial. If Judaism wavers and shrinks and is no influence in the world, the fault will be not with Judaism but with the Jews.

Much applause followed the delivery of the lecture, and Dr. P. H. Wicksteed expressed the thanks of the meeting to the lecturer in a characteristically graceful speech.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WHERE IS THE RELIGIOUS CENTRE?

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The phrase, "centralisation in Jesus Christ," does not mean any displacement of God by Christ nor any setting up of another absolute in place of, or in addition to, God. Both Mr. Davis and Mr. Hall seem to interpret the phrase as if it meant this, and could mean this only. But looking back over the letters I have already written I find nothing in them to justify such an interpretation, so far as I am concerned. If a man finds that his belief and faith in God, his religious hypothesis of life, his religious experience, which is experience of Divine Reality, and his ethical outlook and standards are all drawn to an illuminating point of focus, objectively and historically, in the life, teaching, death, influence, and meaning or history of Jesus Christ, that man's religious faith is centralised, has got its centre, its focussing point, in Jesus Christ. His belief in God and in the Kingdom of God are attached to Christ: his understanding of Eternal Righteousness is mediated through the life and teaching of Jesus: his desire to lead a true moral life and to bring his will into accord with the divine will receives objective instruction and guidance by and through the life and mind of Christ. That is centralisation in Jesus Christ. Such a man learns God through Christ. Why not? Does that displace God? May it not be God's own intention that we should learn Him through His Son?

I admit there are metaphysical problems involved; but, as the Church has always seen, these problems have to do much more with the nature and character of God, and His relations with the world, than with such questions as those Mr. Hall propounds.

There is a question which has to do with the rational formulation of religious experience that I should like to ask both Mr. Hall and Mr. Davis. I ask the question in all sincerity. What do they, as fully as they can express it, mean by God? What do they take to be the nature and character of God, and above all, since this is crucial, how do they conceive the relationship of God to man and to physical nature, that is, the essential, ontological relationship of a divine, eternal life to a finite, human, temporal existence? It may be that what needs revising is not so much our doctrine of Christ, but our doctrine of God; and in our justifiable anxiety to preserve the full humanity of Christ we may have overlooked something valuable which the doctrine of Christ's divinity implied not for Christ but for God, and God's relation with the world and human life. The real metaphysical problem may be not Christ's divinity but God's humanity, under which is included the way, manner, and meaning of an eternal divine life functioning and operating in a temporal world.

I will lay down two propositions as characteristic of Christian Theism, and ask what is the difficulty with regard to them. As Christian Theists we "worship the God who in Christ has come to us in the might of His holiness and love": and, as Christian Theists, we "pray to the God who in Christ has revealed Himself to us." To accept and believe those propositions is, on the metaphysical side, to centralise faith, i.e., faith in God, in Jesus Christ. If there is no such centralisation, what distinguishes Christianity from religion in general? Two other points let me make. One quite simple: if I want to tell a child, or a grown person, what sort of a being God is, I can lead them to Jesus, the Jesus of history, Jesus in action, show them what He does and says, and how He behaves, and I can say God, whom I worship, is like that. There is no doubt that we are constantly doing this. The fact seems to require interpretation, which may not stop short of a theory of God's nature and His activity in history and life. The second point touches another, the devotional and ethical side of centralisation in Jesus. What of the personal appeal which Jesus makes to the personal life? He calls, as He did in Galilee, and always has done: He looks at us: touches us in the crowd and press of life: and we only know that we must follow. We try to follow, and the things that overwhelm us are, on the one side, the pitiable results of our efforts and the extent of our weakness, and, on the other side, the unutterable constancy of His companionship and the patience of His love. Again, experience like this demands interpretation, which may not stop short of the ultimate abyss of the nature and activity of God in His universe and our life. Centralisation in Christ? Again, why not? If God in His wisdom and love meant it so, what then? You cannot answer that question by biblical criticism! If any one will supply in this letter what the necessity for brevity unavoidably leaves lacking, he will, I think, see that the discussion is not likely to be complete till we have plumbed our doctrine of God as well as our doctrine of Christ.

Mr. Hall is kindly troubled about some supposed defection of mine from positions I held when I wrote my book in 1913 or 1914, ages ago! It seems to me that book was incomplete, and surely one's experience and mind may develop. I adhere to practically all I then said so far as it is an analysis and explication of religious experience on its subjective side. But "absolute idealism," of which I have been accused, has its objective side also; any religion revealed in the soul's recesses may discover its own truth manifested in history and temporal process. I have found objectivity in religion: that is all. The Logos speaking in the heart has become flesh and dwelt among us; and we have looked upon the Light that lighteth every man.

And, incidentally, what is this about "a revolt within our own camp" (vide Mr. Hall's letter)? What can Mr. Hall expect from Christianity, the most revolutionary religion in the world, excepting revolt? What I should like to do would be to extend the revolt until it turned the world upside down; because, as has been said, if God whom we profess to worship is like unto Jesus of Nazareth, we are committed to that kind of revolt and nothing other.—Yours, &c.

STANLEY A. MELLOR.

AN 'INDEX COMMENDATORIUS.'

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I was glad to read your reference to Dr. Silvanus Thompson's 'A Not Impossible Religion,' and your remark on the responsibility for his conception, or non-conception, of Unitarianism. Of course, we ourselves are largely, at any rate, responsible for the prevailing ignorance of our type of religious thought and culture. I have sometimes believed it might help to remove this if the British and Foreign Unitarian Association could by public advertisement recommend the reading of such books as Thompson's, from time to time, on the advice of its friends issuing its 'Index Commendatorius'—as you like it! Your note will set many of our own people to the perusal of Thompson's book. May I call attention to another book which, I fear, has not secured the circulation it merits, even among ourselves? This is Frederic Seebohm's 'The Spirit of Christ-ianity,' published by Longmans in 1916, price 1s. 3d. Seebohm's character as a historian is well known; his painstaking diligence in research, his careful judgment, and his regard for truth are evident in all his work. This book, a wonderful publication for fifteen pence, is probably the work in which his qualities are best evidenced. It was written for his own satisfaction forty years ago—a few copies were printed "for private use only"—in a time of scientific and theological ferment. It is the effort of a man accustomed to weigh evidence to arrive at truth for himself, whilst his great contemporaries are engaged in keen and bitter controversy. It is remarkable as a piece of clear and simple historical analysis and as a representation of the essential elements of Christianity. If Unitarians would read it, and pass it on to their friends as something from outside that is like most things inside their teaching, a little of their responsibility for misconceptions of their faith might be removed.—Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM C. HALL.

Northampton.

THE REV. W. H. DRUMMOND IN FRANCE.

THE following letter, from the Rev. W. H. Drummond, Editor of THE INQUIRER, was read at the Annual Meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association at Essex Hall on May 22:—

"It is hard to realise that you will be holding Whit-week meetings next week. If you have any messages from foreign parts you might include an affectionate greeting from me to my friends. I am so busy that it is not easy to find time for letters, and my intention of writing something about my work for publication has been too long deferred. I live the life of an unofficial chaplain and am in contact with large numbers of men on the religious side, in addition to all the good fellowship, and the crowded audiences at lectures. Just now I am leader of the largest Hut in France. This evening I gave an address on 'What is Christianity?' followed by questions. It was a keen and interested meeting, and afterwards our little chapel was crowded for evening prayers. We have discussed "Do we need religion?" and "Does God help men to-day?" in the same way. Every Sunday evening after our big service in the Concert Hall, at which we have glorious singing, I take a communion service in the chapel. Many men value it just before they go up the line and their reverence and humility are most striking. Let no man dare to say, even though he be a bishop and ought to be wise, that Y.M.C.A. work is merely serving a canteen or selling cigarettes to soldiers. It is the most glorious opportunity of getting into close brotherly contact with the manhood of the nation for those of us who are too old to join the fighting ranks and to accept the full privilege of sacrifice. As these bright boys come day after day to say good-bye to me, and often to thank me for all that the Hut and its influence have meant to them, I feel that theirs is the greater part. It is they in the day of their strength who are saving civilisation with their blood, and we with the handicap of years can only follow them with our affection and our prayers. But I must not run on, I only took up my pen to wish you all a good time in Whit-week, clear vision, strong purpose, and a new sense of complete dedication to this cause, which demands sacrifice to the uttermost at our hands without any crippling anxiety for the future either of our churches or ourselves. Here is the solution of most of our problems; we must die in order to live,"

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

INSIDE THE BRITISH ISLES. By Arthur Gleason. (The Bodley Head, 5s. net.)

WE strongly recommend in particular the perusal of two chapters of this book—the second entitled 'Labour' and the third entitled 'Women.' The author is an American who has spent some time in looking on, and has given us his impressions and judgments in effective and staccato style. He sees the Englishman as one who "will not be coerced even for his good as that good is seen by another."

The war is credited with having made many working men work "full tilt" for the first time in their life, because a national purpose is being served instead of the profit of another person. Undoubtedly it is true that large numbers of young men sprang to arms for a noble purpose, a purpose moreover which offered release from the sordid round of struggle for material existence which had hitherto circumvented their lives. If it had not been a righteous war with Germany in August, 1914, all the constituents were present which, unless altered, presaged greater civil strife in the near future. The danger of this latter is not passed—rather is it intensified. The men who return will not be satisfied by their material wants alone being met—they have realised the possession of spiritual needs. This does not necessarily mean that they will refuse their share of the drudgery which the present evolutionary stage entails, but that they will not do their own and others' share of this as well—they will demand their share in the work which is a joy in itself. Mr. Gleason puts the matter in the form of two questions: "Can the nature of work be ennobled?" "Can spiritual values be restored to modern life?" The answer is, Yes. How? The first by everyone who exercises control over material things seeing that good use is the first object. The second by ever remembering that liberty of the soul has once more been renewed by the death of hundreds of thousands for what they considered right.

To pass to the subject of women. We entirely agree with Mr. Gleason that the man-supported family is a failure—realising what its trial has entailed we can only hope for the speedy general acceptance of that as a fact. Any member of either sex who has accepted the system must bear a share of the responsibility for the continuance of such evils as slums, underpaid workers, &c.

Women should have recognised that the retention of their self-respect entailed their replacing the industrialism of the home (as science and co-operative working lessened their activities in that direction) by other productive activities, and it is to the lasting shame of men that they have prided themselves on their women-folk being merely consumers, so long as it was the overworking of others which made that possible. The fact must be faced that there is no such thing as work which is not paid for by somebody. The person who "gives" his services for all practical purposes does not exist; the indirectly paid worker—the person who derives income from dividends, &c.—is for the most part supported by the underpayment of other workers.

We have taken up so much of the space allowed us by commenting on this one important point touched upon by the author that we have no space to deal with others. We should like to see the two chapters issued separately, as in our opinion the rest of the book is far below their level.

THE CHURCH AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

NEW MATTERS FOR NEW TIMES.

I suppose for many years past the problem of the Church's relation to its Sunday school, with usually the relative fullness of the latter and the relative emptiness of the former, has forced itself upon the thought of nearly all responsible Church members. And, no doubt, the relationship of the younger mind to the older would have been felt to be vital long, long ago had it been that the Sunday school, instead of being so recent a growth as to belong chiefly to the last century, had an origin as old as that of adult worship. It has, no doubt, always been evident, though men and women have not always seen it as evident, that, while the child can be guided, the adolescent boy and girl and the young adult can, for the most part, only be persuaded, and that very skilful persuasion at that is required to meet with any real and lasting measure of success. This, no doubt, has always been so, but it required the contrast of the relatively small church attendance and the relatively large Sunday school one to make evident to us all the fact that between the school and the Church is a gap in the individual's mental development which religious institutions have not provided for.*

I do not wish to discuss any of the pressing problems of Sunday school and church attendances either in war-time or in peace, interesting as these are, nor to refer to any of the numerous schemes for change of management of our children and of more popular appeals to the adult in our church services, nor even to deal with the many attempts in the North of England, America, and elsewhere for senior Sunday schools, because in considering these problems one would have to trespass unduly on your space and to criticise ideals of institutions which would probably provoke more heat than light and do little to inspire us at a time when we all need inspiration. I want rather to consider in the broadest way how our own and other Churches can fall into line with the present educational effort of our legislature, and it is hoped, later on, of our national and private schools, to catch the adolescent and the young adult of both sexes ere the irregular habits of older workshop companions lead them astray, and the temptations of life and the independence of wage-earning direct them to undesirable life aims.

It is widely admitted now that the absence of the father is a source of family weakness; that the mother, for the time being, so often a wage-earner, and the early occupational opportunities of boys and girls are all favouring an undesirable license, often mis-called freedom, in the younger life of the community which ought to, and indeed must, be checked. Cannot the Churches take up the thought in the same serious way as Mr. Fisher and the educationalists are doing for the secular aspect of these problems and work out some scheme to meet this need from the religious outlook?—a need which, while it may be less pressing after the war, will be indirectly as important, and which might give a new stimulus to the religious activities of the country.

The following suggestions have occurred to me and I give them for what they are worth:—

1. The Brotherhood Movement has clearly shown that there is a class of man and woman who cares for a more secular treatment of the religious service than older Church organisations are prepared to give.

2. The Adult School Movement has shown that a recognised and carefully prepared controversial handling of religious topics meets a not less real need of thousands of men and women of this and even other countries.

3. Most older Church members of nearly all established Churches feel, and I think rightly, that the religious feeling is seldom developed in an atmosphere that is either secular or controversial. Indeed, I would myself like to go back to the old-fashioned church pews and a more sacred atmosphere for the whole Church gathering. But while this is true we must recognise that the Brotherhood and Adult School Movements are successes that prove they supply a real need, and no one who is acquainted with them would deny that they have an uplifting influence in human life. Are we not here face to face with some collective facts which may be interpreted developmentally in the life of the individual?

1. The Sunday school is admittedly for children.

2. The Adult School is for adults.

3. And does not the non-controversial religious attitude come, and with it a keener desire for religious feeling, when in later life our religious opinions are more settled?

May I suggest that each broad tendency of the religious life to-day is right, but their errors lie in the absence of a synthesis of them all; that each Church, whatever its particular creed, needs (1) its children's Sunday school; (2) its adult Sunday school, framed on the controversial and study methods of the Adult School Movement; and (3) its non-controversial religious morning and evening services. I believe it would then be found that for many, perhaps most people, the Sunday school scholar would easily and naturally become an adult Sunday school student, and that the adult school would lead right into the portals of the church itself.

I know that it is sometimes said that Brotherhoods are least successful where they are controlled by the Church authorities in which they are held. I know also that the Church authorities claim that the Brotherhoods are often an anti-Church influence, and I know that the Adult School Movement is now independent of its Quaker parentage, though friendly to it. But I think in each case these divergencies have arisen because there was no developmental unity of spirit and method uniting them all. An Adult School in every church would itself supply teachers for the children's Sunday school, and it would keep the minister and older Church members alive to current religious thought, while the quieter atmosphere of the Church service and its leaders would moderate the more secular features of the other adult meeting. On the committee of the church I would have representatives of all three groups, as some North Country churches do on a rather different plan from that which I have suggested. But it is the synthetic developmental Church outlook that is, I believe, here required.

It may be said how is this suggestion different from that which already exists in many Brotherhood churches, with their controversial afternoon meeting and the morning and evening religious service? I reply the Brotherhood fails in some of the more valuable adult school educative characters, and the Adult School in some of the musical Brotherhood features. And the Church services are not in individually developmental relationship with the adult and children's schools which alone can banish or subdue frictional difficulties. I would like to see these three elements as always parts of all Churches, united as one whole scheme for the stages of an individual's life, with something of a preparatory and sacramental character organised throughout all sections to mark each important developmental period in the human being's passage through his or her existence. A Church would then be for the first time in history a developmental religious institution adapted to all ages of childhood and later immaturity, early and late middle age, and the healthy vaterancy of those who have passed three score of years, and, if aged in body and less vigorous for arduous tasks, are still young, though not youthful, in mind. It seems to me that in this linkage and synthesis of modern religious methods the adolescent and young adult might find their places, and a new strength and vitality for religious activities everywhere might be hoped for—and realised.

J. LIONEL TAYLER.

THE POSTAL MISSION.

THE Annual Meeting of the Central Postal Mission was held at Essex Hall on Tuesday, May 23, Dr. Hargrove presiding. The report, which was taken as read, records an increase in the number of applications for Unitarian literature, and contains, as usual, some interesting extracts from letters received in the course of the year. Dr. Hargrove, in moving the adoption of the report, emphasised the importance of conveying to others the truth one has found of value to oneself, and drew an interesting parallel between Unitarianism and Zoroastrianism, which have a good deal in common. The chief reason, he said, why the Parsees, who are the followers of Zoroaster have failed to propagate their faith to any considerable extent—they only number 100,000 in all India—was because of the formalism of their prayers, and their lack of missionary zeal. It was of little use to possess a truth which answered to men's higher aspirations without the power of communicating it to others.

The Rev. F. Hankinson seconded the report, and spoke of the enthusiasm shown not only by the Minister but by the congregation at the Suffolk Village Mission, Bedford. An enlargement of a photograph of Miss Ellen Lawrence, whose name was held in such affectionate remembrance there, had been subscribed for, and was shown to the meeting. It is to be hung on the walls of the chapel.

The Rev. Basil Martin proposed the re-election of the officers, which was seconded by Mr. Athelstan Tayler. Dr. Wicksteed then gave his address, which was a moving and beautiful description of the processes by which Dante arrived at the transcendent vision of peace in God which finds its supreme expression in the 'Paradiso.' We hope to give a fuller account of this in an early issue.

Dr. Carpenter and Miss L. M. Tagart, President of the Postal Mission, tendered the thanks of those present to Dr. Wicksteed at the close of the address.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

173RD LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,630	9	10
R. L. (18th)	0	10	0
Miss Alice E. Winkworth (11th)	5	0	0
	£20,635	19	10

Parcels have been received from: Miss A. Fryer; "Two Friends"; Miss Mary B. Lamb; Mr. Edward Chitty; Miss Swaine; Mrs. R. Roscoe.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

* I know quite well that in some instances the church membership is larger and the Sunday school smaller. But my problem is not this one, but the leakage from the school away from its church.

LAY PREACHERS' UNION.

THE Annual Meeting of the Lay Preachers' Union was held at Essex Hall on Monday, May 20, Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P., presiding. It was preceded by a devotional service conducted by the Rev. H. W. Stephenson, the sermon being preached by Mr. J. W. Peterken of Leytonstone.

The annual report and the treasurer's statement were presented. The former points out that, owing to the serious depletion of the ranks of the Union resulting from the war, it has been next to impossible to arrange either local or central meetings. For this reason the work has been largely carried on through the post. From all the local unions the loyalty, faithfulness and devotion of the lay preachers, who are working under such adverse conditions, receive a tribute of warm appreciation.

The Rev. J. A. Pearson gave a report of the work of the London Union and Mr. Newall reported on the Liverpool movement. Other reports were read from Manchester, the Midland Christian Union, Newcastle, the Western Union, and the Sheffield District. The officers and members of council were with two exceptions re-elected. Great regret was expressed that Miss Francis is unable to continue the secretaryship owing to the increasing demands of other claims upon her time and energy.

THE WOMEN'S LEAGUE.

THE Annual Meeting of the Women's League was held on Wednesday afternoon, May 22. After a short opening service conducted by Miss E. Rosalind Lee, the President, Mrs. Blake Odgers, opened the business of the meeting by calling upon the Secretary to read the report of the general committee. This was followed by short reports of various sections of League work, Fellowship, Foreign, &c., and following these, the representatives of three associate branches—Liverpool, Manchester and Sheffield—gave very interesting accounts of the year's work in their respective districts. In moving the adoption of the reports the President said they showed how steadily the work was growing, and how the perception of what co-operation among the women might do was increasing. She spoke also of the many efforts now being made to keep in touch with lonely and isolated members of our faith, and of the warm feeling that had been growing between our overseas women and those in the old country since their men had been coming over. Mrs. Odgers made a strong plea that there should be a branch of the League in every one of our churches. In supporting the adoption of the reports, Mrs. Clephan said she was struck with the spirit of fellowship which showed itself in one and all.

In putting the resolution to the meeting Mrs. Odgers welcomed the country delegates, whose presence, she said, was doubly welcome, for it had meant the overcoming of many difficulties at this time. She also expressed much pleasure that the London branches were so well represented. A resolution conveying a message of greeting to the overseas branches and the American Alliance was passed.

After the business proceedings, an address was given by Mrs. Edgar Fripp on 'Old Ideals and New Duties.' Mrs. Fripp recalled the work of the pioneers of the Women's Movement, beginning with John Stuart Mill; of women like Mrs. Garrett Anderson and Miss Jex Blake, who had suffered scorn and obloquy in their struggle for freedom to work side by side with men; of Florence Nightingale, and many others who had given their lives to help to bring the new day which was now dawning for women. She reminded her hearers that the new day was bringing fresh interests, and privileges, and some heavy responsibilities. Woman's place in the past had been marked out for her. She was to remain in the home, gentle and self-effacing. Now she was going out into a wider, rougher world. She would have to show that she could take all her gentle ways of courtesy and self-sacrifice with her into her new duties.

THE TRIUMPH OF LIFE.

MARK how, when the storm has passed, the trees and flowers that remain to live, though sadly torn and wrenched, and sometimes broken and deformed, yet, holding life, ordain to make life fruitful; and they bloom, shedding steadfastly, in adversity, the shelter or the perfume of their office.

Mark how, after the tempest that has scattered nests and nestlings, broken eggs, brought famine to their days, the birds, because they live, ordain to sing as ever, so that life may not continue void of the beauty that they owe to life.

Decree, then, that in time of war, when pain and sorrow, death and agony of brothers racks the spirit; when despair, creeping into the deepest chambers of the soul, disturbs that wonted contemplation of the far, serene, and beautiful; decree for thyself, that because thou holdest life, thy debt of joy to life shall still be met and honoured; that because the stream of the Divine still flows within thy being thou shalt sing and shed what joy is in thee, spread what light thou hast.

Decree that there shall be no wavering, no fault of dismay, but because thou art blessed still with life thy heart shall succour beauty, and proclaim it—the more because so many generous streams of purer light are hidden in the fogs of hate.

Decree that "still to live" is "still to sing." Count not thy sorrows, but, as the flower or tree, forgetting shattered branches, blooms and graces; as the songster, thoughtless of lost home and offspring, sings its joy; so shalt thou, careless of thy care, mindful only of the boon thou hast in life, make, resolutely and devoutly, thy tribute of love, thine offering of hope.

[These lines were written by a soldier who has been broken in the war after nine months' service, and is now permanently disabled.]

THE Women's Alliance in America is busily occupied in keeping in touch with men who have joined the army. It is suggested that women workers should begin with the men who have gone to the war from their own churches, and that one person in every church should be appointed to keep the man informed of home-doings, and to send out Church Calendars, newspapers, and letters. They are recommended to make their work as personal as possible.

THE Council system of Educational Administration in England has been subjected to a searching investigation by a Commission appointed by the Scottish School Board Association. The Report reviews the results of the abolition of School Boards in England and Wales and argues strongly for their preservation in Scotland. To English readers the detailed investigation of the results of the Education Act 1902 will be of interest as it is the first official survey of the working of the Council system of Educational Administration which has taken place since the Act was passed. An English edition of the Report has been published by the National Education Association, Caxton House, Westminster, S.W.1., Price 6d.

NATIONAL UNITARIAN
TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

THE Annual Meeting of this Association was held at Essex Hall on Friday, May 24, Dr. Carpenter, President, in the chair. The Report was read by Mr. F. Cowlin, Secretary, and the financial statement by Mr. Buser, Treasurer. In moving their adoption Dr. Carpenter said it was creditable to "carry on" their temperance work in spite of the absence of workers and the commandeering of premises. The past year had not seen the adoption of Prohibition, through this had been asked for by a very large number of the most influential minds in the country; but, thanks to the Control Board's operations, drunkenness had been much reduced, in some districts at least. He would again express his conviction that State Purchase was the best way to lead to the complete reform which they desired in regard to the drinking habit.

Miss H. M. Johnson of Liverpool was elected President for the ensuing year; the other officers and the Committee being re-elected. Resolutions were passed commending the policy of Prohibition during the war and subsequent demobilisation, and calling on the British Government to follow the example of Canada in regard to the exclusion of the manufacture and distribution of alcoholic liquor.

The President again took the chair at the Public Meeting in the evening, when the Rev. W. G. Tarrant gave an address on 'The Relation of Abstinence to Personal Character.' In the course of his remarks he referred with much candour, mitigated by humour and the inclusion of himself among the sinners, to some of the more pronounced faults of the typical advocate of teetotalism, to his narrowness of vision, his frequent lack of understanding where the point of view and good intentions of his opponents were concerned, to his intemperate manner of expounding his gospel, to his exclusion of all remedies save the one he had espoused, and to his want of judgment and general "lop-sidedness." These things he mentioned, not from any desire to indulge in criticism for the sake of criticism, but because he felt that they sometimes justified their opponents in regarding the teetotaler as a fanatical person, often a "kill-joy," who wanted to coerce other people into renouncing what was to them a pleasure, irrespective of whether they indulged in it with moderation or not. There was in this too much of the spirit of the Pharisee, who thanked God he was not as other men, but it must be remembered that it was not he who went down to his house justified. It did not matter, Mr. Tarrant said, whether the numbers engaged in a movement were many or few, but it did matter very much what kind of people they were, and what driving power they had. If their abstinence was practised from prudential motives only—although much could be said in favour of it from that point of view—if it made a man appear self-righteous, egotistical, and cocksure, and did not lead him to work for the cause of temperance because he wished to serve the good of humanity, his personal character was in greater danger than that of some others who were still addicted to more convivial habits. The whole address was a plea for sanity, wisdom, self-restraint, breadth of view, and good humour in the propagation of temperance principles, which will never appeal to men unless they are urged in a reasonable manner, full credit being given to those who are endeavouring to advance the same cause along other lines.

A discussion followed, in which Messrs. D. Rees, Penwarden, Atkin, Chancellor, and the Revs. H. Dawtrey and J. A. Pearson took part. General agreement was expressed with Mr. Tarrant's address, while it was felt by some that specialisation, as apart from complete all-roundness of view, was more necessary in the case of temperance reform than any other kind of reform owing to the tremendous part played by the drink habit in the degradation of humanity. Mr. Chancellor expressed the opinion that if the Government, in view of the food situation, impose greater restrictions on the liquor traffic in the near future, they will find the people quite ready for them, and cited the very hopeful fact that Hull, with a population of over 200,000, has recently, by means of a plébescite, voted by a big majority for control during the period of the war and demobilisation. Dr. Carpenter confessed that he was unhesitatingly on the side of the ascetics and fanatics. He thought they required a great deal more vigour for the carrying on of their work. The temperance advocate must be continually seeking fresh methods of action, and must perpetually be goaded by the thought of the misery, the squalor, the disease, and the crime that are the result of the drink habit in all classes of society.

Mr. Tarrant received a cordial vote of thanks for his address.

UNITARIAN HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

THE Annual Meeting was held at Essex Hall on May 22, the President, Mr. John C. Warren, in the chair. The report and statement of accounts were presented. Officers and Council were re-elected. Gifts of books to the Society were reported from Mrs. T. Fielding Johnson, Mr. James Groves, The Rev. J. Collins Odgers, and from the library of the late James R. Beard per Mrs. Woodhouse. It was felt desirable that someone in London should be appointed as custodian of the Society's books and antiquities, and the Rev. H. W. Stephenson was accordingly elected as honorary librarian.

Attention having been directed to the dilapidated condition of John Pounds House at Portsmouth by Sir John Kirk, secretary of the Ragged School Union, the matter was referred by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association to the consideration of this Society. It was resolved to co-operate with the friends at Portsmouth in putting this cradle of the Ragged School movement into good repair, and it was suggested that the Society might fix a tablet to the walls of the building recording its historic associations. Contributions to that end would be welcomed by the Treasurer. The issue of the Transactions of the Society had been well received. A "Record Fund" for the publication of documents has been started by a donation from the late Mr. Charles Hawksley and the allocation of Life Members' subscriptions to that purpose, but the issue of such records must wait for happier times.

A public meeting followed at which a paper was read by Dr. A. D. Tyssen on 'The Old Meeting House at Banbury.' At the outset in response to an inquiry sent by Mr. G. Eyre Evans the lecturer said he had not been able to trace the Communion Plate of this congregation. Dr. Tyssen gave full details of the early history of the Banbury congregation. The town was a centre of strong Puritan feeling in the seventeenth century. The earliest existing deed of the present chapel ground is a release dated 1716 which expresses no trust. The congregation was thoroughly well established by 1709 when Stephen Davis was ordained as minister. His successor George Hampton, who died in 1796, married Martha the daughter of Stephen Davis, and thus the ministerial tradition continued in the same family for nearly a century. The deed of May 26, 1765, is memorable in that it first brings in the term "Presbyterian" in connection with this congregation and also introduces us to a well-known family in the person of Thomas Cobb. In 1790 the parish church being deemed to be unsafe, the parishioners of Banbury, with the cordial assent of this congregation, secured an Act of Parliament enabling them to pull down and rebuild the parish church and legalising all marriages and banns published and performed in such place as the vicar should choose as a place for the parishioners to worship at in the meantime. The place chosen was the Old Meeting House, and thus for seven years Episcopalians and Dissenters used the same house of prayer. The Rev. Herbert Jenkins had the unique experience of being married in his own Meeting House by his own vicar, the record being duly made in the parish register. A vote of thanks was accorded to the lecturer on the motion of the Chairman seconded by Dr. Herbert Smith.

A NEW monthly, The Anglo-Italian Review, has just made its appearance. It is edited by Mr. Edward Hutton, and will deal with all matters of Anglo-Italian interest in literature, art, science, politics, and economics. The long list of future contributors is a very representative one, and includes names that are well known both in Italy and England. The review will be published on the 15th of each month by Messrs. Constable, price 1s. 3d.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Belfast.—Advantage was taken of Dr. Jos. P. MacCarthy's visit recently to Belfast, which was primarily in connection with the Ulster Temperance Council's work, to preach in two of our churches on Sunday, May 19. The morning service, which united the First and Mountpottinger congregations, was held in Rosemary Street Church, and a large congregation, that included the American Consul, assembled. It was a source of strength to hear directly from American lips how thoroughly our "Ally" across the seas is identifying herself with the Entente in the world-struggle. The evening service was held in Mountpottinger Church, and the building was filled. Rarely has that aspect of our faith centreing in the person of Christ been presented with such attractive richness and winsome simplicity. To the numerous visitors present Dr. MacCarthy's exposition of the Greek's request (John xii. 20) could not fail to take on a new meaning. Through the kindness of the First Congregation, Rosemary Street, the morning collection (£20) was devoted to the funds of Mountpottinger Church, thus bringing the collections for the day up to the gratifying total of £31 15s.

Bolton.—The Rev. A. O. Broadley (Manchester) has received and accepted a cordial and unanimous invitation to the pastorate of the Halliwell Road Free Church, and he will begin his ministry there on the second Sunday in June. Mr. Broadley is now minister (locum tenens) at the Old Meeting House, Mansfield, Notts.

Bolton.—A special meeting of the Bank Street Chapel congregation was held after morning service on May 5, Mr. J. B. Gass presiding. Mrs. L. Cropper and Mr. Miles Gerrard were appointed representatives of the Bolton District Christian Council. A letter was read by Mr. Gass from Sir T. Flitcroft, giving the result of medical examination undergone by Mr. Flower with a view to joining the army. The following is the essential part of the letter: "I regret my examination prevents me advising you to join the army. Your physical condition only allows me to place you in Grade 3, and I must say I think you are doing more helpful service to your country in remaining at your present post....I have consulted several of my colleagues on the Medical Board, and they entirely endorse my opinion."—The first meeting of the new Bolton District Council of Christian Congregations was held on May 14, and proved most harmonious and encouraging. The President (the Rev. Canon Chapman) was in the chair, and an Executive Committee, among whom was Mrs. Frank Taylor, was elected. Suggestions for future work, including a series of big meetings in the autumn, and a united service on Sunday, August 4, were discussed and referred to the Executive Committee for consideration.

Glasgow.—On Sunday, May 26, the Rev. M. B. Skelland, who is taking up the ministry of St. Saviourgate Chapel, York, next month, preached his farewell sermon in Ross Street Unitarian Church. A farewell gathering had been held on Friday, May 24, the hall being full. The Chairman presented Mr. Skelland with a purse of money on behalf of the congregation, and dealt in an interesting address with the progress of Unitarianism in Scotland—a progress slow, as he explained, chiefly by reason of the particular theological tendencies of Scotch people. In the course of his remarks he referred to the vigorous missionary efforts of the late Rev. J. Page Hopps in 1873-4, which resulted in the present church in Ross Street being placed at their disposal, free of debt, the cost amounting to nearly £4,000.

Horsham.—The 145th Whit Sunday Anniversary was held on Sunday last at the Free Christian Church, when the sermons were preached by the Rev. Cyril Flower. Visitors were present from Billingshurst and various other localities and arrangements for their comfort and convenience had been made by local friends. In the afternoon music and recitations were given. During the winter season the usual activities have been well maintained; various lectures in connection with the Chapel, the Library, and the Museum Society have been well attended, and under the leadership of the Rev. N. J. Hawthorn Jones it is hoped that much useful work lies before the church.

Newton Abbot.—On May 23 and 24 a series of United Services of Intercession arranged by the Anglican and Nonconformist ministers of the town were held, commencing with evening service on the 23rd in St. Leonard's Church, when the lessons were read by the Rev. N. Oliver (Congregational) and the Rev. S. Lyne (Baptist). The Rev. E. G. Beckwith, Rector of Highwick, and Rev. Prebendary W. E. Durham, Rector of Wolborough, conducted the service, the latter preaching the sermon. Services on the next day were held in the Wesleyan Church, as follows: Service at noon, conducted by the Rev. Frederic Allen (Unitarian); afternoon service at 3 o'clock, conducted by the Rev. W. Brook Hirst (Wesleyan); evening service, conducted by the Rev. Cooper G. Hawken (Primitive Methodist), when the scripture lessons were read by the Rev. F. Allen and the Rev. W. E. Durham in the order named. At the two latter services several friends offered prayer. The services were well attended and afforded an example of the truth that diversity of opinion should be no bar to Christian communion, also that there is a broader outlook in matters pertaining to religion in evidence at the present time.

North-East Lancashire Sunday School Union.—On Saturday, May 11, the Union held its annual musical festival at Padiham. Alderman Wadsworth presided, supported by the Rev. Thomas Munn, and the meeting was a great success.

Nottingham.—The Rev. Simon Jones, B.A., of Swansea, has received and accepted a unanimous invitation to become minister of the High Pavement Chapel, in succession to the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne. It is understood that Mr. Jones will enter on his duties in October next.

Peckham.—Mr. G. W. Gibberd, Acting Treasurer of the Avondale Road Church, writes as follows: "In reference to the statement in the Report of the London District Unitarian Society that an 'appeal will shortly be made by Peckham to meet expenses of repairs,' will you kindly allow me to say that this appeal has already been made, and very generously responded to, to the amount of £145, leaving the congregation about £95 to raise. In seconding the adoption of the report, I took advantage of the occasion to mention that we had already raised £80 of the amount, and it is probably due to the crude and unconventional way in which I indicated our intention of raising the remainder that gave rise to the misunderstanding. Thanks to so many kind and generous friends Peckham will soon clear her debt, but the London District Unitarian Society itself is urgently in need of funds and particularly annual subscribers."

Pendleton.—The Anniversary Services at the Unitarian Church were a great success, the congregation numbering nearly a hundred in the morning and two hundred at the evening service. A spirit of enthusiasm prevailed, and the offertory on this occasion realised £20.—A special Commemorative Service will be held on Sunday, June 30, at 10.45 A.M., the anniversary of the unveiling of the Roll of Honour.—The death is recorded of Private Herbert Smith, who was killed in action on April 9. Only a few weeks before he went out to France he addressed the senior boys of the Sunday school, and his bright, cheery manner will be remembered by all who heard him.

Scottish Churches.—Aberdeen.—The Rev. Henry Dawtrey is preaching to encouraging and appreciative congregations at the Unitarian Church, and as a result of the enthusiasm and untiring efforts, both of himself and of Mrs. Dawtrey, a fine spirit of camaraderie is abroad amongst old and young alike. At the quarterly meeting on May 14 it was proposed by the Secretary, Mr. H. H. Duncan, that a memorial to the Rev. Alexander Webster, the founder of the church, should be placed within its walls. The matter was cordially taken up, and the Church Committee now has the scheme in hand. Edinburgh.—Lieut. Doughty has fallen in the fighting in France. He joined the army as a private early in the war, and saw active service in that capacity in Egypt and in France. Last year he returned home to train for a commission, and had only quite recently returned to France. Lieut. Doughty's career at the University, his capacity and earnestness, marked him out as one certain to render high and unselfish service to the community.—The death is announced of Miss Georgina Moffat, whose connection with St. Mark's extended over a long period of years, and who took great interest in its affairs. For many years she was Secretary of the Literary Society, and without doubt the efficiency and progress of that body was in no small degree due to her devoted labours on its behalf. Kirkcaldy.—The Rev. S. T. Pagesmith, who has been the resident minister at the Unitarian Church for the last eighteen months, and is now, as is announced elsewhere, taking up fresh duties at Warwick, was the recipient of a gift from the congregation and Sunday school as a token of appreciation for his devoted services at a farewell congregational meeting. At the farewell service he preached on 'The Inwardness of Religion.' Stenhousemuir and Perth.—The usual Sunday services have been held at both these places, and at Stenhousemuir the Speakers' Class, attended by both men and women, has been well attended. The Rev. R. T. Russell in his report in The Scottish Unitarian says that at Perth, when he started the open-air meetings in April, the attendance was remarkably good. Arrangements were being made for a 'Three Days' Open-Air Mission in Glasgow. Scottish Unitarian Sunday School Union.—The annual meetings of the Union were held in Glasgow on May 4 and 5. The meetings on Saturday were held at Ross Street, and opened with a religious service, conducted by the Rev. Henry Williamson, who gave an address. A conference followed, presided over by Mr. W. Twaddle, when papers were read by Dr. R. V. Holt, the Rev. H. Dawtry, and the Rev. L. Jenkins Jones. The short discussion was opened by the Rev. E. T. Russell.

Todmorden.—The following losses owing to the war are recorded in the Calendar of the Unitarian Church: Ernest Butterworth (8th Lincolns), a silver medallist of the school, who fell in France on April 5, aged 20; Wilfrid Firth (East Lancs.), in France, on April 10, aged 33; Arthur Whipp (2nd 5th Lancs. Fus.), in France, aged 20; Ernest Barker (R.F.A.), in France, aged 32; and Ronald Shackleton (Devons), aged 20. These had all been formerly connected with the school, and their memory is held in high honour and regard.—During April a united meeting of Sunday school workers was held in the Town Hall, under the presidency of the Mayor. Mr. J. L. Paton of Manchester Grammar School addressed the gathering; the Revs. J. H. Lomax, Vicar of Harley Wood; A. Nightingale, Baptist; and A. J. Norman, Wesleyan, also spoke, and the Unitarian church choir contributed the music.—On Sunday, May 19, the Rev. C. Biggins, who has enlisted in the R.A.M.C., preached for the last time, in the afternoon, in the Sunday school. Mr. J. H. Gill, Alderman Wadsworth, and the minister, the Rev. A. W. Fox, gave expression to the high regard in which he is held. Mr. Biggins will be sorely missed.

Torquay.—A memorial tablet has been placed in Unity Church by Mrs. J. R. Beard in memory of her husband, the late Mr. J. R. Beard, who died in Torquay in March of last year. The tablet has been made by Messrs. Powell & Sons, Whitefriars, and is of bronzed copper in a frame embossed with a wreath of olive leaves. It bears the following inscription: "To the glory of God and in loving memory of James R. Beard, J.P., who died at Torquay on March 3, 1917."

Warwick.—The Rev. S. T. Pagesmith, late of Kirkcaldy, having accepted the unanimous invitation of the members of High Street Chapel, will commence his ministry on Sunday next, June 2.

* THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, June 2.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
Bell Street, Edgware Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. GOLLAND.
Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. THOS. MUNN.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
Dingley Place Mission, St. Lukes, City Road, 11 and 6.30.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.
Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.; 6, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.
Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH: 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND. (Special War Worker's Service.)
Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Miss MAUD B. BURTT.
Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
Rhyl Street, Kentish Town, 11 and 6.30, Mr. PETERKIN.
South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.
Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Mr. JOSEPH P. ROSLING.
University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.
Woolwich, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11, Mr. JOSEPH P. ROSLING; 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11, Supply.
BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.
BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOHN EWART, M.A., B.D.
BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.
BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Room, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. JOSEPH P. MACCARTHY, Ph.D.
CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.
CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
DEAN ROW, 10.45.
DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.
DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DONALD B. FRASER.
GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.
HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30.
LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. R. F. RATTRAY.
LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT.
LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. L. W. LEWIS, M.A.; 6.30, Mr. A. TODD.
LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN.
MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. MCLACHLAN, M.A. B.D.
MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.
MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. R. SCOTT.
NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.
NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.
PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.
TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. D. DAVIS.
WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. T. PAGESMITH.
WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

WINNEPEG, CANADA.

All Souls' Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

Notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week should be sent to The Publisher, 13 BREEM'S BUILDINGS, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

The name of the Minister of the Church is inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

June

2. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.
9. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.
16. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.
23. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.
Subject of Sermon, June 2: "The Sons of Martha."

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL ON MODERN LINES
WITH PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

The aim of the Religious Teaching is to instil a simple Christian Faith and personal religion. There is full Morning Service in the School on Sunday. In the evening boys may, if their parents desire it, attend a place of worship in Nantwich.

Full Prospectus, apply to the Head Master:
H. LANG JONES, M.A. (Oxon.).

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation. Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION,

22 Northumberland Avenue, London.

Founded by the late Mr. G. R. Jesse in 1875.

The Society offers to send a LECTURER free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY. No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4. (Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.	L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL.	H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
	H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Transactions of the Unitarian Historical Society

Contents.

APOLOGY FOR THE NONCONFORMIST ARIANS OF THE 18TH CENTURY. Fred J. Powicke, Ph.D.
THE OLD NONCONFORMITY AT NORTON, DERBYSHIRE. II. Christopher J. Street, M.A., LL.B.
THE ORIGIN AND HISTORY OF THE OLD MEETING HOUSE, ABERDARE. Rees Jenkin Jones, M.A.

THE DEEDS OF WESTGATE CHAPEL, LEWES. R. M. Montgomery, K.C.

THE CHURCH BOOK OF THE GENERAL BAPTIST CHURCH AT TURNERS HILL AND HORLEY. W. H. Burgess.

AN HISTORICAL LEGAL DECISION.

NOTES AND QUERIES, &c.

Subscribers to the Society receive a Free Copy.

5 ESSEX STREET, LONDON, W.C.2.

3s. net, postage 3d.

OUT OF THE HEART OF THE STORM.

Twelve Sermons preached at Rosslyn Hill Chapel Hampstead, and Manchester College, Oxford.

BY

Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

The sermons are written by one who believes with President Wilson that "right is more precious than peace," and that no personal sorrow or loss should discourage us and turn us from our firm resolve to overthrow the Prussian autocracy. They are written too in the growing confidence that faith in God and in the supremacy of Love has become more and not less possible and real through the conflict and agony of recent times.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY.

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,
Editor of The Inquirer.

Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

PEARL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000

Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

Situations, Vacant and Wanted.

LADY WANTED, to help with housework.
—Ingleside, Woodcote Road, Wallington.

SUPERIOR MAID, with some knowledge of Nursing, wanted, to attend to elderly Lady.
—Miss TAYLOR, The Glen, Heaton, Bolton.

WANTED, SITUATION as useful COMPANION or SECRETARY. Domesticated, cheerful; excellent references. Hampstead or North of London district preferred.—Care of INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

Board and Residence, &c.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.—Board-residence. Meat ration supplemented by vegetarian dishes and country produce. Enquiries, which must be accompanied by stamped envelope, from Miss SMITH.

Miscellaneous.

LINEN SHEETS. Superior quality snow-white Irish Linen Sheets at Bargain Prices, 2 by 2½ yds., 30s.; 2 by 3 yds., 36s.; 2½ by 3 yds., 42s.; 2½ by 3 yds., 48s.; 2½ by 3½ yds., 52s.; 2½ by 3½ yds., 56s. per pair.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT. Cash or offer by return. Before selling make sure of their value by writing for FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any artificial teeth.—E. LEWIS, 29 London Street, Southport, Lancs. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER.

THAT OLD SET OF TEETH

You do not wear may now be worth up to £15 for the precious metals they contain. Send them to us. We will give you the highest possible value. Also buyers of gold and surplus jewellery. Offers made by return for goods sent by post. If offer not accepted, goods returned post free. Platinum Scrap £16 per ounce.

SATISFACTION ASSURED.

I. RAYBURN & CO.,
105 Market Street, Manchester.

The Directors regret to announce that the very large increases in the cost of paper and printing make it necessary to raise the price of THE INQUIRER to 2d. weekly, from and including our issue of JULY 6.

Subscribers would greatly help our depleted and consequently over-burdened office staff if they would kindly forward, without individual application, the additional subscription required for the rest of the year 1918, viz., 1s. 1d.

The Inquirer.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2; INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines extra lines 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenæum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C., Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, June 1, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3962.
NEW SERIES, No. 1065.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 8, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	181	CORRESPONDENCE:—	CENTENARY OF AGED MINISTERS' SOCIETY	185
OUR DEAD	182	Where is the Religious Centre?	BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	185
MONOTHEISM AND MISSIONARY ZEAL	182	Hard Sayings in the Teaching of Jesus	OUR SUPPLEMENT	185
THE INCREDIBLE GOOD	183	Lawrence House Bulletin	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	186
BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—		AUTUMN SCHOOL FOR MINISTERS AT MANCHESTER COLLEGE
Edward Thomas's Poems	183

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

THURSDAY in last week was appointed by President Wilson a New Memorial Day for the United States. He said in his proclamation: "I...do exhort my fellow-citizens of all faiths and creeds to assemble...in their several places of worship and there, as well as in their homes, to pray to Almighty God that He may forgive our sins and shortcomings as a people and purify our hearts to see and love the truth, to accept and defend all things that are just and right, and to purpose only those righteous acts and judgments which are in conformity with His will; beseeching Him that He will give victory to our armies as they fight for freedom, wisdom to those who take counsel on our behalf in these days of dark struggle and perplexity, and steadfastness to our people to make sacrifice to the utmost in support of what is just and true, bringing us at last the peace in which men's hearts can be at rest because it is founded upon mercy, justice, and goodwill."

* * *

WE were under the impression that either by express regulation or by strongly established understanding the detailed reporting of nauseous cases in the Criminal Courts was to be prevented, but the recent orgy of newspaper nastiness has grossly proved the contrary. Oddly enough this voluminous overflowing of mud coincides in time with the most urgent appeals and most drastic orders for paper economy, as well as with such an exhibition of censoring zeal in regard to military matters as has evoked strong protest in many and very diverse quarters. Are we to conclude that our rulers have become so obsessed by the war as not to care for anything else—not even for common decency?

ON another page particulars are given of plans for an Autumn School for Ministers at Manchester College, Oxford, to be followed in succeeding terms by similar schools for lay preachers and Sunday school teachers respectively. The striking success of last session's efforts in this direction gives assurance that this offer will be much appreciated by all who can arrange to attend, and we strongly advise early application for enrolment. The lecturers, it will be seen, include the Master of University College, Oxford, Prof. Gilbert Murray, and four of the ablest and most scholarly of our younger ministers, in addition to the College staff; and as ministers of other denominations are invited to attend the School there should be peculiar interest and benefit in the discussions which are to form a part of the curriculum.

* * *

AMONG the Colonial Honours announced on Monday is a knighthood conferred on Mr. Robert Nelson Kotze, Government Mining Engineer, Union of South Africa. In his professional work he has rendered great service, especially in connection with the Rand gold mines, where in addition to the technical matters involved the fight with miner's phthisis has occupied much of his attention. Sir Robert, as he now is, is a worthy representative of the liberal religious community in South Africa. His father was a Dutch minister of advanced views, and his wife's father was the late Rev. David Faure, the founder of the Cape Town Unitarian congregation, and a zealous champion of liberty, political and religious. Both husband and wife took the warmest interest in the effort to found a congregation in Johannesburg seven years ago, and those of us who met them on a subsequent visit to this country will desire to congratulate them on a well-deserved distinction.

* * *

THE British Academy has issued an appeal for the endowment of a School of Archæology in Jerusalem, with a view to carrying on exploration not only in Palestine but in adjacent lands as far as Mesopotamia. The appeal, which bears many noteworthy signatures, reminds us that the late Lord Kitchener rendered much valuable service in the survey promoted by the Palestine Exploration Fund; but indeed his name is only one of a brilliant group of British military names associated with this work. We may expect that the present campaign will immensely stimulate many soldiers who are now actually face to face with the promises and problems of this supremely fascinating adventure into the secrets of the past.

* * *

HERE is a glimpse of Bethany: it reaches us from one of our men out there: "When we were on the Mount of Olives, we found a little Arab boy, nearly dead from cold and hunger. Of course we gave him food, and our cooks took him under their wing, and I am glad to say he is strong and well again. He speaks English now very well, and we have adopted him, and keep him as a 'mascot.' I found on questioning him, that the Turks before leaving Bethany, where he lived, killed his father, mother, two little sisters and brother, and that he has no relations left. He won't leave us now, and no amount of argument is any use; so we have decided to bring him home with the regiment (whenever that may be!) He is a good little chap, about 10, and for an Arab he has more than the average intelligence."

* * *

SOME pungent sentences from a note by the Rev. L. G. Wilson, Editorial Secretary of the American Unitarian Association, are well worth attention in the Old Country, though specially referring to the new communities of the Far West. "In these communities," he says, "where the spirit and habit of Unitarianism is not widely known, there are two temptations that endanger the success of the Unitarian preacher. The first is the temptation to compromise with orthodoxy. Now there are many things in orthodoxy that are worth having, but not its creed nor its phraseology, nor (in certain types of liberal orthodoxy) its fatal effort to blow cold and hot at one and the same time. And the Unitarian preacher who undertakes to sing Unitarianism to orthodox words, or to preach the theology of Parker or Martineau to Billy Sunday's cue will never evolve a Unitarian church. Laodicean Unitarians are not a success. But the other temptation which jeopardises the work of Unitarian preachers is that of attempting to bring into existence a religion which no one has ever thought of before; or to put together the fragments of a dozen cults, independently of Unitarian tradition and practice. The kind of mosaic which results from such efforts is a cubist production. Suitable eyes to see what it all means have not yet been evolved on this planet. Unitarianism, whatever it may be, is known of its own, goes to its own, and flourishes when, both in the pulpit and in the pew, it is true to type."

* * *

THIS mention of "Billy Sunday" calls to mind a little fact which has apparently escaped the notice of most people in this country. The Continent, "the leading Presbyterian paper" in America, as The Christian Register describes it, rebuked him faithfully in a recent issue, apparently not without cause. A woman, it is alleged, "secured an introduction of Hugh C. Weir to the evangelist for the purpose of getting him to attach his name to Weir's manuscript, later published and advertised as Sunday's own work, under the title 'Love Stories of the Bible.'" Court proceedings were ultimately instituted, and as she succeeded in being "awarded a judgment of money" the allegation must be taken as proved. The Presbyterian journal regards Sunday's part in this shady transaction as "a startling anomaly," which is putting it rather mildly; but it also goes on to say, "As a preacher who calls on men to repent of their sins he can only square himself with the Church whose ethical reputation he has discredited by publicly acknowledging his sin and voicing unreservedly his penitence."

* * *

THE new Bishop of Hereford presented a courageous argument on Sunday, at Westminster Abbey, on behalf of revising the formularies of the Church in the light of modern knowledge—and, we should like to add, of modern feeling. His plea for sincerity in religion evidently comes from a mind very ill at ease with present conditions. "The genuine and, indeed, unavoidable difficulties of candid, informed, and considering believers cannot be met by the brutally simple non possumus of authority." The Church must be willing both to learn and unlearn, taking courage from the experienced wisdom of former readjustments. "We of the Church of England cannot, without self-stultification, follow the example of the Church of Rome, and confront our modernists with the brutally simple alternative—Recant or Depart." By way of practical illustration the Bishop has appointed the Rev. Alfred Fawkes, vicar of Ashby St. Ledger's, Rugby, whose 'Studies in Modernism' are (we hope) known by the more studious of our readers, to be an honorary chaplain,

OUR DEAD.

THE memory of the beloved dead is always sacred, but a special reverence, an unwonted awe, gathers round the names inscribed on the Roll of Honour which we publish for our readers to-day. The perusal of the long sad list brings a sense of unspeakable tragedy. Knowing our own personal share of grief for this one and that, we estimate more completely the depth of the shadow that falls across our whole fellowship. The older members must especially feel it, though not they alone. How many of us there are who but a little while ago based our dearest hopes on the lives thus cut short—how well do we understand now the broken-hearted cry of the ancient monarch, "Would God I had died for thee!"

It has been ordered otherwise. These have died for us. They have been sacrificed for us. Their memory, as of dear ones sacrificed, lives and will ever live for us. It is a memory that will be cherished continually in the home circle and in the companionships they made bright by their presence. For love of them what shall we not try to be?

But theirs is a memory challenging, also, to every thoughtful mind. These, and the others named on the million-lists of the nations, why have they been sacrificed? What pagan ideals, what devilish passions, built up the altar that has devoured so many and so precious victims? How is the world to be cleansed of this poison in its blood? Who that survives will not vow to God that, so far as in him lies, mankind shall suffer this awful thing no more?

These were loyal to duty as it appeared to them. With them, and all such, it is well. Some were marked out for high honour here, others have honour Elsewhere. It is well with them; and if we also go manfully forward in the path of duty we know it will be well with us.

MONOTHEISM AND MISSIONARY ZEAL.

THE great representatives of Monotheism in ancient times were the Jewish Prophets and Psalmists and Jesus Christ himself. Why the Western World did not become Monotheistic instead of Trinitarian after the time of Christ it is difficult to understand. It would be untrue to say it was because Monotheism never proselytises; take Mahommedanism—a far lower type of Monotheism than Judaism—as a signal example to the contrary, though Jewish history can also testify to much missionary zeal. Mr. Montefiore in his noble lecture at Essex Hall in Whitweek reminded us that orthodox Jewish Monotheism at the present time had no interest in making converts. They believe that some day, in God's good time, all the world will accept their thought of God, but they do not feel called upon to hasten that time. Such an attitude of mind is not unknown in Unitarian circles, and one is moved to ask what is its real origin.

The missionary apathy of modern orthodox Jews and of some Unitarians is not sufficiently explained by saying that they are so certain of their own truth that they do not think it worth while to confute other people's errors. There is a certain self-satisfaction, a certain want of interest in other people, a certain detachment and lack of human fellowship about such isolated faith. Missionary enthusiasm at its best is not due to bigotry or pride. It is due to two things: a firm belief in our own belief and a sense of deep inward unity with others. Belief in my own belief is not bigotry; unless I do really believe in my own belief, I do not believe at all. And trying to persuade others of the truth of the belief which I believe, wishing them to believe it, thinking it would be well for them to believe it, is not bigotry—it is human sympathy, it is treating others as not aliens but brethren. To be indifferent to what others do and think, to leave them alone and make no effort to help them to be good and to instruct them in the truth is not tolerance, it is selfish absorption, living apart from the world; it is a lack of human sympathy and love.

No doubt much missionary propaganda has been narrow and hard and conceited and wanting in the recognition of any good in those whom it seeks to convert. But, on the other hand, to believe that certain things are right, and certain doctrines are true, to feel their value for ourselves and yet to be entirely without any desire to propagate these doctrines and these principles is the mark of individualists who do not feel the responsibility of social life and fellowship. It is the attitude of a mediæval hermit without the asceticism which gave dignity to his isolation. We have no right to look on at the evil in the world without longing and striving to make it better, or at the mistakes and follies of the world without wishing to make it wiser, or at the intellectual errors of men without wishing to correct them. It is impossible for a man who loves his fellow-men to have a real belief and not to have a certain missionary ardour which makes him desire and strive to impress the thoughts and principles which he holds dear on others. The tendency both amongst ourselves and amongst the orthodox Jews to be a little ashamed of missionary enthusiasm is a perverted and mistaken shame. We can no more leave the cause of truth to God than we can leave the cause of freedom to God. To leave things to God when they are things which our will and thought might alter, is often a fine phrase for laziness. God does not do for us the things that we ought to do for ourselves.

H. Gow.

AN elderly man, professing to come from Derby, and to be prevented by rheumatism from starting work at Woolwich Arsenal, has called recently on Unitarian ministers in London soliciting help. It will be well to verify the statements made, before disbursing, if he makes further calls of the kind,

THE INCREDIBLE GOOD.

By Dr. L. P. JACKS,

Manchester College, Oxford

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But unto us God hath revealed them through the spirit."—I. Cor. ii. 9 and 10.

WHAT does all this mean? It means that there is a world awaiting us all, so good, so completely satisfying that unless our eyes were opened to see it by the Spirit of God nobody would ever believe it to be possible—one of those things of which we say they are too good to be true. It is so transcendently good that all human measures of good are inadequate to comprehend it. It is even beyond our imagination; it hath not entered into the heart of man to conceive, and when a glimpse of it is occasionally given, you become, as St. Paul confessed he became, like a fool; it turns your head, it makes you beside yourself and you have to apologise for your seeming extravagance, as he apologised to the Corinthians. Our intelligence cannot compass it and we find it incredible. And yet it is always there—always a fact. And not a distant fact either, but close at hand; right under the eyes which are unable to see, right under the intelligence which is unable to believe. It is no "far-off divine event," which some future generation may be privileged to see, but a present and actual state of affairs, an Invisible City of God, closer than breathing, nearer than hands or feet. We are parted from it by a veil, the thinnest veil conceivable, but just enough to hide from us this staggering revelation of undreamt-of good.

You may sum up the message of St. Paul in these terms. It was the proclamation of an incredible and immeasurable good lying just at arm's reach; which we cannot apprehend fully while we are subject to the limitations of our mortality, but which shall become ours to possess and understand so soon as we are liberated from that muddy vesture of decay which we call the body. Glimpses of it we may have now and then; but to see it always is impossible; nay, not even desirable, for our faculties would break down under the strain and we should be like men beside themselves. Nevertheless, it is of priceless value to know that it is there, even though we cannot for the time being know much more about it. It helps to support an existence which at moments would be otherwise insupportable. It puts energy into our souls. It makes us equal to our heavy burden. We become conquerors and more than conquerors over all that is opposed to us—over sin, over suffering, over death, and over all that these involve. Such is the Gospel of St. Paul—the Gospel of an Incredible Good.

And observe another thing. This Gospel of the Incredible Good was not addressed to people who had any reason to take a rosy or optimistic view of life. It was addressed for the most part to poor men, to slaves, to the victims of oppression and misery, to those familiar with hunger and cruelty and the lash, whose outlook on life was as dark as it could possibly be. These were the people who accepted it and found it true and lived under its inspiration and conquered in its power. The men who had tasted the extremity of evil, the men who had seen and felt the incredible depths to which evil can go, these were the easiest to persuade of the incredible height of the good.

Our position to-day is in many respects a similar one to theirs. We, too, have tasted the extremities of evil and have seen something of the length to which evil can go in the world. Four years ago eye had not seen nor ear heard, nor had it entered into our hearts to conceive the extent of the harm which men are capable of inflicting on one another. That, too, has been a staggering revelation. Had some prophet drawn a picture four years ago of what is now an accomplished fact we should have said he was beside himself. That is what we did say of the prophets who foretold this thing in general terms and warned us that Armageddon was at hand. "These," we said, "are wild men, foolish alarmists, imbeciles, croakers and dotards." But had the prophet been more precise, had he told us that ten million men would be slaughtered in four years—that four or five times as many would be maimed or crippled; had he attempted to describe the devastations and the sorrows in detail; had he informed us of the wealth that would be destroyed, and how in this country alone we should have a National Debt of eight thousand millions and be taxed to the extent of 800 millions a year—if he had told us so much as that, and it is not the half, this prophet, we should have said, is clearly a dangerous madman; he is the victim of a diseased imagination; for the thing of which he is speaking is absolutely incredible: evil on this scale is beyond the will of mankind to achieve—it is all a bad dream from the nether world. And yet the thing has come to pass: this incredible evil is as actual and as near as is that incredible good which some suppose to be only a fond dream of St. Paul's.

Has it not been a staggering revelation? Of course, we do not realise what it means. Like the incredible good proclaimed by St. Paul, this incredible evil is far beyond our powers to take it in. We describe it in figures and words; but the thing itself eludes us. And that is a merciful provision; for if we were able to take it in, to realise what lies behind those appalling facts and figures, we should be completely overwhelmed. This also would be more than we could bear; and we may well thank God that people are able to go about their usual occupations and that children are able to continue at their play. If a thousandth part of it were to come home to us our occupations would go to pieces and the children would play no more. And yet we have seen something of it, something that we can never forget. Not only the extent of evil, not only the power of it, but the extraordinary promptitude with which it does its work. No dawdling here, nothing that resembles the slow and gradual methods which are so falsely upheld as the methods proper to the good. Four years is a short time to get so much woe inflicted, so much evil done. It has been quick work. Is there any power on earth which can do as much good to mankind in four years as the war has done harm? On earth there is certainly none. Take the powers of earth one by one; add them all together; science, art, literature, education, social reform and the rest; and you will find that it is utterly beyond these to do in four years as much good as the war has done harm. Give them time enough, give them centuries and no doubt they will have something to show for themselves. But evil has not taken centuries to inflict this woe upon mankind. It has done the business in four years.

But if the power that can do this is not on earth, may it not be that we can find it in heaven? St. Paul thought we could. Over against the vision of Incredible Evil he set up the vision of Incredible Good. On this side he shows us the whole creation, groaning and travailling together in pain, and just beyond it, leading out of it, as the porch leads to the temple, as the door leads into the room, an immortal world, a heavenly city, where suffering and death have no more dominion, of which the eye hath not seen nor the ear heard nor the heart of man conceived the good that it contains; so that our light affliction which is but for a moment worketh for us a far more exceeding weight of glory. "Incredible," say you? But not more incredible than this other thing would have been four years ago.

People are asking what is to happen to religion after the war. One thing at least is certain. If there is to be any religion after the war—and I think there will be a great deal—what it reveals to us will have to be a match for what the war has revealed. The war has revealed the depths, and the religion which is to match it must reveal the heights. It is incredible evil that we have seen and nothing short of incredible good can answer it. The world will need some great vision, some glorious revelation, if it is ever to get over these last four years. Improvements here and there, reconstructions of theology, better phraseology, more reasonable formulations, this made a little more passable, that made a little less absurd—all this is nothing to the purpose. The bloodstain which these four years have left on the page of human history is too dark and deep to be wiped out by means such as these. Something far greater, far more sweeping, far more majestic must be achieved.

May we not hope that this experience, which has taught us to measure the depths, will also have given us new power to compass the heights? My own hope is great, but it lies not with the people who have looked on at this thing, not with those who have studied it as a problem of morals or religion, but with those who have gone through with it to the uttermost, with those who have borne the cross of it, in the millions of homes where Rachel is mourning for her children, and on all the wide-spread fields of suffering and death. These have touched the Incredible Evil; and they will only be repeating what has happened before if they become prophets of an Incredible Good. These four years a light affliction? Nay rather, it has been as heavy as it could possibly be. But only those who have known its heaviness and borne it will be entitled to say "it is a light affliction which worketh for us a far more exceeding weight of glory."

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

EDWARD THOMAS'S POEMS.*

A YEAR ago in April Edward Thomas died on the West Front at his post of Forward Observation. He was placidly filling his pipe when the death-blow came. Something in that passing fits with the life that passed. His first book bore a title gratefully borrowed from an eighteenth century writer, 'Horæ Solitariae.' He spent many hours, boy and man, alone; not gloomily or egotistically, but just observing. To use a phrase of his own, he had a "good eye," and must needs go about seeing, from childhood upwards. A member of his family tells how he would come from country rambles with the notes of his spying among fields and lanes, and his first introduction to literature was due to this habit. When at the age of 16 or so he spoke at Wandsworth to a children's meeting about things seen on a recent holiday, and we are told that his talent was at once discerned by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, who presided, and who encouraged him to write a series of papers for Young Days on Birds of the Month. These were not only accepted but paid for, and so began Edward Thomas's professional career. The end of it, as of so many others of England's brilliant sons in our time, was on the battle-field.

* Poems. By Edward Thomas ("Edward Eastaway"). Selwyn & Blount. Pp. 63. Price 3s. 6d.

Just before the end came he had begun to be known as a poet. Occasional verses, signed "Edward Eastaway," appeared in periodicals now and then, and some of his poems were gathered up into specimen collections of Georgian verse. The little volume named below preserves, presumably, the greater part of the verses by him, which he, or his friends, thought worth preserving; but even should there be any further MSS. to draw upon we may take it for settled that nothing bulky in this kind will stand to his record. Ever industrious, he wrote many other books, something like a score, in the score of years or so that were granted to him for work. Their titles precisely indicate the bent of his genius, and that bent might be inferred by any one who observed the enthusiasm and diligent care with which he prepared the life of Richard Jefferies which stands out, with his life of George Borrow, from other books on men which he undertook. 'The Woodland Life,' 'The South Country,' 'The Heart of England,' 'The Icknield Way,' such are some of his titles, and the latest of all, 'A Literary Pilgrimage' adds just the required note to indicate his fuller scope.

For Thomas was much more than an observer of nature's moods and ways, her colours, sounds, shapes, tastes and odours. He was a well read man, conversant with the classics, with Celtic, with French, but above all with English literature. His nature was throughout of a delicately sensitive cast, and one observes him thrilling at times to touches which the average reader, more ready for massive effects, would miss. The poems are true to such a nature, just as true as his writing generally. We believe his father-in-law, the late James Ashcroft Noble, who was instrumental in securing for him (as for some other writers now celebrated) the fuller introduction to literary life, and who was himself a skilful penman, once issued a little book entitled 'Verses of a Prose Writer.' Most of Edward Thomas's work might not inaptly be described as 'Prose of a Poet,' showing, indeed, some of the checks and hindrances of an art in which, as has been said, "you say what you can" within the limitations of rhyme and rhythm, but also revealing to the fit audience (for he, like all good authors, should be read aloud) cadences subtly musical, gently surprising, and dexterously complete. And in turn, when he comes to verse, it is in his own way. There is the least possible courtesy to convention in his method. A score of "popular" writers might be named who use the jingle infinitely more successfully—with οἱ πολλοί—than he could ever have done had he lived to fourscore. But then, their verse passes with their day; his, and such as his, waits in successive generations for the ear and heart of the initiated. Those in this generation who would not miss the "authentic note," however modestly chanted, and coming from however sequestered a retreat, may try their fortunes here, or do worse. They will, if lucky, discover in these little pieces, the touch of a lover not of nature only but of men, even the raggedest and homeliest, a painter of loveliness in least things, a quiet acute critic of usage and average opinion—in short, of one of God's spies, who faithfully tells what one short observing life has found out in the light and the twilight of this world.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WHERE IS THE RELIGIOUS CENTRE?

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Dr. Mellor's letter, the spirit of which I appreciate, makes evident that there is great diversity of belief concerning the nature of Christ among those whom I have charged with revolting from the theological tendency of our denomination. The subject is of importance, for I find the phrase "centralisation in Jesus" is beginning to appear in reports of sermons in your columns. My sole object in writing is to urge that those who are using this phrase should study it in all its implications. I wish, Sir, that there were space in your columns for a full discussion of these.

Let no one suppose that this is a mere quibble between certain ministers of religion which is entirely remote from the present stirring events. It is the direct result of the war. History abundantly proves that times of great excitement and movement always make it necessary to study afresh the relation of God to the world and to man. The Athanasian controversy was directly associated with the most turbulent period in the history of the Roman Empire. The Protestant Reformation was contemporaneous with the age of discovery which introduced new ideas of the world. Something similar must be said of the theological controversy of the nineteenth century. I would not write another line, if I did not most sincerely believe that this subject has a most intimate and vital connection with current events and the life that now is. The old presentations of truth which were relevant four years ago need revision. We must develop our message to meet the present needs, and I am prepared for any revolt which will help the world to a higher level of thought and worship. The call to deeper study and more earnest consecration is urgent. I am, therefore in agreement with Dr. Mellor when he writes that we have to plumb our doctrine of God as well as our doctrine of Christ: I would add our doctrine of man.

Let us, however, be accurate in our statement concerning Unitarian doctrine in the past, and on this point I must say, with all respect, Dr. Mellor has gone a little astray. Unitarians have not been anxious concerning "the full humanity" of Christ, and cannot for that reason be charged with overlooking something valuable implied in the doctrine of Christ's divinity. Since the Second General Council (of Constantinople 381 A.D.) condemned the heresy of Apollinarius, the quondam friend of Athanasius, the Church has been consistent in declaring the reality and completeness of Christ's human nature. The phrase "perfect humanity" recurs with almost a wearisome insistence in later writings. What Unitarians have been anxious about is the co-divinity of man with Christ. It is because of this that I have always felt keenly the injustice of the accusation that Unitarians build their faith on a negation. All that they have denied is that there is a generic difference between Jesus and man. Surely the first denial is that of orthodoxy, viz., that man is not veritably the child of God, and by implication has no real right to pray "Our Father."

This is apparently the point of departure between Dr. Mellor and Mr. Davis and myself. "As Christian Theists," he writes, "we worship God who in Christ has come to us in the might of His holiness and love: and as Christian Theists, we pray to the God who in Christ revealed Himself to us." True: but does this involve the centralisation of faith, i.e., faith in God, in Jesus Christ? My objection is to the absolute limitation of the revelation of God to Christ. Recently, if never before, I have seen the light of God in young eyes aglow with high ideals, and I have recognised it as the same light as that which shone in the eyes of him whom I regard pre-eminently as my Master. For me the world and humanity are instinct with the living God. He is

A motion and a Spirit, that impels
All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things.

There are emotions of the Divine and aspects of the Divine which I do not find as clearly and fully expressed in the Gospel record as in some movements to-day. Does this imperfect account of only thirty-five days of one individual's life contain all that we need to know of God and man?

When I am asked to state as fully as I can express it what I mean by God (vide Dr. Mellor's letter), I frankly reply that it is a task I cannot undertake. The content of my idea of God is so varied and overflowing that it refuses to be imprisoned in words. I have long seen the impossibility of defining the Infinite, and have regarded those definitions which are most indefinite, but most reverent, as the best. For instance, Second Isaiah's words appeal to me more than any of the hundred and odd definitions I have come across, "Thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy: I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit." Moreover, to turn to the question of the relation of God to His world is to open a new subject of discussion.

We are in the track of great historic controversies, especially those associated with the names of Tertullian, Origen, Lucian and Arius, which ought to be studied afresh by those who are using the phrase "centralisation in Jesus." By so doing they would learn, if they are not already aware of it, that this phrase is capable of diverse interpretations, that it leads to confusion and schism, and that the idea it contains has been tried and found wanting. Those who are employing it have not discovered anything new, but are trying to revive doctrines which are old and outworn. From the metaphysical point of view, strange to say, I am in sympathy with Athanasius, for I also contend for the possibility and reality of the union of the divine and the human, though not in the limited sense intended by the great patriarch of Alexandria.

I must place other statements I wish to make in tabular form.

1. First and most important, I must repeat my previous question, "In which Jesus ought our faith to be centralised?" Owing to the confusion of diverse views as the result of modern criticism, this question must be reiterated until it is answered.

2. Dr. Mellor gives an excellent reply to a previous question by me, that he has found in Christ the objective side to his statement of the subjective side of religious experience so clearly set forth in his volume. In what sense has he found it? It is evident from this history of his own development that he discovered faith in God first in himself and afterwards found it expressed in the life of Jesus: that is to say, Christ is the illustration of his religious experience, not its source. If this be so, then the centre from which he moved was his own soul.

3. Like Dr. Mellor I sometimes speak to a child concerning Jesus when I wish to make clear my idea of God to its undeveloped mind, but I do not limit my illustrations to Jesus. Does any religious teacher to-day? Careful investigation always shows that every individual's conception of God is fuller than his conception of Jesus. The orthodox believer holds that the Holy Spirit continues to operate in other lives. Why write the biography of any missionary or religious worker save Jesus, if this is not really so?

4. Other questions I would put concerning the relation of God to Christ are these. Does Dr. Mellor hold with Origen that Christ was co-eternal with the Father or with Arius that there was a time when he was not? Does he regard him with Athanasius as of the same essence as the Father or with Tertullian as in some way a production (prolatio) by a creative act on the part of God, being thus a "derivation" of the Divine? Ah me! how the ancient controversies come to life again when any one proclaims "centralisation in Jesus." From his statement that "centralisation in Jesus Christ does not mean any displacement of God by Christ nor any setting up another absolute in place of or in addition to God," it appears that Dr. Mellor holds some species of subordinationism which has been condemned by the Church in all its forms, and therefore we are still cheerful comrades in the camp of rank heresy.—Yours, &c.,

ALFRED HALL.

June 4, 1918.

HARD SAYINGS IN THE TEACHING OF JESUS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The notes on the "unrighteous steward" by the Warden of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, quoted in your last issue, suggest the question whether it is fair to hold the Preacher of Nazareth responsible for that bizarre parable. Of course it is clear, as has been pointed out a hundred times, that it is the steward's foresight, not his dishonesty, that receives commendation; but then, unfortunately for Luke's logic, it is his dishonesty, not his foresight, that gained his end. Moreover, it would have shown a sounder ethical sense had the parable taught that dishonest practices, however much controlled by prudence, will ever lead to disaster. And again, the comment which follows the parable—"he that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much"—seems to have no point unless by the man faithful in little we are to understand the steward who was anything but faithful in the management of his master's estate. In any case, and putting on it the best possible interpretation, the parable is altogether utilitarian in its lesson, answering to Paley's definition of virtue—obeying the commands of God, for the sake of eternal life. We are to make a generous use of our wealth (or rather of other people's), in order that we may secure for ourselves eternal happiness in heaven.

ROBERT B. DRUMMOND.

Edinburgh.

June 3, 1918.

LAWRENCE HOUSE BULLETIN.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The Lawrence House Bulletin, edited by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, with its messages to men in the army and navy connected with our churches and schools, is now being printed; the envelopes are being addressed to all names recorded at Essex Hall up to June 5. Perhaps ministers and secretaries who have not yet forwarded the information will kindly send me during the coming week the following: (1) names and particulars of men who have recently joined the army or navy; (2) men reported killed, missing, or prisoners of war; (3) men wounded, with name of hospital when known, so that a copy of Robert Collyer's 'Letter to a Sick Soldier' may be sent to them along with a copy of the Bulletin.—Yours, &c.,

W. COPELAND BOWIE

Essex Hall, Essex Street,
Strand, London, W.C.2.

AUTUMN SCHOOL FOR MINISTERS AT MANCHESTER COLLEGE.

As Manchester College, in all probability, will have no students next term, a plan has been made for throwing open its teaching opportunities, during the session 1918-1919, to ministers, lay preachers and Sunday school teachers. Free board and lodging will be offered by the College to those whose names have been approved by the Committee, or by those empowered to act on their behalf, and no time should be lost in sending in applications to the Principal. The Michaelmas term will be for ministers, the Lent term for lay-preachers, and the summer term for Sunday school teachers, but in regard to the two latter terms ministers will also be accepted for the courses. The Michaelmas course will begin in the last week of October, and will last six weeks, the arrangements being so made that ministers can, if they wish, return to their pulpits for Sunday duty. The arrangements for the first term are now sufficiently advanced to permit of a preliminary announcement being made. Two distinguished Oxford scholars, Dr. Macan, Master of University College, and Professor Gilbert Murray, Regius Professor of Greek, have kindly consented to lecture on subjects to be announced hereafter. The Rev. J. A. Weatherall, M.A., will lecture on (1) 'The Prophets in the Light of To-day'; (2) 'The Psalter'; Dr. Stanley Mellor on 'Plato's Doctrine of the Soul'; Dr. Rattray on 'The Influence of Plastic Art in the History of Religion,' and the Rev. Cyril Flower, M.A., on 'Pragmatism.' Dr. Jacks, the Principal, will take as his subject 'The City of God in Ancient and Modern Thought,' and definite courses in Old and New Testament study will be taken by the Rev. D. C. Simpson and the Rev. Henry Gow. Dr. Jacks will also conduct a class in Homiletics. In addition to the regular courses of study a Discussion Society will meet twice a week for conference on matters relating to ministerial work. It will greatly facilitate the work of the College staff in making the necessary arrangements if ministers who wish to attend the autumn course will take the necessary steps as soon as they possibly can. Belated applications will be difficult to deal with. The number that can be accepted is naturally limited. Recognised ministers of any denomination may apply.

CENTENARY OF AGED MINISTERS' SOCIETY.

THE Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Protestant Dissenting Ministers was instituted in the year 1818 for the assistance of retired ministers of the Baptist, Independent and Presbyterian denominations. The Centenary meeting of the Society was held on May 28, Mr. E. Pascoe Williams, J.P., in the chair. The Report presented by the secretary, the Rev. James E. Flegg, stated that during the hundred years of the Society's existence the lives of a large number of aged and infirm ministers had been brightened, and the weight of care made less heavy, through the financial aid rendered by the Society. The sum of £56,300 had been paid in grants to poor and infirm ministers. The statement of accounts for the year 1917 presented by the treasurer, Mr. J. Martin Viney, showed an income of £1,174, of which £1,032 had been expended in grants to ninety-one aged ministers; the working expenses of the Society were only £55. The adoption of the report was moved by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie (Essex Hall), and seconded by the Rev. R. J. Evans (Memorial Hall); a Committee representative of the three denominations was elected. The Society carries on its work year after year, quietly but effectively and usefully. The secretary, the Rev. James E. Flegg, 47, Stanford Road, Brighton, will be pleased to forward a copy of the report to any one who feels interested in the work of the Society.

We may add that "Presbyterian" is nowadays interpreted to cover all duly accredited ministers whose names are published in The Essex Hall Year-Book. The grants vary from £10 to £15 a year to retired ministers who, being upwards of 65 years of age, are in necessitous circumstances.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

174TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,635	19	10
Mrs. du Vallon (17th)	4	0	0
All Souls' Church, Belfast, per the Rev. E. H. Pickering (21st)	1	0	0
Bootle Free Church War Relief Committee, per Mrs. Yates (36th)	1	7	0
Miss Blake (22nd)	3	0	0
Mrs. Julian Winsor (41st)	1	0	0
Miss Colton and the Misses Gillespie (35th)	0	7	6
X. (41st)	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty (48th)	4	0	0
A. J. A. (31st)	0	5	0
The Rev. and Mrs. T. Bevan Evans (31st)	1	0	0
H. J. (8th)	2	0	0
Miss L. Orr (26th)	2	0	0
	£20,656	19	4

*Parcels have been received from:—*Wood Green Branch Women's League, per Miss Starling; Finchley Branch Women's League, per Mrs. Blake Odgers; Mrs. Titchener; Mrs. J. H. Green and family; Park Street Church Ladies' Sewing Society, Hull, per Mrs. Wilkinson; Miss Smith; Unitarian Working Party, High Street, Newport, I.W., per Miss Ruddle; Miss E. S. Hollins; Mrs. Titterton.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

OUR SUPPLEMENT.

THE Supplement which we publish this week consists of a list of nearly 750 men from our group of churches and schools who have lost their lives in the war. The list is unfortunately far from complete, scarcely one-third of our congregations having sent in returns. It was made out in the first instance in connection with the work of Lawrence House and was doubtless seen by many who attended the Whit-week Meetings at Essex Hall. But it is an impressive list even as it stands, and helps us to realise how the young life of our small community has been given unsparingly in this great struggle for humanity. Lawrence House continues to give what help it can to the sailors and soldiers who are happily still with us. Five men upon the average slept at the Hostel every night in May and on a good many occasions wounded soldiers and others have come in during the day to enjoy the Rest Room, the piano, the gramophone, and the bagatelle board. Another Lawrence House Bulletin is being sent out this month to some six thousand of our men. It is always welcome in the trenches and all of our churches would do well to make sure that the completest possible list of names and most recent addresses of sailors and soldiers is forwarded without delay to Essex Hall, where the secretarial work is done. Additional copies of the Supplement can be obtained from THE INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4., price 2d., postage extra.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Ashton-under-Lyne.—The Rev. Charles Travers, who was formerly minister at Carlisle, Preston, and Bradford (Manchester), has terminated his ministry at Richmond Hill Church.

Bury.—In the Chesham Unitarian Church Calendar congratulations are given to two members who have won military distinction, namely: Sergeant-Major Calvert, who has been given the D.S.O., and Harry Schofield, who gains a Military Medal.

Croydon.—At the evening service last Sunday at Dennett Hall the Missionary, the Rev. D. Delta Evans, had the pleasure of welcoming a party consisting of friends and members of his former congregation at Plumstead.

Hallifax.—During the Sundays of this month the Rev. W. Laurence Schroeder, minister of Northgate End Chapel, is giving two series of addresses: in the mornings on the spiritual life as expounded by Prof. Eucken, and in the evenings on the rights of man as set out by Prof. Ritchie. The long and loyal service of Mrs. Travis as President of the Sewing Society, which has done such excellent work during the war, was fittingly recognised on May 15 at a pleasant gathering, when Mrs. Schroeder presented her with a jewelled pendant. The church has lost a very old member by the death, on May 8, of Mrs. Harriet Brown of Shadwell, Leeds, in her 85th year.

Leeds: Mill Hill.—The Rev. R. Nicol Cross, writing to the members of his congregation from Egypt on March 21, describes how, as a result of a drastic combing out of "A Class" men in the various non-combatants' corps, he was sent down to the Infantry Training School at Zeitoun, near Cairo, where he remained for a fortnight. He has, however, been allowed to return to his R.A.M.C. work, which is in accordance with his own desire, and at the time of writing he was waiting to be drafted into a Field Ambulance. He has some bracing and cordial words to say to those who have gone forth to the war from Mill Hill. On May 26 a Special Service for Women was conducted by Lieut.-Col. Bullock, who gave a sermon on 'The Responsibilities of Citizenship.' There was a good congregation, which included members of the Hunslet and Holbeck Chapels, besides friends from other denominations. Capt. Charles Roger Lupton, D.S.C., Royal Air Force, the only son of Alderman Charles and Mrs. Lupton of Carr Head, Roundhay, Leeds, is reported killed on May 9. He was 19 years of age, and had won the D.S.C., and subsequently the bar, the first honour being won by his volunteering, with one of his comrades, to attack Thorout, flying from Dunkirk in weather such as prevented any instructions being given, though members of the Force were asked if they cared to volunteer. He was educated at Rugby, and joined direct from the school, being trained in the Royal Naval Air Force, and, after training at various places in the South of England, he went to France. At first he was at Dunkirk, and afterwards went to the central position on the French line, where he was serving at the opening of the recent battle. It was here that he won the bar to his D.S.C.—The death is also announced, from wounds, of Private Wm. Henry Kitson on May 8 in France. Willie Kitson had been a scholar in the Sunday schools since he was 5 years of age.

Leicester.—A meeting for workers in connection with the Great Meeting will be held on June 13, when Dr. Rattray has many things to bring up for discussion. He believes that those who are interested in the activities of church and Sunday school should take counsel together, and hopes that this meeting will develop into the Great Meeting Workers' Council. Much appreciation has been expressed of the work which Mr. F. G. Stevens has accomplished during the last twelve years in the capacity of missionary, a position which he is now giving up. It is hoped that he will still continue to help the cause at Leicester with which he has been identified so long. Private Edgar T. Mawby, a "Great Meeting boy all his life," was killed in action on April 10. At the outbreak of the war he was in the Territorial Force, being under Capt. Arthur Cooper, but was discharged as not strong enough. Nevertheless he volunteered again and was accepted.

Liverpool.—The ministers of Ullet Road Church and of the Ancient Chapel (the Revs. C. M. Wright and Lawrence Redfern) have asked their respective congregations for leave of absence in order that each may undertake a period of service in France. Mr. Redfern and Mr. Wright wish to undertake four months each in turn with the Y.M.C.A., as many other ministers have already done. The congregations will doubtless recognise how valuable an experience it will be for their ministers to have four months close contact with the men who are bearing and facing unimaginable things.

Liverpool: Hope Street.—At the Annual Meeting of the congregation the Chairman, Miss Bowring, in moving the adoption of the reports, said there was again a gratifying increase in the membership, and she hoped, before long, to see as many people at the morning service as now attend in the evening. It was, of course, beyond doubt that the growth of the membership was due to the religious power, sincerity, and earnestness of Dr. Mellor's ministry; many came long distances in order to take part in the services of the church and benefit by the preaching of the minister. It was a matter of great satisfaction that the new organ had proved such an admirable success as an aid to worship. The Chairman expressed condolence with those who had suffered loss or anxiety by reason of the war, and referred to distinctions which had been won by Miss Stoddart, Lieut. McWilliam, and others. In his monthly letter to the congregation Dr. Mellor speaks of the one part of the church which causes concern, namely, the Sunday school. It may be necessary to take up the matter without waiting till the end of the war to make a change, and, if so, both he and Mr. Hughes, the Superintendent, will unhesitatingly appeal to the help and sympathy of members and friends of the church. The following, which appears in the Calendar, is an indication of the way in which the efforts of Band of Hope workers are often rewarded, though to what extent they themselves seldom know: "One of the Band of Hope workers was cordially greeted recently on a Liverpool tram-car by an old Hope Street Church Band of Hope boy, who for the last ten years has been in the navy. A conversation, which necessity made all too short, brought out some facts which may be of interest to other workers in the Band of Hope, and to all who have the cause of temperance at heart. The sailor, who had been twice wounded and several times torpedoed during the war, had kept the pledge he took at the Band of Hope, and he knows of at least fifteen of his old comrades in the Band of Hope now in the navy all of whom had done the same. He still treasures his old framed pledge card, and deeply appreciates all that was done by the workers, most of whom he remembered well, though he admitted that probably he and the other boys did not show much appreciation at the time. He spoke with high praise of the way in which the temperance sailors in the navy were looked after and helped in every way to be true to the pledge they have taken." On June 16 the Rev. B. E. Millard of the Milton Congregational Church, Huddersfield, will occupy the pulpit, morning and evening, and on the same date Dr. Mellor will take the services at Mr. Millard's church at Huddersfield.

Liverpool: Ullet Road.—In a message to the parents of scholars attending the Ullet Road Sunday school the Rev. Lawrence Redfern utters some wise words. Enormous responsibilities, he points out, will press upon the children of to-day in later years. "They will inherit a story which tells of unparalleled hardship and suffering, and the record of tens of thousands who died that they might live. The havoc wrought by the war will have to be repaired in large part by them, and they will need stout hearts, wise and understanding minds, and above all a spirit of lofty idealism. We do not want to put old heads on young shoulders, or to rob the morning of their life of its natural joy and freshness. But we do need to stimulate the love for all things that are pure and lovely and of good report, and to awaken all noble and healthy aspirations. The children will have to carry on the great human story, to enrich the common heritage, to build up a nation that shall be strong in the righteousness which alone exalteth a nation, to establish a profounder and surer peace than their fathers were ever privileged to know."

London: Brixton.—Good congregations welcomed the Rev. Thos. Munn last Sunday to his new duties at Effra Road, and the presence of many strangers testified to the interest felt in the neighbourhood in the appointment to the pulpit so long vacant. Mr. Munn chose the words 'Momentous Days' as the subject of his first discourse, the occasion being one of serious import in the lives of both minister and congregation. The selections of music contributed by the choir helped to make both morning and evening services unusually bright and attractive. The welcome meeting to Mr. Munn will be held in the schoolroom on Tuesday evening, June 18, at 7 o'clock, and all friends interested are most cordially invited.

London: Hampstead.—The Rev. H. Gow, in a letter to the congregation of Rosslyn Hill Chapel, announces that the Rev. F. K. Freeston has kindly consented to take the Sunday services and act as minister from the first Sunday in July until Mr. Gow's return from France, where he is taking up Y.M.C.A. work. Mr. Gow has not yet left England, but he expects to do so shortly, and hopes to be home again early in October. It has been arranged that the church shall be open for private worship from 10 to 12 on four mornings of each week, Monday to Thursday inclusive. The church will also be open on Saturday afternoons from 5 to 7. The suggestion as to the opening of the chapel for private devotion comes from members of the congregation, but is warmly welcomed by the minister. At a Special Meeting of the congregation held on June 3 it was decided to carry into effect a recommendation by the Chapel Committee to purchase the property known as Nos. 1, 2, and 3 Pilgrim's Place, cottages which were formerly in the possession of Mr. Squire. A sum of £500 will have to be raised which will allow for the purchase and for effecting certain improvements in the grounds which the Committee would wish to be undertaken after the end of the war. They hope that two of the cottages may be used as a Convalescent Home or Almshouses in connection with the Domestic Missions, and believe that they are well adapted for some such object. Donations should be sent to Mrs. A. H. Paterson, 6 Thurlow Road, N.W.3, who is acting as Treasurer to the Fund.

London: Islington.—The death is recorded of Mr. J. Hume Gibson, a member of the Islington congregation, who was always keenly interested in the welfare of Unity Church and strove in various ways to promote its interests. At the time of his death he was a member of the Committee, and in the capacity of lay preacher rendered good service on several occasions when such help was urgently needed. His friendly greetings and his frank and genial conversation will be missed by many.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Amongst many forms of national service which have been undertaken in the North, that of a large number of ministers who have been filling the place of school teachers who have joined the colours is not the least important. In this connection an interesting informal presentation took place at the Rutherford College, Bath Lane, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on Friday, May 31, when Principal Gaunt handed several gifts to the Rev. Alfred Hall (minister of the Church of the Divine Unity) including Colvin's 'Life of Keats.' The proceedings were of an enthusiastic character and showed the high esteem in which Mr. Hall's pupils held him.

Nottingham.—The Annual Congregational Meeting was held on May 27 at the High Pavement Chapel, when a very satisfactory report was presented. This was followed by a largely attended social gathering to bid farewell to the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne. In the course of the evening the chair was taken by Mr. Wilfred, Chairman of the Council, who expressed the deep regret of every member of the congregation at Mr. Ballantyne's departure and their affection and gratitude to him. The Rev. W. E. George of Derby followed, and said his ministerial brethren in the North Midlands would feel his leaving the district very much. After Mr. Warren had added a few words of good wishes for his happiness in his new sphere of labour, the Chairman presented Mr. Ballantyne with a token of the congregation's warm regard. In reply Mr. Ballantyne said he could scarcely tell them how deeply he felt that parting. The work they had been privileged to do together would ever be a treasured memory with him as would be all their kindness and the affection and sympathy they had shown him. Subsequently Mr. H. Freeston, on behalf of Christ Church, thanked Mr. Ballantyne for all he had done for that struggling congregation. Without his help and encouragement he doubted if they could have pulled through the troublous times of the past few years, but they had now a settled minister and were full of confidence for the future. He also asked Mr. Ballantyne's acceptance of a parting gift.

Plymouth.—The Chairman of George Street Baptist Church has written to The Baptist Times with reference to the fact that Lieut.-Col. C. Seymour Bullock preached there recently. He points out that some misapprehension exists as to the manner in which Col. Bullock was accepted as a supply on that occasion. Arrangements were made for him to preach in the Baptist Chapel at his own request by the local temperance organisation, for which he was speaking, and the officers were unaware that Col. Seymour Bullock was a Unitarian. Had they known this, it is stated, he would never have occupied the George Street pulpit.

Rochdale.—In connection with the Centenary Celebrations the Rev. H. McLachlan of the Manchester Home Missionary College will give a series of four lectures on the origin and development of the "Methodist Unitarian Movement" which established Clover Street Chapel, and other chapels in the outlying districts. The first lecture will be given on Tuesday, June 11.—Private Sam E. Grindood (Australian Infantry Forces) was killed in action in France on April 7, and on May 8 Private William Brierley (Machine Gun Corps) died in England of wounds received in action in France on April 9.

South Cheshire and District Association.—The annual meetings of the Association were held in the Unitarian Church, High Street, Shrewsbury, on Wednesday, May 29. The delegates were entertained to lunch by Mr. W.

Vickery, J.P., after which the Business Meeting was held, the president, Miss S. A. Simpson, in the chair. The reports of the Secretary and treasurer were adopted, the Rev. A. E. O'Connor was elected president for the ensuing year, and some discussion took place as to the situation at Whitchurch. At the Conference which followed the meeting Dr. Estlin Carpenter delivered an address on 'Our Churches after the War,' in the course of which he reviewed the situation at the present time, and referred to some of the reasons which accounted for the serious decline in public worship. The war had, however, revealed an immense and unsuspected capacity for self-sacrifice and a vast amount of unorganised religion. On this the Church must build the new edifices of faith. It had to take note of the British Empire with its ideals of young nations and the raising of the subject races out of savagery; of the new sense of international relations; of the fact that after the war the churches must be fundamentally democratic. The churches must assimilate sociology and physical science to a certain extent. Their warfare was with ignorance, suffering and sin, and with the hideous sores of the social order. Dr. Griffiths, who opened the discussion, emphasised the fact that religion must be placed above organisation. There should, however, be periodic consideration of methods; we must be more ready to change, more ready to co-operate with those working for the re-organisation of the world. A vote of thanks to Dr. Carpenter and Dr. Griffiths was proposed by the Rev. A. E. O'Connor, and seconded by the Rev. T. Hallam, curate of St. Chad's. Dr. Carpenter preached at the evening service. In the course of his remarks he dealt with the striking fact that energy is one aspect of God, and that we are incarnations of this Infinite and Eternal Energy. God fulfilled in us the physical consequences of the chain of events we had planned. So He justified the tiller of the soil, and also the energy which explodes the shell. In the acts of war we were bringing in God to accomplish, against His will, our evil purposes. It was the mystery of our being that we could become conscious of this tremendous fact, could recognise His energies and direct them to our ends. The meetings were among the most successful and most numerous attended ever held by the Association, and special thanks are due to the friends at Shrewsbury for carrying out all the arrangements. Among those present were the following representatives of other denominations: the Rev. J. Preshous, United Methodist; the Rev. Baker Norton, Wesleyan; the Revs. Farrow and H. Moncur Sime, Congregationalists; and the Rev. T. Hallam, Anglican.

South Shields.—Anniversary Services were held at Unity Church on May 26, the preacher being the Rev. Dendy Agate of Carnforth. A Public Meeting was held the next evening, Mr. Wm. Mackey presiding. Visitors from the churches at Newcastle, Gateshead, and Sunderland were welcomed, and the speakers included the Revs. Dendy Agate, Alfred Hall (Newcastle-on-Tyne), and W. Lindsay of Sunderland, Mr. Coysh, and Mrs. Hall.

Stalybridge.—The work accomplished in Flanders by the Rev. John Ellis, minister of the Unitarian Church, has been so successful that he has been asked by the Y.M.C.A. Headquarters Staff to go out again, and to arrange, if possible, to give his services "for the duration of the war." Mr. Ellis is weighing the matter, which involves serious considerations, both for himself and the church, and it will have to be discussed by the Church Committee. Mr. J. T. Kerrigan of the Y.M.C.A. (Southern Area) in France has written a letter to Mr. Thompson, which is printed in the June Calendar, and from which we take the following interesting passage: "I would like you to convey to your church and congregation our sincere thanks for allowing Mr. Ellis to come out again. He has done a splendid piece of work for us, having been in charge of one of our most forward centres, at which place, just before he left, he erected a splendid hut. He is one of the best men we have, being well suited for work at the front, and I only wish it were possible for us to retain him for the duration of the war. No sacrifice has been too great which would benefit our brave men, and many a man will be thankful for having met him. He not only won the esteem of the men, but of his colleagues in this Army, all of whom were sorry to lose him."

* THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.

DEATHS.

OWEN.—On June 4, at 20 Elmfield Road, Huddersfield, Ellen Adams Owen, aged 81, widow of John Richard Owen, and daughter of Rev. John Wright, Sunderland.

UPTON.—May 3, at St. George's, Littlemore, Oxon, Martha Jane, the beloved sister of the Rev. C. B. Upton, aged 84.

WATSON.—On May 30, at Bolingbroke Hospital, Amy, wife of Foster Watson, The Red House, Green Street Green, and daughter of Mrs. Kimpster, Speldhurst.

WELCH.—On June 4, Samuel Daniel Welch, aged 78, of 8, Eastern Road, Fortis Green, N., and formerly of Essex.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, June 9.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
Bell Street, Edgware Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. GOLLAND.
Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. THOS. MUNN.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
Dingley Place Mission, St. Lukes, City Road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. F. G. FINCHAM.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.
Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, —; 6.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN; 6.30, Mr. E. C. CAPLETON;
Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. J. PETERKEN.
Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
Rhyl Street, Kentish Town, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. ROSE.
South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. J. W. GALE.
Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, JOHN BEGG; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.
University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.
Woolwich, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH; 6.30, Mr. JOHN BEGG.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.
BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.
BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
BIRMINGHAM, Moseley Unitarian Christian Church, Dennis Road Schools, 3.15, Mr. A. LESLIE WALL; 6.30, Rev. JOHN EWART, M.A., B.D. (Sunday School Anniversary Services.)

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.
BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Room, Downing Street, 11.30.
CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.
CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.
CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. JOHN McDOWELL.
DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.
DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DONALD B. FRASER.
GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.
HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. HAYCOCK.
LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. R. F. RATTRAY.
LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. HORACE SHORT.
LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN.
MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.
MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.
MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. R. SCOTT.
NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.
NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. FISHER SHORT.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.
PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.
TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. T. PAGESMITH.
WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

WINNEPEG, CANADA.

All Souls' Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

June

9. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.
16. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.
23. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

Subject of Sermon, June 9: "By the Grace of God."

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.
Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation. Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

MINISTER and WIFE will take HOLIDAY DUTIES, with care of children if desired. — Write A. B., care of INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION,

22 Northumberland Avenue, London.

Founded by the late Mr. G. R. Jesse in 1875.

The Society offers to send a LECTURER free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY. No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4. (Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I. H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL. H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY OF LANCASHIRE AND CHESHIRE.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

will be held in MANCHESTER on WEDNESDAY NEXT, JUNE 12.

- 11 A.M. Service in Cross Street Chapel. Preacher, Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans of Bury; supporter, Rev. S. A. Mellor, B.A., Ph.D., of Liverpool.
2 P.M. Business Meeting in the Memorial Hall, Albert Square, the President, Rev. S. H. Mellone, M.A., D.Sc., in the Chair.
6 P.M. Evening Meeting in the Memorial Hall, the President in the Chair. Discussion on "Our Churches and the Supply of Ministers," opened by Rev. C. J. Street, M.A. LL.B., and T. Fletcher Robinson, Esq.
Friends are requested to make their own arrangements for Luncheon and Tea.

H. E. DOWSON, B.A. } Hon.
N. ANDERTON, B.A. } Secs.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

THE ANNUAL

Aggregate Service for Teachers and Elder Scholars

WILL BE HELD AT

ESSEX HALL,

ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.2,

On SUNDAY, 16TH JUNE, 1918, at 3 p.m.

Conducted by the Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

LIBERAL CHRISTIAN LEAGUE, SION COLLEGE,

Embankment, Blackfriars, E.C.

TUESDAY, JUNE 25th, 1918.

- 4.30 p.m. President's Reception.
5.0 p.m. Tea at small charge.
5.45 p.m. Devotional Meeting and Conference on Social Service, introduced by Revd. H. H. Johnson, B.A., Secy. to "Union for Social Service."
PUBLIC MEETING.
7.0 p.m. Revd. C. J. Sharp, M.A. President's Address, Miss A. Maude Royden, "What is the Church for?"
8.0 p.m. Presentation to Miss A. H. Alleyne.
8.30 p.m. Greetings.
Revd. J. P. MacCarthy, Ph.D. (U.S.A.), Lieut.-Col. Seymour Bullock (Canada), Major C. D. Strong (Australia), Revd. R. N. Pyke (Modern Churchman), &c., &c.

ARTISTES:

Miss M. Hodge, Miss F. Lester, Miss C. Capleton.
Admission Free. Collection.

EDWARD CAPLETON,
Treas. and Acting Secy.

The LIBERAL CHRISTIAN for JUNE now ready. "On Bible Reading," "U.S.A. Religious Liberals," "A faith of to-day," &c., &c. 2d. pp.
28 Red Lion Square, W.C.1.

Transactions of the Unitarian Historical Society

Contents.

- APOLOGY FOR THE NONCONFORMIST ARIANS OF THE 18TH CENTURY. Fred J. Powicke, Ph.D.
THE OLD NONCONFORMITY AT NORTON, DERBYSHIRE. II. Christopher J. Street, M.A., LL.B.
THE ORIGIN AND HISTORY OF THE OLD MEETING HOUSE, ABERDARE. Rees Jenkin Jones, M.A.
THE DEEDS OF WESTGATE CHAPEL, LEWES. R. M. Montgomery, K.C.
THE CHURCH BOOK OF THE GENERAL BAPTIST CHURCH AT TURNERS HILL AND HORLEY. W. H. Burgess.
AN HISTORICAL LEGAL DECISION.
NOTES AND QUERIES, &c.

Subscribers to the Society receive a Free Copy.

5 ESSEX STREET, LONDON, W.C.2.

Situations, Vacant and Wanted.

SUPERIOR MAID, with some knowledge of Nursing, wanted, to attend to elderly Lady. —Miss TAYLOR, The Glen, Heaton, Bolton.

WANTED, SITUATION as useful COMPANION or SECRETARY. Domesticated, cheerful; excellent references. Hampstead or North of London district preferred. —Care of INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. — Rev. JOHN MOORE, The Chalet, Warwick Drive, Hale, Cheshire.

Board and Residence, &c.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks. — Board - residence. Meat ration supplemented by vegetarian dishes and country produce. Enquiries, which must be accompanied by stamped envelope, from Miss SMITH.

Miscellaneous.

OFFICE TO LET, 15 ft. square, with large window for display. Additional accommodation available if needed. —Apply FRANCIS & CO., INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.

HUCKABACK TOWELLING, in bundles of remnants, sufficient to make six full-sized Bedroom Towels, only 10s. 6d.; postage 6d. Send postcard for this month's Bargain List, free. —HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT. — Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT. Cash or offer by return. Before selling make sure of their value by writing for FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any artificial teeth. —E. LEWIS, 29 London Street, Southport, Lancs. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER.

THAT OLD SET OF TEETH

You do not wear may now be worth up to £15 for the precious metals they contain. Send them to us. We will give you the highest possible value. Also buyers of gold and surplus jewellery. Offers made by return for goods sent by post. If offer not accepted, goods returned post free. Platinum Scrap £16 per ounce.

SATISFACTION ASSURED.

I. RAYBURN & CO.,
105 Market Street, Manchester.

PEARL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000

Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

The Directors regret to announce that the very large increases in the cost of paper and printing make it necessary to raise the price of THE INQUIRER to 2d. weekly, from and including our issue of JULY 6.

Subscribers would greatly help our depleted and consequently over-burdened office staff if they would kindly forward, without individual application, the additional subscription required for the rest of the year 1918, viz., 1s. 1d.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenaeum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C., Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate. — Saturday, June 8, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3963.
NEW SERIES, No. 1066.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 15, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	189
OUR BELGIAN FUND	190
DANTE'S VISION OF PEACE	191
BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—
A Book about Children	191

Medical Dictionary	192
THE REV. W. H. DRUMMOND IN FRANCE	192
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Mr. Coe's Nature versus Natural Selection	193

Where is the Religious Centre?	193
Drinking in the Army	193
BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	193
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	194

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

WE deeply regret to hear as we go to press that Dr. James Drummond, the venerable Principal Emeritus of Manchester College, Oxford, was seized with a heart attack early on Sunday, and passed away on Thursday morning. With sincere sympathy with his family the wide circle of his friends cannot but be grateful that a life so rich in the fruits of the spirit has been extended thus long. Dr. Drummond entered his eighty-fourth year last month. A memorial notice will appear in next week's INQUIRER. The funeral service will be held at Manchester College, Oxford, at noon on Tuesday,

THE ebb and flow of feeling as we watch the fateful ebb and flow of the battle in France leaves always at height the warm sympathy and admiration called forth by the valour and constancy of our French comrades, alike soldiers and civilians, as they bear up against the desperate onslaught of the enemy. That it is desperate, a reckless staking of the most precious of his life-wealth on the chance of snatching victory before it becomes quite impossible, is obvious. All homage to the French patriots, and to the men of every nation who are bravely fighting shoulder to shoulder with them, in defence not of France alone but of the world's freedom.

MR. MONTAGU, Secretary for India, in conjunction with the Viceroy, has prepared a report which is now before the War Cabinet. It embodies the recommendations for the future of Indian administration which have been devised, after much consultation with leading natives and British officials, during his recent visit to India. In August last a Pronouncement was made in Parliament to the effect that important changes in a democratic direction would be introduced, and while this decision was undoubtedly in accord with the feeling in this country that India had splendidly taken part in our effort to defeat German tyranny it was also due to a growing intensity in the demand of India herself, as represented by the educated class, that progress towards self-government is imperatively needed if affairs are to be satisfactory.

THE subject is far from being a simple one. The case of Russia shows that a keenly intellectual but relatively small class of revolutionists may be powerless to prevent disasters caused by the blind violence of a grossly ignorant majority; and the best friends of India and of democracy must wish to steer clear of any such dangers. But we must wish also that the maximum of self-government will be speedily allowed consistently with prudence; and that no effort will be spared in educating the people—one-fifth of mankind—to the degree required for such an advance. It is an immense task, but it cannot be evaded, if the British Empire is to justify its claim to be a mutually supporting family of free nations. The presence of Indian representatives at the Imperial War Cabinet and Conference is a very welcome sign of the times.

TWO things are emphasised by the fortunes, and misfortunes, of Mr. Fisher's Education Bill. One is the unmistakable power of capital, in the hands of employers on a large scale, to thwart and cripple the wisest plans of thinkers and reformers. Much has been said in blame and in praise of the Minister of Education in connection with his modifications of the Bill last week; but the obvious fact is that he simply could not hope to carry his measure into law at all if he did not conciliate the formidable opposition, chiefly of Lancashire members and delegates. The result is that the half loaf has to be accepted rather than no bread. The other fact to be noticed is the alleged (though the somewhat exaggerated) and admitted scarcity of teachers good enough to serve in the continuation studies contemplated by Mr. Fisher,

As to the scheme at present holding the field in the House of Commons—and subject always to reactionary pressure in the other House—it entails compulsory attendance at continuation schools of young persons up to the age of 16, and only after seven years from the operative starting of the Act, up to 18; and it permits the local Education Authority to reduce the number of hours of attendance from 320 to 280 a year. Those who applaud Mr. Fisher's strategy point out that, though he has surrendered something, what he retains is a real advance for popular education. Meanwhile, the teacher difficulty remains. What chances are there that it will be overcome, whether in regard to continuation or ordinary schools? Not many, we fear; the plain fact being that a very large proportion of our nation care too little for education to pay adequately for good teaching.

MANCHESTER College, Oxford, will close its Session next Thursday and Friday under the shadows common to all our life in these days, and with its own special sense of sorrow. But mingled with these things there will be an added grace of courtesy and grateful admiration in the presentation of a portrait of Dr. Estlin Carpenter to the College, of which a replica will also be presented to Mrs. Carpenter. The artist is Mr. Havard Somerville, and we trust he has successfully caught and preserved for future generations the lineaments of one who has so fruitfully taught and wrought for the generation now passing.

ON Thursday our valued friend and collaborator, the Rev. H. Gow, left London for some months' duty among the soldiers across the Channel. That his words and work will prove a great help and stimulus to the men will be confidently inferred by readers of his articles in this journal, and especially by those who know his book of discourses entitled 'Out of the Heart of the Storm,' one of the finest of its kind. But it is only by those, happily they are many, who have met and heard him that the great promise and potency of his visit can be adequately estimated. We all wish him health and safe journeyings, the full maintenance of spiritual vigour, and in due course a return with sheaves of good things.

* * *

MR. ASQUITH, being debarred by the conditions of the trust from dealing with theology and politics in his Romanes Lecture at Oxford last Saturday, had to contrive as best he could to deal justly with 'Some Aspects of the Victorian Age' while omitting the very matters that gave most importance to that period. Judging from the printed reports he and his audience had a good time together, nevertheless, and their mutual satisfaction was no doubt greatly increased by the emphatic protest made by Lord Curzon, who presided, against the "post-Victorian" scandal of "gross and gratuitous defamation of the character of our public men." If Mr. Asquith's address helps some of the young folk to a juster appreciation of their predecessors than has been lately in fashion it will do them good service; for nothing impoverishes the life of any age so directly as cutting off its roots.

* * *

WE quoted recently some criticisms by Dr. S. A. Eliot of orthodox preaching in the American training camps. He has now told readers of The Christian Register some of the faults he thinks observable in Unitarian speakers to the soldiers. First comes the mistake of approaching the indifferent or contemptuous, of whom he says there are many, by undue caution or by cheap witticisms. "My experience is that it is wise and safe to assume that the boys really want to hear what the speaker sincerely believes about the mysteries of life and death." Next, "the training of too many Unitarian ministers has unfitted them for camp preaching"; they are apt to be "academic," "pedantic," when what is required is something more dramatic and more easily understood.

* * *

AGAIN, says Dr. Eliot, Unitarians are apt to make religion "too easy." It is too often assumed by them that "evolution is an irresistible force impelling men upward whether they will or no. That inevitable moral advance can no longer be asserted. Here is a great part of the world back in barbarism again, back to primitive brutalities, fears, hates, and horrors. No languid optimism is preachable in such a time as this. If we ask for little, we shall get but little in response.... We must make the challenge arduous and therefore inspiring." And, finally, he says, there should be more direct appeal to the romance and chivalry that animates most of the young soldiers. "As a rule I think we have pitched our appeals too low and failed to appreciate the self-forgetting ardour that stirs under an indifferent demeanour or an attitude of bluff." Our friend suggests that "some of these observations may be found as pertinent to our cushioned pulpits as to the pine platform of a Camp Hut." We venture to add, to home preachers in this country as well as to our own speakers to the forces,

OUR BELGIAN FUND.

THE accounts of the Belgian Hospital Fund, from its foundation in January, 1915, to the close of 1917, are presented with this week's issue of THE INQUIRER; and a fitting opportunity is thus given for reminding our readers alike of its aims, its remarkable success, and its continuing needs. As a war charity we believe it to be second to none in its beneficial character and its eminently practical and business-like administration; and it is certainly the most extensive effort of the kind ever undertaken by Unitarians in this country. We may be pardoned if a little exultation mingles with the profound thankfulness arising out of the contemplation of the record of these three years. As editor of this paper, the Rev. W. H. Drummond, now in France, gave invaluable help to the Fund from its foundation, urging especially the piteous case of the Belgian combatants, directing attention to their specific needs, and appealing to the generosity of our public with an intimate personal knowledge of the conditions and with a forceful eloquence all his own. Whatever he may hereafter be called to do in the cause of our own soldiers—and his communication to us this week indicates something of the scope and high value of his present work—his part in founding and fostering this noble piece of service for the Belgians will be widely recognised and remembered long.

Another name there is, indeed, of one who has all along been truly "the pulse of the machine"—Mrs. Bernard Allen. It is simply impossible to express the debt we owe to her initiating courage, her wisdom, and her tireless industry in this matter. Money and goods may be given by many hands, they have been; but these high personal qualities are rare. By good fortune the Fund and the right woman were there together at the start; she has watched, and worked, and planned, and pleaded, with equal success in all directions. It has been her witness that here is a really good thing to do that has kept the stream of donations flowing so steadily; and all who wish to honour so noble a worker will see that the stream of gifts, whether in cash or kind, shall still flow in.

For remarkable as the figures are, and deeply gratifying, the work is still imperatively needed, and must not be permitted to languish. "Ye did run well," may be said to those who have aided so generous a total. From a small community like ours it is extremely creditable to have raised, up to date, well over £20,000, especially when the goods which have accompanied the money given are estimated to be worth about £20,000 in addition. The donors and working parties cover a wide field, though (may we say) not quite so wide as we could hope. Is it not time that some who have hitherto held their hand should rally to the help of the Fund, and emulate the example of those who, not wearying in well-doing, have given repeatedly? Hospitals, convalescent depots, surgical satchels, comforts for refugees, clubs, maternity homes, recreation tents—such things cost money. We are simply astonished that so much has been done with comparatively so little means. Without the most careful administration it could not be accomplished; and donors may be reminded again that not a penny of the subscriptions goes in expenses of management, which are all met from private resources. Those energetic people who believe in compact organisation may note that Mr. Drummond and Mrs. Allen, with the co-operation of the Hon. Secretary, Mrs. J. T. Osler, have been the whole committee, efficient and sufficient for carrying on this arduous and often perplexing work. The work takes on different aspects from time to time, though, of course, its main features are constant. The erection of the spacious Hut at Calais, for instance, which is the centre of remarkable activity, and is highly appreciated by thousands of men who have found rest and refreshment within its walls, is one of the finest things the Fund has accomplished. It is not hospital work, but it plays a very important part in ministering to minds worn with the strain of trench life and often suffering acutely as a result of long separation from home and kindred. Three weeks ago Mrs. Allen crossed over to France again to go thoroughly into the condition of the hospital for tuberculous Belgian soldiers at Chambéry, and supervise the establishment of a canteen for the men, and we hope that on her return she will give us some account of her latest experiences. The men at Chambéry are mostly, as she has told us, "soldiers who fought in the wet trenches in the first winter of the war," and it does not add to one's peace of mind to reflect on their misery last winter, when the inadequate supply of hot water and unsatisfactory sanitary arrangements added greatly to their discomfort.

Bearing all this in mind, we still confidently look for the generous support of old friends and new. There are many readers who have not yet responded to the appeal of our Belgian Fund. Claims are many, we know, at this time, and it is not for us to press any whose charitable disposition has already gone beyond their means. It is to "those others" we turn, whose share in war troubles is, at any rate, far less than that of our Belgian allies, and who are in many cases, we are sure, well able to give.

OUR ROLL OF HONOUR.

As we pointed out last week the list of names in the Roll of Honour is necessarily incomplete, and the Editor will welcome additions and corrections. We have already received several fresh names, for which we are grateful, from the Rev. G. Pegler, of Crewe, Mr. J. Hess of Leeds, Mr. Andrews Crompton of Chester, and Mr. H. Lang Jones, Headmaster of Willaston School. These will be duly tabulated and included in the revised edition which we hope to publish later. We are still able to supply copies of the Roll of Honour, price 2d. each prepaid.

DANTE'S VISION OF PEACE.

BY DR. PHILIP WICKSTEED.

WHEN Dante met Beatrice, in his ninth year, a "New Life" came to birth in his soul, revealing beauty, truth and goodness to him, no longer as abstractions but as living facts and forces, openly revealed and incarnate in a human personality, interpreting and moving the world. In the presence of Beatrice he felt his whole being assimilated to the spirit of love. He did not forgive his enemies, because he lost all sense of enmity, and already felt the unity and harmony of consciousness in which all conflict of passions and emotions is lost.

And when in a visionary premonition of the coming event he saw his lady lying in the arms of death, while her companions were drawing a veil over her, though all the course of nature seemed to be unhinged, the sun to withdraw his light, and the stars to weep, yet all he could read on Beatrice's own features was "I am at peace." There was a peace deeper than all anguish of loss, and in the course of months hardly yet running into years Dante learned that whoever had truly felt the meaning of Beatrice's presence upon earth must rise with her to the deeper peace of heaven. He would "write of her what ne'er was writ of woman," and thereby bring himself and others to that peace which she had shewn forth in her life and conclusively achieved in her death.

The 'Divine Comedy,' and above all the 'Paradiso,' reveal their meaning to us in proportion as they transfigure our conception of "peace," transmuting it from the negative suggestion of relief and rest from conflict, into the positive sense of fulness of realisation and fruition; intense as the flash of light, triumphant as the sound of the trumpet, yet effortless. For in the spontaneous harmony of all impulses, desires and aspirations, neither thwarting nor competing with each other, nor impeded by ought outside themselves, effort is quenched in the fulness of life. That peace comes to the souls that see God, and, seeing God, see all things, in their measure, as God sees them; finding the fulness of their own life in triumphant assimilation of their wills to the all perfect will of God.

During the decades that immediately followed Beatrice's death, Dante's varied experiences and thoughts, including many waverings and errors were filling in for him the meaning of the "new life" and the conclusive "peace" of which Beatrice's personality had given him the "sense," or instinctive feeling, but not all the implications and significance. In his observations of social life and reflections on moral problems he was gathering varied material for his great synthetic work; but the key was missing until, like Aristotle, he came to see the connection between Ethics and Politics. But he was more fortunate than Aristotle in this, that he could survey the whole course of Roman history, and under Virgil's guidance and inspiration could see that that history owed its significance, not to the wars and military genius of the Romans, which were a mere instrument, but to the instinct for law.* That instinct enabled the Roman people, through the course of centuries, to build up that code of Civil Law which is the noblest scheme for the peaceful and harmonious ordering of human relations, personal, national and international, that humanity has ever been inspired by God to evolve for itself, as a means of recovering, so far as it may, the state of Eden, the state in which all impulses and desires are spontaneously harmonious, innocent, intense in their passion, intense in their delight, but without jar and without conflict.

As Dante looked out upon a world which "was not and had never been without war in the hearts of tyrants," even when there was no outward show of conflict, he saw that the goal of human civilisation can never be reached until men's desires, personal and national, are centred in those things, my realisation of which does not shut off but opens out your realisation of them. And this means that the grasping spirit of greed is the mortal foe of human progress, because it is the foe of justice, the foe of peace, the foe of harmony; "wherefore it is manifest that universal peace is the best of all those things which are ordained for our blessedness. And that is why there rang out to the shepherds from on high, not riches, not pleasures, not honours, not length of life, not health, not strength, not beauty, but peace." We realise the full import of our own disordered passions when we realise the truth of those words (never quoted, I think, by Dante, but suggested by the whole frame and scheme of his thinking), "from whence come wars and fightings amongst you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? Ye lust, and have not; ye kill, ye desire to have, and cannot obtain; ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss."

Then Dante saw Hell; for he saw the exact nature and quality of our asking amiss. He saw it under Virgil's guidance, because Virgil, better than any other Roman, understood that the mission of Rome was "to fix upon the nations the yoke of peace," and Dante found in Roman law, the deposit of the long centuries of the evolution of Rome, an instrument of peace on earth inseparable in the divine Providence from the progressive revelation evolved in Palestine and by the Church, which unlocked the gate of heaven and brought the faithful to its peace. Dante saw Hell, the hell of irregular and jarring passions. He saw, too, the Purgation wrought by that revulsion of feeling and changed scheme of values which must come to him who has in truth seen Hell, seen, that is, the evil choice in its sources, in its inmost nature, and in its ultimate implications. This revulsion of feeling must carry us beyond self-discipline into the region in which the expression of the new loyalty, even though it be in anguish, has become self-utterance and self-expression. He saw the life of recovered Eden, in which the harmony of earth is won again, and the very memory of error and sin has faded out of consciousness, save as an adoring recognition of the occasion taken by a gracious Providence for the sinner's redemption and forgiveness; and, under Beatrice's guidance, he saw Heaven, in which the lowliest soul rejoices to fill just its own place and no other in the great choral harmony, because the whole and the parts, the great chord and each several note that it combines, alike express the supreme will of God, and "His will is our peace"—the peace of a self-surrender that is the supremest self-realisation, the peace of that "visio Dei" which is the supremest life.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

A BOOK ABOUT CHILDREN.

THESE are days in which many a commonplace is gaining fresh meaning and force; and none more than that maxim long beloved of Sunday school teachers, "The hope of the world is in the children." It is true in a new and unprecedented sense, and its truth is being realised as never before. All who are at any point attacking the great tasks of child-nurture and child-training should feel assured that their work—restricted, detailed, partial though it may be—is a real contribution to a form of Reconstruction which must be vigorously and perpetually carried on if the race is to live and progress.

The problem is a difficult one to all who approach it, but peculiarly so to the amateur who, with scanty time and other preoccupations, yet desires and attempts to do something for the upbuilding of the children's life. We are coming to realise that, for personal work among children, love of the task and a happy "way" with small people, though essential to success, are not in themselves a complete equipment. The literature of child-study is multiplying fast, and it is our own fault if we remain uninstructed in the principles of our work.

But it must be confessed that many of the books produced by experts on this subject are—like other technical treatises—very difficult reading for the amateur who may be repelled rather than attracted by what we have to say, or, if persevering, may be presently entangled in a maze of scientific nomenclature without any clear issue into practice. It is all the more pleasant to welcome a book,* simple, attractive and popular in the best sense, and at the same time authoritative as the work of an expert psychologist, and a serious contribution to the study of the human mind. Miss Drummond's little volume should be in the hands of everyone who has responsibility for, or professes interest in, the upbringing of young children.

* It is a pleasure to be able to call attention to Mr. H. S. Perris's 'Pax Britannica,' London, 1913, which suggests an analogous change of the point of view from which English history should be regarded.

* The Dawn of Mind: an Introduction to Child Psychology. Margaret Drummond, M.A. Edward Arnold. 3s. 6d. net.

The first chapter gives clearly and concisely some account of the nervous system, as the physical basis of mind-growth. This chapter is, perhaps, the most difficult for the ordinary reader, but is very necessary to all that follows. The rest of the book deals quite simply and practically with the various stages of the development of the child's mind, under such headings as early consciousness, fundamental concepts, memory, reasoning, language. Each division of the subject is approached from the scientific standpoint, and then illustrated most delightfully from recorded observations of little children at various stages of growth. The author makes some use of evidence already tabulated, but by far the greater number of her illustrations are drawn from her own records of the ways and words of a small niece, whom all readers will agree to be both fortunate in her chronicler and herself a very attractive young person. It is impossible to convey at second-hand the effect of this most stimulating lesson in child-study, pointed at every stage by actual "experiment" on the little human being under study, who is unconscious (happily) of observation, but acutely conscious of all the other facts of her expanding world. We strongly recommend this book to all teachers and lovers of children.

D. T.

MEDICAL DICTIONARY. By W. B. Drummond, M.B., C.M., F.R.C.P. (Edin.). London: Dent & Sons. 10s. 6d. net.

THIS is a book which aims at being a popular volume of reference for social workers generally, such as school teachers, clergymen, district visitors, factory inspectors and, presumably, parents, and is undoubtedly published at an opportune moment for those looking after wounded and ailing soldiers. It seems further to aim at (1) providing sufficient knowledge of medical science to supply the cultural needs of the unprofessional reader; (2) giving the minor practices of healthy living where a man or woman may be his or her own physician with some safety and advantage; (3) helping the untrained patient to intelligently carry out the doctor's advice and instructions. These are undeniably very good aims to have set out to realise, and there has been some real measure of accomplishment making, on the whole, an attractive and useful volume. Perhaps if these distinctive points of view had been more specifically catered for the book would have been stronger and the proportionate treatment of subjects would have been a little better realised. Under 'Fainting,' for instance, the danger of confusing this state with other forms of loss of consciousness is hardly mentioned. 'Infant Feeding' does not explain why the natural method is so superior. 'Twilight sleep' is said to be induced "without any evil consequences"; this is too dogmatic. Botulism is explained (!) with the two words "sausage poisoning," and this is both laconic and inaccurate. Some cross references are absent. Still, the work is simply written, is usefully illustrated, and may be recommended as a valuable work, filling a necessary place that was not occupied before.

J. LIONEL TAYLER.

THE annual pilgrimage of the Moslems of Jerusalem to the tomb of Moses was rendered specially interesting this year by the fact that at a ceremony on the Mount of Olives, where a meeting took place between the Governor and the principal Mohammedan families, all the religious bodies in Jerusalem were represented. The prayers included one for all the communities in Palestine and one for the prosperity of the present rulers of the country.

THE REV. W. H. DRUMMOND IN FRANCE.

It has been suggested to me that some of the readers of THE INQUIRER may be interested to hear a few details about the work in which I am engaged among our troops in France. I have not written before, partly from lack of time in a very busy life and also because it is hardly fair to try to convey some impression of the high value and noble opportunities of work with the Y.M.C.A. without adequate knowledge. Then there are the difficulties, the necessary and reasonable difficulties, of censorship, which are with us always. I cannot describe some of the most interesting features of our work; many details must be taken for granted. But I feel that I can now speak with confidence and real knowledge about many aspects of it. My lecturing tours during the past year and some months of active work of a very varied character in one area have given me rather unusual opportunities of observation. My verdict, and I give it without the slightest hesitation or reserve, is that no man need ever ask for a richer field in which to serve his fellow-men. The work is just what we choose to make it. There is full employment for every gift of heart and brain and hand. If we serve tables, we also preach the Gospel. If we are much occupied with lowly tasks of human helpfulness, we are doing it all the time in surroundings which are incredibly rich in opportunities for noble human friendship. For myself, after a long period of serving the cause at home with voice and pen, broken it is true by numerous Red Cross visits to France on the work of our Belgian Hospital Fund, it is with no little joy that I find myself on active service with our own men, helping their fighting spirit, sharing their confidences, and doing something, I would fondly hope, to keep the fire of a lofty idealism burning in their hearts.

After many weeks of lecturing to crowded audiences and conducting services in camps and hospitals and convalescent depots, it has been my good fortune to act as leader for several weeks in the largest Hut in this area. We speak of it as the Hut, but it is really a big soldiers' institute, with a canteen hut, a large concert hall, a reading and writing room always crowded with men, a billiard room with four tables, and a chapel. Here our staff of six ladies and one man worker beside myself spend our days, and never a minute hangs heavy on our hands. The work is admirably organised. We all have our special task inspired by the common aim. The leader has a large amount of freedom for informal fellowship with the men. He goes about among them making friends, listening to their experiences, and helping with words of encouragement or advice where they are desired. He presides at all the crowded meetings, concerts, lectures, dramatic performances in the Concert Hall. He also has the privilege of directing the religious work. Every evening there are evening prayers in our quiet and beautiful chapel. From 30 to 50 men come just because they desire to do so, and no one who has been present at our services is likely to forget them. The leader stands at the door at the close and shakes hands, and as he looks into the frank eyes of these men and boys he feels that he can never do enough to serve them. Sometimes one remains behind to ask for a New Testament or to have a confidential talk, and often it is, "This is the last time, Sir. I go up the line to-morrow and I want to thank you." Sunday is a great day here. Sometimes we have a Band concert in the afternoon. In the evening there is a service in the Concert Hall preceded by hymn-singing for about 20 minutes.

There is a large congregation and the singing is something to remember when the men lift their voices in some favourite hymn like 'Sun of my Soul, thou Saviour dear.' What strikes everybody is the reverent feeling of worship, the emotion with which we sing the hymn for the dear ones at home, 'Holy Father in thy mercy' at the close, and the quiet pause after the blessing. It is a glorious opportunity of preaching and the men listen without any feeling of formality or listlessness, but of that the preacher himself can hardly speak. The service in the Concert Hall is followed by Holy Communion in the chapel for men of all denominations. About 30 to 40 men come every Sunday. The chapel itself is a peaceful sanctuary of worship. The wooden cross on a bracket at one end was made by one of the men, the simple brass cross which stands between two vases of flowers on the Communion Table was the gift of another. Of the service itself I hardly care to speak, it is so moving to see these strong men humble themselves before something which commands their loyalty and affection, and to feel as you give them the bread and wine of sacrifice that they themselves will soon be facing death with the courage which God himself has breathed into their hearts.

I cannot write more just now, but before I close I am going to make a bold request. I believe that many people will like to take some part in the work by giving their money if they cannot offer personal service. The Book-Room scheme for which I received many generous gifts a few months ago has been a great boon, and officers and men greatly appreciate all the delightful new books which have been provided in this way. This money is now exhausted and I want some more. £50 would be most useful, and I can promise that the books will be chosen with great care. Then the Hut in the camp, whose work I have described, has unceasing needs of its own. At the moment we want a new piano which will cost about £40. We can buy it out here and save transport if the money is provided. A piano upon which the men can play themselves gives immense pleasure, but naturally it gets hard wear and a new one must be provided from time to time. One other thing. Every week parcels of comforts are sent up the line to men whom we have got to know well. The numerous letters of thanks show what it means to them both in friendship and in physical comfort. I should like to be in a position to help our lady workers, who have been lavish with their own money, in this excellent work. £10 would be most welcome. In all I venture to ask for £100 for these various objects. Contributions should be sent to Mrs. W. H. Drummond, 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, London, N.W.3, and will be acknowledged in these columns.

Perhaps it will be simpler if donors are willing to leave it to me to divide the money among the objects which I have mentioned, though some may prefer to allocate it to the one which appeals most strongly to themselves. It is all for the one central object of helping our men, and those of us who live among them and every day get to understand them better know that anything we can do for them is as nothing compared with what they are doing for us. WM. H. DRUMMOND.

France, June 6, 1918.

SCOTLAND still stands far ahead of England and Wales in the average attendance of pupils over twelve years of age in secondary schools, intermediate schools, and supplementary classes. In Scotland the figures for the last normal year (1913-14) were 197 per 10,000 of the population; while in England and Wales the number reached only 45 per 10,000 of the population.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. COE'S 'NATURE VERSUS NATURAL SELECTION.'

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Will you allow me a little space to draw the attention of your readers to the remarkable vindication which has taken place in recent years of the above volume? Although the book has been practically ignored, Mr. Coe has lived to see leading scientists, including Darwin's own son, completely converted to his point of view.

It is a commonplace that orthodoxy exists not only in theology but in every department of human life, and that, although science ought to be, and is popularly supposed to be, practically free from it, scientists are quite as human as the rest of us. If a man of general competence sincerely and earnestly adduces a view contrary to the orthodox, it ought to be weighed on its merits. If this is not done regrettable consequences are likely to follow.

That this has been the case with Mr. Coe's book is, I think, evident. The evolutionists in their fight against theological orthodoxy developed a similar orthodoxy. They could not recognise an "outsider" as competent to think on their facts, although they made appeal to the public; they could not see that one might attack Darwin's theory of natural selection, while fully accepting evolution and a modified theory of natural selection. The question is one of the greatest importance. On it turns the question of free will or determinism.

Darwin, it will be remembered, would explain evolution as being due, almost exclusively, to natural selection. There were a few prophets who, while fully accepting evolution, never bowed the knee to Baal; but, until recently, those who criticised any significant part of Darwinism were treated by the orthodox world of science as pestilent heretics.

In 1895 Mr. Coe published a weighty book—elaborate, extremely careful, tactful, dominated by a most unusual clarity of thought, replete with knowledge of the literature of evolution. It has only one defect, and that is that it was before its time. The public to which Mr. Coe appealed were not up to his book morally or mentally. It has been my business to be familiar with the literature of evolution, and if to-day I had to recommend the book which, in my humble opinion, proves that Darwin's doctrine of natural selection is not equal to explaining evolution, I should recommend Mr. Coe's 'Nature versus Natural Selection.'—Yours, &c.,

R. F. RATTRAY.

June 3, 1918.

[In Professor Rudolf Otto's 'Naturalism and Religion' (translated by J. Arthur Thomson and Margaret R. Thomson, in Williams & Norgate's Crown Theological Library, 1907) reference is made to Mr. Coe's book, which is described (p. 164) as "Perhaps the most comprehensive, many-sided, critical analysis of the theory of natural selection."—ED. INQ.]

WHERE IS THE RELIGIOUS CENTRE?

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Will you allow me, in friendly response to Mr. Hall's last letter, once again to state my position, since this seems the best and only way of answering him. Mr. Hall admits my propositions which I suggested as a test of Christian Theism. He says it is true that we worship God who in Christ has come to us in the might of His holiness and love, and we pray to the God who in Christ revealed Himself to us. I maintain that anyone who accepts those propositions has a centre for faith in Jesus Christ. The peculiar glory and grandeur of Christian faith is just this, that it does present us with a God who is most significantly and fully revealed in human life and, above all, in one special human life. The order, beauty, law of the natural universe speak for the Christian with a human voice. Personality utters itself through persons, and through a Person. The Word, the Reason that informs the universe, that ordains the motions of the stars, paints the lilies of the field, sustains humanity and gives freedom, that presence which rolls through all things, gathers itself up into the highest and holiest in human life, and then proclaims its ultimate moral character and its deepest personal quality and being. The word of creative power and cosmic force is translated into the word of self-sacrificing, redeeming love. No nobler conception of Deity has ever come to the thought of man: that is quite certain. To get God into human life, and human life into God, to bring the Creator into the toil and agony and struggle of the universe he originated—that, if it were nothing else, would be the most stupendous achievement of human thinking and desire, the biggest thing the human mind ever accomplished. Christian faith says it is more than that, more than a mighty achievement of human thought and desire. It is part of the life of God, part of the final meaning of the universe, part of the absolute intention of God. Christian doctrine is very simple. God, the eternal life of this universe and the ultimate life of our souls, is revealed in Jesus Christ so far as that revelation can be made in the mode of a human life at all. God spoke in Christ and opened up the depths of His deepest personal life, His essential moral quality, His moral nature, and His moral way. The revelation of God in Christ provides the answer to all our human problems. That answer is in the terms of love, personal love that gives itself to the uttermost, that goes on loving no matter how unworthy the object loved may be of love, that harms none but does good to all, that overcomes evil by love alone, that redeems its enemies by dying for them. The life of Jesus is the best and most beautiful life known to us, and in moral essence and character it is the life of God. It is a life that has the Cross in it, and that is the most wonderful and helpful thing of all.

In all this, then, is no exclusiveness, no shutting out of other human lives. On the contrary, there is inclusion of all humanity, so that when anywhere we look upon the manifestation of the Christ life, then we look upon the revelation of God, then we are in touch with the final secret of the universe. And the thought sets an eternal value on humanity and marks out a sublime destiny for the individual, and we have a measure of what that means. We go to Christ and He shows us personally and clearly what living the life of God and doing the will of God must be like, and reveals the height of our calling, till we all come to the measure of perfect manhood, divinity in humanity, to the fulness of the stature of Jesus Christ.

Do we believe this or do we not? If we do then the belief reacts inevitably on our theology, and questions about Athanasius and Origen and the rest become pertinent; but first of all we must really find out what our hearts have to tell us. Experience of Christ is the touchstone of Christian theology. The question of questions is this—Was God, the Eternal Life of this universe and the essential life of our souls, peculiarly concerned in that work in Galilee and Judæa, in that going about doing good, in that amazing loving, in that setting forth of a moral road and a moral ideal, in that death on the Cross? Was it all an accident of history, or was it a purposive revelation of the final meaning of existence intended for the guidance of us men and the salvation of our souls?

"I cannot myself escape the conviction that the thing we call civilisation is where it is to-day, in the inferno, mainly because the mass of mankind persist in regarding as an accident of history what was really the supreme act of God, and thereby cut themselves off from all hope of understanding God, each other, and their own souls. "He came unto His own, and they that were His own received Him not." The issues involved are vastly more important than any recrudescence of "ancient controversies," or any questions of orthodoxies, of which there are many, versus heterodoxies, or any interests of biblical criticism. Are we going to follow, i.e., try to follow, Christ or another? For myself, I have tried most others, and had to crawl back through the centuries to the foot of the Cross. There are virtues growing there.—Yours, &c.,

STANLEY A. MELLOR.

[We have received other important letters on this subject, some of which we hope to present next week.—EDITOR INQUIRER.]

DRINKING IN THE ARMY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Can you spare space for the following extract from a letter received from a non-commissioned officer in the army? I hope so, as I think that such facts should be more widely known:—

"I have now done more than a year's service and I have been appalled at the amount of drinking, and while I do not say that the army actually encourages it, it certainly does not try to hinder it. The N.C.O.s and officers shut their eyes to it, and what can you expect when they are the worst offenders? I have known several men who have nearly killed themselves by drinking since they have been in the army. Anyone who is at all strict has to stand against quite a lot. It seems to me that the army authorities or the Y.M.C.A. might do much more...to discourage it [drinking]."

It must be admitted that this shows a serious state of things not only for the men concerned but also for the country. It makes for inefficiency, it accounts for "mistakes" and "surprises," and prolongs the war. Men ask for protection from the "drink" temptation and they ask in vain. Why?—Yours, &c.,

E. F. COWLIN.

19 Northwood Road, Forest Hill.

June 9, 1918.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

175TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,656	19	4
Miss A. Garrett (16th) ..	0	10	0
Highgate Unitarian Church, per the Rev. A. A. Charlesworth (27th) ..	4	6	0
Miss E. J. Spencer (2nd) ..	1	0	0
B. ..	1	0	0
Mrs. George Webb (11th) ..	5	0	0
Northgate End Chapel, Halifax, Retiring Collections, per Mr. J. Teal (25th) ..	1	16	7
Mr. L. N. Williams ..	1	1	0
	£20,671	12	11

Parcels have been received from: Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas; Miss Short; Ringwood Chapel Sewing Society, per Mrs. Conway; Mrs. Dent; Miss A. J. Partridge; the Rosslyn Hill, Hampstead, Sewing Society, per Mrs. Thomas Cobb; the Clapham Ladies' War Relief Committee, per Miss E. B. Cooper.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Auckland, N.Z.—The Unitarian Church at Auckland has given 42 men to the service of their country in the war. Three of them James Carter, his cousin George Carter, and Gerald Haycock have returned to New Zealand disabled for further military duty. Miss Guy has done genuinely patriotic work in keeping up a correspondence with the absent boys, and has written about 400 letters to them during the past three and a half years.

Belfast.—The presence of Dr. Carpenter at the Annual Meeting in connection with the Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church, which will be held on Monday and Tuesday, June 17 and 18, will add greatly to the interest of the proceedings. Dr. Carpenter, who will preach the annual sermon in the First Church, and lecture on the following day on 'Religion during the War and After,' has undertaken a full programme of work, and we are glad that our friends in the North of Ireland will be able to share with the churches in England and Scotland the encouragement and inspiration which he takes with him wherever he goes.—We learn from The Non-Subscribing Presbyterian that three of the younger ministers in the North of Ireland expect to take up Y.M.C.A. work in France shortly, but definite arrangements have not yet been completed. Ballee.—The ladies of the First Church congregation are very assiduous in sending comforts to the soldiers and sailors, and over 2,000 articles have already been dispatched. They have also for several months past done much repair work for the U.V.F. Hospital. Considerable sums have been realised as the result of a "special effort" which is made each winter, and St. Dunstan's Hostel, the Belfast Limbless Hospital, and a local fund for our prisoners have benefited between them to the extent of over £1,500. Downpatrick.—On May 19 the minister, the Rev. R. Philipson, announced that the roll of junior members, which was started a short time ago, now numbered 57, and he thought it a splendid testimony to the influence and training of their late venerated minister, the Rev. M. S. Dunbar, that these young people were so ready to enrol themselves. Newry.—At the Annual Meeting of the Unitarian congregation it was stated that 14 additions had been made to the church roll during the past year, notably younger members of families long associated with the church.

Bolton.—On Wednesday evening, June 5, the congregation of Halliwell Road Free Church and friends assembled to welcome the new minister and his wife, the Rev. and Mrs. A. O. Broadley. Letters of congratulation and apologies for absence were read from the Revs. E. E. Jenkins and Charles Peach, and Mr. Alfred Pilling, J.P. Mr. D. Campbell, Chairman of Committee, presided, and was supported by the Revs. J. Cyril Flower, J. Islan Jones, and E. Morgan. Addresses were also given by the Revs. A. Le Marchant (Congregational), R. W. Thompson (Congregational), F. Woodmass (Wesleyan), and R. M. Rutter (Primitive Methodist). The welcome and good wishes of the congregation were expressed by Mr. C. Wood, Mr. T. Whittle, Secretary of the Sunday school, spoke on behalf of the teachers, and Mr. I. Barrow represented the Bolton Sunday School Union. Mr. Broadley briefly responded. Mr. J. B. Gass, J.P., of the Bank Street Church, said he thought the presence of so many ministers from other churches created a precedent in the religious history of the town. Certainly the large audience appreciated highly this evidence of a widening and deepening of the spirit of fellowship and brotherhood. An excellent programme of music was given by Mr. Fred Partington and friends.

Croydon.—The Rev. D. Delta Evans has been instrumental in obtaining some recognition of the plucky act of a boy aged 13 who endeavoured to save a runaway horse, and sustained personal injury in so doing. A letter which he wrote to the local press was read aloud at two church services and resulted in over £4 being collected. Mr. Evans has himself collected some money for the lad, whose home is a humble one.

Chowbent.—After two months' leave of absence the Rev. J. J. Wright—who, his friends will be glad to hear, is greatly improved in health—resumed his pulpit duties at Chowbent Chapel last Sunday.

Exeter.—At the Annual Meeting of the congregation of George's Meeting on June 3, Mr. E. Lemmon presiding, a resolution was passed renewing the welcome to the Rev. Donald Fraser, the newly appointed minister, to whose work and influence in promoting liberal religion in Exeter the members of the chapel look forward with confidence. The resolution included a reference to the gracious and devoted services of Mrs. Fraser.

Framlingham and Bedford.—On June 2 the congregation at both places were cheered by a visit from Miss E. R. Lee, B.A., who has been doing good work in one of the Welsh mining districts. She gave an interesting description of the latter to the Bedford Sunday school children, contrasting its blackness with the beautiful verdure of their own village and its surroundings. At the chapel service Miss Lee had a congregation numbering 44. In the evening she preached at the Old Meeting House, Framlingham, where a good congregation much appreciated her thoughtful discourse. At each service Miss Lee expressed the thanks of the Rev. W. H. and Mrs. Sands for the kind sympathy shown to them in consequence of the death of their infant daughter.

Horwich.—The Unitarian Church has suffered a great loss in the sudden death of Mr. Chas. J. P. Fuller, F.I.C., aged 52. Mr. Fuller had been connected with the church for nearly a quarter of a century, and because of his business ability and foresight had rendered invaluable service as a leader and adviser. He had occupied nearly every office with great credit and dignity, and was Secretary and Organist at the time of his death. Mr. Fuller always gave the best of his heart and mind, and the church, which he has helped through many difficulties, will ever hold his memory dear. A Memorial Service, conducted by the Rev. H. B. Hannah, was held last Sunday, when warm and sympathetic tributes were paid by the minister and Mrs. Chas. Postlethwaite, Chairman of the Committee. There was a large and representative congregation. Mr. Fuller had been chief chemist to the L. and Y. Railway Works since 1887, and was held in very high respect in the town. He leaves a widow and family to mourn his loss. —Very successful Sunday School Anniversary Services took place on Sunday, June 2, when the Rev. H. B. Hannah, the newly-appointed minister, was the preacher for the day.

Hull.—The Sunday School Anniversary Services held at Park Street Church on June 2 had a special significance this year in that they marked the centenary of the school. A worthier celebration of the event is postponed to more peaceful times and until members on active service come home, but the services on June 2 were very successful. The Rev. Joseph Wood, late of Birmingham, preached the sermons and addressed the scholars at the prize distribution. The prizes were distributed by the past Superintendent, Mr. W. B. Holmes. Three more names of men on the Roll of Honour who have given their lives for their country appear in Home Fires: Ben. Adamson, killed in action, May, 1918; Private F. Harding, 10th East Yorks, killed in action, April, 1918; and Frank R. Hirst, M.T.S., drowned at sea (torpedoed), May, 1918. Mr. Robert Hodgson, son of the late Mr. Robert Hodgson, has also lost his life through the torpedoing of the ship he was on.

London: Mansford Street.—Mr. W. J. Clark has resigned the position of organist and choir-master at the Mission, which he has held since 1891, to the great regret of the Committee and members of the congregation. "Hearty singing," says the Calendar, "has always been a feature of the services at Mansford Street, and this is no doubt very largely due to the efficient and sympathetic manner in which Mr. Clark has presided at the organ for the past twenty-seven years." The most cordial appreciation is expressed for the valuable assistance which Mr. Clark has rendered, and it is a matter for congratulation that the congregation will still retain his services as church secretary.—Another Industrial Exhibition is being organised in connection with the Summer Flower Show, which is to be held on July 18, and the committee are anxious to secure exhibits of all kinds of handiwork. Prizes will be offered for the best piece of work brought in by the boys and girls and elder scholars.

London: Stratford.—Sunday, June 16, will be the 102nd anniversary of the founding of the Unitarian cause in Stratford, and the 49th anniversary of the present church. Mr. J. P. Rosling, the minister, will preach in the morning, and the Rev. Bertram Lister (Hackney) in the evening. Mr. Rosling is now doing part-time national service.—It has been a pleasure to welcome back again as a worker the Scoutmaster, Mr. Edmund D. Noel, who has been discharged from the army after more than two years of military service. The Calendar regretfully announces that Clarence Curry has been killed in action.—Nine new members have been added to the Church Roll during the present year.

Manchester: Chorlton-cum-Hardy.—The 27th Annual Report of the Wilbraham Road Church records the maintenance of a steady interest in the work, and sounds a hopeful note, though the resignation of the Rev. C. Peach has been accepted with great regret. The future of the church is a matter of concern to the members of the congregation, and very serious attention is being devoted to the problems raised by the departure of Mr. Peach, and the responsibility of finding a successor to him. The following extract from Mr. Peach's farewell letter to the congregation gives some indication of the spirit in which the work of the church has been carried on during the war under his leadership, and of the way in which the minister has helped his people during the past four years. "It has not always been easy," he says, "in the glare of these lurid fires to see things steadily. For we have not been mere onlookers. Part of the fire has been in our own souls; for we too are men and our country stands to us as our most precious inheritance. How to be true to our own land and not false to our faith, which is of all lands and peculiar to none; to share the wounds and sorrows of our own people, and not to forget that we are part of the larger family of man; to maintain our cause and not to obscure or neglect the opportunities or openings for peace; that has been a task to which none of us has been always equal. And yet that is the chief function of the Church.... No Church has been wholly true to that task if, happily, none has entirely failed; and God will pardon our failure if we learn the lesson and try to build the new world on better foundations."

Mottram.—A Sale of Work, part of a special effort to raise £350 for the extinction of the debt and for needed repairs and renovations of the Unitarian Church, was opened on Thursday, June 6, by Mr. H. Partington, Mayor of Glossop, Dr. Auburn in the chair. On Saturday, the 8th, Miss Dowson performed the opening ceremony (for Mrs. H. E. Dowson), Mr. Geo. Cocks of Gorton acting as Chairman. The sum realised (£203), with subscriptions, exceeded expectations, and the Mottram friends thank all who have contributed to it.

Newport, I.W.—The Rev. Dr. Hargrove, who has been staying at Ventnor, has taken the services at Newport on the last two Sundays, much to the uplifting and strengthening of those who attended. Visitors to the Island, which is now looking its best, are assured of a welcome if they make their way to the church; this applies not only to those in search of rest and change—and Lord Jellicoe has said the Isle of Wight is about the safest place in England—but also to Unitarians who have joined the forces and are temporarily stationed in the locality.

Oldham.—A welcome visit was paid to the Unitarian Church on June 9 by Dr. J. P. MacCarthy of Waltham, Mass., U.S.A., who preached morning and evening. Special solos were sung, and Dr. MacCarthy remarked upon the excellence of the musical portion of the services, as rendered by the voluntary choir, and the hearty congregational singing.

Plymouth.—In reference to the paragraph under this heading in our last issue, Lieut.-Col. Bullock writes to explain that the arrangement to preach in the George Street Baptist Chapel was originally suggested by the Secretary of the Good Templars, and Col. Bullock, who had no reason to suppose that the church officials would not know he was a Unitarian, was the more ready to fall in with this arrangement as one of his ancestors had gone out with the Pilgrim Fathers, some of whom were entertained by the Baptists, from Plymouth. The morning congregation was greatly augmented in the evening, when many people had to stand, and it is to be inferred from this that his hearers found nothing to disapprove of in Col. Bullock's discourses.

Swansea.—Mr. Thomas Pulsford Sims, assayer and analytical chemist, of Swansea, who died on December 20, left among other legacies £200, the income of which is to be applied in paying the expenses of distinguished ministers for the Unitarian Chapel, High Street, at least once a year, and the residue of his estate to the Swansea Technical School for three two-year scholarships, one for the best student in chemistry, one for the best metallurgical student, and one for the best student in modern languages for commercial purposes.

Victoria, B.C.—We quote the following from the May Calendar of the Unitarian Church: "Dr. O. M. Jones died April 2, aged 55 years. Dr. Jones was one of the first to sign the membership roll of the Unitarian Church in Victoria. He was for some time President of our Board of Trustees, and has been a generous supporter of its enterprises. His extraordinary skill as a surgeon, coupled with his unfailing generosity, especially to returned soldiers, had made him one of the best-loved men in Victoria. Owing to failing health and the pressure of war activities he had taken no recent part in church affairs, but had given repeated tokens of his constant loyalty to our principles. Our deepest sympathy is with those who mourn his loss. Capt. Kidd died April 2, aged 55 years. Capt. Kidd, who was born in the same year, died on the same day as Dr. Jones. He was a corresponding member of the church. His duties as Inspector for the Forestry Branch of the Lands Department kept him constantly travelling around the coast in his motor-launch, and it is presumed that in the course of his work he fell overboard and was drowned. He was an ardent Unitarian, with a truly Scottish enthusiasm for theology and metaphysics. He appreciated most heartily the Unitarian literature which was sent him each month, and his last message to the minister was a request for more."

Wandsworth.—On Wednesday evening a successful concert, including a cantata and a dramatic sketch, was given by members and friends of the Girls' Club, on behalf of which a substantial collection was taken. The managers of the Club, especially Mrs. Boswell, Miss Joy, and Miss Rymmer, are to be congratulated on the prosperity of their work among the girls.—The Sunday School Anniversary will take place on the first Sunday in July, which opens the thirty-sixth year of the ministry here of the Rev. W. G. Tarrant.

Winnipeg.—The Men's Committee of All Souls' Church, commending to public notice a series of sermons by the minister, the Rev. Dr. Horace Westwood, dealing with 'Foundations of International Peace,' say: "Many and confused are the voices of the moment. Some are crying: 'Peace at any price.' From the throats of others comes the cry for vengeance upon a cruel and treacherous foe. Again others with grim determination resolutely set their faces to 'carry on' until the peace of the world can be guaranteed and militarism is destroyed. Yet beneath it all in varying forms there persists the hope and dream of a peace which cannot be destroyed."

* THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.

The Directors regret to announce that the very large increases in the cost of paper and printing make it necessary to raise the price of THE INQUIRER to 2d. weekly, from and including our issue of JULY 6.

Subscribers would greatly help our depleted and consequently over-burdened office staff if they would kindly forward, without individual application, the additional subscription required for the rest of the year 1918, viz., 1s. 1d.

SIR ARTHUR QUILLER COUCH, who has been lecturing on 'The Art of Reading the Bible' at Cambridge, pleads eloquently for the literary study of the Bible as "Matthew Arnold, and sundry men of letters (among them Lord Latymer and a Cambridge man, Dr. R. G. Moulton)" have pleaded before him in vain. "The fault," he says, "as usual, lies in our own tameness and incuriosity. What tyranny exists has grown up through the quite well-meaning labours of quite well-meaning men, and no serious reason has been given why we should not include portions of the English Bible in our English Tripos, if we choose."

THE soldiers of the American Army are not served with a rum ration, and Dr. Daniel A. Poling, of Boston, U.S.A., Associate President of the United Society of Christian Endeavour, has stated that in the course of his recent visit to France he was with the U.S. troops in the front line when they experienced their first general gassing and contact with the enemy, and amidst all the horrors they endured no rum was administered to them. Hot coffee and tea were provided for them by the Y.M.C.A., the Red Cross and their own cooks, and it has been proved that under the most extreme conditions these hot drinks can be constantly furnished.

BIRTH.

BLAKE.—On June 7, at Estancia Coronel, San Julian, Argentina, the wife of Robert Blake, Jr., of a son.

DEATH.

DRUMMOND.—On June 13, at 18 Rawlinson Road, Oxford, the Rev. James Drummond, M.A., LL.D., D.Litt., in his 84th year. Funeral service at Manchester College Chapel on Tuesday, June 18, at noon. No flowers.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, June 16.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
Bell Street, Edgware Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. GOLLAND.
Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. THOS. MUNN.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
Dingley Place Mission, St. Lukes, City Road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. F. G. FINCHAM.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.
Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. F. G. FINCHAM; 6.30, Mr. JOHN BEGG.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.
Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND; 6.30, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.
Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11, Rev. W. H. STEPHENSON; 6.30, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.
Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. F. MADDISON.
Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Mr. E. R. FYSON.
Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
Rhyl Street, Kentish Town, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. ROSE.
South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Mr. A. J. HOWARD HULME.
Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Rev. B. LISTER, M.A.
University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.
Woolwich, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11 and 6.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.
BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.
BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
BIRMINGHAM, Moseley Unitarian Christian Church, Dennis Road Schools, 6.30, the Hon. GERARD COLLIER, M.A.
BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.
BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Room, Downing Street, 11.30.
CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.
CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.
CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. JOHN MOORE.
DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.
DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DONALD B. FRASER.
GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.
HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. HARGROVE.
LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. R. F. RATTRAY.
LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. E. JENKINS.
LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Mr. J. M. HEANEY.
LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN.
MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.
MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.
MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. R. SCOTT.
NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.
NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Mr. HERBERT E. CLARKE, M.A., B.Sc.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30.
PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.
TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. T. PAGESMITH.
WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

WINNEPEG, CANADA.

All Souls' Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

June

16. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

23. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

30. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

Subject of Sermon, June 16: "Natural Christianity."

ESSEX CHURCH,

The Mall, Notting Hill Gate.

SUNDAY SERVICES, 11 and 6.30.

Preacher: Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

SUBJECTS, JUNE 16.

Mg. "A Text for the Times from Wordsworth."
Evg. "Ignorance is no Excuse."

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.
Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation. Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

CHANNING HOUSE SCHOOL,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N.6.

SCIENCE MISTRESS, Resident, WANTED in SEPTEMBER for Physics and Mathematics. Salary according to qualifications. Unitarian preferred. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE,	L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I.	H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL.	H. J. VEZEY.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF TRUSTEES.

will be held in the College at 10.30 A.M. on FRIDAY, JUNE 21.

The Presentation of the Dr. Carpenter Portraits will take place at the close of the Trustees' Meeting.

VALEDICTORY RELIGIOUS SERVICE at 8 P.M. on THURSDAY, JUNE 20.

The Farewell on behalf of the College will be given by the PRINCIPAL, and the Welcome into the Ministry by the Rev. J. C. BALLANTYNE.

PUBLIC RELIGIOUS SERVICE

Conducted by Outgoing Students at 9.30 A.M. on FRIDAY, JUNE 21.

P. M. OLIVER, B.A.	} Hon. Secs.
Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION,

22 Northumberland Avenue, London.

Founded by the late Mr. G. R. Jesse in 1875.

The Society offers to send a LECTURER free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c.

Situations, Vacant and Wanted.

SUPERIOR MAID, with some knowledge of Nursing, wanted, to attend to elderly Lady. — Miss TAYLOR, The Glen, Heaton, Bolton.

WANTED, SITUATION as useful COMPANION or SECRETARY. Domesticated, cheerful; excellent references. Hampstead or North of London district preferred. — "X," care of INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

WANTED, LADY-HELP who will not object to some cooking. Experienced maids kept. — Mrs. FELIX HAMEL, Bole Hall, Tamworth.

GOVERNESS WANTED next September for Dorking. Daily or resident. Two girls, 12 and 8 years, and boy, 4½, for first lessons. — Mrs. H. MARTINEAU, Roughdown End, Boxmoor, Herts.

A LADY (not young) would give her SERVICES as Companion, Secretary, or Useful Help in return for comfortable home. — RITA, care INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

MINISTER and WIFE will take HOLIDAY DUTIES, with care of children if desired. — Write A. B., care of INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Board and Residence, &c.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks. — Board - residence. Meat ration supplemented by vegetarian dishes and country produce. Enquiries, which must be accompanied by stamped envelope, from Miss SMITH.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000

Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

Miscellaneous.

OFFICE TO LET, 15 ft. square, with large window for display. Additional accommodation available if needed. — Apply FRANCIS & Co., INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.

IRISH ROLLER TOWELS, extra strong and durable quality, 2½ yds. by 17 ins., 2s. each; 3 for 5s. 11d.; postage 6d. Send for Bargain List, free. — HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT. — Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite; 12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum. Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street, MANCHESTER. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT. Cash or offer by return. Before selling make sure of their value by writing for FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any artificial teeth. — E. LEWIS, 29 London Street, Southport, Lancs. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER.

THAT OLD SET OF TEETH

You do not wear may now be worth up to £15 for the precious metals they contain. Send them to us. We will give you the highest possible value. Also buyers of gold and surplus jewellery. Offers made by return for goods sent by post. If offer not accepted, goods returned post free. Platinum Scrap £16 per ounce.

SATISFACTION ASSURED.

I. RAYBURN & CO.,
105 Market Street, Manchester.

SANITAS

FLUID

BEST WASH
FOR WOUNDS
BEST MOUTH WASH
BEST AIR PURIFIER.
DESTROYS ALL
DISEASE GERMS

Clean
Fragrant
Non Poisonous
Does not Stain Linen

8⁰ & 1/3 Bottles

THE "SANITAS" CO. LTD LONDON E.

The Inquirer.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2;
INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenæum Press, 11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C., Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate, — Saturday, June 15, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3964.
NEW SERIES, No. 1067.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 22, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	197
BRIDGING NIAGARA	198
MEMORIAL NOTICES:—
Dr. James Drummond	199
Dr. M. J. Savage	200
The Rev. Charles Hargrove	200

CORRESPONDENCE:—
Where is the Religious Centre?	200
THE LANCASHIRE AND CHESHIRE PROVIN-
CIAL ASSEMBLY	201

Y.M.C.A. WORK IN FRANCE	20
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	202
BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	203
OUR ROLL OF HONOUR	203

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

ON Sunday morning a memorial service will be held at Rosslyn Hill Church, Hampstead, with which the late Dr. Drummond was intimately connected during his long residence in London. This service will no doubt be attended by many of his grateful friends in London who were unable to be present at the service last Tuesday at the College, Oxford. Dr. Estlin Carpenter, whose programme of meetings in Ireland prevented his attendance at the College will conduct the service and give the address. The service begins at 11. There will also be a memorial service in the College Chapel, Oxford, on Sunday morning, the preacher being the Rev. Dr. S. H. Mellone.

* * *

IN "an appreciation" of Dr. Drummond, The Manchester Guardian, June 12, said that upon the "tranquil and decorous atmosphere" prevalent at Cross Street before his time "Drummond broke with an electric eloquence full of passion and poetry and glowing with the light of a piercing spiritual vision. He spoke as one rapt into the very presence of divine things and able from that vantage ground to see into the depths and lay bare the secrets of all the souls before him. Naturally some of them shrank before the merciless irradiation, while others were fascinated by the vividness with which they were made to see soul mysteries which they had only guessed at or taken on trust. Factions of a somewhat pronounced character presently formed in the congregation, and at this distance of time, when almost all concerned have passed away, it may be pardonable to intimate that the devoted adherents of Drummond were not in general to be found in that more opulent section of it whose carriages on Sunday mornings made a long queue in Cross Street."

* * *

ANOTHER veteran leader has been suddenly taken from us in our admired and beloved friend and colleague the Rev. Dr. Charles Hargrove, who, as will be seen elsewhere, died this week. When on retirement from the active ministry he came from Leeds to London he cheerfully accepted many duties in connection with our public work, and amongst them included a place on the directorship of THE INQUIRER. His wide experience of men and books, his scholarly and active mind, and his intense interest in all that contributes to sound knowledge and a liberal temper gave special value to his influence among us. Added to all his gifts of mind and habits of culture was a genial charm that knit him closely in many a friendship. At the moment of writing it has not been possible to fix the funeral arrangements, but readers will no doubt find details announced later in the daily press.

* * *

THE temper of a nation is not an easy thing to estimate, but judging from the reception given to Mr. Asquith's speech at the Aldwych Club on June 14, not only by the widely representative audience whom he addressed, but by writers in the press generally, there is good reason to believe that the enormous strain of the present time will not deflect by a hair's breadth the resolution of our people to wage war to the uttermost against such a foe as confronts us. "There is none of us in this room, in this country, in this Empire," said Mr. Asquith, "who does not pray for peace as the world's paramount need; but the only peace worth the making or the taking is one which will open a new road free of toll to all peoples, whether great or small, safeguarded by the common will, and, if need be, by the common power, for the further progress of humanity."

* * *

"THE common will" and "the common power" to which these words refer are clearly to be sought and found in that League of Nations which at least one member of our War Cabinet, Mr. Barnes, explicitly and staunchly advocates. Speaking at Dartford, with the Archbishop of Canterbury in the chair, he defended his recent proposition that a conference of Allies should be called for the purpose of inaugurating such a League. It was necessary to take action before the termination of the war, he urged; and if the Entente Powers began it, their Supreme War Council might be an embryonic "Parliament of Man," just as the Imperial War Cabinet, he believed, would develop into a representative authority for the British Empire. Well, it is hopeful that one at least of our inner group of statesmen feels like that.

* * *

By the way, the Archbishop appears to have made some highly interesting remarks at Mr. Barnes's meeting, judging from the brief report given in The Times. We should like to hear him in more detail on the subject, which was the admiration which he, as a curate forty-four years ago, felt in common with "a number of parsons" for the high ideals set forth in those days by men like Mundella, Broadhurst, and Burt. His date, we observe, was in those seventies when the great Liberal advance was made under Mr. Gladstone, and certainly the men he names were not at all in the rear. And, beside wishing to hear a little more of Dr. Davidson's youthful enthusiasms, we should very much like to know where the bishops and archbishops of the future are ranging themselves to-day in regard to political and social aims. That a considerable number of the younger clergy are eager for a thoroughgoing national reconstruction is certain—O si sic omnes, especially if they can keep it up for "forty years on"!

* * *

SOME at least of those who read the notice on another page of the life of the late Dr. Minot J. Savage will remember an incident in his career which had a truly dramatic aspect. In the year 1905 an International Congress of Unitarians and other religious liberals was held at Geneva, and it fell to him, as representing the English speaking members, to deliver the sermon on the morning of the closing day. The service was held in the Cathédrale de St.-Pierre, an edifice intimately associated with the rise and rule of the Reformed Church, Calvin's own pulpit being still preserved there. The commemorative visit of [many members to the spot where poor Servetus was burned was another striking event in the week's proceedings, and it certainly acquired the greater significance from the fact that Dr. Savage's address in the historic centre of Calvinism boldly set forth the most modern of theologies and the broadest of church politics.

* * *

THE state of the seven millions in Belgium who are in the invader's grip is partly revealed from time to time, but for the most part communication is severely restricted. The more valuable, therefore, are the occasional glimpses which are afforded. Miss Goblet D'Alviella told us something about her people in an article published in THE INQUIRER of February 23; M. Emile Cammaerts fully confirms her testimony in the June number of The Englishwoman. As Miss D'Alviella said, the whole population is practically one vast conspiracy against the Germans, which these in their turn use every means they can devise to crush. The number of women, for example, who are imprisoned or deported is very large, and from five to ten are executed every month.

* * *

As for the conditions of daily life, M. Cammaerts tells us coal is £10 per ton, and ordinary necessities cost from two to four times what they do in England. "Everything has been requisitioned, even the copper of stair-rods and the wool of mattresses. The richest and the poor alike sleep on palliasses stuffed with paper. All extra clothes have been taken. Coats are made of old blankets, and shirts of bed-sheets." Substitutes have to be found for beer, tobacco, coffee, sugar, soap, &c. From one and a half to two millions, say one-fourth of the population, are destitute. A "Comité d'Alimentation," consisting of 55,000 members, mostly women, in addition to a host of smaller organisations, is engaged in the attempt to ward off famine. All witnesses agree that their sufferings have welded the different classes in a manner quite unprecedented.

* * *

AN interesting decision was made (as we reported recently) by the Unitarian Historical Society in accepting a share in the pious charge of John Pounds House at Portsmouth, now fallen into some dilapidation. The resolution to put "this cradle of the Ragged School movement" into good repair is a commendable development of this young and enterprising Society's activities, and we are pretty sure that the Treasurer's appeal for contributions toward the cost will be none the less effectual if, as is suggested, a tablet is to be affixed to the building recording its historic associations. Not everybody has time, or inclination perhaps, to ponder the goodly papers on the ancient congregations and their ways which are made available by the quarterly Transactions, but he who runs may read a memorial inscription, and go on his way with deepened consciousness of the vitality of things in past generations. There ought to be abundant scope for inscriptions of the kind up and down the country.

BRIDGING NIAGARA.

WHEN Niagara was bridged so that trans-Continental trains with their world-freight might pass over it, the first thing the engineers did was to fly a kite over the whole width of the Falls, and to drop it down on the other side. There it was picked up, with the string to which it was attached. The string was fastened on the further side to a rope, the rope to a cable, the cable to a chain, and the chain to a delicate basketry of strands of steel; and gradually, one after the other, all these were pulled across the Falls. Finally, after the riveting and girding, a mighty bridge was completed over which the traffic of the world now passes in safety.

Which things are a parable. For in connecting thus the world's traffic now whirling across the Falls with the tense and slender string of the kite which, buffeted by the winds, loosed and dropped, first effected the passage, I wish to suggest that on a thread no less fine the whole material traffic of the world depends. And that thread is religion, and that religion is Christianity. And if the thread should snap your traffic and everything else would topple down with it.

It is the lack of a sense of the full significance of this fact which, if persisted in, must spell disaster. The world has been vainly trying to get along without religion, and it has pitifully failed. It has well-nigh severed the string upon which its higher life depends, and its so-called civilisation is tumbling in ruins. The situation would be even worse were it not that men have been living on the capital bequeathed to them by their ancestors: or, to use the pregnant image of Nietzsche—the sun of Christianity has set, but men are still unconsciously living in the afterglow. But when the afterglow too has faded, what of the night? Those who have thrown Christianity overboard do not realise what they still owe to that which they repudiate, to those principles and ideals which Christianity has through the centuries wrought into the very fabric of our civilisation, making them the atmosphere and the breath we breathe, as it were our native air.

The type of mind fostered by our industrial system, the kind of life most men are compelled to live under it, are peculiarly apt to blunt, and even altogether to destroy, any sense, or perception, of spiritual realities. The world is conscious enough of the grosser realities and the material facts of life—it is not likely to be allowed to forget them—but it forgets the kite, the aerial and heavenly ministrant, without which the grosser realities could not be at all. Of this deepest of all realities, the soul, the very breath of religion, upon which ultimately all depends, we may say with the poet who impersonates it: "They err who leave Me out! For it is the Alpha and the Omega, the Beginning and the End." It upsets, and mocks at, all merely prudential and scientific calculations, and is the Fact beneath all the facts with which science deals. Germany left this Fact out when she entered upon the war. She staked her all on a merely material science. But something else enters in, something incalculable, something the most far-seeing statesmen in Germany could not possibly foresee and reckon with, something, too, which must ultimately prove her undoing. For she has wounded the moral heart of the world.

Such an incalculable element, and no less potent, is Christianity in the sphere of social reform. Social reform is made, or marred, by the spirit that engenders it. And it can then only be securely relied upon for ultimate efficacy when it is inspired by the Christian spirit. The main purpose of this present world-upheaval, if one may presume to define it, is to convince the world, it having failed to be convinced in any less drastic fashion, that it will be sheer folly to rely in the future upon merely secular remedies. We have turned our backs on religion, and the secular has throttled us. We have gripped the immediate, but have lost contact with the Eternal. Our social reforms, and practically the whole of our national education which should have motivated and inspired them, have been secular at heart. The deep heart of humanity which was in Christ, the Grace and the Love of God which were also in him, have not been powerfully behind them. How impotent were the numerous secular peace organisations when the war broke out! They fell down like the walls of Jericho at the first blast of the trumpet. The most august decrees of the Hague were scoffed at and flung aside and trodden under foot. Necessity knows no law when religion is speechless. And Leagues of Peace will fare not a whit better in the future unless they have behind them the conquering power of Christ. We have over-rated science and the mere intellect; we have been altogether too cocksure about our materialistic social reforms. The bases upon which our boasted civilisation has been builded have been discovered to be pitifully inadequate.

For what does our present industrial, commercial, and economic system mainly depend on? It depends upon the ever-increasing multiplication of material human needs. We are all more or less in the hapless condition of the baby in the bath, who has lost his tablet of soap and "won't be happy till he gets it." And we are maintained in this perpetual state of unrest by a whole army of advertisers and touters whose sole business it is to persuade us, even against our will, that when we have got one thing we needed, we are equally in need of something else, or we "shan't be happy." The real needs, however, of men are few, and we should be far better without all these superfluities and fripperies and flunkeries. Yet in meeting these superfluous material "needs," which have no vital relation to the soul, human beings, caught up in the devouring vortex of insatiable appetites, expend most of their energies. Are all these material "needs," which Western civilisation has created for us, necessary for us? Would not a simpler life be better? Would it not be better even that the whole of our present industrial system went under, if, as a result of this, we had people for whom the things of the soul counted most of all?

It is just such fundamental considerations as these which this awful war is forcing upon us. Is it progress? Has the soul in our modern civilisation its just rights, or are we selling our birth-right for a mess of pottage? Must not, in the long run, an entirely new standpoint be taken up as the basis of an economic society? Must not all economics, all commercial and industrial life, be ultimately subordinated to the needs of the soul of man? We have lost the sense of the absolute need of the over-lordship of religion, of Christ, and of his spirit in all secular affairs. The secular material life itself will, however, wither and perish if the soul be not there to breathe into it the breath of life. And the true Church, as I understand it, will have regard to the enduring good of the soul, and not be absorbed by those immediate and tangible utilities with which the State and the municipality are chiefly concerned, standing for the eternal spiritual bases of society as against the often over-weening and aggressive politics of the hour.

H. H. JOHNSON.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

DR. JAMES DRUMMOND.

ONCE more for a revered teacher, who has been for many years in our midst, loved and honoured, the ultimate word of peace is spoken. Dr. Drummond, as we briefly recorded last week, passed away at Oxford, after only a few days' illness, on Thursday, June 13, in his 84th year. The memorial notice in The Times next day was headed 'A Great Theologian'; and bearing in mind the range of his knowledge, the fine quality and temper of his scholarship, and what he achieved, of highest value, in that field of historical and critical research and interpretation of the things of the spirit, we must feel that the title is deserved; but as we think of him now, there is much more to be said, and more precious gifts are thankfully remembered. This was recognised also in The Times, in the reference to his work done "in quietness, with the self-effacement of a true Christian humility," while yet beneath that meek exterior there were "fires of moral passion and spiritual fervour, which on occasion would burst out with moving and even startling eloquence"; and a further reference to the profound personal and religious influence he exercised, "closely akin to that of the purest type of Christian saint." That is the greatest gift of all, in a fellowship beyond the power of death, the man himself, the kindling power of his personality, the pure and lofty spirit in all its gentleness and lowliness, and the vision granted, through the ardour of his Christian discipleship, of the things of God. So he stands for us, third in the line of a great tradition, as Principal of Manchester College, with John James Tayler and James Martineau.

James Drummond was born in Dublin, May 14, 1835, the second son of Dr. William Hamilton Drummond, minister of the Strand Street congregation in that city, a keen defender of Unitarianism, biographer of Servetus, and author of several volumes of verse. One link with his memory we have in the hymn in praise of charity, in the New Hymnal, as in Martineau's Collection of 1840. His elder son (the Rev. R. B. Drummond, still, happily, of Edinburgh) was the first to go up to London, as a divinity student of Manchester New College, and in 1856 James, after a brilliant graduation (with the First Classical Gold Medal) at Trinity College, Dublin, followed him there. Of his teachers in the College, in those years of preparation for the ministry, Dr. Drummond always spoke with deep affection and veneration. The spirit of John James Tayler lived again in him, and in the strength of the religious philosophy of James Martineau, as he delighted to acknowledge, his own work was done. On Mr. Tayler's death in 1869 Drummond was called to his chair of Biblical and Historical Theology, and to the Principalship he succeeded on Martineau's retirement in 1885. That intimate association of many years was fitly crowned by his 'Life and Letters of James Martineau,' published in 1902.

But before the call to return as a teacher to his College there came nine years of devoted ministry at Cross Street Chapel, in the heart of Manchester, as colleague of the Rev. William Gaskell,—the Manchester of Mrs. Gaskell's 'Mary Barton.' To the vital character of that ministry those who came as children under the influence of his teaching still bear grateful testimony, and as a permanent memorial of it we have the volume 'Spiritual Religion: Sermons of Christian Faith and Life.' Referring to this book The Times said very truly that "the notes there struck of ardent conviction, of faith in freedom, and a catholic sympathy, of loyalty to Christ as 'a quickening Spirit,' and of profound belief in the reality of spiritual worship and communion, remained dominant throughout the whole of Dr. Drummond's teaching, and not least in his Hibbert Lectures of 1894—'Via, Veritas, Vita,' on the fundamental truths of Christianity—and in three sermons preached from the College pulpit, in 1897, on 'The Pauline Benediction.'" That booklet is a jewel of great price, and with the Essex Hall Lecture of 1902 'Some Thoughts on Christology,' offers in small compass the very heart of his message as a religious teacher.

Concerning Dr. Drummond's work in Manchester College we may quote again what was said in The Times of the fruits of many years of "laborious study and academic teaching, which set a high ideal of scholarship before his students, and produced works of permanent value as contributions to the literature of the Christian Church. The material of elaborate courses of lectures was embodied in successive volumes in such works of recognised authority as 'The Jewish Messiah' (1887) and 'Philo-Judæus' (1888), and later a commentary on the Epistles of St. Paul, the second volume of Putnam's 'International Handbooks to the New Testament' (1899), and finally 'An Inquiry into the Character and Authorship of the Fourth Gospel' (1903) and the masterly 'Studies in Christian Doctrine' (1908). These volumes are monuments of exact scholarship and of impartiality in critical method, and the first two especially, as preparatory to New Testament studies, are characteristic of the exhaustive thoroughness of Drummond's method. Most remarkable of all, perhaps, and most interesting to the general cultivated reader, is the volume on the Fourth Gospel, with its balanced judgment and critical conclusion, accepting finally the Johannine authorship, while at the same time making it clear that in his judgment the Gospel is 'theological and allegorical rather than historical,' containing narrative that is deliberately constructed 'as a pictorial embodiment of spiritual truth.'"

The first twenty years of Dr. Drummond's service as a teacher in Manchester College were spent in London, where his home was at Hampstead, linked in close friendship with Dr. Sadler, of the Rosslyn Hill Chapel. His interests were by no means confined to the College class-room, and chief among the objects to which he gave unstinted sympathy and practical help were the London Domestic Missions and the Sunday School Association. His admirable handbooks on the 'Epistle to the Galatians,' 'The Transmission of the Text of the New Testament,' and 'Paul, his Life and Teaching,' published later, after his removal to Oxford, remain as witnesses of the profound scholar's gladness to be used in humbler ways of helpful service. In the interest of lay preachers he also delivered and published a course of elementary lectures on 'The Composition and Delivery of Sermons.'

It was in 1889 that Dr. Drummond removed with Manchester College to Oxford, and it was of happy augury, in that momentous new departure, that the College was represented, in the person of its head, by a man of such lofty character, so eminent as a scholar, with such clearness of vision and eloquent power in the advocacy of its foundation principles of spiritual freedom and single-hearted loyalty to truth. No little part of the cordial welcome with which the College has been received at Oxford is undoubtedly due to that fact. Seventeen more years of service he rendered as Principal, and continued to the end closely associated with the life of the College.

On his retirement in 1906, when Dr. Carpenter became Principal, the hope was expressed in these columns that years of a beautiful and quiet evening might be granted to Dr. Drummond, "in which a benignant presence will gather ever more closely about it the reverence and love of understanding hearts, and our Teacher in the things of the Spirit will have further gifts to garner for us out of the rich experience of his inward life." That hope has been amply fulfilled. To these last years belong the 'Studies in Christian Doctrine' above referred to, a work of the very highest value; several of the smaller books, including the Provincial Assembly Lecture of 1911, 'Ecclesiastical Comprehension and Theological Freedom'; and now at the close we have just received the beautiful gift of two volumes of 'The Way of Life,' on the Parables of Jesus, and the Lord's Prayer and other Teachings, while a third, 'Pauline Meditations,' awaits publication.

Dr. Drummond married, in 1861, Frances, daughter of John Classon, of Dublin; and now to Mrs. Drummond and her children most deeply of all, and to a wide circle of old pupils and friends, there remains the thankful sense of a gift very richly given by the grace of God, which death cannot take away. The span of mortal years is completed, but the life remains, beautiful and gracious, with the authentic marks of a true follower of Christ, in humility, trust and love, in the abiding communion of the Father's House.

FUNERAL SERVICE.

THE funeral service was held on Tuesday at Manchester College Chapel. The Principal, Dr. Jacks, read the lessons and offered prayer; and the Rev. Dr. J. E. Odgers gave the following address:—

It is fitting that we should meet within these walls to say Farewell to the mortal remains of one who as student, scholar, teacher and minister of the Gospel has been so long and closely connected with this College. No words, indeed, that I can hope to speak could be adequate to the occasion. The testimony of our own hearts is far more eloquent. The distinguished merits of Dr. Drummond as scholar and theologian are now meeting with just and adequate recognition; but the relation in which we have stood and stand to him is something very much to be consecrated in memory and maintained and cherished in the "good treasure" of our hearts in our remaining years. As a critic, as a scholar and as a theologian there is no need that I should speak of him in terms of eulogy; but there is one word, perhaps, appropriate on this occasion. It is not infrequently said, with some justification, that a critical temperament once cultivated is apt to become dominant, and that, sometimes, in proportion as a student busies himself with knowing all about a book he ceases to know the book in its spirit and life; that in proportion as he knows it externally, the spiritual things spiritually discerned evaporate beneath his touch and leave him with all his knowledge, a dry pedant. To that kind of defect the record of Dr. Drummond's studies give evidence of the contrary. For example, in engaging as he did in a masterly way in the controversy on the Fourth Gospel, as to its origin, sources, authorship—a controversy waged since 1820—he contributed, as I have said, a masterly work, generally esteemed as one of the most valuable contributions to it; but the spirit that was behind the letter, the life that was behind the text, the abiding thought that haunted the writer did not evaporate in criticism, but was clearly brought out in that simple book called 'Johannine Thoughts,' which he that runs may read and will find in it a manual of personal piety, and a well-spring of devout meditation. Similarly, in the very last months of his life, he has expounded in the volumes 'The Way of Life,' the teaching and parables of Jesus with the humble devotion of a disciple, and in the last weeks of his life his labours were still consecrated to a similar task in connection with the writings of St. Paul. In this chapel we think of him as a preacher, a preacher oftentimes of very rare power and inspiration, a prophet of the soul, dealing, with the wisdom of years and the energy of youthful faith, with the problems of life and death. It was not with him the case that only

Old experience doth attain

To something of prophetic strain, it was that the prophetic fire kindled in youth never died down, never was extinguished, but every now and then flamed up in ways that sometimes made one marvel—flamed up in the vindication of vital principles, in scorn of all paltering with truth, in condemnation of all corruption, in a fervent zeal for the seeking and saving of that which was being lost. To his students he set an example they could never forget of scrupulous and minute investigation of the subjects that fell to him to teach. They saw before them a man who went perpetually in the spirit of the ancient writer who said, "I grow old still learning, and always being taught"; and, as Principal, in his untiring devotion to duty he made a perpetual appeal for fidelity in those around him. In the intercourse of friendship how treasured are one's reminiscences—the open mind that was always helpful with judgment and advice, judgment full of insight and discrimination. And in Dr. Drummond there was a quality (somewhat rare among the learned)—he had no fondness for up-to-date controversy—never professed or assumed an interest in a subject on which he had not read or thought. He never was ready with an off-hand opinion on matters which he had not seriously considered. One might think that a soul so bent on a modest sincerity in the inward resorts of life was not a cheerful companion, a man of humour; but the soul of cheerfulness was always found in him.

After a tender reference to Dr. Drummond's aged wife and family the address ended with a devout aspiration that we, too, should follow in the footsteps of Christ, walking in spirit with our departed friend, the blessing of his long cherished companionship and friendship going with us in the years and days that still are ours.

The interment was at Wolvercote Cemetery, Dr. Jacks officiating. Among others present at the service were the Rev. Dr. P. H. Wicksteed, Visitor of the College; the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, President of Manchester College, representing the Trustees; the President of the Lancashire and Cheshire Widows' Fund, and the Secretary of the Lancashire and Cheshire Provincial Assembly, representing these two bodies, of both of which Dr. Drummond was the senior member; a number of Unitarian ministers, the Warden of Keble, Sir T. Erskine Holland, the Rev. Dr. Carlyle (rector of the City Church), Dr. Buchanan Gray, Dr. Vernon Bartlet, and Mr. Norman Smith (representing Mansfield College). Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter, formerly Principal of the College, was unavoidably prevented from attending; and Dr. Selbie, of Mansfield College, was also away from Oxford.

DR. M. J. SAVAGE.

MINOT JUDSON SAVAGE, widely known in America and in this country by his books and hymns, died suddenly in Boston, May 22. Born in Maine, 1841, he was educated at Bangor Seminary for the Congregational ministry, was missionary in California for three years, and successively held short pastorates in Massachusetts and Missouri. His orthodoxy, which at first was zealous, gave way as he studied evolutionary science; and a recoil especially from the doctrine of everlasting torment led to his fraternising with Unitarians. He accepted charge of the Third Unitarian Church, Chicago, and soon attained much celebrity as an eloquent and fearless exponent of "advanced thought." From 1874 to 1896 he was minister of Unity, Boston, and subsequently was for ten years co-pastor with Robert Collyer at the Church of the Messiah, New York. For many years his sermons were reported and widely circulated, bringing him much correspondence and controversy. Looked upon by many as dangerous and destructive, he undoubtedly did much to break down traditional views; but he also renewed and deepened religious faith in many who had lost hope of reconciling modernism and religion. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Harvard University. In February, 1906, his successor in New York, the Rev. J. H. Holmes, says, he "dropped in his tracks—a physical and mental wreck." Rest partially restored him, but he never resumed active work. He leaves a son in the Unitarian ministry, and a daughter, wife of the Rev. Minot Osgood Simons.

THE REV. CHARLES HARGROVE.

WE deeply regret to announce the death, after two days' illness, of the Rev. Charles Hargrove, M.A., D.Litt., which occurred at Ventnor, I.W., on Wednesday, June 19. In our issue last week a short report appeared of his greatly appreciated services at Newport on two Sundays recently; and he was looking forward to further preaching engagements in the near future on his return from his short holiday. He was in his 78th year. Educated 1859-62 at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, he pursued his theological studies in Rome and France during six years more, and was ordained priest at Avignon, 1869. He did not long remain in communion with the Romish Church, but became a University Lecturer in 1874 and in 1876 entered on the ministry of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds. After thirty-six years of distinguished service he became Minister Emeritus, 1912. In 1915 he was made D.Litt. by Leeds University. He held many important offices in our circle, being President of the National Conference at the time of his death. He was President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association 1910-11. He leaves three daughters, a son on service in France, with whom and their mother, who was with her husband in the Isle of Wight, sincere sympathy will be felt. We hope to present a fuller account of his career and personal characteristics next week.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WHERE IS THE RELIGIOUS CENTRE?

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I gladly answer for my part Dr. Mellor's question as to what I mean by God. Let me begin by referring to that remarkable Report of the Archbishops' Third Committee of Inquiry, to which you have called our attention, on 'The Evangelistic Work of the Church,' and especially to the plea there made (p. 14) for a fuller recognition of "the Person and work of the Holy Spirit." There, undoubtedly, to my mind, the true centre of our religious life is to be sought, though not in the separate sense of the Trinitarian formula. What we have to realise is that the one eternal Spirit of Holiness, of Truth and Righteousness and Love, God, the Holy Spirit, is to us finite beings, dependent spirits, our Father, in the sense in which Jesus used that term. He is the one only Source and Sustainer of our life, Giver of all light and blessedness and peace, an immediate presence, with us here and now, as in every generation or in the furthest heavens.

That is what I mean by God, and that conviction of ultimate truth is possible to us because in our deeper life "the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." We are to work out our own salvation, for it is God who worketh in us, "both to will and to work, for his good pleasure." "The Spirit beareth witness with our spirit, that we are children of God, and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified with him." Religion is the realising of that supreme fact, that God is with us, in our conscious, trustful, thankful "rest in the Lord," in the active obedience in which we learn to do our Father's will, and in the goodness and mercy which follow us all the days of our life, most mercifully in our sin and sorrow, with help for our every need.

We who are finite beings cannot, in the nature of things, comprehend the Infinite and Eternal, nor penetrate all the mystery even of our own being, still less of his. But we have received the gift of life not without some touch and apprehension of the things of the spirit, unseen and eternal. The hunger after righteousness and truth, holiness, and perfect love we recognise as of supreme significance, and we know they are not of ourselves. They claim our allegiance, and the more deeply we realise their meaning the more sure is our conviction that they are and can be only of God. In them he comes to us, calling us to the higher life, and in our answering loyalty to them, in absolute surrender, we give ourselves to God.

Speaking of "centralisation in Jesus Christ," as he interprets it, Dr. Mellor says that "such a man learns God through Christ." That he learns much of God through Christ, through the manifest spirit of his life, the inspiration of his leadership and the growing fellowship of his disciples, is undoubtedly true; and yet the more fundamental truth is that we learn Christ through God. It is God himself, our Father, the Spirit of all truth, the Quickener of every aspiration in the soul of man, who has given us Jesus and bears witness to him, that in the whole range of our human experience he is indeed the Chief of faithful souls, that in him is the true manhood, and in that same spirit we must render the service of our lives. The best expression of the vital truth for our religious life is not, I should say, in the phrase "centralisation in Christ," but rather, fellowship with Christ in the communion of the Holy Spirit, with the inspiration of his leadership, in the service of the Kingdom of God, in the doing of our Father's will.

May I make another reference? In John Hamilton Thom's 'Christ the Revealer,' in the Essay on 'The Doctrine of an Eternal Son,' we are reminded that "All Christianity is contained in this: 'Be ye children of your Father in heaven'.... Christ indeed is our pattern of filial life, but we conform to his life, we know it at all only when we drink at the same fountain of inspiration, and God moulds us as he moulded him" "The revelation when it is really made, is made to us, made to our souls, not made to Christ and by him told to us, but caught at last from God himself, though without the interpreting Son we could not have read as absolutely as now we do the mind of the Spirit" (Ed. 1898, p. 160).

There we may find the right guidance for a clear understanding of how God reveals himself in Christ. He reveals Christ to us by the witness of the Spirit (an immediate inward conviction of truth) that in him is the true manhood, and that manhood is of one who lives as seeing the Invisible, to whom this is vital truth, "The Eternal God is thy dwelling-place, and underneath are the Everlasting Arms"; whose constant prayer is, "Father, not my will, but thine, be done"; whose life is consecrated to the service of the Kingdom of God, the rule of goodness in the world, making for a true brotherhood among men, in a spirit of absolute loyalty, self-sacrifice and pure unselfish love; to whom God is the Giver of all good, an ever-present reality, eternal Righteousness, Holiness and perfect love, in a fellowship so intimate that "Father" is the most satisfying word to use, in the communion of prayer and the confession of faith. And as we realise what is implied in the life of that true man, as a son of God, the truth of God, that he is indeed our Father, is the more deeply felt and more clearly understood. The life in us, and in that other completer man, in the fellowship of faithful souls, unveils to us the nature of the God in whom we trust, in whom we live and move and have our being. So the Eternal reveals himself to us as our Father, as the Father whom Jesus loved and trusted, in whose will he and we together find our peace. In one act of revealing God makes clear to us the true spirit of sonship in Christ and the reality of his own Fatherhood, as the eternal, ever-present Spirit, the Source and Sustainer of all living souls; but that one act covers the whole process of enlightenment, through the progressive witness of the prophets of righteousness, in the actual life and ministry of Jesus, and the experience of those who have followed him in every generation down to our own time.

What Dr. Mellor says of the Christian Theist is true, as I understand the matter, only if no exclusive claim is made for the character of the revelation in Christ; what distinguishes Christianity from other forms of religion is the greater fulness of the revealing of the spirit of sonship in the manhood of Jesus, and the consequent clearer insight into the reality of the Fatherhood of God, and the direction of his will in the ordering of human brotherhood in the Kingdom of God.

There is more I should like to have said concerning the abiding personal appeal of Jesus, and the reference to him in the saying, "God, whom I worship, is like that." But I think my comment on these points will be clear from what I have already written. Others, also, whom we have known and loved and honoured make a like appeal, but there is only the one eternal, ever-present Spirit, the God and Father of us all.—Yours, &c.,

V. D. DAVIS.

Bournemouth, June 10, 1918.

THE LANCASHIRE AND CHESHIRE PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY.

THE time-honoured custom of an Annual Meeting of the Assembly was kept up again this year with no diminution of numbers or of interest, on Wednesday, June 12, at Manchester. A good congregation met in the morning at Cross Street Chapel, when the Devotional Service was conducted by the Supporter, the Rev. Dr. Mellor, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans, who took for his subject 'The Idea of God, and the War as a Winnowing Fan.'

The Business Meeting was held in the afternoon at the Memorial Hall, when the Rev. Principal Mellone took the chair. The obituary resolution was moved by the Chairman and seconded by Mr. G. H. Leigh, and all present stood in silence as a tribute to the memory of members who have passed away during the year, the number of these being larger than usual and including the names of the Revs. E. L. H. Thomas, Jeffrey Worthington, T. Lloyd Jones, T. J. Jenkins and Messrs. J. Chadwick, E. Harding, G. Milner and G. Woolley.

At the quaint observance of the Roll-Call, the voice of the Rev. H. E. Dowson was missed, for he was absent through ill-health, but the duty was competently performed by the Rev. N. Anderton. In the unavoidable absence of Mr. Dendy the Treasurer's Report was given by Mr. T. F. Robinson. Dr. Mellone in his Presidential Address referred to the disappointment which all must feel that the high hopes expressed in last year's resolution on the Russian Revolution had not been realised, but he held that the catastrophes of the present are the price that has to be paid for former misgovernment. Not the boasted "sword of the Kaiser," but the bureaucratic neglect of the army was the cause of Russia's military breakdown. In the accession of America to our side we might find a sure promise of a peace which may be worth all the suffering and losses we have borne. Passing on to speak words of frank criticism (which he held ought not to be burked) he said that our heaviest failure had been our want of leadership in the nation. But we have to thank God for the President of the United States, who had dared to speak the better mind of those who on the one hand cannot agree with "peace at any price," nor yet with the noisy mischief of self-constituted leaders who exert the power of the Press. President Wilson has championed the one possible means of saving the world from a recurrence of war, by means of the League of Nations.

The President afterwards moved a resolution welcoming the enfranchisement of women, which was seconded by Councillor Margaret Ashton, and passed. Miss Ashton pointed out that the male population benefited more by the new franchise measure than women. But a real gain had been secured. Formerly all legal power was in the hands of men. Now the married women are freed from the power of the men voters. New departments of our common life will now come within the interests of politics. Men's votes had secured property from the dangers of theft, but had largely left home life, health and higher interests unprotected. The younger women who were looking at the world with fresh minds would insist on bringing these wider considerations to bear, and it would be the duty of the older women in many matters to learn from the younger.

On the Education question a resolution, moved by the Rev. C. Peach and seconded by Mr. G. H. Leigh, was carried recording hearty appreciation of the policy embodied in the Education Bill before Parliament, assuring the Government of support in the proposed abolition of half-time for children under fourteen and the establishment of continuation schools for young people up to eighteen. The resolution also recorded the conviction that "there can be no complete and efficient organisation of publicly aided education until all sectarian tests have been abolished and full public control established."

In moving a resolution supporting the prohibition of the Drink Traffic as well as the manufacture of alcoholic beverages during the war and the period of demobilisation, Miss H. M. Johnson gave most interesting and striking details of the mishandling, by the Government, of the drink problem as it affects the supply of the nation's food, and dwelt upon the incensed feeling of Canadians and Americans at the unwonted temptations to which their soldiers were exposed when arriving in this country. Also, the Government are now getting less money in taxation from the drink while more is being manufactured. It is astounding that while in 1916 the Australian harvest rotted because means of transport could not be spared to bring it over, more transport than ever is used for the drink and the materials of its manufacture.

The evening meeting took the unusual form of a Conference, at which general discussion was invited upon one of our most urgent questions, viz., 'Our Churches and the Supply of Ministers.' The proceedings commenced with the reading of two papers. The first was contributed by the Rev. C. J. Street. He spoke of the special circumstances in which our churches find themselves under the strain of the war, through the absence of the younger men and women, and the unusual occupations of many of the ministers, some of whom had been diverted to work for which our ministers were not specially trained or fitted and in which, therefore, there was some amount of waste. He directed attention to the College preparation provided for ministers, and wished that it might be clearly understood what this could and what it could not do for them. It was evident that much of the time at College was wasted. Traditions are good, but not traditions that have lost their use. We needed to make good use of the fresh elements constantly arriving from outside. Ministers from other denominations sometimes lacked balance, and then departed from us again; but often they had directness of speech and fervour which were not always produced among ourselves. Professor Kirsopp Lake had remarked that not metaphysical but ethical teaching was the need of the times, and the preacher has to do with numbers who have come to doubt whether the Christian system is efficacious for the soul's needs. Passing to practical recommendations the speaker thought that a system of curacy for every entrant on the ministry, of at least twelve months, was desirable. One of the colleges should be kept open during the war, preferably the Home Missionary College, because it was in the midst of a large number of churches, and courses could be given to layworkers who would be trained to conduct services. Mr. Street concluded by urging upon parents and ministers and others to watch for signs of aptitude in our young people for ministerial life and usefulness.

Mr. T. Fletcher Robinson drew attention to the Report issued a little time ago by a National Conference Committee, dealing with the decline in attendance at public worship. He believed there was no one cause. The overwhelming interest in the material condition of life was one cause. Another was the fact that a great deal of the organised work of philanthropy which was once the special care of the churches was now of necessity done largely outside. Again, our own community had been excluded from sharing in the fellowship of Nonconformist and other bodies. Then there is the dispersion of effort among active Associations, two newspapers, two colleges, two theological "tendencies." Again, the more leisured and educated classes, who were able to give a lead in social life and thought, were less conspicuous in our movement than formerly. He quoted an interesting suggestion of Dr. Crothers that in our colleges disciplinary studies should be confined to the undergraduate course, while the divinity school work should be rather of a vocational character.

In the discussion which followed Mr. T. E. Taylor asserted that the rank and file soldier is at heart a Unitarian, and ministers might do good work by visiting the hospitals, where they would find many minds prepared to appreciate their message. The Rev. C. E. Mercer thought that the suggested "curacy" ought to be before the college course. Dr. Mellor referred in vigorous terms to the promise of the Free Catholic movement, and its bearing upon Christian unity. The Rev. J. M. Mills deplored that our churches do not produce their own ministry. The Rev. T. Bushrod spoke of the self-denial which had built up our cause. Mr. Lawrence Hall suggested that before sending boys who were intended for the ministry to Willaston, he would like to see ministers who had passed through the school. He thought that what is lacking in our congregations is the true devotional spirit.

The preacher for next year is the Rev. Dr. Mellor, and the Supporter the Rev. J. Morley Mills.

Y.M.C.A. WORK IN FRANCE.

In response to the Rev. W. H. Drummond's appeal in connection with his work in the Y.M.C.A. in last week's INQUIRER, the following donations have been received:—

	£	s.	d.
Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Green ..	1	0	0
Mr. T. H. Russell ..	1	1	0
Mrs. Peyton (for books) ..	1	1	0
Mr. Robert Blake ..	25	0	0
Miss E. S. Cooke ..	1	0	0
Miss L. Pickles ..	1	0	0
Mrs. Batty ..	3	3	0
Mr. R. P. Jones (for piano) ..	40	0	0
Mrs. Harris ..	2	2	0
Mr. T. Parkinson ..	1	1	0
Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Isaacs ..	1	1	0
Mr. R. R. Meade-King (for books) ..	3	0	0
Mr. John Dendy ..	5	0	0
"M. F. G.," Bath ..	5	0	0
	£90	9	0

Further gifts will be gratefully received by Mrs. W. H. Drummond, 23 Cannon Place, London, N.W.3, and acknowledged in these columns.

A CORRESPONDENT says: The passing away of the venerated Dr. James Drummond recalls an interesting testimony to the virility of his Christian teaching made by the Rev. Dr. Horton at a meeting held in Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, in June, 1912. Referring in eulogistic terms to Dr. Drummond's Hibbert Lectures of 1894, published under the title of 'Via, Veritas, Vita,' Dr. Horton said that this work had been sent to him to review, and the reading of it gave him a larger outlook; for as he read a veil dropped from his eyes. It helped him to "overcome the prejudice against Unitarianism in which he had been reared from childhood."

The Directors regret to announce that the very large increases in the cost of paper and printing make it necessary to raise the price of THE INQUIRER to 2d. weekly, from and including our issue of JULY 6.

Subscribers would greatly help our depleted and consequently over-burdened office staff if they would kindly forward, without individual application, the additional subscription required for the rest of the year 1918, viz., 1s. 1d.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Belfast.—We are glad to hear that Dr. Carpenter's visit here and to local churches has been greatly appreciated. A correspondent writes: "His splendid intellectual gifts, combined with such unmistakable humility of spirit and self-effacement, are qualities of which any religious community might well be proud.... Many members of other bodies here enjoyed the pleasure of hearing him—at his General Synod sermon on Monday several leading Presbyterian divines were present, and at least one Episcopalian free lance; others have been present at the various meetings and have volunteered striking testimonies to his high gifts. The gatherings have possessed an interest and will provide an interest greater than has been the case for many years."

Bradford: Broadway Avenue.—The ordinary work of the Sunday school was suspended the other Sunday and a special service was conducted by the minister. About one hundred scholars and teachers were present. The Bible lesson was read by a scholar, recitations were given by others, and two solos were sung by Master Holroyd (from Chapel Lane Chapel choir). Miss Christine Shanks gave a brief address, which was much appreciated, and, later in the service, presented to the successful scholars book prizes from the school in recognition of the passes secured by them in the recent examinations held under the auspices of the Yorkshire Sunday School Union. In the Sunday school a primary department has been organised and is prospering.

Bradford: Chapel Lane.—The Rev. A. Cobden Smith of Leeds has received and accepted a cordial and unanimous invitation to the ministry of Chapel Lane Chapel.

Brixton.—A well-attended social gathering of the members and friends of the Unitarian Church, Effra Road, Brixton, was held on Tuesday evening, June 18, when a very cordial welcome was accorded to the Rev. Thomas Munn on his settlement as minister. Following some excellent music, Mr. Arthur Keating took the chair and spoke of the pleasure the congregation had in having Mr. Munn settled among them after a long period of waiting. The Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, Dr. S. H. Mellone, the Rev. W. H. Stephenson, and Mrs. Sydney Martineau voiced the good wishes of various societies and interests. The Rev. Thomas Munn, in responding, referred to his happy ministry at Grey Abbey and Padiham, and his desire to prove an inspiration and a help to the people of Brixton in building up a strong and united church devoted to good works, and ready to share with others a religion whose essential principles included freedom of thought, purity of heart, and love and reverence of God and man.

Gloucester.—Widespread regret will be caused by the news of the death of Mrs. Rudolf Davis, the wife of the minister of Barton Street Chapel, whose missionary work has brought the Western churches into cordial friendship with one another and with him. Mrs. Davis, who had been long ill, passed away on Sunday, leaving a daughter for whom and for her father deep sympathy will be felt.

Chowbent.—Hundreds of former scholars, now heads of families, from far and near, gathered as usual in the Unitarian Chapel for the Anniversary Services in connection with the Sunday school on June 16. Special references were made at each service to the many boys who are away (about 140) and prayers were offered for their welfare in the morning, when the minister, the Rev. J. J. Wright, conducted the service, and Mr. Sam Crook gave a fitting address to the scholars. The Rev. H. Barnes preached in the afternoon and evening. The collection, which amounted to over £86, showed a good increase on last year.

Hinckley.—On Sunday, May 5, the Sunday School Anniversary Services were conducted at the Great Meeting Church by Lieut.-Col. C. T. Seymour Bullock, who preached inspiring sermons to very large and appreciative congregations. Special music was rendered by about 250 scholars and the choir.

Jamaica.—Mr. E. Ethelred Brown asks that an error in THE INQUIRER report of some months ago may be corrected. The report gave the impression that the British and Foreign Unitarian Association had rendered financial assistance to the Unitarian movement at Kingston, Jamaica, whereas it was in the early days of the movement at Montego Bay that assistance was given. Although repeated appeals have been made to the Committee of the Association, the condition and prospects of Unitarian missionary work at Kingston did not appear to justify making a grant. The American Unitarian Association has for some time past generously supported Mr. E. Ethelred Brown; but after carefully reviewing the whole position, the Directors recently decided to discontinue the grant on the ground that the results did not justify the expenditure.

Leicester: Narborough Road.—Mr. Hugh V. Salmon of Manchester College, Oxford, has accepted the unanimous invitation of the congregation at Narborough Road to become minister of the church, and will take up his duties in August. The general activities have been well maintained and the members of the congregation are looking forward to a period of great usefulness in the life of the church. Mr. Owen Greening, a contemporary of John Jacob Holyoake, will conduct the Sunday school anniversary services on June 30.

London: Deptford.—The Annual Meeting of the General Baptist Church will be held on June 29 at 6.30, preceded by a Sale of Work at 4 P.M. Gifts in money or kind will be gratefully received by Mr. E. A. Carlier, 20 Wickham Road, Brockley, S.E.4.

London: Ilford. Sunday school anniversary services were held at the Unitarian Church on June 16, the Rev. A. H. Biggs preaching in the morning, and Miss Burt, of Leytonstone, in the afternoon, when a service of song was rendered by the entire school. Special anthems sung by the children, and solos by Joan Beecroft and Eric Jeffery, were a feature of the morning service.

London Lay Preachers' Union.—The Annual Meeting of the Union which had been deferred since December was held a fortnight ago in the garden of Haydn House, Leytonstone. There was an attendance of about 25. The proceedings began with a service in the large room, conducted by Miss Maud B. Burt. Tea was served under the trees in the garden, where the subsequent business meeting and conference were held. Mr. J. W. Peterken was re-elected President and Mr. S. D. Greenfield (R.A.M.C.), now on service in France, Secretary, Mr. John Kinsman kindly undertaking to carry on the secretarial duties until Mr. Greenfield returns. The Committee was re-elected as follows: Miss Francis, Mr. Carlier, Mr. E. R. Fyson, Mr. John Kinsman. The business having been concluded Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P. (President of the National Union of Lay Preachers), addressed the gathering on 'Why we are Lay Preachers,' urging that they should live the religion they recommended to others and that they should be careful not to say anything in the pulpit which was not supported by their own sincere belief. An interesting discussion followed. Among those who took part were the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson, Mr. Fred Maddison, Mr. E. R. Fyson, Mr. John Kinsman, and Mr. W. Lee, B.A.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—The Women's League held a special meeting on June 17 in the Church of the Divine Unity, when about eighty friends were present. It was opened with a short devotional service conducted by Dr. Lillie Johnson, President of the branch. Mrs. Alfred Hall read an appropriate lesson and Miss K. Johnson sang a solo. Mrs. Blake Odgers, President of the National League, delivered an address, in the course of which she gave a survey of the origin and history of the League in the United States and Great Britain. She showed how wide and useful is the scope of its work, and emphasised the value, both to the church and the women themselves, of organising and affiliating in these days of change and stress.

Nottingham.—Much sympathy is felt by members of the High Pavement Chapel with Mrs. Addis, whose son, Lieut. Henry Addis (Royal Dublin Fusiliers), has been reported killed in France. He had done exceedingly good work, and had been recommended for the Military Cross.—The Chronicle records the presentation by Mrs. Hamilton of a Pulpit Bible, a hymn book, and prayer book, beautifully bound, to the chapel in memory of the late Mr. W. R. Hamilton. Mrs. Hamilton has also presented a framed portrait of Mr. Hamilton.—Mr. E. S. Dalley, a brother of Mr. Fred W. Dalley, who is in the R.A.M.C., has been awarded the Military Medal for his heroic performance of duty at Messines, when he and his officer bandaged a great number of cases under shell fire. Mr. Dalley was a member of the High Pavement Chapel when he lived in Nottingham.

Nottingham: Christ Church.—Mr. Walter M. Long, of Manchester College, Oxford, whose work has been warmly appreciated at Stepney, begins his new duties as minister of Christ Church early in July.

Parkstone.—The Annual Flower Service was held at Emerson Hall on Sunday evening, June 16. The rostrum was decorated with a profusion of flowers, contributed by the congregation, which were afterwards distributed to the hospitals in the neighbourhood. Mr. S. Clement Ryley gave the address, and there was an unusually large attendance.

Poole.—On Sunday, June 16, the Rev. F. G. Kent, Unitarian minister at Grafton, Mass., who is engaged in Y.M.C.A. work in the American camps in this country, preached at the Unitarian Church. His discourse was a stirring appeal for the strengthening of the ties of race, language, and love of liberty and justice between the two great nations, England and America. There was a good attendance at the Annual Flower Service, when the Rev. G. B. Stallworthy preached, and the lesson was read by Pte. W. E. Wilkinson, Grenadier Guards.

Taunton.—Private Woods (East Surrey Regiment), the only surviving brother of the Rev. G. S. Woods, minister of Mary Street Chapel and prospective Labour candidate for the Taunton Division, has been killed in action.

Wellington, N.Z.—The Calendar gives an extract from a letter by one of our young soldiers. Speaking of religious statistics he writes: "From time to time I have noticed some trifling religious squabbles in the papers such as, for instance, 'the fewness of Unitarians who have enlisted.' I wonder who started such a petty controversy. If they were to make a thorough investigation of the beliefs of the soldiers, they would be surprised how many have Unitarian beliefs. The men have not left N.Z. and travelled through some of the chief cities of England, and then roughed it in France, without broadening their views of things in general. Many men no longer believe in the dogmas and creeds of the orthodox churches. They think for themselves; they have a broader outlook on religious things. Some of them, probably, do not know what Unitarianism means, but their beliefs coincide with those of Unitarianism.... I believe that one outcome of this war will be that Unitarianism will spread and flourish more than ever."

* THE INQUIRER welcomes items of news likely to be of special interest to its readers, and is ready to pay for such news when accepted by the Editor, the scale depending upon its importance and suitability in form and matter for insertion. All contributions should be addressed to the Editor, INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and should be received not later than the first post on Wednesday morning in each week.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

176TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	20,671	12	11
Mr. John Dendy (15th)	5	0	0
West Grove Women's League,
Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox (35th)	0	8	0
Mr. F. Maddison (38th)	0	10	0
Mrs. Harris (9th)	3	3	0
Miss H. M. Hutton (6th)	1	0	0
Miss E. S. Hollins (10th)	2	2	0
Mr. J. Arthur Kenrick (12th)	10	0	0
C. H. R. and Hy. R. (10th)	1	0	0
	£20,694	15	11

Parcels have been received from: Miss Dora Roscoe; Miss E. W. Browne; The Great Meeting, Leicester, per Mrs. Lilley; Miss Colfox.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

OUR ROLL OF HONOUR.

FURTHER additions to the Roll of Honour have been sent to us by the Rev. H. Dawtrey of Aberdeen, Mrs. Ellis of Potter's Bar, and Mr. E. Dawson of Bury, Lancs. Copies of the Roll of Honour can still be supplied, price 2d. each prepaid.

BIRTHS.

GOLLAND.—On June 17, at Wembley Hill, to the Rev. and Mrs. A. Golland, a son.

RENOLD.—To Charles and Margaret Renold, at Catterick Hall, Didsbury, Manchester, May 6, a son.

HUNTER.—To Eric and Madeleine Hunter, at Charlton House, Prestwich, Manchester, June 15, a daughter.

MARRIAGE.

JEPSON—BRACE.—June 14, at Ullet Road Church, by the Rev. Joseph Wood, Captain Rowland Walter Jepson, R.A.F. (late Cheshire Regiment), only son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Jepson, of Shrewsbury, to Margaret, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George R. Brace, of Queen's Drive, Liverpool, and grand-daughter of the late Charles Beard.

DEATHS.

COLFOX.—Killed in action, on the 14th June, 2nd Lieut. Thomas David Colfox, R.F.A., dearly loved younger son of Lieut.-Col. and Mrs. Colfox, aged 19.

DAVIS.—On June 16, at 18 Alexandra Road, Gloucester, Jessie Caroline, wife of Rev. Rudolf Davis, and elder daughter of the late William Lucas.

HARGROVE.—On the 19th inst., while staying at Ventnor, Isle of Wight, after two days illness, the Rev Charles Hargrove, M.A., Litt.D., of 50 Glenlock Road, Hampstead, Minister Emeritus of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, in his 78th year.

WEBB.—On June 17, at a nursing home, Lytham, Elizabeth Emma, widow of Richard Webb, late of Moss Lane East, Manchester, in her 89th year. Interred at Blackley Unitarian Chapel on the 20th inst.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, June 23.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
Bell Street, Edgware Road, 6.30. Rev. A. GOLLAND, M.A.
Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11, Mr. A. A. TAYLER; 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. THOS. MUNN.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
Dingley Place Mission, St. Lukes, City Road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. F. G. FINCHAM.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, Theistic Church, 11, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIES, B.A.
Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DR. CARPENTER.
Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
Ilford, High Road, 11, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.; 6.30, Rev. F. H. JONES.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND; 6.30, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.
Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11, Rev. J. A. PEARSON; 6.30, Mr. ION PRITCHARD. (Anniversary Services.)
Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30.
Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL.
Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
Rhyl Street, Kentish Town, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. ROSE.
South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 6.30, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. A. S. STEPHEN NOEL; 6.30, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH.
University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.
Woolwich, Co-operative Hall, Parson's Hill, 11, Mr. J. HARRY SMITH; 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.
BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.
BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
BIRMINGHAM, Moseley Unitarian Christian Church, Dennis Road Schools, 6.30, Miss MARGERY FRY, M.A.
BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. D. PRIESTLEY EVANS.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.
BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Room, Downing Street, 11.30.
CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRED COTTIER.
CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.
CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. JOHN MOORE.
DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.
DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DONALD B. FRASER.
GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.
HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut.-Col. C. S. BULLOCK.
LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. R. F. RATTRAY.
LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT, M.A. (Sunday School Anniversary).
LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mrs. F. SPENCER YATES; 6.30, Dr. G. JESSELL, M.A.
LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. WILSON.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN.
MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. McLACHLAN, M.A., B.D.
MANCHESTER, Moss Side, Brooks's Bar, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.
MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. R. SCOTT.
NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.
NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., B.D.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. S. H. MELLONE.
PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.
TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 3.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. T. PAGESMITH.
WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

WINNEPEG, CANADA.

All Souls' Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

June

23. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

30. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

July

7. Rev. LAWRENCE P. JACKS, M.A., D.D., of Manchester College, Oxford.

14. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.

Subject of Sermon, June 23: "A Defence of Piety."ESSEX CHURCH,

The Mall, Notting Hill Gate.

SUNDAY SERVICES, 11 and 6.30.

Preacher: Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

SUBJECTS, JUNE 23 (HOSPITAL SUNDAY).

Mg. A Text from Lowell. "The Healing Power of Beneficence."

Evg. "Grades of Perfection."

Schools.WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation. Lacrosse,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.CHANNING HOUSE SCHOOL,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N.6.

SCIENCE MISTRESS, Resident, WANTED
in SEPTEMBER for Physics and Mathematics.
Salary according to qualifications. Unitarian preferred. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50 CANNON STREET, E.C.4.

(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—DR. S. WHITE, LL.D.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, L. T. BURNETT, F.S.I.
F.S.I. H. G. RUSSELL, F.S.I.
Miss CECIL GRADWELL. H. J. VEZEY.A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly, and they receive 4 per cent. interest.Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges
low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

3s. net, postage 3d.

OUT OF THE HEART OF
THE STORM.Twelve Sermons preached at Rosslyn Hill Chapel
Hampstead, and Manchester College, Oxford.

BY

Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

The sermons are written by one who believes with President Wilson that "right is more precious than peace," and that no personal sorrow or loss should discourage us and turn us from our firm resolve to overthrow the Prussian autocracy. They are written too in the growing confidence that faith in God and in the supremacy of Love has become more and not less possible and real through the conflict and agony of recent times.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2.

Just Published.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

"The Soul of the Nation"

AND OTHER ESSAYS ON

RELIGION, PATRIOTISM, AND
NATIONAL DUTY.

By WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND,

Editor of The Inquirer.Any profits from the sale of this book will be given to the Belgian Hospital Fund.

LONDON: AT THE

LINDSEY PRESS, 3 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2

UNITARIAN AND FREE CHRISTIAN PEACE FELLOWSHIP.BASIS: "That War and preparation for War are irreconcilable with the spirit and teaching of Jesus Christ."ANNUAL MEETINGAt COLLEGE CHAPEL, STEPNEY GREEN, LONDON, E.1.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 29, 1918.

Rev. REGINALD W. SORENSON in the Chair.

4.30 P.M. Tea and Conversation, to be followed by Presentation of Report and Election of Committee and Officers.

5.30 P.M. Addresses by Mrs. PHILIP SNOWDEN,

Rev. H. DUNNICO (Secretary of the Peace Society), and the SECRETARY.

Friends and Supporters cordially invited.

Hon. Sec.:

WALTER M. LONG, 149 Fort Road, Bermondsey, S.E.1.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION,

22 Northumberland Avenue, London.

Founded by the late Mr. G. R. Jesse in 1875.

The Society offers to send a LECTURER free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c.Situations, Vacant and Wanted.*SUPERIOR MAID, with some knowledge of Nursing, wanted, to attend to elderly Lady.
—Miss TAYLOR, The Glen, Heaton, Bolton.A LADY (not young) would give her SER-VICES as Companion, Secretary, or Useful Help in return for comfortable home.—
RITA, care INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings,
London, E.C.MINISTER and WIFE will take HOLIDAY
DUTIES, with care of children if desired.
—Write A. B., care of INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.WANTED, LADY-HELP who will not object to some cooking. Experienced maids kept.—Mrs. FELIX HAMEL, Bole Hall,
Tamworth.WANTED, Situation as HEAD WORKING GARDENER, or good single handed.
Near Liverpool preferred.—GARDENER, 16 Bowling Green, Castletown, Isle of Man.Board and Residence, &c.*THE HEUGH, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.—
Board-residence. Meat ration supplemented by vegetarian dishes and country produce. Enquiries, which must be accompanied by stamped envelope, from Miss SMITH.Miscellaneous.*OFFICE TO LET, 15 ft. square, with large window for display. Additional accommodation available if needed.—Apply FRANCIS & Co., INQUIRER, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.IRISH LINEN DAMASK TABLECLOTHS, beautiful floral designs, fine quality, slightly imperfect, size 2 by 2 yds., 11s. 6d., postage 6d.
Write for this month's free Bargain List.—
HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.ARTIFICIAL TEETH (OLD) BOUGHT.—
Up to 7s. per tooth pinned on Vulcanite;
12s. on Silver; 15s. on Gold; 2l. on Platinum.
Best prices paid for old Gold and Silver
JEWELLERY. Any condition (broken or otherwise). Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, parcel returned post free.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

S. CANN & CO., 69A, Market Street,
MANCHESTER. Established 1850.FALSE TEETH BOUGHT. Cash or offer by return. Before selling make sure of their value by writing for FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any artificial teeth.—E. LEWIS, 29 London Street, Southport,
Lancs. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER.ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old), any condition.
We do not advertise misleading offers.
We give the highest possible value, and quote for each set individually. Buyers of surplus or disused Jewellery, old Watches, old Gold and Silver, &c., now in great demand. Offers made for parcels by return of post; if offers not accepted, goods returned at once post free.
Platinum Scrap £16 per ounce given.—I. RAY-
BURN & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester.
Please mention INQUIRER when sending.PEARL*ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.1.

Annual Income exceeds .. £4,500,000

Claims Paid exceed .. £21,500,000

The Inquirer.SUBSCRIPTION TERMS
TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.PER QUARTER, 2s. 6d.; PER HALF-YEAR, 4s. 6d.
PER YEAR, 8s. 8d.

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.ADVERTISEMENT RATES.PER PAGE, £6; HALF PAGE, £3; PER COLUMN, £2; INCH IN COLUMN, 3s. 6d.PREPAID RATES.All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.Calendar Notices, 10s. for entire year, for two lines extra lines 4d. each.Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word.
Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s.
Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d.
Three insertions for the price of two.Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS Athenæum Press,
11 & 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and
Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company,
Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.,
Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate,—
Saturday, June 22, 1918.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3965.
NEW SERIES, No. 1068.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1918.

[THREE HALFPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	205
APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION	206
THE LATE DR. DRUMMOND	206
THE REV. CHARLES HARGROVE, D.LITT.	207
MEMORIAL NOTICE:—
Lieut. T. D. Colfox	208

DR. CARPENTER'S VISIT TO THE NORTH OF IRELAND	208
MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD	208
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The League of Nations	209
Dent's 'Medical Dictionary'	209
A Biography of Dr. Hunter	210
The late Dr. Drummond	210

OUR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS	210
SOUTHERN PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY	210
Y.M.C.A. WORK IN FRANCE	210
BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	210
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	210

The Directors regret to announce that the very large increases in the cost of paper and printing make it necessary to raise the price of THE INQUIRER to 2d. weekly, from and including our issue of JULY 6.

Subscribers would greatly help our depleted and consequently over-burdened office staff if they would kindly forward, without individual application, the additional subscription required for the rest of the year 1918, viz., 1s. 1d.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 13 Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday morning for publication the same week.

NORTHERN readers may note that this morning (Saturday), at 11 o'clock, a service will be held at Mill Hill, Leeds, to perform the last rites in connection with the ashes of the late Dr. Hargrove. They are to be deposited in a cinerary urn under the communion table of the chapel which during so many years was the scene of his devoted labours, and was very dear to him. The Rev. C. J. Street will conduct the service.

* * *

AN excellent portrait of Dr. Hargrove was recently finished and exhibited at Essex Hall, and this seems an appropriate moment to call attention to the opportunity it presents both to friends who cherish his memory and to friends of our Belgian Fund, on behalf of which the artist, Miss Minna Tayler (New Court, Carey Street, W.C.), generously volunteered the work. The portrait, which is life size, represents the late President of the Conference in his robes as Doctor of Literature of Leeds University, and is altogether an attractive picture. It may be seen by appointment.

* * *

VISCOUNT GREY has rendered great service once more to the cause of humanity at large by the publication of his pamphlet on 'The League of Nations.' "Learn or perish," says Lord Grey. "All must learn the lesson of this war. The United States and the Allies cannot save the world from militarism unless Germany learns the lesson thoroughly and completely; and they will not save the world, or even themselves, by complete victory over Germany until they too have learnt and can apply the lesson that militarism has become the deadly enemy of mankind." Those who are in any way able to join in educating public opinion on the subject should at once master the arguments of this most timely publication—it is only fifteen pages—and discuss them with their neighbours.

* * *

THAT Viscount Grey is by no means a solitary or eccentric idealist is rendered clear by the debate which took place in the House of Lords on Wednesday. Practically every speaker accepted the proposal as a wise one, and indeed an indispensable one, if civilisation is not to go under. The question is, can it be realised, and if so how? The Archbishop of York said he had found the deepest possible interest in the subject in America, and he believed the majority of people in that country would feel that its entry into the war was a total failure if the League were not set up at the close. The Bishop of Oxford testified to a "profound change in the attitude of men towards the war" in the last two years.

* * *

LORD CURZON'S speech, on behalf of the Government, was naturally, and, we must admit, properly cautious. He pointed out the difficulties that beset progress in the desired direction, the gravest probably being the "unrepentant" attitude of Germany. He agreed that unless that country were included the evils we deplore would be perpetuated; but he saw little evidence that this inclusion would be possible for a long time. Too true. We note that Herr von Kühlmann, the German Foreign Secretary, unhappily revised his first speech made this week to the Reichstag—it was bad enough as it stood, but became worse in the modified form which was adopted, apparently, to please the extreme militarists. However, Lord Curzon was far from opposing the idea, and an amendment, proposed by Lord Bryce, was agreed to by the whole House, as follows: "That this House approves the principle of a League of Nations and commends to His Majesty's Government a study of the conditions required for its realisation," and this expresses, according to Lord Curzon, "the Government's intention and action."

* * *

AFTER serving nine years as Missionary for the Southern Provincial Assembly, the Rev. W. H. Drummond retires in order to devote himself wholly to war-work in France. Those who know how earnestly he has worked on behalf of the many small and isolated congregations in the Province will not wish that the occasion should pass in silence. Feeling irresistibly impelled to do his utmost in the new work which has opened up so fruitfully before him he placed himself in the hands of the Committee of the Assembly, though fully desirous of resuming his home duties hereafter if that should seem a practicable plan. The Committee, in the extreme uncertainties of the present time, have thought it best to terminate the engagement, though with sincere regret. Their regret will be deeply shared by the many friends to whom the Missionary's help and counsel have been valuable during these years.

* * *

THE resignation of another office held by Mr. Drummond is involved in his new venture, viz., that of Acting Secretary to the Sustentation Fund, which he undertook voluntarily on the departure of Capt. Harold Pearson (now a prisoner of war) for service in France. The zeal with which our friend discharged the multifarious and often delicate duties of this post has been cordially recognised by the Managers of the Fund. As it would be a matter of some difficulty just now to find a successor in the ordinary way the Treasurer, Mr. Ronald P. Jones, will, we understand, "double the parts" and serve as Secretary pro tem,

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.

WE are all agreed that, among the reconstructions necessary at this time, that of religion is as necessary as any. Its formulated ideas and its organisation are in a too large degree obsolete, and unless a speedy change is made things will go from bad to worse. Happily there are indications that a reformation is coming. The very fact that dissatisfaction is felt, not merely by the man in the street who sees nothing particularly attractive in the churches as they are, but by the regular frequenters of churches themselves, is a sign of promise. All religious assemblies to day bear witness on the one hand to a sense of inadequacy, if not of downright failure, and on the other to an urgent impulse to wipe away the reproach and "win the world for Christ."

Many things are needed if this is to be done—among others there is needed a more practical spirit among those who support and manage the churches and their institutions. In many cases far less attention is given to these than there would be to running a club, to say nothing of a business. To inquire why this happens is not our present purpose; but it requires no great insight to perceive that, unless religious people take in hand the work of their organisations more seriously than they have often done, "the world" is never likely to be "won" to their side.

But possibly, and even probably, the notion of the average layman is that really the ministers must see to these things. Ordinary people, it may be said, have quite enough to do already, what with getting their living, looking after their family, and perhaps attending to various semi-public duties connected with charities, lodges, benefit societies, political and civic work, and the like. A certain modesty, too, by no means all assumed, holds back some men from taking an active share in church affairs, especially such as are on the distinctly spiritual side. Let the minister act here as he thinks best; he is appointed for the purpose, and can naturally say and do things which others would find shy and awkward. Well, allowing all that is legitimate, or even a little beyond, to such considerations, at least the business side of church and school life ought not to be thrown on to the minister. He may often be able to assist considerably in this, but also he may not; in any case it is not for this chiefly that he is appointed minister, but for something very different.

If people are in earnest about national and social reconstruction they must recognise the fact that without a development of new moral and spiritual energy in the community little real advance will be made. Already there are excellent laws on the statute books, if only there were sufficient public spirit to see them properly applied; and certainly the Ten Commandments have been known a long while without securing reverence, chastity, honesty, and truthfulness, throughout the lands where they have been taught. What is needed is to generate a right spirit in the hearts of men, the spirit that will do the right; and that is pre-eminently the minister's task. It is so immeasurably important a task for the minister—though not for him alone—that we cannot wonder when at once, on discussing the prospects of religion in the land, people turn to the subject of the ministry. By no means all depends on ministers, yet a great deal does depend on them. Hence the urgency of the questions discussed in our conferences, such as last week's meeting of the Provincial Assembly, concerning ministerial supply and equipment. Our own columns have borne ample witness to the existence of a widespread anxiety on these points, and we trust the outcome of present debates will be a better use of educational resources and a greater wisdom and elasticity in college training. The institution of curacies, as suggested by the Rev. C. J. Street in the Assembly's meeting, has actually a long proved value; and the proposal to find suitable work for the intending student in connection with some large church, so that his natural gifts and temper may be duly estimated before he is accepted at College, appears very sensible.

Leaving these important matters, however, to be dealt with at another time, one thought arises with fresh vividness at the present moment, when we are all thinking of the gaps in our ranks made by the passing away of honoured leaders. There is a factor in the problem of the ministry—how it shall be maintained and rendered vitally effective in the community—which cannot be neglected without the certainty of the worst failure. Let us make the best arrangements we can for the education of the young men; but there is a prior consideration, and no scheme of studies and discipline, however well devised, can meet it. Preachers and poets are alike in this—they must be "born" for their office. We know, indeed, that so great an authority as Tennyson declared the old maxim should read Poeta nascitur et fit, not non fit; and our own people are the last in the world to undervalue the making efficient of the ministerial novice. But unless he is born, we may say twice-born—first with the indispensable talents and secondly in the quickening of the spirit—all our wisest schemes must come to nothing.

There is a force, indefinable but undeniable, which flows from one personality to another. It heightens the inner vitality, kindles passion, purifies the desires, and, in a word, inspires. In this impact of one living soul upon another is the true Apostolic Succession. Protest as we do and must against all that would externalise and limit by artificial distinctions this flow of the Holy Spirit through the generations, we shall be miserably doomed to disappointment if we do not see that here is the one hope of a truly effectual ministry. Men may grow clever in different ways, but there is only one consecration. Difficult as it is to write of such things it is still more difficult to speak of them, and probably he who is most surely fitted to be the channel of this elective grace is least conscious of his sacred gift. The early biography of great preachers not seldom reveals the fact that the young prophet-to-be was born into his real life under the touch of one who was of quite lowly rank, as men measure these things, content to be obscure so long as he might go on in his humble way, faithful to his own high calling. And so there comes a day, and no one can say when it will come, when the young soul is ready for the life touch; the right word is said, the right call given, the right resolve made, and once more in the experience of this strange world the Lord and Giver of life works his own miracle. Let all those who ever felt a master's touch in their youth ponder on these things. For masters pass, but the work remains to do.

THE LATE DR. DRUMMOND.

MEMORIAL SERVICE AT ROSSLYN HILL CHAPEL.

A MEMORIAL SERVICE for the late Dr. Drummond was held at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, on Sunday morning, conducted by Dr. Carpenter, who delivered the address. Taking for his text the words "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee" and "Where the spirit of the Lord is there is liberty," he dwelt on the central fact of God's peace to which the prophet referred, and which is the possession of those who have entered into communion with the Majesty that inhabiteth eternity. Reason must, indeed, fail in picturing that realm of light, above all change and vicissitudes, from which the world is surveyed in the aspect of eternity, but imagination girded itself up for the great adventure, and gave us a vision of it as the dwelling place of truth and beauty, justice, purity, and love, where all the possibilities of creative wisdom are known, where all contradictions are reconciled, and evil is not only conquered and cast out, but transmuted into good.

The vision of this supreme peace was reached in many ways; the utterances of the prophet, the insight of the seer, the music of the poet, all proclaimed it; but many of us could only respond to the challenge to climb the heights in search of it with trembling and uncertain steps. Sometimes the customs of the world and its conventions stifled the native energies of the soul, indifference quenched its ardour, and indolence or fear sapped its strength. No one could study the types of saintliness which the Roman Church had produced and deny to them the frequent attainment of God's peace, and sometimes it seemed to be so great a grace that all else might be willingly abandoned for it. The whole activity of the mind might be offered on the altar of sacrifice, the energies of reason withdrawn from the outer world, the intellect surrendered at the bidding of the priest. This was a tremendous price to pay, and some who had paid it had found at last that the gain was, after all, uncertain, and the cost too dear. All honour, then, to those who, like Dr. Charles Hargrove, one of the two venerated men who had now passed into God's peace, did not shrink from casting aside the bonds laid upon them by their superiors, and who had made their way out to light and liberty. Those who felt most deeply the splendour of the lofty Catholic conception of the holiness of the Church, and the dignity of its great devotion, would best appreciate the integrity of mind and purpose which led the Dominican friar to put off his monk's habit and begin afresh as a minister of religion in a small community possessed only of one unique spiritual treasure, the priceless jewel of freedom. No one grasped more clearly the value of freedom or faced its difficulties more patiently, and, like the chief Captain at Jerusalem, he was willing to pay a great sum for his citizenship.

Freedom, however, was never an end in itself, though it was the indispensable means to further achievement, in the political order for the welfare of the people, in science for the study of nature's laws, in morals for the development of character, and, above all, in the interior motions of the soul which form our deepest ground of experience and supply our surest conviction of reality. Here was the foundation of all spiritual religion, when the soul realised the transcendent fact that it lives and moves and has its being in Him, and the still greater marvel that He condescends to live and move and have part of His being in us. Then we knew that we could never be separated from Him. Yet in our finite and imperfect state our apprehension of this tremendous fact was largely dependent on circumstances and powers which varied in individual cases, and they must take into account the diversity of gifts; but all the resultant types of thought and life found their origin in the same source, the word and work of Jesus, and their interpretation in the early Church. The fruits of the spirit were love, joy, peace, limited by no creed, bound by no convention. In humility and reverence, purity of heart, and fidelity to conscience was a unity of fellowship which transcended all oppositions and justified freedom as a manifestation of the spirit of the Lord. This was the fundamental note in the interpretation of Christianity which they owed to the beloved teacher whom they had just lost, Dr. James Drummond.

Reviewing the life of Dr. Drummond from his early days in Dublin University, through his student years in London (where he found in the Domestic Mission work under Mr. Corkran an unsectarian enterprise which commanded his life-long support), his pastorate at Cross Street Chapel, Manchester, and the fruitful period during which he held the position of the Principal of Manchester College, Oxford, Dr. Carpenter spoke of the prophetic power which marked his utterances, and the spiritual insight which gave them authority, born of devout communion with his Father in heaven. For Christ, as he was portrayed in the Gospels and reflected in the experience of his two chief disciples, Paul and John, he cherished the deepest reverence, the most glowing affection. The strife that raged round the attempt to define the nature of Christ's personality wounded him to the heart, and he would never join any association established for doctrinal ends which might limit freedom or even remotely stimulate an unworthy partisanship. He laid his gifts of learning at the foot of the Cross, and gave his time at the close of his life to the simple exposition of New Testament teaching which might disengage its permanent power from its entanglement in temporary modes of thought. He had lived through a period which had witnessed violent assaults on traditional belief, but his faith had never faltered. Through private sorrow or public agitation he dwelt in an inner sanctuary of peace. He saw the outbreak of the war with a holy anger against cruelty and greed, and he never lost hope that its close would inaugurate an era of international order from which might spring new forces of amity and goodwill. Christianity, he was convinced, has yet its grandest victories to win. Writing only a week before his death to the Warden of Keble to excuse himself for not attending a meeting to consider the proposed International Christian Conference, he expressed the wish that all Christian communities would raise a united and authoritative voice bidding the present hideous outrage on their religion to cease. For such a one, as he passed upward into new realms of light and love, their words of thankfulness died away in the echoes of that wondrous welcome into God's peace and joy.

OTHER PULPIT REFERENCES.

IN the course of a sermon delivered at the Old Meeting Church on June 16 the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, referring to Dr. Drummond, said: His excellence was known to the great scholars of the Universities but he was never honoured with due honour by the great world. He was too modest and retiring to figure before the crowd. He did not covet but rather shrank from applause. He was an elect soul visibly harmonious with the Spirit of Christ. He was, I believe, not generally regarded as a great preacher, but I can say with deep and ever thankful sincerity that no preaching ever searched me more thoroughly or moved me more deeply than his. I can see him now as I saw him when I sat in the choir of our Oxford Chapel and he preached with a suppressed passion that consumed him. He used up emotion and energy in suppressing emotion, and gave to some a wrong impression of unmoved calm. I have watched him enthralled as he seemed to become bodily transparent, and lit up like a lantern with the still flame of the spirit. I have often seen him sit down at the close exhausted and trembling like a leaf. I knew him in the pulpit only as a childlike saint of God who gave his soul away to us, his unworthy students. We shall not see another like him. The remembrance of him is a benediction.

The Rev. J. M. Connell of Lewes, on Sunday morning, said: My acquaintance with Dr. Drummond began twenty-five years ago, when I entered as a student of Manchester College, Oxford. He was then Principal of the College. I very soon learnt to love and honour him. It was not always easy to follow the minute and elaborate disquisitions on the text of the New Testament which one heard from him in the Lecture Hall; but occasionally there would come a sentence or two which flashed a revealing light on the meaning of the Scripture passage, or gave one a fresh insight into the character of Jesus or of St. Paul, and made the hour for ever memorable. And even more interesting and helpful than what he taught were the revelations that were given of his own spirit, which had always somehow an element of surprise about them. After referring to the fires of moral passion and spiritual fervour which on occasion would burst forth, Mr. Connell continued: Such outbursts sometimes came even in the course of a somewhat dry and difficult lecture, and they were always worth waiting for. But, of course, it was in his preaching that they occurred most frequently. His sermons in the College Chapel have left an ineffaceable impression on me. And so have his prayers. Often I have thought of him when I have read Penn's description of the character of George Fox, the founder of the Quakers: "He was a man that God endued with a clear and wonderful depth, a discernor of others' spirits and very much a master of his own."

THE

REV. CHARLES HARGROVE, D.Litt. FUNERAL SERVICE.

As recorded last week, Dr. Hargrove died at Ventnor, after only two days' illness. Our more detailed memoir we reserve till the next issue; the main outlines of his career and the tone of his personality are admirably delineated in the address here presented. The funeral, which took place on Monday at the Crematorium, Golder's Green, was largely attended. The Rev. Dr. Carpenter conducted the service and among the scripture readings, in accordance with Dr. Hargrove's expressed desire, was Psalm ciii. The address was given by the Rev. Dr. Wicksteed. He said:—

"Hail, Brother, and Farewell!" These were the words which our friend himself spoke at the funeral of Richard Armstrong, and which were so uttered that the hearers caught in them no dirge-like note, but rather a trumpet peal of triumph. "Hail, Brother, and Farewell!" are the words we say to him. They come from that poem of Catullus in which he speaks of travelling through many nations and being tossed on many seas ere he could discharge for his brother, untimely taken away, due funeral rites. We, indeed, had not journeyed far in order to perform the last offices of fraternal respect, nor could it be said that our friend's years were untimely cut short. But in a significant sense it was true of him that he in his life-time had travelled through many nations and was tossed on many seas before he reached his goal in our little community and fellowship. Beginning as an Anglican, he had passed into the Dominican Order and the Roman Catholic Church; and it was good to know at this time that in spite of the gap of many years since he left that Order, and notwithstanding the great difference of thought which still further divided him from them, there remained a friendly feeling, on his part up to the end, on theirs expressed in regret at his death. Why, it must be asked, why did he sever a tie thus reciprocally valued? Why, having been one of the Domini Canes, "the Hounds of the Lord," had he left them? He had often told the story. His mind had long rebelled against a dogma still ostensibly maintained in the great bulk of the Christian Church, and still, within the memory of people not yet old, sincerely held as part of the Christian faith—the dogma of the everlasting torment of all those who, otherwise blameless, were heretical in opinion. He had seen patients die in the hospital at Trinidad, nothing really dividing them, whatever differences of creed were among them. And he found himself one evening looking up into the shining sky with the words on his lips: "It is not true." The sequel, for him, was inevitable. He was not one of those who could disbelieve a thing and yet profess to hold and defend it; and he had little patience with those who sought refuge in non-natural interpretations of the terms used in the Creed. So he came out, and found fellowship with the Unitarians. Respecting our body there are two things which a newcomer may value. One is the principle of the "Open Road," a man being free among us to follow truth to the uttermost and express it for himself. The other is the position in thought to which, with all our different varieties, we have substantially attained. Charles Hargrove valued both. He was a Unitarian of the Unitarians, never flinching from avowing his beliefs, confident in their worth to the world, zealous to defend and diffuse them. But he was equally faithful to the principle of the "Open Road," by which a man was secured from the temptation to tamper with veracity just where it matters most. He thus entered his one pulpit among us, and by thirty-six years of noble service carried on the tradition of long ministries associated with Mill Hill, Leeds. It was appropriate that the son of a former minister, still affectionately venerated when Dr. Hargrove settled there, and that another and distinguished predecessor should join in that funeral service. How well he had served Mill Hill, and Leeds, and the whole group of our churches in the North was well known and would be long remembered. They recalled also the personal characteristics that endeared him to so many friends, especially including children, for whom he had a peculiar attraction. His own nature, in fact, seemed closely akin to the child's, a beautiful simplicity and directness blending with the richness of his scholarship and the force of his reason. He was possessed of such resources, indeed, that we are moved to regret he had left unwritten the works which none but he could have written, notably that book on the Fourth Gospel which, had he completed it as it was begun, would certainly have been unique in the copious literature of that ever-fascinating theme. But we may well be content with what he accomplished and all he was; and recalling that radiant smile of his, such as he wore when he once said on parting from a friend "Thank God for you," we in our turn say to him also, "Hail, Brother, and Farewell! Thank God for you."

Among those present at the chapel were the following representatives of Mill Hill, Leeds: Mr. C. H. Boyle and Mr. E. O. Dodgson, Chapel Wardens; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Skelton, Miss L. M. Passavant, and Mr. Charles Stainer, representing the congregation; and Mr. Simeon Hall, representing the Trustees and the Yorkshire Unitarian Union.

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

LIEUTENANT T. D. COLFOX.

THE early death of Thomas David Colfox, R.F.A., brings the deepest sorrow to many hearts. He went to France last November, shortly after his 19th birthday. He was returning home on leave, and had reached Boulogne, when he was recalled, and then never left the fighting line. The Bridport News says: "In fact, when put down for a rest camp he, in his generous nature, gave way for a fellow officer, saying he was more in need of rest than himself." The officer commanding his battery has written of him as follows: "His death is a terrible blow to me and a great loss to the battery. Although just a boy in years, he was one of the very bravest I have ever met, always scorning danger and volunteering on every possible occasion for any work out of the ordinary that was on hand. He was full of initiative and resource, and an officer in whom I had the fullest trust and confidence. I had a deep affection for him; by his personal qualities, his unselfishness, care and thought for his men and horses, he had gained the love and devotion of us all. He was a very gallant gentleman of the best description, and if he had been spared would, I know, have made a mark for himself." His Eton master writes in equally appreciative terms, and concludes by saying: "Such a standard of honour and right living as his is a public example and a national asset." One of the Bridport congregation writes: "With my grief comes a feeling of pride that I knew such a gallant soldier, and then an overwhelming thought of what a debt we owe such a one. He has more than proved he was what we believed him to be." This testimony from one of his fellow worshippers carries an additional pang, for David Colfox had a genuine attachment to our Unitarian worship, and whenever it was possible for him to attend service at one of our chapels, as it was, e.g., at Exeter, he made a point of doing this. Had he lived, he might well have proved the mainstay of the chapel where he spent his early years. He had an ancestry on both sides which promised this, and he looked forward to taking up his spiritual inheritance.

H. S. S.

THE King of the Belgians has conferred the Medal of Queen Elisabeth upon Mrs. Bernard Allen, hon. organiser of the Belgian Hospital Fund, in recognition of the work which she has done since January, 1915, in aiding the military and civil hospitals and institutions in France and Belgium.

DR. CARPENTER'S VISIT TO THE NORTH OF IRELAND.

THE immediate occasion of this event was Dr. Carpenter's acceptance of an invitation to preach and lecture at the General Synod Meetings of the Non-Subscribing Church. But his coming for that purpose proved too good an opportunity to be missed, and other invitations followed quickly upon the first. The result was a series of gatherings in which Dr. Carpenter was the centre of interest and the cause of crowded, inspiring assemblies. The mere enumeration of the engagements fitted into five strenuous days will indicate how the much-appreciated visitor was utilised for the benefit and encouragement of Irish audiences. On Friday, June 14, the day of arrival, Dr. Carpenter was responsible for a well-attended service at Downpatrick. The following day he took the chair at a Sale of Work in the Town Hall, Holywood, whereby the Music Fund of our Non-Subscribing Church benefited to the extent of over £200. Sunday found Dr. Carpenter at morning and afternoon services in All Souls' Church, Belfast, whence he was motored over for evening service at Comber. On Monday a meeting of ministers was held in the vestry of the First Church, Belfast, and nearly thirty ministers listened with vivid interest to one who spoke from a unique experience of our English Church life and work. Later the same day a Reception to meet Dr. Carpenter was held in the Central Hall and was very well attended. At eight that evening the First Church was filled, when Dr. Carpenter conducted the Annual Service of the General Synod and preached a sermon that was at once a stirring call and an inspiration. On the Tuesday our visitor was in attendance at Communion Service at 10.30, and later in the day, having in the technical phrase been asked "to sit and deliberate," he spoke once or twice during the deliberations of the General Synod, and was particularly impressive in his felicitous tribute to the character and work of his late colleague, Dr. James Drummond. His lecture on 'Religion in War Time and After' was delivered in the First Church at 8 o'clock that evening, and nothing more appropriate or opportune could have closed his series of public utterances. Space will only permit of a brief characterisation of the gatherings. All were well attended, and in every case of an open assembly to which the general public were admitted, members of other churches than our own were present. It was good to see Orthodox Presbyterian divines and Anglican clergymen with members of their congregations listening with rapt attention to Dr. Carpenter's discourses, and later it was equally gratifying to hear their unstinted appreciation of the preacher's thoughtful and inspiring message. From the point of view of the Non-Subscribing Church it is generally felt that Dr. Carpenter's presence lifted the various meetings on to a very high level of thought and feeling. It is not only the case that, so far as numbers are concerned, they proved the most successful for years. That is something, especially in view of war-time conditions. But far more important is the fact that the meetings were characterised by an earnestness of purpose and a hopefulness of feeling whose influences will live on now that the happy occasion is over. All that we owe to Dr. Carpenter for what he was and did during his strenuous visit no words can express, but grateful hearts can truly feel and long remember.

[A report of the Synod Meetings will be given next week.]

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

THE proceedings at the close of the session at Manchester College, on Thursday and Friday, June 20 and 21, brought those who were present very near in sympathy, and in the confidence of a steadfast courage, to those who now bear the responsibility of carrying on its work. Deep emotions were stirred, of sorrow indeed, and yet far more of reverent and thankful commemoration and renewed consecration to the cause which has been served since the foundation of the College in 1786 by the complete devotion of so many faithful men. The overshadowing of the war was the more keenly realised because with the close of the present session no regular students remain in the College, and in the immediate future other forms of service have to be contemplated. The College residence is in use as a hospital annexe, while the students' common room and the lecture and dining rooms have been placed at the disposal of a Cadets' Club, which meets a very urgent need, and has now some 400 members. The inevitable change which time must bring was marked at the Trustees' Meeting by the memorial resolutions on the departure of Dr. Drummond and the still more recent loss of Dr. Hargrove, one of the Visitors; and in a happier way, with an equal sense of the permanent enrichment of the great tradition of the College by the presentation of the portrait of Dr. Carpenter. The future, Dr. Jacks (the present Principal) said at the Trustees' Meeting, is shrouded in obscurity, and the immediate outlook is very perplexing. But the clouds will break up, and when they do Manchester College will have its share in the light that will break forth from the cloud.

VALEDICTORY SERVICE.

The valedictory service for the three leaving students was held on Thursday evening, the first part being taken by Dr. Carpenter, the Farewell on behalf of the College being given by the Principal, and the Welcome into the ministry by the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne of the Liverpool Domestic Mission.

Dr. Jacks in the course of his address warned his students not to give too much heed to the fashion of what was called "modern thought." There were those who would advise them to manœuvre their message, to get its currents at their back to speed them on their way. They would be urged to fall into line with the popular ways of thinking, and exploit them to the advantage of the Church. But no true prophet of the Lord was ever produced on those terms. No breath of new life ever came to the Church from following such counsel. The great office of religion was to give men what they need, not merely what they want. They must ask themselves simply whether a thing was true, and expressed their own inmost conviction, and practise a perfectly reckless sincerity. They must not be afraid to swim against the stream. Sincerity was the only basis on which the Churches would ever unite. They must own no authority save that of the Spirit of the Lord, which now called them to their work and sent them forth.

Mr. Ballantyne's Welcome was the eloquent appeal of a fervent and rejoicing faith. He asked his brothers to share with him his own self-dedication to a new task. Nothing was too good to give for the spread of the Gospel of Christ. They must give of their own heart's best, to waken what was best in men, as heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ; and they must give it with joy, confident that the streams of the Divine grace would not fail.

The three students are to go straight into the field of service, Mr. H. V. Salmon at Narborough Road, Leicester; Mr. Ernest Smith, B.Sc., at Dean Row and Styal; Mr. Walter M. Long at Christ Church, Nottingham, and Loughborough.

TRUSTEES' MEETING.

The Annual Trustees' Meeting was held on Friday morning, the President, the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, in the chair. Before entering on the regular business, the President called on DR. CARPENTER, who moved a memorial resolution, in which the Trustees recorded their gratitude for the long and faithful labours of Dr. Drummond as Professor and Principal of the College, their admiration for his scholarship and their reverence for his character. "As a devout interpreter of the mind of Christ, the ardent vindicator of liberty, the fearless teacher of spiritual religion, he presided over the establishment of the College in Oxford, and won the respect and esteem of members of other churches, who counted the search for truth more precious than adhesion to traditional dogma. To successive generations of students he proved a constant friend, whose counsel and sympathy were an unfailing support; and by graces of soul, as well as by accuracy of learning, he set before them a standard of ministerial service which has left upon the College history an influence which death cannot efface." These were the terms of the resolution, on which Dr. Carpenter in his speech enlarged, in a sustained tribute of honour and affection. He referred especially to the element of passion deep-seated in Dr. Drummond's inner life, extraordinarily under control, yet the animating principle and power of it all. This drew him into profound sympathy with the teaching of Paul and gave him his intense appreciation of the mind of Christ. It was felt in the spiritual intensity of his preaching, while in his face they saw the peace of one whose heart was stayed on God. On this DR. WICKSTEED, who seconded the resolution, also dwelt, when he spoke of the combination of passion and peace in the life of heaven, as it appeared in the vision of saints and the anticipations of the mystics. The passion of heaven, they said, was peace, and the peace of heaven passionate, a passion of wonder without ignorance, an intense activity in which there is attainment. That was what they saw more and more deeply marked, as the years went on, in James Drummond's face.

Dr. Carpenter at the close of his speech had quoted from a note he had received from the Warden of Keble, when it was known that for Dr. Drummond the end was near. It referred to him as one "very loyal to the pursuit of truth," and added: "I have been reading this term his 'Johannine Thoughts.' They give an insight into a soul delicate, sensitive, religious, and one very devoted to the following of our Master."

A further memorial resolution on the death of Dr. Hargrove was moved, with a tribute of deep feeling, by the President, and seconded by Dr. Jacks. Both resolutions were passed in reverent silence.

MR. A. H. WORTHINGTON, Chairman of the College Committee, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, spoke of the claim which the Principal and staff had upon the sympathy of the Trustees by reason of the special difficulties of the time. For three years Dr. Jacks had been Principal, and the conditions had been such that it had been impossible for him to carry out the plans for the further development of the life and work of the College and to realise the hopes with which he had entered on his office; but they must have patience and hope.

The resolution, seconded in a cordial speech by Dr. R. F. Rattray, was unanimously passed, and the President was re-elected on the motion of the Rev. E. I. Fripp, seconded by Mr. P. M. Oliver. The other officers and committee were elected, on the motion of Mr. H. P. Greg, seconded by Dr. Edwin Odgers, the Committee including as new members the Revs. W. G. Tarrant, N. Anderton, and J. C. Ballantyne, and Mr. Ernest Abbott.

Replying to a resolution of grateful acknowledgment of the labours of the Principal and Professors of the College, moved by the Rev. Dendy Agate and seconded by the Rev. W. H. Drummond, DR. JACKS referred to the changes which had been made since he entered on his office as Principal in the condition of entrance to the College, the curriculum, and the methods of teaching, and pointed out that though three years were gone, there had been no opportunity of testing the changes. He did not doubt that further changes would be needed, but pleaded for patience till they had had a chance of trying those already made.

The President then handed to the three students the certificates of the completion of their College course, together with Daniel Jones grants and essay prizes.

PRESENTATION.

At the close of the proceedings the President presented to the College the portrait of Dr. Carpenter, by Mr. Howard Somerville, and a replica to Mrs. Carpenter. With words of warm and affectionate appreciation and gratitude the President made the presentation, speaking of Dr. Carpenter as not only a great teacher and scholar, but, like Dr. Drummond, one whose personality brought inspiration to them, and an added consecration to the College.

DR. JACKS, in accepting the portrait on behalf of the College referred to the manifold impressions they received from it, in its somewhat stern, academic aspect, while at other times other aspects of a rich and gracious personality gleamed out. For themselves they needed no portrait of Dr. Carpenter, for so long as they lived they would carry his image graven in their hearts; but for those who came after them the picture would be a precious possession; they would have in it the noble image of a very noble man.

Both Mrs. Carpenter and her husband gratefully acknowledged the gift to her in words that will not be forgotten by those who heard them.

During the course of the proceedings it was informally reported that, with the cordial approval of the College authorities, steps are to be taken in the immediate future for the formation of an Old Students' Association, by means of which those who have been trained in the College may be kept in more permanent and intimate connection with their Alma Mater.

THE British Institute for the Promotion of the Study of the English Language and Literature has just been inaugurated at Florence. Sir Rennell Rodd, the British Ambassador, M. Luchaire, Director of the Institut Français, and other well-known people were present at the ceremony, and speeches were made by the Prefect and Mayor of Florence, the Director of the British Institute, Mr. Spender, and others.

